In reference to the constitution, the proposals were of a divisive nature and an effort was being made to equalize the two sides; in other words, the 82 percent of the Greek Cypriot population with the 18 percent of the Turkish Cypriots. An equalization of these two unequal parts would have been a grave injustice. The most serious, however, was that there was never a serious offer on the territorial aspect.

In this way, with a lack of proposals in certain sectors and with unacceptable proposals in others, we have had a continuation of the dialogue.

In reference to the prospects of the Cyprus issue, many diplomats state that no progress must be expected at this moment because Denktas is faced with elections on 28 June. There are always impressions, at least among foreign governments and diplomats, that during the summer there will be some proposals on the part of the Turkish Cypriot side, including the territorial issue.

Past experience is such that I cannot say that I am optimistic. We will await developments in order to judge the situation. On our part, we will do whatever is possible in order to promote the issue toward some solution. In any case, this (?3-month) period is very important because in October we have the Commonwealth Conference and in November we again have the United Nations General Assembly.

An appeal to these international organizations is, I believe, the most fundamental for the preservation of the national independence of Cyprus, as has been done to date. If this summer passes without any result, then the Greek Cypriot side will consider whether it will have to appeal to these international organizations.

In reference to the European Community, we hope to have an agreement with the EEC by (?1982) which will provide for a customs union. [Passage indistinct] by 1982 Cyprus ought to be a member of the European Community. The situation created by 1974, however, caused a certain postponement and therefore we have just entered the second part of the (?agreement) which will advance us toward the European Union. The Cyprus Government wants this agreement and promotes it.

In conclusion, Rolandhis referred to the support given to the Cyprus Government by the Greek Government and all Hellenism.

Replying to press representatives questions, Rolandhis said, among other things; that Greek accession to the EEC offers Greece the [words indistinct] which it could use for a solution to the Cyprus issue; that during negotiations between Cyprus and the EEC there was never a question of the recognition of a Turkish Cypriot state; that without the deinternationalization of the Cyprus issue the EEC countries could offer assistance; that following a UN initiative, a committee was recently set up to investigate the issue of 1,800 missing Greek Cypriots.

GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR ATHENS BOMBINGS

NC082229 Paris AFP in English 2223 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] Athens, 8 May (AFP)--The extremist group "People's Revolutionary Struggle," today claimed responsibility for three bombings early today that caused extensive damage in downtown Athens but no injuries. The explosive devices were placed in the trunks of three cars. The group, known to Athens police, claimed responsibility in a telephone call to a news organization in the Greek capital.

[Text] This evening National Defense Minister Averof departed for Brussels to participate in the work of the interministerial conference of the NATO member countries which will begin tomorrow in the Belgian capital. Next Tuesday and Wednesday, Averof will participate in the work of the defense planning meeting and will return to Athens on Thursday. The chief of the National Defense General Staff, General Gratsios, is also in Brussels and will remain there until the work of the interministerial conference has ended.

PAPER REPORTS PROMOTION OF FORMER JUNTA OFFICIALS

NC092005 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 9 May 81 p 2

[Text] The recent promotions and advancements of senior officers have placed dangerous junta people in key positions of the armed forces. This has been charged in an interpretation by EDIK [Democratic Center Union] Deputy K. Bandouvas. Specifically the following is mentioned:

Most distinguished junta factor Yeoryios Seretis has been promoted to lieutenant general and appointed commander of the I Corps. The officer in question on 21 April 1967 occupied ASDEN [Higher Military Command for the Interior and Islands] and was responsible for press censorship.

Vasilios Dhikaiakos, who has been accused of being a junta follower, of having leaked military secrets connected with the arming of Cyprus, of having participated in a movement to topple democracy in 1975, of having covered up seditious movements in March and December 1976, has been promoted to lieutenant general and appointed commander of II Corps.

Brigadier General Zakharakis Ioannis, who was director of the office of the "prime minister" under dictator G. Papadhopoulos during the 7-year dictatorship, has been promoted to major general and appointed commander of a key division.

Brigadier General Nikolaos Tsafos, who was a cadre of KYP [Central Intelligence Service] during the 7-year dictatorship, has been promoted to major general. Junta followers Brigadier Generals Mayiras G. and Tsorlidhas Nestor have also been promoted to major general. Major General Golfis Ioannis, coupist on 21 April 1967 and 25 November 1973 and a cadre of Lekkas and Ioannidhis, is being promoted to a position of exceptional significance.

PASOK'S PAPANDREOU RETURNS FROM ROMANIA VISIT

NC072147 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] This evening, the leader of the official opposition, PASOK Chairman Papandreou, returned from Romania, where he had paid an official visit at the invitation of Chairman Ceausescu.

After arriving at the Ellinikon Airport, Papandreou expressed his satisfaction with the warm reception he was given in Romania and added that he had a talk with the Romanian chairman on bilateral and international issues. With regard to Greece's bilateral relations with Romania, Papandreou said that he is carrying a message from Chairman Ceausescu to President of the Republic Karamanlis.

Arrival Statement

NC081721 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 8 May 81 p 14

[Excerpts] The leader of the official opposition, Andreas Papandreou, is carrying a message from Ceausescu to Karmanlis, whom he will most probably meet the first of next week. Mr Papandreou, who returned yesterday from Bucharest where he had a long conversation with the president of Romania, stressed the possibilities of the Balkan countries imposing denuclearization in the Balkans. He expressed the certainty that "it is no longer possible for the superpowers to control developments in the regions that had been ceded to them within the framework of Yalta and Potsdam."

In a statement at Ellinikon Airport, the PASOK chairman added: "Regardless of how strong the superpowers might be, small powers do exist in Europe that can contribute to peace, progress and finally to a course that would lead to the elimination of the two Cold War blocs, which constitute a heavy burden for Europe, East and West alike."

Referring to his Bucharest talks, Mr Papandreou said: "I must say that both myself and my colleagues are moved by the warm welcome that had been accorded to us by the political leadership of Romania.

"We believe that Romanian-Greek relations, just as Greece's relations with the other countries, can really convert what was once said to be the powderkeg of Europe into a source of peace and detente for all Europe, West and East alike.

"In the long run we hope that it would be possible for the bases and the nuclear arms to finally be removed from our peninsula and the two blocs to be eliminated, so that we may be able to really live within the framework of a Europe that would belong to itself.

"As for the Cypriot problem, you also know that the Romanian positions are substantively identical to our own. The struggle is for the demilitarization of the island, the withdrawal of the occupation troops, the guarantee of the unity of a united Republic of Cyprus, the return of the refugees to their homes and the free movement and free political activities of all the citizens of Cyprus--Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots alike.

"These are the goals as far as we are concerned in Greece. I am particularly referring to PASOK but, of course, at the same time I can say that Romania also has parallel and identical positions."

MINISTER SIGNS AGRICULTURAL AGREEMENT WITH POLAND

NC081314 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] An agreement for the supply of Greek agricultural products of Poland with credit facilities aimed at helping the Polish economy was signed in Athens today. The agreement was signed by Polish Under Secretary of State for Foreign Trade Ryszard Strzelecki and Director General of the Commerce Ministry Vartholomeos, in the presence of Commerce Minister Aristidhis Kalantzakos and Polish Ambassador to Athens Janusz Lewandowski. The value of produce to be drawn from state reserves amounts to $20 million.

TURKES CHARGED WITH MURDER OF TWO OFFICIALS

TA081628 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1600 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 8 May (AA)--Nationalist Action Party [NAP] leader Alpaslan Turkes is being charged with personally ordering the murder of labor leader Kemal Turkler and Adana's police chief Cevat Yurdakul.

In his formal indictment against the NAP leader and other party members, the military prosecutor attached to the Ankara martial law commander said that Turkes had told two NAP militants in Istanbul that former President of the Confederation of Revolutionary Labor Unions [DISK] Kemal Turkler was at the root of the communist movement, while making a sign with his hand, a few days before Turkler was killed in front of his home on 22 July 1980. The prosecutor also related how NAP officers in Adana complained of Police Chief Yurdakul in a message to Turkes, whereupon Turkes sent back a message with instructions for Yurdakul to be killed. Cevat Yurdakul was ambushed and killed near his home on 27 September 1979.

While conducting activities under cover of a legal political party, the NAP leader planned to overthrow the constitutional order and establish by force a one-man rule contrary to republican and democratic principles, the prosecutor charged. His highly centralized, authoritarian organization had divided the people into hostile camps, such as "communists" and "(?nationalists)" (?while) the so-called "idealists" [words indistinct] rightwing extremists, the latter were being supplied with firearms and equipment for acts of terrorism and massacre under instructions toward the ultimate goal of one-man rule.

MILITARY COURT SENTENCES THREE TERRORISTS TO DEATH

[Text] The 1st Military Court of the Army 6th Corps and Martial Law Command has sentenced to death Salih Tas and Adil Yener who were accused of killing teacher Abdulkadir Tomay in Gaziantep's Kilis District in 1979. The court has also sentenced to death Hikmet Kozan who was accused of raiding a barber shop in Kahramanmaras' Elvistan District, killing Mustafa Gumus and Mehmet Aydogan and wounding more than one person. The court sentenced to 10 years in prison [words indistinct] the killing of Tomay in Kilis.

DEFENSE MINISTER LEAVES FOR BRUSSELS NATO MEETING

TA091041 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 9 May 81

[Text] National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken left Istanbul for Belgium today to attend the NATO Defense Planning Committee's spring meeting to be held in Brussels on 12 and 13 May. In a statement at Yesolkoy Airport before his departure, Bayulken said that defense issues would be discussed at the meeting as well as proposals which would shed light on plans for future years. He added that issues such as NATO infrastructure needs, which are very important for Turkey, would be discussed at this meeting again. Bayulken stated that the contributions the member countries can make to the measures that must be taken against direct or indirect threats against the alliance as a whole would also be discussed. Bayulken said: The occupation of Afghanistan has greatly shaken the hopes of the Free World about detente and has caused the NATO countries to feel that their vital interests are threatened. Under the developing security needs, Turkey acts with the understanding--as always--that it will carry out its obligations within the alliance within the framework of mutuality and equality. The national defense minister pointed out that the issue of military aid to Turkey would be discussed at the meeting as well. He added that during his stay in Brussels, he would hold bilateral talks with the U.S. defense secretary, with the FRG, British and Italian defense ministers. He said that during these talks the military aid extended to Turkey by these countries would be assessed.

TRUDEAU, SUZUKI DISCUSS OTTAWA SUMMIT TOPICS

OW100748 Tokyo KYODO in English 0717 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] Ottawa, 9 May (KYODO)--Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau suggested Saturday that leaders of seven industrialized democracies discuss coordinated "crisis management" when they meet here in July for their annual conference.

In a meeting with visiting Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, Trudeau said his idea of joint crisis management was prompted from what he calls a discrepancy of views among the seven countries, which became evident over the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan in late 1979. He did not elaborate.

The seven countries are Japan, Canada, the United States, Britain, West Germany, Italy and France.

During the 135-minute meeting at the official residence, Trudeau and Suzuki agreed that the world economy will be the primary topic at the July 20-21 summit, Japanese officials said. Trudeau told Suzuki, however, he is concerned the Ottawa meeting might not succeed because the seven countries still differ on how to deal with the question of assistance to developing countries--another topic expected to be taken up at the summit.

Trudeau also said, according to the officials, that the Reagan administration's foreign aid program is still not clear. Trudeau, who will chair the Ottawa summit, was quoted as saying he is not optimistic about the summit's results. Suzuki told Trudeau Reagan apparently wanted to make the Ottawa summit a successful meeting, the officials said. Trudeau told Suzuki he is happy with what he described as Japan's increasingly positive attitude toward international affairs, the officials said. They said his assessment followed Suzuki's remarks that economic development and political stability of Third World countries can contribute to world peace.

In January, Suzuki visited the five member countries of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) on his first overseas trip since he became prime minister last July.

Suzuki and Trudeau met privately for 40 minutes before they were joined by their cabinet members. On bilateral problems, Trudeau and Suzuki agreed to continue negotiations on the possibility of cutting Japan's car exports to Canada. Officials of the two governments held working-level talks in Tokyo last week to discuss the auto issue.

Trudeau said he is satisfied that Japan is still studying possible import of the Canadian-made Candu nuclear power reactors, according to the Japanese briefers. Japan's Electric Power Development Co. plans to purchase the Candu reactors but has been unable to go ahead because the government's Atomic Energy Commission favors other types of reactors.

REACTIONS TO BERLIN ELECTION, CDU-FDP COALITION

Schmidt Comment

LD111338 Hamburg DPA in German 1137 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 11 May (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has assured the city of Berlin and its leadership of the Federal Government's continued decisive support. In response to a question on a possible CDU-FDP coalition in Berlin, Schmidt said today on German television 2 that whoever is democratically elected to the city's leadership will be able, like the people of Berlin as a whole, to count on the government's support.

Schmidt pointed out that the Federal Government also cooperates "sensibly and closely" with the Saarland government CDU-FDP coalition.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE

DW111440 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 11 May 81 p 1

[Editorial signed FK.: "As Was Feared"]

[Text] What was feared has happened in Berlin: The CDU and the alternatives have won a considerable number of votes at the expense of the two coalition partners, the CDU, however, not so much that it is in a position to form the Senat all alone. Nevertheless, the CDU has put almost 10 percentage points between itself and the Social Democrats, something which is quite a sensation for Berlin. If the parties hold to their position that they do not want to form a coalition with alternatives, then there is only one way out of the situation so as to set up a majority capable of governing: The FDP must revise its decision to either govern with the SPD or go into opposition. The only other possibility is that Berliners go to the polls a second time. The FDP should not take that risk. A grand coalition is rejected by both the CDU and SPD and should not be considered.

Hans-Jochen Vogel wasn't able to bring about a change in the fate of his own party in Berlin. This doesn't have so much to do with the almost forgotten guaranty affair--three out of four Berliners shortly prior to the election felt that something like this had to be reckoned with, no matter who governed at the Schoeneberg City Hall. The reasons for the SPD's loss in popularity are more deep rooted. The local causes are self-evident, namely, the housing shortage, the foreigners problem and drug addiction--difficulties which the former Senat was as little able to cope with as it was the apparently ineradicable pork barrel system. That which is new and overshadows the other problems is the decline in the legal and property order in Berlin. When Vogel took office, 29 houses were occupied, today, 156 are. It had to be anticipated that Berliners would react to such a decline in observance of the law accompanied by riots and destructions. What must be added in broader respects is that the Bonn coalition presently is experiencing a nationwide low in popularity: 60 percent of those questioned are dissatisfied with it--a negative record.

The remarkable upswing of the red-green "alternatives" will occupy the public for quite a while and frighten the parties, though unjustly, because this enthusiasm of an anti-parliamentary movement which has elements of clownishness, sectarianism and the conviction they bring salvation will be short-lived. Those who wanted to give the established parties a thrashing have always voted for a marginal group, watching its rise and the ensuing alarm with pleasure--as was the case with the NDP the last time. None of these groups has accomplished anything politically and this is why their rise is soon followed by their decline into namelessness. It will be no different with regard to the Greens.

DIE WELT

[Wilfried Hertz-Eichenrode commentary: "State Reason"]

[Text] Nothing is more needed by free Berlin than active political leadership. In the long run, the protective forces can safeguard the external security of this island within the Soviet communist forward positions of the Kremlin emperor only if the Berliners see to the inner stability of their city republic. This was involved in the elections that have just taken place. The Berlin voters have done their part: They have given the CDU a clear mandate to govern and they have given sufficient seats to the FDP so that a small coalition under Weizsaecker's leadership can be established to set up a Senat which will be able to act.

The voters clearly have given an opposition role to the SPD. The alternative group cannot be included in these considerations despite its great and shocking success. As long as it says it stands with one leg in opposition outside parliament and with the other in the house of representatives, it rejects our representative democracy. As long as it does that, it does not deserve to be called a "parliamentary party."

Vogel said on election night that he would join the opposition together with the SPD. What does that mean? Does he have the insight to force the FDP to side with Weizsaecker? Or does he speculate that the FDP will not be able to make this step, so that new elections will be unavoidable? Does he secretly hope to stay in office for a few more months as the governing mayor so as to considerably improve the SPD and FDP chances for a second election?

Just one unambigous orientation mark exists here: The voters have commissioned the FDP to give the city-state of Berlin a strong leadership in a coalition with the CDU. That may not correspond to its heart's desire, but in the classic three-party system the smallest party has the function of making up the majority. And so, it must see to a democratic change of the guard in the execution of power. The FDP has no other justification for its existence as "the kingmaker."

In free Berlin, the will of all Germans is crystallizing with regard to national unity. If the FDP supports this, it cannot evade the responsibility it has been given by the Berlin voters.

Press Review

DW111234 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 11 May 81

[From the press review]

[Excerpts] STUTTGARTER ZEITUNG writes: It wasn't a good day for Federal Chancellor Schmidt. With the defeat of French President Giscard d'Estaing, he lost a political friend and ally. Unpredictables and uncertainties now threaten from Paris, which will complicate Schmidt's position--most of all in the struggle for the counterarmament decision. Domestic political trouble also is threatening the chancellor from Berlin. Jochen Vogel, whom he ordered to the frontline city in an emergency measure, didn't achieve his election aim, namely, the continuation of the social-liberal alliance. It is hard to tell at the moment what that means for Bonn and the Bonn SPD-FDP coalition. The situation that has come about after Weizsaecker's low key elections victory is still too unclear. The Berlin election result, at least, will burden atmosphere surrounding the Bonn coalition. The FDP just managed to come through the in Berlin. It is weaker now in the house of representatives than the alternative list.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG notes: The FDP has been challenged. It will have to place its sense of responsibility above its careless election statement that it would not form a coalition with the CDU. That could lead to an endurance test for the party and it could stir up the FDP's trauma about suddenly changing its opinion. However, a convincing alternative so far isn't in sight. A grand coalition, which was ruled out last night by Jochen Vogel anyway, would increase the potential for protest, as would an unstable minority government. New elections in the fall--the third in 2 years--would completely annoy the voters. All these reasons cause the FDP to be more careful in remarks last night.

BREMER NACHRICHTEN concludes: Whether the FDP will once again change its opinion after a period of bashfulness, it remains to be noted as the most significant result of the Berlin elections that none of the established parties succeeded in winning over the relatively large number of disappointed young voters or the large number of old voters. The result also shows that the great majority of the Berlin populace wanted a political change on the Spree River. The results for the SPD and FDP, on the one hand, and for the ODU and the alternative list, on the other, permit no other conclusion.

KOELNISCHE RUNDSCHAU points out: Actually, only the alternative list is jubilant in Berlin. It has not only achieved its election aim, being represented in the Schoeneberg City Hall, it can achieve much more politically than it ought to be able to do based on the number of seats it has won. It could bring about a majority for the social-liberals or make the successful Christian Democrats even stronger. But it doesn't want this. According to the stipulations of the constitution, governing Mayor Hans-Jochen Vogel needn't resign despite his election defeat. He could continue to rule together with the battered FDP, hoping to win the alternative list over as auxiliary troops in difficult situations. That would be a most miserable solution.

NEWSPAPERS WEIGH FRENCH ELECTION RESULTS

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE

[Editorial signed R.H.: "French Turning Point"]

[Text] It is a historic moment--two elections in Europe, the outcomes of which as they approached were seen as signalling what is to come. Where France's turning point will lead cannot be unforeseen. Unlike Berlin, where topical problems are triggering much annoyance, the decision [in France]--was carried along by a tide of long standing which stems from an evolutionary process that extended over decades and was obscured only through Mitterrand's ill-fated decision in favor of the popular front in the 1974 election.

To put it in a somewhat objectionably simplified way, France's social structure still provides opportunities for wealthy minorities to behave in a way that permits criticism to arise not only from the successors of the former proletariate, but also from within the quarters of the bourgeoisie proper. This means that criticism emerging from the reformed social democratic point of view has in some cases been much more appropriate than in Germany. Industrialization, the drive away from the countryside to the factory, has made a worker who reacts in social democratic ways out of a Catholic farmer's son from such conservatives areas as Brittany. The bourgeoisie, to the extent that it exercised self-criticism, participated organizationally in this movement. It was a slow approach, which, however, has been clearly visible since 1973 and which was obstructed in its original intention only temporarily through the popular front mistake.

In 1974, one made one's choice between the best man for the nation and the representative of the alliance with the Communists and class conflict. All this had now come to look quite different in the eyes of the French. This was all the more so since the best man for the nation hadnot conquered the hearts of the French and because of the coolness with which his party had chosen him as the representative of common interests, in the national as well as economic respects. The reckoning did not pan out, the Gaullist ambition of a Chirac, who operated less with liberal than with conservative arguments, certainly may have cost several percentage points.

On 14 July, when the people will be dancing in the streets under a Socialist president, we will see what this means for the world with regard to foreign policy. Willy Brandt, who put his stakes on the winners, said recently to comfort those who think differently: "Mitterrand has told me that I still harbor some illusions with regard to the Soviets." Is this indication correct? We will know more about it as soon as all the offices are filled. Nevertheless, the need for new parliamentary elections looms like an uncomfortable thundercloud over the generally rather bright French summer.

[From the press review]

[Text] STUTTGART NACHRICHTEN notes: French voters yesterday presented Giscard d'Estaing with the bill for his presidential years. Mitterrand's election will bring about a radical political change for France and probably the same for its European neighbors and the Western world. Just as Mitterrand, the French must ask themselves now what demands will be made by the Communist Party and what reward it demands. On this will depend whether Mitterrand will achieve a leftist majority in the National Assembly through the new parliamentary elections that have been announced.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG writes: For the first time since the establishment of the Fifth Republic through Charles de Gaulle, there will be a deep political break--the change from the right to the left. Disappointed by the 7-year period in office of Giscard d'Estaing, the French have put a man in the top state position in the person of Francois Mitterrand who has set himself the task of changing if not the state at least the economy and society. He still doesn't have the parliamentary majority to accomplish this project and it questioned whether he will achieve it in the new elections which will probably be unavoidable.

WESTFAELISCHE NACHRICHTEN of Muenster examines the significance Giscard d 'Estaing's defeat will have for the France's partners: Foreign countries will now have to face a difficult phase of adaptation. Mitterrand propagates a delimitation policy. The Bonn-Paris line is likely to be disrupted for the time being. The cordial agreement between the German Government and the French chief of state will be followed by a time of probes. Regardless of how French policy will develop further in the near future, whether carefully or stormily, the France of yesterday is no longer the France of today.

LEADERS TALK WITH GREEK FOREIGN MINISTER

NC092008 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 9 May 81 p 10

[From our correspondent A. Koulopoulos]

[Text] Bonn, 9 May--During his talks in Bonn yesterday with Chancelor Schmidt and Foreign Minister Genscher, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis asked for Germany's help in finding a solution to the Cyprus issue.

The German initiative should be manifested after the forthcoming elections in Cyprus, when not only Greece and Turkey, but all the countries interested in the area ought to collaborate and exert serious efforts to resolve the problem," the Greek foreign minister stressed to his German interlocutors.

Mitsotakis also briefed the German Government on the Greek Turkish relations, the course of the dialogue between the two countries and on the Greek Government's positions. Mitsotakis even dealt with the question of balance of forces in the Aegean. He recalled that the United States has safeguarded this balance and that the Greek side is expecting West Germany to corroborate.

During his third meeting with Genscher yesterday, the Greek foreign minister again raised the issue of schools for Greek children and the exclusion of Greek candidate students from the German universities. In the present manner, he said, the studies of Greeks are impeded and they cannot enroll in Greek universities because of the limited number of positions. Both Genscher and the other Germans who talked with Mitsotakis showed interest in the problem and promised to study it.

Before leaving Germany, the foreign minister gave a lecture on Greece's foreign policy at the German Institute of Foreign Policy. He detailed Greek-Turkish relations and the Cyprus issue, adding that, with its return to NATO, Greece hopes that better prerequisites will be created for the settlement of Greek-Turkish disputes and the solution of the Cyprus problem. He also noted that the normalization of relations with NATO constitutes a prerequisite for the Greek-U.S. negotiations.

Mitsotakis stressed that "the Greek side believes a defense agreement with the United States is possible only within the framework of NATO. The negotiations have been going on for 2 months." We are willing to promote them for the common interests of the two countries within the NATO framework, fully safeguarding, however, Greek sovereign rights and the balance of forces in the area."

ISRAELI ENVOY HOPES FOR IMPROVED RELATIONS

LD081318 Hamburg DPA in German 1145 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 8 May (DPA)--Israeli Ambassador Yohanen Meroz expressed the hope that efforts on both sides will soon smooth out the current troubled waters in German-Israeli relations. In Bonn on Friday, Meroz again expressed Israel's wish for Jerusalem to remain undivided with free access for all. The ambassador was speaking on the occasion of the sale in Bonn of a book by Israeli State President Yitzhaq Navon: "The 6 Days and the Seven Gates." The title refers to the 6-day war between Israel and the Arabs in 1967 and to the seven city gates in Jerusalem.

PAPER ASSESSES FEDERAL BANK'S ANNUAL REPORT

DW061300 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 5 May 81 p 11

[Wilhelm Seuss article: "Strengthen the Competitive Capability"]

[Text] "There is no way to dodge the realization that the Federal Republic, owing to the brisk increase in oil prices, must accept a decline in prosperity and that this decline cannot be redeemed by a mere expansion of nominal incomes." This passage marks the end of the introductory part of the Federal Bank's business report for 1980. As usual, it presents a review of economic development. Many details already are known.

The idea that the German economy's competitiveness on foreign markets but also, last but not least, on domestic markets must be improved and strengthened runs through the report like a red thread.

It goes without saying that this requires a Federal Bank policy aimed at counteracting inflation, but this is not enough. It would be wrong, furthermore, to interpret the passage mentioned in the beginning in such a way that all that needs to be done is to go on a bit of a diet and everything will be alright, because it is not the oil price hikes alone which are oppressive. The difficult stretch of road cannot be covered simply by saving on imported energy. This must be supplemented by other savings.

The overall trade deficit for 1980, which is now stated in the business report as amounting to DM29.1 billion (DM9.6 billion), by the way, according to the Federal Bank is only partially attributable to the oil price hikes [sentence as published]. Oil imports dropped 10 percent in 1980, while the oil bill climbed by DM15 billion. The increase in the oil countries' imports from the Federal Republic and that part of the oil price hike which was passed to recipients of export products requring a high oil input must be deducted from this. The Federal Bank reckons that only 50 percent of the decline in the overall trade balance in 1979 and 1980 of DM48 billion is attributable to the increase in oil prices.

As far as the other half of the foreign trade dilemma is concerned, going along with austerity in energy is at best only of indirect help. What is important is to return to what was once customary foreign trade surpluses in goods trade [excluding oil) which will cover the increasing oil purchasing costs and the deficits, above all in services (especially marked in tourist travel). The Federal Bank rejects restrictions on the use of foreign exchange. It is impossible to break one part of the close interlocking set up with foreign countries without damaging the whole structure of foreign trade.

In this connection, the Federal Bank draws attention to the structural changes in foreign trade, which are characterized by the fact that it is no longer primarily imports of raw materials reacting to the economic situation which determine the balance sheet in goods trade. It is now finished products, and not just those with a low level of technology, which account for a large part of the imports (40 percent), these are import goods which react little to cyclic vacillations at home. Granted the Federal Republic has lost market shares in exports to a slight degree. However, in the competition with imported goods on the domestic market, German industry has in part suffered tangible losses.

The Federal Bank provides an important clue as to the causes of this development. The Federal Bank believes that obviously the strong upward revaluation of the German mark during the past few years only gradually showed its effect in the flow of trade. This means that the improvement in the competitive position of foreign countries attributable to currency upgrading is only now becoming tangible in the structural change of the real trade flows. The Federal Bank further adds that an improvement in the exchange conditions (terms of trade: price decreases for imports, higher prices for exports, all in Deutsche mark) was linked with an increase in the value of the DM, which "directly enters the income of workers and other people receiving an income--an advantage that can now no longer be maintained, as things have turned out."

The competitive position of German industry with regard to prices clearly has improved because of the deterioration of the exchange rate. The Federal Bank points out clearly, however, that it is important to exploit the price advantage in the sales policy of German firms to improve the foreign trade balance. Opportunities for adapting the foreign trade structure resulting from the decrease in the DM exchange rate would be lost if this caused domestic prices and costs to increase more quickly. Monetary policy must, therefore, ensure even more that the limit for passing on price increases will remain restricted. A continued deterioration of the exchange conditions is not considered particularly helpful by the Federal Bank because it leads to "negative consequences for the living standard of a nation, to a loss of economic growth and to long unemployment, which frequently is experienced by other countries with continuing deficits."

Curtailment of the foreign trade balance and improvement of the foreign trade structure call particularly for a limitation of private and public consumption expenditures. The Federal Bank points out explicitly that there is no leeway for real income increases. This fact hasn't been considered in decisions involving income, be it through wages or pay, be it through state measures involving income, be it through taxes involving available income (meaning an income tax decrease). A higher savings rate should have had a balancing effect, but that wasn't the case. So the extension of income and of consumption in private households, which is aimed to a considerable extent at imported goods, contributed very much to a further passive foreign trade balance. The same applies to state expenditures, particularly regarding consumption. It is a matter of curtailing imports while simultaneously engaging domestic productive forces more strongly for export production and for energy saving and cost reducing investment projects whenever industrial installations are built, which tend to increase labor productivity.

An expansionist line on public expenditures is rejected by the Federal Bank because it would delay the necessary readaptation processes. An economic program financed on the basis of a deficit with broadly distributed additional expenditures would lead to a competition with industry for scarce financial means. Public investment programs often fall flat and merely touch of price increases--probably a mild hint at the project of the credit institution for reconstruction.

TRADE UNIONISTS 'PRESUMABLY DETAINED' BY GDR ARMY

[Text] Gottingen--Three men from Diepolz and Lemfoerde (Diepholz district), aged 21-23 years, have presumably been detained by GDR soldiers. The men were on an excursion to the GDR border during a trade union meeting at Duderstadt (Gottingen district).

According to police, several soldiers of the National People's Army Tuesday night were seen searching the trade unionists' cars which were parked on Federal German territory. The GDR soldiers were reported to have withdrawn behind the border fence when police officials from Duderstadt approached. There is no news about the missing men.

FINAL RESULTS OF 10 MAY PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION

LD111852 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 11 May 81

[Summary] The definitive results of the second round of the presidential election were published at 1600 today. Francois Mitterrand gained 51.75 percent of the votes cast and Valery Giscard d'Estaing gained 48.25 percent. Of the 36.4 million registered voters on the electoral list, 31.25 million voted; thus there was an abstention rate of 14.13 percent--one of the lowest rates ever recorded for an election. There were 850,000 invalid votes. Thus, Giscard received 14.65 million votes and Mitterrand received 15.75 million votes.

[Text] Giscard d'Estaing will address the 14.64 million men and women who put their trust in him despite the criticisms and premeditated betrayals, immediately after terminating his presidential office.

Giscard d'Estaing will indicate to them the road to be followed to defend the essential interests of France, a road which is neither that of the popular front nor that of a retrograde confrontation between right and left, but that of a democratic gathering in the center of French politics.

JACQUES CHIRAC CALLS FOR UNITY IN OPPOSITION

LD111900 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] In opposition circles is a strong risk of seeing a renewal of the traditional confrontation between Chirac and Giscard supporters. Faithful to his fighting temperament, Chirac took the initiative this morning by expressing the hope that the majority will be able to field a single candidate in each constituency in the forthcoming parliamentary elections. Chirac evidently wants to become the leader of this opposition.

[Begin Chirac recording] The French people remain attached to a society of initiative, responsibility and freedom. I am sure they will demonstrate this once again as long as things remain clear. Now, clarity today demands unity. That is why I propose a single candidate, designated by mutual agreement, in each parliamentary constituency to defend these values of initiative, responsibility and freedom, which are the gains of the Fifth Republic and which could be called into question tomorrow. AFP WRAPS UP POLITICAL REACTION TO MITTERRAND WIN

[Text] Paris, 11 May (AFP)--Hardly had the election of Socialist Francois Mitterrand as France's president been announced, than the centre-right, which had held the post for 23 years, fell to squabbling.

The multi-party center-right, which has a 91-seat majority in the National Assembly, is now faced with Mr Mitterrand's threat of calling snap legislative elections, in a bid to establish a left-wing majority in the house.

First off the mark last night was Gaullist Jacques Chirac, who declared himself the rallying point for the present parliamentary majority. This morning, Prime Minister Raymond Barre spoke of "the immense responsibility of a fraction of the members of the 'majority' that did not hesitate to play at double or nothing with the future of the Fifth Republic."

The comments were generally viewed as an attack against Mr Chirac, who had challenged incumbent and center-right standard-bearer Valery Giscard d'Estaing in the first round of voting two weeks ago. Mr Chirac, however, is looking to the two-tier legislative elections that Mr Mitterrand is expected to call for June 21 and 28 in an attempt to secure a workable majority in the National Assembly. The Guallist leader said that he would reveal before the end what action he would take. Observers here viewed the announcement as a statement of his intention to launch a legislative campaign and put himself at the head of the "liberal opposition."

In the ranks of the Union for French Democracy (UDF), a combination of parties to which Mr Giscard d'Estaing's independent republicans belong, the search is on for a leader, both to meet the challenge by Mr Chirac and to confront Mr Mitterrand's Socialists and the left in general. UDF leaders have expressed fears that many Giscard supporters will be unable to resist the temptation to jump on Mr Chirac's bandwagon.

Mr Barre apparently had such possible defections in mind when he said today that he would stay with "the camp of all those who intend to remain faithful to the principles of the Fifth Republic as handed down by General (Charles) de Gaulle."

Gaullist National Assembly President Jacques Chaban-Delmas declared today that he would [word indistinct] "re-establish the 'union of the majority' as it was in 1978." The UDF-Gaullist alliance won the legislative elections in 1978.

The essential problem of the center-right forces is that there has been a build-up of ill will. Many Gaullists have accused Mr Giscard d'Estaing of betraying General de Gaulle and preparing the way for the general's departure from office.

Mr Chaban-Delmas resented Mr Chirac's agreement to serve as President Giscard d'Estaing's first prime minister after Mr Chirac swung much of the powerful Gaullist machine behind the former president. Mr Chaban-Delmas himself was defeated in the first round of the presidential elections in 1974 and it was Mr Mitterrand who made it into the runoff with Mr Giscard d'Estaing in that race.

In the first round of voting two weeks ago, Mr Chaban-Delmas supported Michel Debre. Both Both of them are Gaullists and former prime ministers, but both were working against Mr Chirac.

Ancient wounds compound the confusion and uncertainty--and the jockeying for position--now under way in the ranks of the center-right in France. UDF leaders have urged Mr Giscard d'Estaing to take the lead of a "great assembly that would reunite, with the UDF, all those who share the ideal of liberty and justice which has been and remains our goal for French democracy."

The defeated president kept his silence for almost exactly 2 hours before issuing a statement in which he made it perfectly clear that he was not prepared to overlook those whom he regards as the agents of his disaster.

He said that he would soon address "the 14,640,000 men and women who have given me their confidence, despite premeditated criticisms and treasons, to indicate to them the route to follow to defend the essential interests of France."

To observers here, it is quite clear that Mr Giscard d'Estaing was not talking about the Socialists or even the Communists when he attacked those who had criticized and betrayed him. And his statement is taken to mean that there will be no collaboration with the Gaullists of Jacques Chirac in the legislative elections as far as the outgoing president is concerned.

The question remains whether Mr Giscard d'Estaing is any longer in a position to determine the actions of his party. UDF President Jean Lecanuet proposed to the Gaullists today that both parties collaborate in the run-off phase of the legislative elections expected next month. Such collaboration may actually develop, but only after the hard feelings of the electoral debacle have had a chance to ease.

The ill will and division dominating the center-right was good news for Mr Mitterrand. He was content to spend the day meeting with his closest collaborators, making plans, sources said, for the legislative elections.

POLITICIANS COMMENT ON MITTERRAND VICTORY

AU110810 Rome ANSA in English 0812 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] Rome, 11 May (ANSA)--In less than half-an-hour after the closure of the polls in France last night, when projections attributed victory to the Socialist candidate, reactions from Italian political parties began pouring in.

One of the first off the mark was the secretary of the small Social Democrat Party, Pietro Longo, who declared that he had received the news of Mitterrand's election "with great joy" a victory, he said, which will "open up a new trend not only in France but throughout Europe".

The head of one of the junior partners in the Rome coalition government also declared that, "we participate (in this new trend) with a maximum commitment for the support of mutual ideas of liberty, democracy and social justice as the basis of the teachings and activities of European socialist party, said [as received] that Mitterrand's was "a great victory due to the tenacity of the man and the consistency of the French Socialist Party, a significant event in the history of the French Republic".

Craxi identified the "first time election of a socialist president" in France as the expression of "a need for change following the long conservative leadership, that began back in 1958, which swept away all obstacles and rallied a majority of the French around the Socialist candidate.

"This is a great success of the forces for change, for progress and reform", the head of Italy's Socialists said and added, "it was in the air, the time was ripe, it was necessary and finally it was achieved.

"It is a great success for all European socialists", Craxi concluded, "the first significant sign of a return since the conservative wave of the right struck the Western world."

At the other end of the Italian political spectrum, Pino Romualdi of the neofascist MSI [Italian Social Movement] argued that, "Do not think that the French voted with conviction for Francois Mitterrand". He explained that, "Certainly some voted with conviction against Valery Giscard d'Estaing but by doing so they opened themselves up to a very uncertain future and serious political and economic disturbances within and outside their nation".

Enrico Berlinguer, the head of the Italian Communist Party, delcared in the evening that, "Italian Communists greet Mitterrand's election victory with profound satisfaction". Berlinguer insisted that, "The defeat of the right and the election of Comrade Mitterrand, with the irreplaceable support of the Communist votes, will certainly give drive to the left and democratic forces which follow, in Italy and throughout all the countries of Western Europe, the goal of a sharp political and social change."

The regional secretary for the Communist Party in Lombardy, Gianni Cervetti, linked together the outcome of the votes in France with the election returns in West Berlin and the tallies of the by-elections in England to see an "analogous move" afoot in other European countries.

The Italian Radical Party MP Marco Pannella, commented on the "great victory of Francois Mitterrand" as a "victory of the line of unity, of renewal and the alternative of the left. In France, after 38 years, and for the first time, the political and social left takes over power, not as in the 1950's, as subordinate and irrelevant to the center-left formula which perverted Socialist policy, but as a policy of renewal and unity which the Radical Party has been proposing for Italian politics all by itself for the past twenty years."

FOREIGN MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON MIDEAST, USSR

AU080848 Rome ANSA in English 0835 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] Naples, 8 May (ANSA)--The Italian Armed Forces would intervene in the Persian Gulf if the United States' failed to live up to its commitment in the area, according to Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo. The Rome Government's diplomatic chief made the assertion in an interview appearing today in a local newspaper.

"Our primary interest is not to be strangled, not to endure an interruption in the oil route", said Colombo. "Therefore, if the Americans hadn't moved, we would have been forced to do something directly ourselves".

On East-West relations, the Italian foreign minister said that the West was asking the Soviets for "concrete steps" although he denied that there was a total lack of willingness for detente on the part of Moscow. "On the contrary (the Soviets), have voiced their readiness to continue on the path of SALT and European arms negotiations. Their readiness may be limited, but it is not lacking in sincerity", he commented.

Colombo insisted that Europe had a role to play in negotiations for a settlement of the Middle East crisis. "The United States", he noted, "is part of the Camp David negotiations process, Europe is not. That's why we have more freedom of action, which we should use with moderation and care".

The clue to Europe's potential role in the Middle East peace process was Saudi Arabia, whose consent was said to be crucial for any substantial progress in the region. "And Saudi Arabia today is sharply opposed to Camp David", Colombo pointed out.

The Rome government official conceded that Italy had to play a "more important autonomous" role in the Mediterranean area than it now does. "But that depends", he warned, "on our economic health and on the perennial shakiness of our domestic politics".

SENEGAL FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR VISIT

Niasse is scheduled to meet here tomorrow with Colombo, chief-of-state Sandro Pertini and Premier Arnaldo Forlani. The African diplomat will meet the press at the Grand Hotel before taking off for his return trip home Wednesday.

SOARES APPLAUDS MITTERRAND ELECTION VICTORY

LD102036 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1800 GMT 10 May 81

[Interview with Portuguese Socialist Party Leader Mario Soares by unidentified correspondent in Lisbon--live]

[Text] [Question] Dr Mario Soares, what is your reaction to the news that Mitterrand will be the new president of the French Republic?

[Answer] [passage indistinct] This is a historic event, and not just for France, where for the first time in so many years there has been a change from a conservative majority government to a victory of the left and of the forces of democratic socialism. It is a historic event for the whole of Europe. As I stated here this morning, it is going to have profound and beneficial repercussions throughout West Europe. What happens in France is always of great significance to the world, especially to those parts of the world with closer ties with French culture, such as Portugal, Spain and Latin America.

This victory by my dear friend and correligionist Francois Mitterrand has made this a very great day indeed as far as we are concerned. It is a deserved victory by a man who will not give up, a great long-distance runner in French politics and a great Socialist whose stature is not merely French but universal.

SOARES 'TRIUMPHANT' FOLLOWING SOCIALIST CONGRESS

LD102320 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 10 May 81

[Excerpt] Mario Soares has emerged triumphant from the Fourth Congress of the Socialist Party which ended in Lisbon today. He has been reelected secretary general and has seen the congress endorse his report, the amendments to the party's statutes which he proposed and the political strategy which he submitted.

Ninety-three of Mario Soares's unswerving supporters have won seats in the National Committee. They will vote a majority into the party's Political Committee and, from their number, will provide the seven members of the Permanent Committee.

Soares also has seen his powers strengthened, or to use his own words, he has seen the clarification of the scope of his jurisdiction in the party leadership.

RCP'S BOBU CONFERS WITH SOARES IN LISBON

MINISTER TO LEAD TREATY NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S.

LD092350 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 9 May 81

[Text] Secretary of State for Foreign Relations Carlos Robles Piquer has been appointed to head the Spanish delegation which will negotiate the bilateral treaty with the United States. In the program "Saturday Direct," Robles Piquer made a statement in connection with this appointment. In reply to a question about the advantages of a military agreement between Spain and the United States, Robels Piquer said:

[Begin recording] I think that the first advantage is that it would not only be a military agreement, but a combination of agreements dealing with the different aspects of our relations with that country, which today is undoubtedly the most powerful country in the world.

Concerning the military agreement specifically, I think that the advantage of this type of agreement, if we reach one, will be that it will, on the one hand, better safeguard our defense, our protection, our security, and, on the other hand, complementing this, will make all this easier to bear, more within the reach of our armed forces by providing them with certain elements for this defense, which without an agreement would problably be more difficult to obtain, or more onerous.

[Robles Piquer] As I see it, there is no direct or immediate connection. Perhaps one could rather speak of a connection the other way round. That is if, as is the case, it is and remains the government's intention to enter NATO, once the internal talks and procedures have taken place--and these are about to begin--this is the fact which conditions the other, purely bilateral relation. PAPER ON CALVO-SOTELO, FELIPE GONZALEZ TALKS

LD081037 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 1 May 81 pp 3-4

[Report: "Policy of 'Consultation' Will Continue"]

[Excerpt] The prime minister and the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] secretary general yesterday held a meeting lasting almost 3 hours at which matters concerning "consultation" on autonomy, the economic situation and international policy were discussed. The disagreements on the NATO issue remain, and it was decided to continue this policy of negotiation. It was decided to set up a new committee of economic experts, and the grave Andalusian situation was also reviewed.

Madrid, 30 Apr--the meeting between Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo and PSOE Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez--a meeting scheduled for 14 April but which could not be held because of the death of the Socialist leader's mother--lasted about 3 hours.

Matters concerning "consultation" on autonomy, the economic situation and international policy, with particular reference in the last mentioned field to Spain's entry into NATO, were discussed again extensively during the lengthy meeting.

At the conclusion of the meeting, the Socialist Party secretary general told journalists that the disagreements with respect to entry into the Atlantic alliance became clear during the conversation; "We will not raise the NATO issue in order to negotiate autonomy or economic issues. The fact is that the NATO issue is of considerable importance for us. Joining the Atlantic alliance does not increase security for the 36 million Spanish people whom we represent; second, it does not increase prosperity for those Spanish people; third, it does not contribute to world peace; fourth, it is not a priority issue in Spanish politics, and so it can wait."

Mr Gonzalez also stated that "we are not opposed to NATO, but we should not become involved in a multilateral pact of a military nature. We will maintain this stance with the utmost firmness."

The PSOE secretary general, who expressed the desire to continue the negotiations with the government, stated that Mr Calvo-Sotelo had expressed the same readiness. However, Felipe Gonzalez added that there had been shortcomings in the talks which should be corrected: "We should set aside the issues we deem to be nonpriority and which could embroil us in a public debate which would create a poor image of the effort we are making to pull the country through."

FRENCH ELECTION DOMINATES THATCHER-SCHMIDT TALKS

[Excerpt] London, 11 May (DPA)--New aspects of European policy following the election of Socialist Francois Mitterrand as French president dominated the German-British summit meeting held today between Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and his British counterpart Margaret Thatcher. The conference took place at Chequers, the prime minister's country house, as part of the regular consultations of the two heads of government.

According to Government Spokesman Kurt Becker, Schmidt left no doubt that he expects fundamental changes in French domestic politics, especially in relation to economic and social conditions. At the same time, the chancellor expressed his conviction that French foreign politics will be continued on the old lines. According to the German-French treaty, a change of government would not change relations and the German side is convinced that the very close relations will be maintained.

DAILY TELEGRAPH VIEWS MITTERRAND PRESIDENCY

[Editorial: "What Sort of Victory"]

[Text] Notwithstanding predictions, the decisive victory of Francois Mitterrand in the French presidential election comes as a surprise. Since 1958, France has been governed by right-wing regimes which have presided over extraordinary growth. Even the seven-year presidency of Giscard d'Estaing did not, by current Western European standards, produce at all bad economic results. Why then did he lose? Possibly enough uncommitted voters were dismayed by his haughty image and the scandals attached to his reign. Certainly, as so often before in French history, there seems to have been an unholy alliance of dissatisfied small-time, right-wing France with forces of the left.

Whatever the exact explanations, it is clear that Mitterrand's election will throw France into political turmoil. He has pledged himself to call elections in the National Assembly since, even with Communist support, he at present lacks a parliamentary majority. Certain elements on the right of the Socialist Party might prefer him to try to govern for the time being with Gaullist support, but this seems an unfeasible proposition. Problems will arise during and after assembly elections. It seems impossible that Mitterrand can win these without Communist support, of which the likely consequence is the inclusion of Communist ministers in a Socialist government. If he cannot achieve a majority even with the Communists then he may not be able to govern at all, and the very future of the Fifth Republic could be in question.

The implications of a Socialist-Communist alliance are very grave for both France and the West. There is little in Mitterrand's policy as it stands which need be very disastrous for France. The danger is that he will have to pay a heavy price for the support of the far left: his moderate nationalisation plans may become immoderate, his somewhat higher taxes may become crippling. As far as the West is concerned, obviously the prospect of pro-Soviet Communist ministers in France is frightening. Mitterrand is of course, more in favour of NATO, more anti-Soviet even, than the outgoing president. But how in this--or in any of his policies--can he be sure to get his way?

GALLUP POLL SHOWS THATCHER POPULARITY DECLINE

LD111405 London THE SUNDAY TELEGRAPH in English 10 May 81 p 4

[Text] Not only has the public's satisfaction with Mrs Thatcher fallen since she became prime minister, but it is less enthusiastic about certain specific aspects of her personality, according to a Gallup poll conducted exclusively for the SUNDAY TELEGRAPH.

She is thought to be out of touch with ordinary people, divisive and to think a lot about herself. But at the same time the vast majority of people believe that she is a strong personality, and is a good speaker who speaks her mind and who is trying hard in her job.

Pro-Mrs Thatcher and anti-Mrs Thatcher statements were put to people approached in the April survey.

Another main shift is that Conservatives have largely dropped Mr Heath for Mrs Thatcher. Two years ago they were fairly evenly divided with 42 per cent preferring Mr Heath and 50 per cent not. Today the ratio is 23 per cent to 68 per cent.

	Today	April 1979	Oct 1977
Has a strong personality	91	79	84
Speaks her mind	85	81	83
Tries hard in her job	81	93	91
Is a good speaker	80	75	81
Is not in touch with the working class/ordinary people	73	52	54
Divides the country	70	37	51
Thinks a lot of herself	67	54	59
Has destructive, not constructive, ideas	57	25	23
Knows what she is talking about	55	75	70
Talks a lot but doesn't do much	53	39	47
Is a snob and talks down to people	50	37	40
Doesn't come over well	49	46	43
Is too critical of Russia	45	28	32
Knows about the problems of the cost of living	44	73	64
Has good or new ideas	41	58	55
Is catty/bitchy	34	29	32

ROLANDHIS LEAVES FOR TALKS WITH GREEK GOVERNMENT

NC071715 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1300 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis left for Athens [today] for talks with the Greek Government. After his talks in the Greek capital, Mr Rolandhis will visit Berne, Strasbourg, and Budapest. He will then proceed to Washington for talks with U.S. Secretary of State Haig and then go to New York to meet with UN Secretary General Waldheim.

FOREIGN MINISTER ROLANDHIS COMMENTS ON ISSUES

NC101146 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 10 May 81 pp 1, 11

[Exclusive interview with Cypriot Foreign Minister Nikolaos Rolandhis by ELEVTHERI KIPROS correspondent Mimis Konstandinidhis at the Grande Bretagne Hotel in Athens, Greece, on 9 May]

[Text] Question: Some Cypriot newspapers recently reported that the issue over General Komninos has effected relations between Athens and Nicosia to the point that there is a rift. Is this true?

Answer: Relations between Athens and Nicosia have neither deteriorated nor has General Komninos been discredited by leaving the Cyprus National Guard. As always, relations are excellent. In addition, I would like to say that the issue over General Komninos' replacement was not mentioned during my recent talks in Athens.

Question: Turkish interlocutor Mr Onan stated a few days ago that priorities have not been recognized on the Famagusta issue and that it is being ignored. What is the Cyprus Government's reaction?

Answer: This is within the framework of the 19 May 1979 agreement that gives priority to the Famagusta issue. Unfortunately, in the past the Turkish Cypriots reneged on their proposals. The Turkish Cypriots' representatives would agree one day and then deny their words the next. In any case, for the time being we will continue the talks and naturally the Greek Cypriot side, during the talks, will again bring up this issue and will ask that it be placed in the May 1979 framework.

Question: What is your opinion, Mr Minister, on Rauf Denktas' recent statement that there are no refugees but only borders in Cyprus, a phrase that is contrary to the UN resolutions?

Answer: This phrase is completely unacceptable. It is based on what Denktas said in the past that an exchange of population took place in Cyprus, something that has never happened nor do we accept it. The refugees have their irrevocable rights. Denktas' position is totally unacceptable, and we reject it.

Question: Mr Minister, do you believe that U.S. policy toward Cyprus has changed?

Answer: I do not want to express my opinion on this matter before I have my scheduled meeting with Mr Reagan and Secretary of State Haig, whom I shall meet within a few days, on 18 May. I would prefer to make my conclusions following the meeting.

Question: Lissaridhis recently stressed that in the past there was a secret government agreement on the Famagusta and Nicosia airport issues. What do you have to say on this subject?

Answer: There never was a secret agreement. What we promoted in the past as a government we published and the Cypriot people are aware of it.

Consequently, on the Famagusta-Nicosia airport issue that Lissaridhis has once again reopened, everyone is aware that since February 1980 certain thoughts and proposals have been made which were published in March 1980. Now, after 10 months, they are appearing as a secret agreement. There were never secret agreements on any issue.

Question: What is your opinion of U.S. Ambassador Stone's departure from Cyprus? Is there anything hidden behind this decision by the U.S. administration?

Answer: Mr Stone's departure from Cyprus is not sudden. He is departing after completing his set term. As you are aware, when a U.S. administration changes, the custom is to discuss whether the old ambassadors should remain in their positions. Mr Stone will leave Cyprus under the framework of these rearrangements and changes. Therefore, there is nothing else that we do not know about.

Question: Lord Trefgarne recently stated in the British House of Parliament that the British Government's position on base compensation is "that it does not owe anything to Cyprus for the bases." What do you have to say?

Answer: This is a totally unacceptable position. Statements such as his were made in the past. We continue to believe that a very considerable sum is owed to the Republic of Cyprus based on the treaty of establishment. England has made no payments for the bases since 1965. Consequently, the owed sum that we have already demanded is very big and the Cyprus Government will proceed to collect it with the means at its disposals.

Question: Do you think the outcome of the parliamentary elections in Cyprus may possibly influence the basic Cyprus problem?

Answer: It is too early to make assessments. I think it is expedient for one to await the results of the elections before reaching any conclusions.

Question: Recently reserved optimism has reigned regarding the progress of the Cyprus issue after the elections. Is this optimism based on facts?

Answer: I would not like to express any optimism on this matter. Past experiences were bitter. On the other hand, we all know that if nothing happens in these three rounds of the intercommunal talks then, most probably, the image of this procedure that is called inter-Cypriot talks will be seriously humiliated. In practice, we know that it is through dialogue that the Cyprus problem will be solved. Consequently, the possibility exists that there will be some movement in the summer in an effort to preserve the dialogue so it will bear fruit. Beyond this, there is no optimism. I would rather want to see results before I express myself, namely, that there would be Turkish proposals, besides the impressions that exist with the diplomats who, most probably, base their impressions on information they have obtained. Wigh regard to my meeting with Greek Deputy Foreign Minister Rendis, this was a briefing session and I do not want to give any details on it.

Question: If ultimately, Mr Minister, the intercommunal dialogue stops, what will be the Cypriot Government's next step? Would you again go to the UN Security Council?

Answer: This must be discussed in the ministerial and national councils because it is a very big issue and if the dialogue becomes stalemated, it will be very serious. Subsequent handling of the issue will not be in the Foreign Ministry's domain. Of course, we are the competent ministry for the Cyprus problem. The intercommunal talks issue will have to be studied at the ministerial and national councils so that decisions may be taken. Of course, there is the possibility for recourse to the UN Security Council, but I cannot express views on this matter. I would prefer to see what happens this summer. What conclusions we draw depend on the outcome of the talks, and we will then take the necessary course and decisions.

Foreign Ministry Statement

[Cypriot Foreign Ministry statement issued in Nicosia on 11 May 1981--read by announcer]

[Text] With regard to recent press reports alleging that Foreign Minister Rolandhis has expressed optimism in recent statements on future developments in the Cyprus issue in view of information from various sources that the Turkish side will submit concrete proposals next summer, the Foreign Ministry announces that Mr Rolandhis expressed anything but optimism. On the contrary, Mr Rolandhis stressed that past experience leaves no room for optimism about prospects for progress in the Cyprus issue and that we should wait for the proposals to be submitted and appraised before expressing any view on them.

ROLANDHIS, TURKMEN TO MEET UNDER SWISS AUSPICES

NC111013 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 11 May 81 p 1

[Text] Within the framework of sideline efforts by the Western factor and with Swiss Government mediation, the Cyprus and Turkish foreign ministers, Rolandhis and Turkmen, are expected to meet tomorrow at Berne, Switzerland, to discuss ways of extricating the Cyprus issue from its impasse.

As confirmed by reports available to I DHILINI from Athens and authoritative diplomatic sources in Nicosia, the Swiss Government mediation for the Rolandhis-Turkish meeting was accepted by the Cyprus and Turkish Governments, because it is a sincere good will effort by an absolutely neutral European country which maintains friendly relations with all parties interested in the Cyprus issue and which is also strongly interested in the discovery of a permanent, just and peaceful solution to the problem. The same circles believe that tomorrow's Rolandhis-Turkmen meeting will contribute toward a mobility in the Cyprus issue which is expected to take place after the elections in both the free and occupied areas in Cyprus.

Related reports state that sideline efforts by the United States also contributed to the Swiss mediation effort. It is reported the United States made recommendations to Ankara stressing the need to abandon Turkish intransigence and the need to submit specific proposals within the framework of the Western plan on the Cyprus issue.

These reports were also confirmed by U.S. Ambassador in Cyprus Stone who, in yesterday's interview, expressed the hope that a settlement of the Cyprus problem would occur "rather soon" because he believed this would be to the benefit of all Cypriots. When Stone was asked to explain the term "rather soon," he let it be understood that there would be developments after the elections which would lead to a true settlement in 1981.

Stone also expressed the "unshakeable belief" that there will be a settlement of the Cyprus problem and mentioned that after the elections "it is expected that there will be a period which will contribute toward discovery of a real settlement, a period which offers the hope of real progress."

ROLANDHIS, ISRAELI ENVOY DISCUSS TYMBOU AIRPORT

NC071142 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] The government spokesman stated yesterday that during Foreign Minister Rolandhis' meeting with Israeli Ambassador Avraham Gil'adi, the issue of including the unlawful Tymbou airport on Israeli flight information maps, was discussed. The spokesman added that the Israeli ambassador assured Rolandhis that Israel has withdrawn the pertinent map and that, in any case, its inclusion was a mistake.

DENKTAS CRITICIZES ROLANDHIS REMARKS ABOUT TERRITORY

TA091148 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 9 May 81

[Text] President Denktas has said that the Turkish Cypriot community had always discussed the criteria of the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem and had always rejected any discussion on percentages. The president was commenting this morning on a claim made by the foreign minister of the Greek Cypriot administration, Mr Rolandhis, in Athens.

President Denktas recalled that at his summit meeting with Archbishop Makarios he had again refused to discuss percentages despite efforts by the archbishop to draw the discussion into percentages. He repeated that, at first, Archbishop Makarios was offering 20 to 25 percent of territory to the Turkish Cypriot side but had increased this amount to 30 percent in statements in Washington provided that the Greek Cypriots would control the government.

President Denktas reiterated that the Turkish Cypriot side had always put forward criteria on the territorial aspect. He said that the Turkish Cypriots owned 33.8 percent of the arable land and one of the most important factors in the criteria was the economic sufficiency of the land. He cited as example of inequality of land exchange the value of 100 donums of unirrigable land in the Mesaoria compared with 100 donums of irrigable land in Paphos in Limassol.

President Denktas said that the claim by Mr Rolandhis that there was an agreement between himself and Archbishop Makarios on the territorial aspect to the effect that the Turkish Cypriot side had accepted 20 percent of the land was untrue. President Denktas said that the question was not a division of empty land but the establishment of a federal system in which the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot communities could live in peace and security without hurting each other. He said that the basis for such a federal system ahd been established and borders determined. He stressed that the agreement was that readjustments could be made on these determined borders.

President Denktas concluded by saying that the main wish of the Turkish Cypriot community was to live in peace and security and that the community would not accept any solution which would turn the community to refugees once again and endanger their security.

Kiprianou Response

NC101536 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in English 1510 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] The president of the republic, Mr Kiprianou, said today that despite the efforts of the Greek Cypriot side for a just and honorable solution to the Cyprus problem, the negotiations have so far failed to achieve any result because of the negative and intransigent position of the Turkish side.

Speaking at Kato Pyrgos village this morning, President Kiprianou said that recent statements by the Turkish Cypriot leader, Mr Denktas, in which he again referred to borders between Greeks and Turks in Cyprus, revealed his provocative and intransigent attitude. The president declared that the Greek Cypriot side would never accept the existence of borders or a partitionist solution.

COMMERCE MINISTER KITTIS LEAVES FOR MOSCOW TALKS

NC111839 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in English 1510 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] The minister of commerce and industry, Mr Kittis, left for Moscow today for a week's visit at the invitation of the Soviet Government. During his stay, he will negotiate an agreement for the supply of heavy fuel oil to the Cyprus electricity authority. He will also discuss the export of Cyprus wine and other products to the Soviet Union.

U.S. AMBASSADOR MAKES 'HARSH' REMARKS ON REFUGEES

NC120740 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 12 May 81 p 1

[Text] During a meeting with Cypriot newsmen yesterday, outgoing Ambassador Stone harshly stated that not all refugees will return to their houses in the event of a Cyprus settlement because this is "practically impossible." In answer to a remark that this would be tantamount to violation of the citizens' right of free movement, Mr Stone tried to justify his statement by saying that he meant that "in order not to undermine a solution, the two parties must jointly agree to ban" the movement "of certain elements" in the regions to be under the separate administration of the two communities.

However, the U.S. ambassador did not manage to avoid contradictions and shortly thereafter he described the Makarios-Denktas framework as the proper framework for the intercommunal talks. When it was pointed out to him that the Makarios-Denktas agreement provides for the free movement of citizens throughout the state of Cyprus, Mr Stone remained silent for a number of minutes and finally said that he did not see any contradiction. Mr Stone was quite "generous" and said that those refugees who will not be allowed to return will be paid compensation, a fact, he said that "would help the finding of a solution"!

As for the possibilities for a solution, Mr Stone insisted that there should be "mutual concessions." In answer to a newsman's remark that it is solely the Greek Cypriot side that has been making concessions, he simply reiterated his assertion.

Answering another question, as to whether the U.S. Government intends to bring back the Western plan for a Cyprus solution, he said he does not know of the existence of such intention, but he added "it depends on the two parties--whether they would like to utilize it at any moment." We have tried, he said, to create a basis for discussion. Asked, however, what exigency made necessary the submission of this basis, since a basis was already provided by the UN resolutions which were supported by the majority of the UN member states and not merely by four countries as was the case with the Western plan, the U.S. ambassador could not furnish an answer.

Asked why the U.S. does not pressure Turkey to be conciliatory, he said that "this method has been used but it has failed in the case of the embargo." Mr Stone again was unable to answer a newsman's remark that 3 years have passed since the lifting of the embargo and yet the United States has been unable to send Turkish intransigence in any other way.

In connection with the "mutual concessions" to which he referred, he said that the Turkish side expects these concessions to be constitutional with regard to the Greek Cypriot side, and territorial with regard to the Turkish Cypriot side.

At the beginning of his meeting with the press, Mr Stone expressed his sorrow because he is leaving Cyprus and said he intends to visit Cyprus again as an individual. Mr Stone is retiring and he will settle in Boston where he has already secured employment with a private enterprise.

During his meeting, Mr Stone declined--despite persistent questions--to refer to the principles which are being violated in the Cyprus problem.

ONCU: U.S. AIDS GREEK CYPRIOT ADMINISTRATION

NC110639 Nicosia ONCU in Turkish 8 May 81 p 1

[Text] Washington--It has been reported that the Foreign Affairs Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives has approved a proposal for another $15 million of aid to the Greek Cypriot administration. It is also reported that $5 million of this aid will be allocated to the education of Greek Cypriot students.

REPORTAGE ON LIMNOS ISLAND AIRFIELD ISSUE

Protest to NATO

NC081547 Athens I AKROPOLIS in Greek 8 May 81 pp 1, 9

[Text] A strong Greek protest was lodged with NATO over its refusal to use the Limnos Island airfield, because of Turkish objections, during allied maneuvers. The Greek protest was revealed in an article published by a proleftwing fortnightly review [press reports identified the review as the magazine ANTI] and was also confirmed by a government spokesman.

Specifically, this review reported in its current issue that a tabletop maneuver was held last March under the designation "WINTEX SIMEX," which has been held every 2 years since the 1968 Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia.

NATO refused to include the Limnos Island airfield in this staff maneuver following Turkish objections, as mentioned above. The result was that the Ministry of National Defense sent a strong protest to allied headquarters which, according to the published article, stated:

"In answer to your message informing us that the Greek Air Force contingent at Limnos Airfield is not accepted, we have to make the following observations:

"1--We regret that the alliance has refused to operate an Air Force contingent from Limnos Airfield which, due to its position and potential, could considerably strengthen the joint allied effort within a critical area of the southern wing.

"2--In accordance with the constitutional charter of the alliance, Greece, being responsible for the protection of its own territory, will continue to maintain its Air Force at Limnos, both for the purpose of supporting operations in northern Greece, due to its proximity, and for the purpose of implementing the essential dispersal of its forces and the total utilization of available facilities and installations.

"3--This contingent will carry out air operations within the area of its responsibility for the purpose of protecting NATO (Greek) territory.

"4--We are concerned and we wonder what would happen if similar incidents appeared under the actual conditions of a crisis, or during an interstate war. The handling of these situations is prepared during times of peace and does not lend itself to a spur of the moment solution."

A government spokesman who was asked about the published report made the following statement:

"The document in fact does exist. The Greek Government maintains that Limnos is militarized under the Montreaux Treaty.

"The Turks argue the contrary. In accordance with established policy, whenever a difference does exist, NATO does not intervene but abstains.

"The Greek document supports the Greek position that Limnos is militarized.

"The Treaty of Lausanne, signed in 1923, provided that Limnos should not be militarized. However, the Treaty of Montreaux, which is more recent, having been signed in 1936, described Limos as militarized.

"If Greece did not react, then this could have created the danger of an apparent acceptance of the Turkish position by Greece that Limnos is not militarized."

Commenting on the article late last night, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou said an extremely grave issue has been created. This is because, in his opinion, the spirit of the NATO maneuver in the Aegean is part of a purely Cold War climate. How is it possible, he added, for the Greek Government to promote its bipartisan and multilateral relations of good neighborliness with the Balkan countries when it participates in maneuvers whose ideological-political character is so clearly a Cold War character?

As he stated in the Chamber of Deputies, he added that it is the U.S. commander of the southeast wing who would relegate areas of responsibility in specific instances, until such time as Greece and Turkey defined the areas of responsibility of the Smirna and Larissa headquarters. Developments, he added, lead to the conclusion that Turkey, operating through the apparatus and structure of NATO, has fundamentally extended its own responsibility over airspace west of the Athens FIR.

It is obvious, he argued, that within the framework of NATO the government has ceded to Turkey rights which undermine national sovereignty over the Aegean and weaken our country's defense. In conclusion, he stressed that the prime minister bears a heavy responsibility.

Responding to Papandreou, National Defense Minister Averof made the following statement last night:

"With the irresponsibility which is characteristic of him, the chairman of PASOK once again attempted to exploit the revelation of a top secret document. As usual, he exploits it by speaking of the ceding of national rights. Even for a reader with the most elemental knowledge, the document states clearly that nothing was ceded anywhere and that NATO refuses to take a position on an issue--whether Limnos is or is not militarized--which unfortunately raises a legal question. The document further reveals that the Greek Government reacted in a severe way confirming the legal and true position it supports. While at one time Papandreou demanded war with Turkey, he now demands war with NATO.

"As to our participation in NATO maneuvers, which Papandreou describes as Cold War activities, this is nothing but an arbitrary and unfounded allegation.

"This allegation can be shot down with numerous arguments, only one of which, however, ought to be sufficient: The policy we follow is followed by all NATO members, some of which are governed by socialist governments. Obviously all these governments are convinced that they are not undertaking any Cold War activities and that they do not harm their relations with the East. As the Greeks well know from numerous documents, however, Papandreou's socialism is peculiar and unique."

Spokesman on Turkish Claims

NC102224 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] Replying to a statement by a Turkish Foreign Ministry spokesman, a Greek Foreign Ministry spokesman has stated that everything said by the Turkish spokesman in connection with the status of Limnos [Island] is inaccurate. The Lausanne Peace Treaty concluded in 1923 mentioned nothing about the demilitarization of Limnos. The case of this island was settled by the Lausanne Convention which was a separate document from the peace treaty and concerned the straits status. The Lausanne Treaty provided for the demilitarization of the Limnos and Samothraki straits as well as of the Turkish islands of Imroz, Bozcaada and Laouses isles. However, that treaty was replaced in 1936 by the Montreaux Treaty, which entirely abolished the status provided by the Lausanne Treaty.

According to the Montreaux Treaty, Turkey considers the straits and islands belonging to it as free of any obligation for demilitarization. As is natural, this applies also for Limnos and Samothraki which, with the abolishment of the status envisaged by the Lausanne Treaty, have also been exempted from any obligation for demilitarization.

The fact that this is the legal status created by the Montreaux Treaty is also proved by a statement made on 31 July 1936 by the then Turkish Foreign Minister (Rousvi Arash). This statement, which was recorded in the minutes of the Turkish national assembly, was word for word as follows: The conditions concerning the islands of Limnos and Samothraki belonging to our neighbor and friend Greece, which had been demilitarized on the basis of the 1923 Lausanne Treaty, have been abolished by the Montreaux Treaty.

KKE Statement

NC081635 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 8 May 81 p 1

[KKE Central Committee press office statement on documents related to NATO map exercise; date not given]

[Text] The entire content of the plan of the order of the day issued by the national defense general staff chief for the NATO map exercise against an "alleged" attack by the Warsaw Pact--the authenticity of which the government did not deny--is revealing about the government's foreign policy and orientations and the consequences of our return to NATO.

In itself, our country's participation in the Cold War NATO map exercise and, specifically, the way the national defense general staff chief talked about our friendly neighboring countries as "Greece's impertinent, Red, merciless, cold-blooded and slanderous enemies," substantially undermines the policy of good neighborliness and peace, which the government claims to be following in the Balkans. These things tangibly submit our country to the dangerous and adventurist plans of NATO in the Balkans and they educate the armed forces in a Cold War atmosphere. The danger from the north and hatred of neighboring peace-loving countries.

Furthermore, the document on Limnos Airfield again reveals that Greece does not constitute an "allied" but a tributary country within the NATO alliance--which is, in essence, the country's master--to which the government has acknowledged jurisdiction over allowing or forbidding the use of our defense potential. These new revelations confirm that the government follows a policy of total subjugation of the country's national independence, defense and security to the imperialists, while it prepares for new commitments through the bases agreement.

It is now a matter of life for the country to have the party of subjugation and sell-out to the imperialists surrender power.

'RADICAL MOVEMENT' CIRCULATES POLICY STATEMENT

NC071728 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 7 May 81 p 10

[Text] A new political movement named "Radical Movement" yesterday circulated a proclamation with its policy statement. It was signed by its secretary general, Konstandinos Pilarinos (as is known, Pilarinos was nomarch of Thessaloniki and resigned his position when he clashed with north Greece Minister Martis).

The "Radical Movement" proclamation states that political life is once again "showing symptoms of dissolution and bankruptcy and that a government and party establishment has been enforced, full of opportunists, slanderers, renegades and apostates of all colors."

FOREIGN MINISTRY ON STATUS OF GREEK ISLAND

TA091638 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 9 May 81

[Text] The Foreign Ministry has announced that the Greek reaction to the fact that the island of Limne [Lemnos] was left out of the NATO SIMEX-81 exercise is not justified.

When NATO did not allow the military air squadron to take off from the airport in Limne for the SIMEX-81 exercise, the Greek Government sent a message to NATO and expressed concern over the situation. In a statement on the subject, the Greek Government spokesman claimed that Greece has the right to militarize Limne and that the Montreux Convention allows this.

In a statement to journalists, Foreign Ministry spokesman Oktay Iscen said that the matter is above all, an issue that arose between NATO and Greece and that the decisions within NATO are made through a wide concensus. Pointing out that NATO is very careful not to take sides on issues concerning Turkey and Greece--two members of the alliance, Iscen noted that the fact that the SIMEX-81 exercise was planned in a way to affect the demilitarized status of Limne is a consequence of this attitude.

Iscen continued: The Greek claim that the Montreux Convention allows the militarization of Limne is devoid of any legal basis, because the islands of Limne, Semadirek [Samothraki], Midilli [Lesbos], Sakis [Chios], Sisam [Samos] and Nikarya [Ikaria] were demilitarized in accordance with the 1913 London agreement, under the announcement in 1914 and through the 12th article of the 1923 Lausanne Treaty. The 12 islands were accorded demilitarized status through the 1947 Paris Peace Treaty. The demilitarized status of Limne has not changed through the 1936 Montreux Convention. The Montreux Convention has only accorded Turkey the authority to militarize the [Turkish] Straits.

TURKMEN LEAVES FOR COUNCIL OF EUROPE MEETING

[Text] Ankara, 11 May (AA)--Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said Turkey's relations with the Council of Europe were not limited to relations with the Council's Parliamentary Assembly. He made the comment before leaving for Strasbourg Monday to attend the Council's Ministerial Committee session.

Turkmen said at Esenboga Airport that even if the Parliamentary Assembly were to end the term of the Turkish delegation, there would be no substantial consequence for Turkey, for institutional ties with the Council of Europe would be maintained, and Turkish parliamentarians would return to the Council Assembly when parliamentary democracy was restored in Turkey.

The foreign minister confirmed Turkey had asked for the postponement of its turn to fill the post of speaker this month and that of speaker in November, "until parliamentary democracy can be reinstituted in full." Turkmen will return to Turkey Saturday, 16 May.

COMMANDERS RETURN FROM NATO EXERCISE IN BELGIUM

TA101736 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] Members of the National Security Council Ground Forces Commander Gen Nurettin Ersin and Air Force Commander Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya, who participated in the NATO SHAPEX-81 exercise in Belgium, returned to Turkey today.

In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport, Ersin said that the NATO exercise was very successful and that he held very beneficial talks in Belgium.

In his statement, Sahinkaya commented on his visit to Canada and the United States. Pointing out that there are military agreements between Turkey and Canada, Sahinkaya said: I had talks on purchasing training planes and supplying spare parts from Canada within the framework of these agreements. He said that agreement was reached with the Canadian chief of the General Staff and Air Force commander on extending every kind of military aid to Turkey. Sahinkaya also noted that he held talks in the United States and said: Together with the commanders of all the NATO countries, we observed the recent developments in aviation in the United States and acquired very useful knowledge. Ersin and Sahinkaya then went to Ankara.

Navy Commander Adm Nejat Tumer left Brussels for Italy to attend the NATO Navy commanders meeting to be held in Naples. Tumer will return to Turkey on 17 May.

[Text] Ankara, 8 May (AA)--Deputy Premier Turgut Ozal returned from Paris Friday, after attending the OECD pledging meeting for aid to Turkey there. Ozal said at the airport, he was satisfied with the result. He told reporters the pledge of United States had risen, Federal Germany had dropped and other member countries, were the same as last year.

EEC FAVORS TURKISH COUNCIL OF EUROPE MEMBERSHIP

TA101618 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] The current president of the EEC ministerial council, Netherlands Minister of Foreign affairs Christoph van der Klaauw, has said that the members of the EEC are in favor of Turkey remaining in the Council of Europe.

The unofficial meeting of the 10 EEC countries' foreign ministers, which began in the Netherlands yesterday, has ended. In a news conference today, Van der Klaauw noted that in addition to various international issues, the subject of Turkey was also discussed during the meeting. He said: As European governments, we believe that Turkey should remain in the Council of Europe and continue its relations with Europe. According to an ANKARA NEWS AGENCY [ANKA] report, Van der Klaauw said that during the 2-day meeting in the Netherlands, he briefed the foreign ministers of the EEC members in connection with his meetings with Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen. Van der Klaauw added that Turkmen told him that the Turkish Government is determined to return to political life and democracy and that efforts are being made to return to democracy as soon as possible under existing conditions.

[Text] Ankara, 11 May (AA)--The Council of Ministers approved an implementing agreement between the United States and Turkey on the consolidation and rescheduling of certain debts owed to the Agency for International Development (AID).

According to the agreement, Turkey shall pay to AID interest at the rate of 3.31 percent per annum on the outstanding balance of the consolidated debt and on any due unpaid interest thereon.

The debt which was due and unpaid as of June [word indistinct] which amounts to $3.3 million, and the debt which falls due between 1 July 1980 and 30 June 1981 and which amounts to $46 million will be repaid in ten equal installments from 1909 [as received] through 1990.

A previously rescheduled debt which was due and unpaid as of 30 June 1980 and which amounts to $6.4 million and the rescheduled debt which falls due between 1 July 1980 and 30 June 1981 and which amounts to $8.8 million shall be repaid in eight equal installments, from 1985 through 1988.

CABINET APPROVES AGREEMENT WITH SOVIET UNION

[Text] Ankara, 10 May (AA)--The Turkish-Soviet agreement on coopeation for the expansion of the Seydishehir aluminium works has been approved by the Council of Ministers.

The agreement, which appears in Sunday's OFFICIAL GAZETTE, provides for a Soviet loan equivalent to 200 million dollars for machinery, equipment and technological material to be used in the design, construction and assembling of the installations. The loan will be repaid over 10 years at 5 percent interest.

TRADE MINISTER LEAVES FOR ECONOMIC TALKS IN PRC

TA091048 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 9 May 81

[Text] Trade Minister Kemal Canturk left Istanbul for the PRC to hold official talks there. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport before he left, Canturk said that during his talks they would look for ways of developing the commercial and economic relations between the two countries. The trade minister will return to Turkey on 22 May.

LIBYAN TRADE DELEGATION MEETS BUSINESSMEN

TA081455 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1435 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] Bursa, 8 May (AA)--The Libyan trade delegation, who (?was) here for trade contracts, met Turkish manufacturers and businessmen in order to buy textiles and furniture. Libyan trade attache (Muhammad Sharsmari) told reporters Libya will import goods from Turkey worth 1 billion dollars by the end of this year. Contracts for 24 million dollars of goods from Bursa Province were made in January 1981, (Sharsmari) said, adding negotiations were being continued to increase the figure to 200 million dollars.

The delegation had held a series of talks in Ankara, Izmir and Canakkale (Sharsmari) said. Contracts were signed for 90 million dollars of [words indistinct] Izmir and Canakkale, and 5,000 tons of fresh meat from the meat and fish office.

MAGAZINE DEFENDS GOVERNMENT ON PARLIAMENTARIAN BAN

NC081013 Ankara YANKI in Turkish 4-10 May 81 p 9

[Text] Efforts are now being made to create the impression, particularly outside Turkey, that the National Security Council wants to introduce a democracy in Turkey just for show and that it is planning to fill the parliament with stooges from the army.

This is being openly stated. So much so that, having spread this allegation, Peter Corterier, parliamentary spokesman of the party in power in Germany, said: "Let us review the aid we extend to Turkey. I believe that in view of the new situation, the majority in our parliament will oppose any further aid to Turkey." This is due to the fact that the National Security Council is determined not to allow former parliamentarians to participate either in the constituent assembly or in the parliament to be formed later.

The tactic which they seek to implement is to equate the ban on the participation of former parliamentarians in the new parliament with the new form of democracy intended for Turkey. In other words, their argument is that since the parliamentarians in the last parliament will not be allowed to be elected to the new parliament, there won't be any democracy in Turkey. This fundamentally rotten logic and ludicrous trick must be foiled at all costs. First of all, the National Security Council must clearly explain to friend and foe alike the reasons which compel it to adopt such a decision.

As we have already stated, judging from Gen Kenan Evren's speeches and making our own evaluations, we say that: 1. The former parliamentarians are absolutely responsible for bringing Turkey to the 12 September operation. They must therefore bear the consequences. This can be in the form of a ban on their return to the parliament.

2. It is highly probable that if the old parliamentarians are allowed to be elected to the new parliament, the new national assembly and the senate may be plunged again into the old parliamentary atmosphere. There is not a single convincing development or proof that they have learned a lesson from the recent events. That is why it would be advisable to create a new, young administrative cadre "out of 45 million" fellow countrymen through a completely free and democratic system.

3. Undoubtedly there are extremely worthy, honest and sincere personalities among the old parliamentarians. But it is impossible to filter them in such an objective manner as to render them acceptable to everybody. Moreover, as pointed out by Gen Evren, failure by these "worthy" people to tender their resignation in protest against the known events does not absolve them from responsibility.

Friend and foe alike must be told in clear terms that in the light of these facts, not allowing these 600 parliamentarians [450 national assembly deputies and 150 republican senators] to be elected to the parliament for a period will not cast a shadow on democracy in Turkey.

Naturally, the task of the National Security Council won't be easy. This task will be even more difficult if new institutions and new mechanisms rarely seen in Western democracies, are to be introduced in the new constitution. But we deem it unnecessary and untimely to discuss the hitherto undisclosed aspects of the situation. For the time being only the point referred to above should be cleared up.

KREISKY COMMENTS ON MITTERRAND'S ELECTION VICTORY

AU111024 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0514 GMT 11 May 81

[Interview with Chancellor Bruno Kreisky on 11 May; place not given--recorded]

[Summary] [Question] Mr Chancellor, what is your opinion of Francois Mitterrand's landslide victory yesterday?

[Answer] "First of all, let me tell you in my capacity as an Austrian social democrat that I am very glad that my French friend Mitterrand has won these elections. Considering that these elections have taken place in such an important European country, they are in some ways of great importance also for the other social democratic parties in Europe. And, second, let me say that we now must wait and see what political changes will ensue from these elections. Certainly such changes will primarily involve domestic policy."

[Question] A large Vienna daily, KRONEN-ZEITUNG, today runs the headline "Election Victor Mitterrand Now on Kreisky's Course", How does Kreisky conceive such a course?

[Answer] "In the French election campaign, the Austrian example was frequently mentioned. In France, there is a lot of unemployment--just as in England and in other European countries--and a very high inflation rate. And since neither exists in our country, we were used as an example. The third factor is the bourgeois fear that Socialists, if they are in power, will deprive the farmers of their last cow and will steer a radical course--and as we have been the government party in Austria for 11 years, the French Socialists used us as an example."

[Question] Now the French Socialists are in a more difficult position than Austrian Socialists--they have relatively close ties with the French Communist Party. How do you think Mitterrand will succeed in warding off the demands of French Communists?

[Answer] "He will be very well able to cope with that. He is a very resolute man, a very strong personality and a very reliable democrat, and there will be nothing that could in any way jeopardize French democracy."

[Question] "In other words, you, personally, don't believe that there could be a Communist in the French Government?

[Answer] "I cannot say that, the French Communist Party is a party which represents rather large groups of workers--but if the Communists should get something, it would certainly be very closely restricted to certain specific fields and would not give the Communists any influence on those ministries that are of essential importance for democracy."

Reacts to Begin Remarks

AU121212 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1028 GMT 12 May 81

[Johannes Fischer and Markus Sommersacher report on Vienna press conference following 12 May morning cabinet meeting of the Austrian Government]

[Excerpt] In foreign policy, there is a very moderate reaction to the latest abuse of Austria by Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin, who declared that Austria had been even worse than Germany during the Nazi era.

[Begin recording] [Chancellor Kreisky] In any case, we will strictly comply with the rules customary in international diplomacy and we will not let such utterances go uncontradicted. We will certainly find ways and means of defending ourselves.

[Question] Is this statement not being taken so seriously because it was made in the heat of the campaign, the Israeli election campaign?

[Kreisky] Let me tell you expressly that I personally cannot accept this statement made by the speaker on television--which I understand and against which I do not want to polemize--but even in an election campaign certain rules must be observed--this applies to domestic policy as well as in relations with other countries, does it not? Hence, I believe the Foreign Ministry will do what is most appropriate.

[Question] Does that mean that Begin's utterance will lead to a deterioration of Austrian-Israeli relations?

[Kreisky] I certainly don't think so. You see, actually, the fact is that those who have a sense of responsibility in Israel know very well how large the contribution was which Austria--as the only country--made. For example, for the emigration of the Jews from East Europe. And this burden has not been taken from our shoulders by any other European country. if all this should be nullified, well, that would be the responsibility of the person who does it. [end recording] Kreisky added that there would be no substantial changes in that respect.

COMPANY DIRECTOR EXPECTS SAUDI TANK ORDER

AU111429 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 9-10 May 81 pp 1,10

[Special report by "JU"]

[Summary] Vienna--According to Herbert Klebl, financial director of the Steyr-Daimler Puch Corporation, the company is expecting a Saudi Arabian order for at least 400 Cuirassier tanks. Some 200 of these tanks are immediately available--they were originally produced for Chile but their exportation was banned by the Austrian Government. In about 3 years, there also will be Steyr tanks "made in Nigeria": An assembling plant for Steyr tanks and cross-country vehicles near the already operative Steyr truck and tractor assembling plant in Bauchi will then take up production. The Bauchi plant, of which the Steyr works hold a 40 percent share, has a capacity of 8,000 trucks and 2,000 tractors annually.

As director Klebl told journalists, the Stehr Corporation plans to establish at least two or three more assembling plants patterned after the Bauchi plant, which went into operation in 1979, in Mexico, Indonesia and the Philippines. As far as sales of the Puch-G cross-country vehicles are concerned, which were developed jointly with the Mercedes Company, the Steyr management is now concentrating its efforts on the military version after civilian sales of the high-quality but expensive vehicle remained far behind expectations. The Argentine Army already has bought 1,000 of these vehicles and another 2,500 will be bought by the Norwegian Army.

LABOR PARTY OUTLINES DEFENSE POLICY OBJECTIVES

LD110929 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 2 May 81 p 2

[Own correspondent report]

[Excerpt] The Hague, 2 May--If the Labor Party is part of the next cabinet, the cabinet will have to present a new defense memorandum within 6 months. This would set out long and short term cuts, to be achieved through reforms in the branches of the armed services and through cuts in the standing army.

This is one of the objectives summed up in the "First Year's Program for Foreign Affairs" published by the Labor Party yesterday. Former Minister Stemerdink, the Labor Party second chamber defense specialist, stressed by way of example the importance of reforms in the short term.

As a result of cuts in the defense budgets for 1980 and 1981 (179 and 100 million guilders respectively), which have not yet been fully implemented, a fuel shortage threatens the armed services by September.

A future Netherlands cabinet in which the Labor Party is involved must not only let its NATO partners know that the Netherlands will not vote in favor of the deployment of cruise missiles, but also that the Netherlands "will not accept any responsibility for the December 1979 resolution for the modernization of medium-range nuclear arms."

According to party leader Den Uyl this would "not present any difficulty" to the Christian Democratic appeal because representatives of the party "on various occasions" have also made it known that it would only be possible to support the NATO modernization decision if the U.S. Senate ratifies SALT II--a condition which has not been fulfilled.

However, Den Uyl conceded yesterday that recent reports of U.S. readiness to resume arms limitation talks with the Soviet Union could possibly reflect "a change of course."

The Labor Party's program for the first year of government proposes discussions with Norway, Belgium and Denmark on joint rationalizations in conventional defense efforts.

OFFICIALS TALK WITH CUBAN ECONOMIC DELEGATION

[Text] The Hague--Ernesto Melendez, vice president of the Cuban State Committee for Economic Cooperation, today began talks with Netherlands officials on development of technical and economic relations. During its visit, the Cuban economic delegation will meet with representatives of the Economy, Foreign Affairs, Finance and Cooperation Ministries and of various commercial firms.

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT DISCUSSES RELATIONS WITH FRANCE

[Text] Bonn, 12 May (DPA)--Following his talks with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt stressed the two governments' expectations of close cooperation with future French President Francois Mitterrand. In an interview on German Television 2 [ZDF], Schmidt stated today: "I believe that England, like we in Germany, will approach the new French Government with open arms."

In an interview on German television 1 [ARD], Schmidt called the previously used expression of a "Bonn-Paris axis" inappropriate. He added that it is correct to say, however, that the cooperation and friendship between the French and Germans form a pivot and key to overall European cooperation and the process of unification. On the basis of the 1963 friendship treaty between Bonn and Paris, there will be no changes in this.

Schmidt further conceded the possibility that, because of the new elections to the French National Assembly that Mitterrand wants, there might not be a solution to the EEC budget problems at the EC summit in the end of June Luxembourg. The second half of 1981 would then have to be used to resolve these problems. What is important is that Germany or even England, for example, should not remain net payers with unlimited contributions.

BRANDT: MITTERRAND WIN 'OF HISTORIC SIGNIFICANCE'

LD121042 Hamburg DPA in German 0836 GMT 12 May 81

[Text] Bonn (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt considers the election of Socialist Francois Mitterrand as French president to be of great, historic significance for France and thus for Europe. According to the SPD today, Brandt told the SPD Presidium that Mitterrand's election victory also rebuts the current theory that politics in the Western world are inevitably developing in a conservative direction. He said that Mitterrand's impressive success may also have an encouraging effect in other European countries where elections are due.

In the Presidium meeting yesterday evening, Brandt stressed that the friendly relations and close cooperation between Mitterrand's French Socialist Party and the SPD ought to be further developed and extended as far as possible.

BERLIN FDP COMMITTEE OPPOSES COALITION WITH CDU

[Text] Berlin, 12 May (DPA)--The Regional Committee of the Berlin FDP tonight came out against forming a coalition with the CDU in the Berlin house of representatives. The committee, comprising about 80 members, voted by a large majority for a proposal to this effect presented by the regional executive. Treasurer Guenther Freye resigned from the executive because of this decision. He belongs to the Berlin FDP rightwing and was only elected in March.

The resolution adopted by the FDP regional committee, which is to be put to a regional party congress on 22 May, says that the FDP election result of 5.6 percent doesn't justify entering a coalition with the CDU and seeking participation in a CDU-led Senat. The FDP will therefore not join a coalition with the CDU in the upcoming legislative term.

The regional committee rejected a passage which would have excluded tacit support for a CDU Senat. This leaves open the possibility that the FDP, without taking part in a CDU-led government, might facilitate by its voting behavior a minority city government under Richard von Weizsaecker.

The FDP called on the SPD, its coalition partner in the outgoing government, to "remain aware of its political responsibility for the common good." The resolution states that "the black-red coalitions which have existed in the boroughs of Berlin for years made possible the formation of majorities without the FDP."

Berlin FDP Chairman Juergen Kunze, whose ideas have been largely confirmed, will hold a press conference on Wednesday morning to report on the regional committee meeting.

WEINSTEIN VIEWS NATO DEFENSE MINISTERS CONFERENCE

DW111441 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 11 May 81 p 12

[Adelbert Weinstein article: "The Bundeswehr Is Still Holding First Position"]

[Text] Brussels, 10 May--The defense ministers of the Atlantic alliance will assemble in Brussels. The main issue will be the political guidelines for orienting the alliance's military planning. Although this happens every 2 years, the conference will hardly be a routine session. It is overshadowed by the Rome foreign ministers meeting. NATO's so-called dual decision was confirmed there. The United States conceded to the pressure of its European partners, stating that it is prepared to begin a dialogue with the Soviet Union on arms limitation. Now the Europeans expect the Americans to demand a military concession in return for their political concession. Secretary of Defense Weinberger is expected to once more demand military results from the allies. Second, he will press for the execution of the military part of the dual decision--counterarmament.

But the cashboxes are empty in Europe. The German defense minister cannot even tell the conference for sure whether he will be able to pay for the fuel for his armed forces equipment. A decision will be made in Bonn, on Tuesday at the earliest, about how the millions will be financed, which will be necessary to keep the Bundeswehr capable of acting.

However, the Bundeswehr needn't accept being placed in the prisoner's dock. Compared with the others, the Bundeswehr is far ahead of all allied troops with regard to quality. Regarding equipment, it is superior to the U.S. 7th Army in Europe. With the Leopard tank, the West German Army forms the core of the Atlantic defensive strength in central Europe. The Americans are a bit better with regard to artillery and electronic command communications. But, on the other hand, they have constant personnel problems and are always worried about whether the average volunteer will be able to cope with the demands entailed by modern technology. it may be that the German Luftwaffe is flying less hours than it did before. That is a problem and ought to be changed. But, on the other hand, the American allies have a shortage of specialists to take care of the highly sensitive flying equipment. Frequently, there is also a shortage of spare parts. And then there is compulsory military service in the Federal Republic. Young Germans sacrifice more than 1 year of their professional training. In exchange, they produce security. American males aren't being drafted. That has been confirmed by President Reagan. It must be respected. But the Federal Republic ought to point out in Brussels that the military commitment of its youth is more than a financial contribution to security.

Without accusing each other of weaknesses or omissions, one ought to be able to point out to the American secretary of defense that the Federal Republic as a whole has lived up to its military commitments. From this basis, one can negotiate on what "more" will be demanded by Caspar Weinberger from all, not just from us. It can be assumed that this time, too, the Americans will have in mind a financial increase of some 3 percent of Western armament efforts. They will not outline the figure, but the Pentagon is hoping for a corresponding increase in performance. So the political guidelines for the next 2 years will be mainly of a financial character. They will, therefore, be kept only in general terms. Who dares predict, including America, how many dollars can really be spent on defense in 1984?

Not Only Money

The alliance would, therefore, be well advised to evade an unproductive discussion on the problem of who has contributed what to common defense. One must naturally strike the balance. Weak points must be recognized; improvements must be made. Warning must be made, however, against a transatlantic dialogue dealing only with the monetary issue. The alliance is facing a completely different dangerous challenge: inner cohesion no longer exists. National egotisms have become stronger than the will for common action. The European partners consider detente as something else than the Americans. For some smaller allies, detente is tantamount to a stable international situation which is still to be achieved. Many Europeans have never understood that detente is a process. They confuse a development with a state. The United States considers detente policy mainly as the yielding of the Europeans, as an attempt by the Soviets to break up the Atlantic solidarity. It is no exaggeration if NATO's secretary general speaks in this political confusion of cleavage tendencies in the alliance. That must be counteracted.

Second, a pacifist wave is flowing over the European NATO countries. It is being fed from several sources: environment protectors, who rejected scientific nuclear energy as well as nuclear arms, Christian antagonists of security policy who are afraid of nuclear war, radical socialist ideologists, leftist intellectual prosperity advocates, youthful demonstrators who show their displeasure with a society built on achievements and communist wirepullers. The pacifist movements all have an anti-American accent. Uncritically, they take over disarmament slogans of the Soviet Union, accusing the United States of being aggressive. This mood depresses the cohesion in the alliance. The approach of the Netherlands and the Belgians is being influenced by such forces. In addition, elections will take place there in the near future. The activity of leftist German Social Democrats must also bring influence to bear on the dual decision. With their fanaticism, they threaten counterarmament and thus the unity of NATO. Controversial approaches also exist in Italy and Scandinavia. The formulation that the Americans had promised in Rome to discuss arms limitation with the Russians and that the Europeans in return ought to check the pacifists hits the core of the situation.

In addition, there is no clarity in the camp of the European allies with regard to the American aim, the foreign policy and the strategy of the United States. Some signals from the new Washington government are hard to interpret. But it is wrong to say the Americans still have no line at all for their foreign and security policies. President Reagan has made it clear that American's strategy will be fully focused on East-West relations. In other words, the United States wants to meet Soviet encroachments with firmness. That includes far-reaching counterarmament. Such problems as human rights, nuclear proliferation and regional conflicts in Africa or the Middle East will be kept in the background.

New Orientation

Such questions as military security in the Gulf region or military support of the United States by such partners as Europe or Japan will be kept in the foreground. A few days ago, Secretary of Defense Weinberger pointed out in a basic speech in California the lines of American strategy. According to this, America considers itself an island nation which must safeguard numerous raw material areas, and which must, therefore, be prepared to be able to fight for them. The United States is looking for partners in this strategy. It is prepared to act for their interests, but on a mutual basis. In Europe, these partners are the NATO countries. The domestic political malaise in at least five European countries complicates partnership. Despite Rome and Brussels, counterarmament will procede little this year. This will dash an American hope. But the Americans, too, are just in the beginning of their new strategic orientation. Claim and reality are not identical. Taking all these considerations together, actually, no misunderstanding ought to take place in the spring conference. Every side depends on the other. That is no reason for uneasiness or resignation, but an impetus for joint action.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU CRITICIZES DEFENSE INCREASE

DW120945 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 12 May 81 p 3

[Commentary signed Mac: "The 3 Percent Song"]

[Text] The old song about an increase in defense expenditures of 3 percent in real terms seems to have an endless number of stanzas. How else can it be explained that the 3 percent song appears with beautiful regularity at NATO's spring and winter conferences, performed by the United States, although with changing "singers." This was not an earlier issue when the European fair-haired boys of NATO were ahead of Washington when it came to financial expenditure percentages, meaning that their expenditures as a whole were higher than those of Washington.

Since the last half of Jimmy Carter's term in office--and now being pursued quite a bit more strongly by President Reagan--the United States has been leading out, and it wants to pull Europe along. In this connection, all discussions of the figures are actually superfluous.

The Federal Republic, for example, (in contrast to the United States) has enormous personnel reserves in the form of reservists, some 750,000 men, who can be called to the barracks on short notice. This must be taken into consideration as much as the financial miseries of the Europeans as a whole. Certainly, it can be predicted already that Bonn will involuntarily pass the 3 percent point. More money for fuel, higher Tornado costs--the cabinet will grant a bigger lump sum on Wednesday to its colleague Hans Apel. The 3 percent demand as such ought to finally disappear from the debate.

GISCARD ACCEPTS BARRE CABINET RESIGNATION

NC130948 Paris AFP in English 0944 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] Paris, 13 May (AFP)--President Valery Giscard d'Estaing today accepted the resignation of French Premier Raymond Barre and his government, it was officially announced.

Mr Barre and the government resigned after today's routine weekly cabinet meeting chaired by the president at the Elysee Palace. Mr Barre was asked to continue looking after current affairs until a new government is formed when President-elect Francois Mitterrand takes office next week.

CHIRAC PROPOSES PACT WITH UDF TO FORM NEW MAJORITY

LD121700 Paris Domestic Service in French 1600 GMT 12 May 81

[Text] A short time ago, Jacques Chirac proposed a pact to the UDF in order to create a new majority during the legislative elections. Speaking to the RPR National Assembly group, Chirac went so far as to say that he is also at the disposal of the other groups in the majority to discuss the way in which the upcoming election campaign will be run and how nominations will be made.

PRESIDENT-ELECT MEETS WITH PORTUGAL SOCIALIST

LD130148 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2230 GMT 12 May 81

[Excerpts] In his Paris residence today, French President-elect Francois Mitterrand had a luncheon meeting with Portuguese Socialist Party Secretary General Mario Soares, the first personality from abroad to go to Paris for the specific purpose of personally conveying congratulations to Mitterrand on his election victory.

Today's French television newscasts highlighted Lisbon reports on the possibility of Portugal President Ramalho Eanes attending Francois Mitterrand's investiture ceremony, which is expected to take place on or about the 24 June. If so, Gen Ramalho Eanes is the first foreign head of state to have conveyed an intention to attend the installation ceremony in Paris.

FRANCOIS MITTERRAND DISCUSSES AFRICA POLICY

WA120440 Paris LE CONTINENT in French 24 Apr 81 p 7

[Interview with Francois Mitterrand; date and place not given]

[Text] LE CONTINENT: What is your estimation of France's African policy since Valery Giscard d'Estaing became president?

Francois Mitterrand: Valery Giscard d'Estaing's 7-year term is ending in bankruptcy for Africa. The president now up for reelection claimed to be conducting a "grand African policy" by guaranteeing peace and stability and development assistance to the French-speaking countries in particular. The downfall of Ndjamena buried all political and military credibility as far as Giscard's France is concerned. The ACDA [not further identified] affair indicates that France is yielding the initiative to the United States in such vital areas as health and rural development. For the United States, Africa has become too serious a matter to be entrusted to Giscard d'Estaing. I feel the same way.

LE CONTINENT: The 7-year term now ending was marked by French military interventions in Africa--Zaire, Chad, Mauritania and Central Africa--that were at times criticized in Africa. Do you think those interventions were justified?

Francois Mitterrand: All those interventions signaled the failure of a policy. Any government that prides itself on its capability for military intervention and misuses it as consistently as Giscard d'Estaing's government does is actually a weak government of no consequence. French military interventions were simply salvage operations after a disaster. They were often barely effective and even detrimental as a result of flagrant and frequently outrageous political gaffes.

LE CONTINENT: The Soviet Union's African policy frequently has been taken to task ever since Cuba's 1975-1976 intervention in Angola. Now that Ronald Reagan has become President, the United States is reviewing its African policy to counter "Soviet expansionism." In your opinion, are the Soviets a threat to Africa? If so, what is the best way to confront it?

Francois Mitterrand: Any prolonged and active presence of foreign military forces in an African country can be a legitimate source of concern, especially in a time of international tension. Africa is in great danger of becoming an arena in which the superpowers will square off with Africans in the middle. That must be avoided at all costs. The incompetence and hypocrisy of too many Western statesmen have enabled the Soviets to root themselves in Africa. Defending Angola against South Africa and preventing the splintering of Ethiopia were not unjust causes. The USSR presently has beefed up its forces and we don't approve of some of its interventions, in Eritrea especially. But if the threat of Soviet expansionism is to dwindle, France will have to take an active part in resolving broad conflicts, above all in southern Africa, in north-west Africa and in the Sudan-Sahel region.

LE CONTINENT: What would your policy for South Africa be? And how do you conceive a resolution of the Namibian conflict?

Francois Mitterrand: Since experience proves the opposite, I refuse to admit that the cultivation of economic ties with Pretoria can help eliminate the white minority's oppression of the black and colored majority. Any new policy for South Africa must entail two elements. First, economic sanctions against that regime. By that I mean a complete halt to public and parastatal investments by France and to all assistance for private investments. Second, guaranteed development assistance for the frontline countries and political support for the liberation movements, including assistance in the social, economic and educational sectors.

SWAPO made a good number of concessions. Still, South Africa unilaterally and without real justification broke off negotiations begun in Geneva for Namibia's independence. Since that time, there has been no word from the "contact group" of which France is a member. All the same, Zimbabwe's experience proves that peaceful solutions can be found. I plan actively to get the member countries of the "contact group" to resume their activities. If that doesn't work, France, in contact with the United Nations, will take new initiatives with all countries of good will.

LE CONTINENT: France's economic positions in Africa are growing worse daily. Yet, French politicians keep advocating a new international economic order, founded on the best use of each group's advantages: industrialized countries, capital-rich countries and developing countries. Under these circumstances, what definite proposals do your plan to make that could meet the needs of France and of Africa concomitantly?

Francois Mitterrand: Sure, French economic positions have worsened quite perceptibly in Africa. But the issues have to be distinguished. It is normal and healthy for independent countries to diversify their economic relations. I am firmly opposed to any system of special preserves, even if, on the other hand, I do believe in the force of the relations that history--colonial history included--has intertwined. Still, the contribution of France, economic forces to genuine development in Africa has grown blatantly inadequate. Our large businesses are more concerned with trade than with production. They link their operations too closely to eye-catching relations that are extremely profitable for themselves, but that are often hardly productive and of little profit for Africa's populations. In the future, the intervention of French businessees will, in as many instances as possible, have to be looked at for their medium and long term prospects, determined by codevelopment contracts. Then again, it will be necessary to stimulate the operation of small and medium businesses whose size is often better adapted to local conditions. In general, it is my opinion that aid to the Third World, and to Africa in particular, should become the concern of all France's active forces. This includes the regions, municipalities, trade unions, occupational groupings and beneficent associations.

LE CONTINENT: Some hundreds of thousands of African immigrant laborers have been asked to leave France. The same fate seems to await others. As you see it, is ome other immigration policy possible and desirable. What kind of policy?

Francois Mitterrand: Your figures are somewhat exaggerated. I think that in this sector you are also turning the wishes of the candidate up for reelection into a reality. Quite obviously, some other policy is to be desired. Equally certain, at the moment no resumption of immigration is possible in the prevailing economic situation. The only important exceptions are families coming rejoin immigrants who are already established, students (as required) and political refugees. But those living in France should lead a secure life just like the other citizens of this country. For this reason, I am fundamentally opposed to the Bonnet and Stoleru texts. Taken together, they make for organized rejection. I am opposed also to an organized return that is taking systematic shape in the mouth of the candidate up for reelection. The return must be technically and financially aided if it is voluntary. It must never be imposed or suggested too strongly. Those who wish to remain in France should be given a 10-year residency permit that is automatically renewable. Never should a family be broken up. France must not forget that it owes much of its growth to immigrant labor. It is unworthy of it to cast them out in a period of world crisis.

POLICE ARREST 3 MEMBERS OF JEWISH PESSAH GROUP

NC130830 Paris AFP in English 0825 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] Paris, 13 May (AFP)--Police have arrested three members of a Jewish group called Pessah (Passover) which claimed responsibility for shooting at the Syrian airlines office here last Sunday, officials said today.

There were no casualties in Sunday's attack, nor in another the previous Sunday, also claimed by Pessah, when an extreme rightist Paris bookshop was fired at.

Police said the three were arrested yesterday. They were named as Albert Nacache, 22, Alain Baruk, 20, and a minor.

A passer-by had noted the number-plate of the car from which the shots were fired last Sunday, and the vehicle was traced to Nacache and Baruk.

The second attack was carried out, according to an anonymous member of Pessah, as a reply to "Syrian persecutions of Jews and the massacre of Christians in Lebanon."

The first was motivated by a recent desecration of a Jewish cemetery in France.

FORLANI ON CURRENT POLITICAL, ECONOMIC OPTIONS

LD111541 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 29 Apr 81 pp 1, 4

[Giorgio Rossi interview with Italian Prime Minister Arnaldo Forlani: "Forlani Defends Himself"]

[Text] Rome--[Question] Prime Minister Forlani, are you satisfied with the Socialist congress?

[Answer] Yes, I believe it was an important congress. Craxi's report was clear and received broad consensus, and the ensuing debate too had some particularly interesting moments.

[Question] And yet the Socialists did not deal so gently in Palermo with either the Government or the DC.

[Answer] I consider the Socialist participation in the government essential, but I do not regard everything said in Palermo as gospel. The present economic crisis is affecting a large part of the world, and if it is more acute in Italy than in other industrialized countries, because of the system's lower productivity, there are complex reasons for this and it cannot be simplistically blamed on a single party. The DC does not set oil prices, and similarly the competitiveness of costs and the exploitation of plants do not depend solely on those in government; nor can any party evade responsibility for increased public spending....

[Answer] No, I am not saying that. We all have our responsibilities for both good and bad things. Good, because the country has grown and living conditions have improved everywhere, and bad, because we have not managed to build defenses, to establish the conditions to safeguard us against cyclical crises and foreseeable outside influences. It was foreseeable that exchange rates would change....

[Question] From what you say, it does not seem that you are expecting an imminent crisis, but in Palermo Craxi himself spoke in terms which are not reassuring for the government.

[Answer] We shall see. The parties have their demands and are always somewhat touchy at election time. Be that as it may, whether there is a crisis or not, the country's problems exist and whoever is called on to tackle them will have to come to terms with reality and cannot pursue too many whims.

PCI Trying To Isolate DC

[Question] You seem to be dismissing the issue of the Socialist premiership. But in Palermo....

[Answer] I do not regard it as an issue to be raised with particular set dates in mind. The government must not constitute a straitjacket for anyone; it stems not from any constraint but from a political act, from autonomous and free decisions. Its component parties are not deprived of the right to rivalry and to dialogue designed to make their various ideological outlooks prevail in the country. When coalition governments are formed, the question of who is to assume the prime ministership is one that must be decided by the president of the republic who, heeded by the parties, indicates the man who in his belief has the largest potential consensus and the best chance of achieving a balanced solution. Personally I have never made it a taboo subject or the subject of any prejudices, as some allege. The most important thing is that there be real agreement among the parties on policy and on an overall political line.

[Question] Once again it seems that you do not much believe in the possibility of a Craxi government.

[Answer] That is not so; what I said was that there must be no prejudiced attitudes. Be that as it may, for the time being I believe in the government that we have now. I repeat that it is necessary to come to terms with reality, and one of the first things to be understood in this context is the parties' objective possibilities of convergence.

[Question] You say that it is necessary to come to terms with reality. Perhaps your party could refuse the post which you now hold to a Craxi without alternatives. But if the communists supported such a demand....

[Answer] I do not know. The Communist leadership changes its mind easily. They have reversed a political line, an outlook which they described as historical, only because they lost a few votes or for some other reason which they hae failed to explain.

[Question] It seems to me that they have explained several reasons.

[Answer] They are unconvincing. Be that as it may, when Craxi was asked to form a government 2 years ago, the impression was that some family disaster had occurred.... But that is not the point. To form a coalition government it is necessary to assemble the parties that are agreed on specific domestic and foreign policy issues, and the fact is that the Communist Party--for reasons which it has failed to explain--has distanced itself instead of moving closer.

[Question] There is no doubt that it's moving away from the DC. In Palermo Berlinguer gained more approval than Piccoli, and a kind of thaw or rapprochement with the PSI seems to have begun.

[Answer] A large number of people attend national congresses of the PSI, and of the DC.... I was not in Palermo and could not say who applauded and who whistled. In any case, we shall see. Let me make this clear: It is not that I am unaware of the Communists' attempt to draw closer to the PSI--and the other parties, too--in order to isolate the DC and to bring the government down, but I believe that it is a tactical and manipulatory move, which fails to conceal the substance, which is precisely a moving away, a distancing from the line of all the other democratic parties.

[Question] All, or almost all, the party secretaries attended the Socialist congress, and that is a major innovation which high-lights Craxi's "centrality," so to speak. Do you not believe that this will have repercussions within the government which you lead?

[Answer] Let us not talk about "centrality," which is a term now threatened by ambiguous interpretations. Let us look at things simply. It seems to me that Craxi confirmed the Socialist Party's present government commitment. His report, approved by the congress, represents an impetus to the continuity of the government's action. The secretaries of the other parties of the majority, speaking at that forum, were agreed on the validity of this commitment.

[Question] In other words, there is nothing to worry about. But does a PSI free of complexes with regard to the DC and the PCI not create new problems, at least with regard to political space?

[Answer] The PSI's justified refusal to accept a subordinate role on the basis of the mere balance of power is nothing new. In fact, the same applies to the others, from Spadolini to Longo [PRI and Italian Social Democratic Party secretaries, respectively].... What counts is mutual respect and assessments based on political proposals. There is fundamental agreement among the government allies on this and naturally on decisive foreign and domestic policy issues.

[Question] One of these decisive issues is the economic crisis. You talk about solidarity among the government parties, but the crisis has become almost ungovernable.

[Answer] The ingredients of the crisis were already all present in the situation when this government was formed. What I mean is that we did not invent the crisis. We have intervened with measures designed to contain the most dangerous thrusts, and we aim to create the conditions to extricate us from the crisis and to implement a new development policy.

[Question] What specifically are you thinking of doing?

[Answer] The anti-inflation struggle, the containment of public spending, the reduction of absenteeism are absolute priority commitments and the preconditions which make the medium-term plan possible to implement. In other words, which make investments and development possible in the key sectors of the economy. The only way out of the crisis is by improving the system's productivity.

[Question] By revising the indexing system....

[Answer] We will be discussing this with the trade unions in the next few days.

Berlinguer Backtracking

[Question] Prime minister, do you not believe that the economic crisis is so grave and the necessary measures so burdensome that there must be an immediate general agreement among all the parties, and therefore with the PCI too, which represents the great majority of the workers?

[Answer] All the parties represent people's attitudes and interests. Parliamentary majorities, however, are formed on the basis of convergence on planning and policy and not on the basis of predetermined schemas. The DC had begun with the PCI a serious process of progressive assessment of mutual possibilities of convergence and democratic sharing of responsibility. In this exchange of views--which it would be absurd to regard in terms of a circumvention of the PSI--the DC sought to establish at its congress the maximum solidarity with the other democratic parties. This is the policy that we have tried to pursue, but the Communist Party has changed, has backtracked to a line of diametric opposition.

[Question] You have not answered my question....

[Answer] I will tell you my opinion frankly: There is no doubt that we could emerge from the crisis more easily--or rather, with less difficulty--if all the political, social and production forces converged in a constructive commitment. This is obvious, but if not everyone does so, if the Communist Party has decided to push its opposition to the limits, a majority must still perform the tasks of government.

[Question] It is a matter of ending discrimination and establishing constructive relations. Now the PCI is demanding a different kind of government, composed of honest men....

[Answer] It already exists, so it should support me.

[Question] You are criticized from this viewpoint by Visentini, too, who is after all chairman of one of the governing parties....[the PRI].

[Answer] I do not want to enter into polemics with Visentini; I respect him and on some things I do not even disagree with him. He is acquainted with the economic situation and the difficulties; we are tackling problems that have become entangled over the years and which cannot be resolved by magic.

[Question] Visentini knows this. Yet he too is proposing a different kind of government, more "institutional" and at least capable of reopening the dialogue among the political forces and clarifying the situation.

[Answer] I do not believe that he has formulated any specific proposals in this connection.

[Question] Another of the decisive issues is the moral one, the need for a clean sweep. Do you consider yourselves convincing in this regard? Is the system not in danger of an irredeemable crisis here too?

[Answer] Elements of corruption and dishonesty are attacking political life too, but the democratic system makes it possible to highlight these lamentable aspects and to combat them. Now that there are legal controls on party financing, we can, by means of further improvements to the law, more easily carry out a cleansing operation.... It is not true that the political world is dishonest; the large majority of leadership cadres, parliamentarians and party members are people who believe in their own ideals and act consistently with them.

[Question] But neither can it be said--as the secretary of your party often does--every time a scandal explodes that it is all due to conspiracies and shady maneuvers designed to harm the DC.

I Know that These Lodges Exist

[Answer] I do not believe that Piccoli discusses it so often. The turbid climate that is being nurtured and that to some extent surrounds our political system is nothing new. Since the DC certainly represents an important linchpin in this system it is fairly logical for Piccoli to see a danger and a threat to the DC too in certain corrosive campaigns, which sometimes appear orchestrated. I believe, however, that this applies to other parties too. To all the parties that, come what may, even if divided, want to defend and safeguard the institutions. I believe that in a democratic system everything should take place clearly and out in the open.

[Question] By the way, there is a great deal of talk about Freemasonry at the moment. What is there in what is being said about P2 [a lodge]?

[Answer] I do not believe that I know much more about it than you. Of course, I know that these lodges exist, more or less as in other countries, though in our country they are surrounded with more mystery. I repeat that in a democratic system all forms of association should take place in the open.

[Question] But lists of names are being circulated, and there are rumors of many prominent people being implicated.

[Answer] We shall see. I too have heard and read these names, but I have also heard and read the denials. I would not like anyone to set his sights on another witch-hunt. Since as far as I know membership in the Freemasons is not a crime and I do not believe that it is up to the government to carry out individual inquiries to ascertain who is or is not a member of these lodges. It would be a different matter if one of these lodges were shown to be a criminal association with illegal aims.

[Question] This could in fact be the case with P2. There are documents found in Gelli's house which the judiciary is examining because they suggest a possible crime.

[Answer] The judiciary will let us know when it has completed its inquiries.

[Question] You seem very calm--almost unconcerned. But I wonder how you can undertake such demanding plans when many people are already talking about the post-Forlani phase....

[Answer] If that is all, I can assure you that I for one have never believed that there should be no post-Forlani governments! It is wise thing for the parties to reflect, to compare notes and to seek broad convergences. But I do not want to enter into this issue now. The government must continue to work and to do its duty for the remainder of the time granted to it. Be that as it may, the problems to which we have pointed cannot be evaded and, if we want to recover, another, future government will have to tackle them in the same terms.

[Question] Foreign policy too has become a point of division again, whereas during the previous legislative period Parliament unanimously approved a number of documents, including some presented by the Communists. Do you not believe that there has been a change in the government's line?

[Answer] The government coalition has had and still has a consistent and clear line on foreign policy; active participation in EC life and in the Atlantic alliance's defense commitments under conditions of equal status; support for the possibilities of a resumption of East-West dialogue and negotiation; the quest for good relations and intensive cooperation with the Mediterranean, Middle Eastern and African countries, particularly with those having traditional special ties with Italy; a more active presence in Latin America; and the improvement of our conventional military force so as to safeguard an autonomous national responsibility. The documents to which you refer were approved by the Communists too on the basis of reports which I delivered to Parliament, in my capacity as foreign minister. This government's policy statements reflect the pointers indicated then, and our entire action during this period has been entirely consistent with those pointers. It is not we who have changed!

[Question] In the meantime, however, there has been the NATO decision to deploy new missiles in Europe, including Italy.

[Answer] It would be more accurate to say that in the meantime there had been the large-scale deployment of new Soviet SS-20 missiles, which have altered the balance in Europe. NATO's measures to restore the balance cannot be realized before 1983, and so there is time to negotiate so that a balanced situation can be established between the two systems at the lowest possible levels! We are moving in this direction.

PCI'S PAJETTA RECEIVES CPSU DELEGATION FOR TALKS

LD111511 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 7 May 81 p 18

[Text] Rome--A CPSU delegation comprising [CPSU Central Committee] International Section Deputy Chief Anatoliy Chernyayev, International Section Chief Yuriy Zuyev and Genrikh Smirnov of the International Section, visited Rome from 4 to 6 May at the PCI's invitation. The Soviet comrades had a meeting at Directorate headquarters with a PCI delegation comprising comrades Gian Carlo Pajetta, Directorate member in charge of the International Section; Directorate member Paolo Bufalini; Antonio Rubbi, Central Committee member and foreign section chief; and Rodolfo Mechini, Central Control Commission member and foreign section deputy chief. Some aspects of the international situation were examined during the talks, with particular reference to the threats to world peace and the nuclear arms and detente question.

PCI CONGRATULATES ROMANIA ON PARTY ANNIVERSARY

LD121025 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 8 May 81 p 17

[Text] Rome--The Romanian Communists are celebrating their party's 60th anniversary. On this occasion, the PCI Central Committee has sent the following message to the RCP Central Committee:

"Dear comrades. On the occasion of the RCP's 60th anniversary we send you the Italian Communists' warm and fraternal greetings.

"We follow with keen interest the full and multifarious activity that your party carries out in all fields of political, economic and social life, to strengthen and extend the major achievements in socialist Romania.

We devote special attention to the contribution which your party, your government and Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu personally are making to the cause of peace, detente and disarmament in the world, to the defense of every country's independence and sovereignty, to the establishment of new economic and political relations among states and to the democratization of international relations.

"We also esteem your contributions within the international workers movement and to international soldiarity action, within the framework of the history, traditions and individual characteristics of every party and every political force and of acknowledgement of the inalienable right of each of them to formulate in full autonomy its own domestic and foreign policy strategy and tactics.

"On the basis of these profound convictions, relations between our parties, characterized by friendship and cooperation, are developing fruitfully.

"We are sure that our relations help the cause of the strengthening of the world movement fighting for peace and the peoples' freedom, for detente and social and human progress and for socialism.

"We are also sure that the relations between our parties are a valuable help to and facilitate the strengthening and development of relations between the Socialist Republic of Romania and the Italian Republic and between the Romanian and Italian peoples.

"In this spirit, dear comrades," the message concludes, "we renew our congratulations on your party's 60th anniversary, wishing you further achievements in the struggle and commitment in your people's service and for peace, progress and socialism throughout the world."

The RCP, heir to the rich heritage of revolutionary traditions, was founded in May 1921. It was joined by the majority of the country's socialist organizations, which decided to transform the Socialist party into the Communist party and to join the Third International.

During the years of reaction the Romanian Communists waged a tough struggle against the country's exploitater classes and against the fascist dictatorship. At the end of World War II the RCP was the organizing and leading center of the August 1944 armed uprising which opened the way to the people's revolution, thus opening a new era in the Romanian people's life.

The RCP, which has been headed for the past 15 years by Comrade Ceausescu, consistently advocates the need to create a new kind of unity in the communist and workers movement based on full respect for every party's autonomy and independence, and to promote the cause of peace, cooperation among the peoples, and socialism.

PRIME MINISTER, KURT WALDHEIM DISCUSS EAST TIMOR

LD092324 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1830 GMT 9 May 81

[Excerpts] After meeting UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim for about 1 hour, Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao today gave a luncheon in his honor in Sintra at 1330.

Proposing a toast, Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao stressed the role that small and medium-sized countries such as ours can play in solving major world problems.

[Begin Balsemao recording in English with superimposed Portuguese translation] We believe that the way in which we assumed our term of office in the Security Council is a good example of the role that a country aware of its cultural and geographical identity can play in the international community. We are determined to continue to act in a manner which we regard a responsible and we hope that the international community will allow us to carry out the last duty that, in an international context, we have yet to fulfill with regard to our decolonization process. I am referring to the problem of East Timor, where we hope that the territory's population will be given the chance freely to choose their own destiny. We have had the opportunity of discussing this matter and we trust that, with Your Excellency's most valuable help and with the help of the international arena, a just and comprehensive solution may be found to this problem. [end recording]

Kurt Waldheim replied with a speech in which he highlighted the enormous problems that our country has confronted and remarkably solved along the paths of progress. He then spoke generally of major world issues, the balance of forces, the arms race and the dialogue between rich and poor countries.

[Begin Waldheim recording in English with superimposed Portuguese translation] Portugal is uniquely qualified to help resolve these problems. As Your Excellency has pointed out, as a member of the Security Council, Portugal recently played a highly constructive role within that important UN body. Our conversations, Mr Prime Minister, also focused on matters that concern your country. I have carefully taken note of your government's position on the subject of East Timor. We discussed this problem this morning, following my talks yesterday with your minister of foreign affairs and I hope that these conversations will help us in this regard. [end recording]

Kurt Waldheim, whose official visit will end tomorrow, also will be received at 1030 at Belem Palace by the president of the republic, General Remalho Eanes.

PINTO BALSEMAO ATTENDS LAND ALLOCATION CEREMONY

LD071510 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 7 May 81

[Excerpt] Yesterday in Alcacer do Sal, Alentejo--heart of the land reform--Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao handed over the title deeds to 103 farmworkers who have been allotted land on the Barrosinha estate.

The prime minister told the beneficiaries that his presence at the allocation ceremony intends to mark clearly his government's policy to distribute hitherto nationalized and expropriated land among the landless and to provide them with the Agriculture and Fisheries Ministry's technical assistance. He said that he will rely on their support to demonstrate that the government's policy in this direction is right, in view of the fact that the latifundio system was a negative effect in terms of production.

Pinto Balsemao also disclosed that the land cultivation and ownership issue will be resolved in the next constitutional revision for which, he said, the government will count on a consensus among the democratic parties.

POLICE ARREST 20 ETA MEMBERS IN NORTHERN PROVINCES

NC121319 Paris AFP in English 1313 GMT 12 May 81

[Text] Madrid, 12 May (AFP)--Twenty members of the Basque separatist organization ETA have been arrested in the past 48 hours in the northern provinces of Viscaya and Guipuzcoa, police said here today. Among them were suspected members of the commando group Zabartec, including Fermin Alcisar Terechea, also known as "Naparra," who was seriously wounded when he was arrested yesterday.

The commando members were arrested as they were planning a spectacular attack on the National Police (Guardi Civil), police said. The Zabartec members had dug a tunnel under a highway near Bilbao, and were planning to detonate explosives in it when a National Police convoy passed.

Other members of the ETA's Political-Military Wing were arrested Sunday in Madrid as they were planning to free 80 fellow group members from the city's Carabanchel prison, police added. The arrests came in the wake of increased tension in Spain as a result of an attack that seriously wounded General Joachim de Valenzuela, King Juan Carlos' senior military advisor, and killed two other officers and a policeman last Thursday. Also, a bombing last Monday killed another general and a policeman. The ETA claimed responsibility for both.

DEPUTY ARMY STAFF CHIEF IN VALENCIA SUSPENDED

LD120400 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] Col Diego Ibanez Ingles, who is a defendant in the hearing on the 23 February events [attempted coup d'etat] has been suspended from his post according to an order published today by the official paper of the Defense Ministry. Col Diego Ibanez was the deputy chief of staff at the Captaincy General of the 3d Military Region, Valencia.

CARRILLO CRITICIZES POLICIES OF CALVO-SOTELO

LD08 047 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 30 Apr 81 p 8

[Excerpt] Madrid, 29 Apr--PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo held a lengthy press conference with a group of parliamentary journalists yesterday evening. The Communist leader forecast the return of the Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC] to Eurocommunism, was very critical of Calvo-Sotelo's conduct, not only for not carrying out what he promised concerning "consultation" but also because of his increasing partiality, and asserted the urgent need for joint defense of the constitution and democracy.

After pessimistically analyzing the current situation--"the democratic institutions have lost strength, the parties have lost ability and the government has lost authority"--he stated that Calvo-Sotelo is not conducting the policy of consultation with the other political, trade union and social organizations, as he promised after 23 February. The Communist leader disclosed that the prime minister had promised to him that he would set up two "consultation" committees--one for political affairs and the other for economic affairs--an aim which subsequently has not materialized.

Different Place

"One has the impression that there is a place where this policy of consultation is being conducted, since the bills which are sent to parliament for enatchment on an urgent basis are restrictive of public freedoms."

Carrillo preferred not to specify this "place" which he mentioned, although it was easy to figure out that it was an allusion to the political pressure which the 23 February coup has entailed for this country's political class; "there is an impression of self-censorship of parliament and that the coup was resolved not by defeating the putschists but by means of an agreement with them, since they had the government and parliament in their hands and military action would have had grave consequences," he said. He added that he does not believe that the king reached an agreement on the outcome of the coup in return for the Calvo-Sotelo government's current policy, but the fact is that the current prime minister--"who has been unable to inspire hope in the population, since he formed a one-party centrist government"--does not have his hands free.

"Advice but Not Money"

Although the reasons given by the Communist leader concerned the need to combine all the democratic forces for the defense of the constitution, he argued that the left alone cannot perform that task effectively and that it is necessary to take into account the rightwing organizations such as the Union of the Democratic Center and the Popular Alliance. Carrillo disclosed that several meetings among these parties had been held to this end--the latest of which was not attended by the Popular Alliance for some unknown reason--at which it was decided to seek money "from those who have it, but these 'possessors' gave advice but no money."

"Pro-NATO Coup"

Spain's entry into NATO is no guarantee for Spanish democracy, but rather adds a destabilizing factor, the PCE secretary general stated once more. "One has the impression that the 23 February coup was a pro-NATO coup," he added. According to the Communist leader, the government did not know why its prime minister went to Bonn, and the Spanish head of government's statements in the FRG capital were a surprise to everybody.

PSUC

The PCE secretary general forecast, very convinced of what he was saying, that the PSUC "will soon recover its Eurocommunist stances again." To the surprise of some journalists, he said: "when I say this I say it with good reason. I met with the Catalonian comrades last Sunday, and we will continue those talks here Thursday. If my political judgment is not failing me, what I have said will happen."

CATALONIAN COMMUNISTS, PCE LEADERS HOLD MEETINGS

LD111005 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 5 May 81 p 15

[Excerpt] Following yesterday evening's meeting between the top leaders of the Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC] and the PCE--except for Carrillo, for medical reasons--agreement was reached in that the Catalonian Communists will accept the next PCE congress' resolutions, prominent among which is the reaffirmation of the Eurocommunist theses. The problems apparently center, among other things, on the formula for the PSUC to restore to its rules this term which was removed at its fifth congress.

Madrid, 4 May--The PSUC's participation in the 10th PCE Congress will depand on the course and contents of the meetings of the Catalonian Communists' Central Committee and national conference. At these meetings, the PSUC leaders will have to find ideological and strategic formulations which do not conflict with the Ninth PCE Congress resolutions.

The latter organization's leadership continues to regard the political line adopted by the Catalonian Communist Party as conflicting in some of its important points with the PCE's prevailing resolutions. At that party's headquarters, a second round of negotiations between PSUC and PCE delegations was held this evening--negotiations which began in Barcelona 24-25 April and aimed at finding solutions to the current differences between the two parties, as a preliminary step toward the PSUC delegates' presence at the 10th PCE National Congress. The Catalonian Communists are demanding to be present with the exact number of delegates to which they are entitled.

Committed

PSUC Secretary General Francisco Frutos stated this evening, following a 3-hour meeting with prominent PCE members, that "we commit ourselves to taking part in the PCE Congress, with full sharing of responsibility for the resolutions adopted there." PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo didn't attend the meeting because of the need to consult the doctor as a result of his fibula fracture. The PSUC delegation comprised Francisco Frutos, Rafael Ribo, Cipriano Garcia, Jose Maria Rodriguez Rovira and Jose Maria Clariana. The PCE was represented by Simon Sanchez Montero, Francisco Romero Marin and Jaime Ballesteros.

No importance was attached to Carrillo's absence, and the impression exists that the top leaders of the PCE and the PSUC have already agreed on the political need to channel the stances of the Catalonian Communists' last congress toward strictly Eurocommunist formulations. However, there is disagreement about how to correct the Fifth PSUC Congress' deviations. The PCE secretary general was in favor of a special PSUC congress, while Francisco Frutos, on the other hand, rejects this course, judging by the latter's insistence in statements made after this evening's negotiating session. It may be believed that the meetings of the PSUC Central Committee and National Conference could take the place of the special congress. He did not discount the possibility of a special congress, but it does not enter into his present plans.

In the talks held by the two delegations, the participation of and normal conditions for the presence of PSUC delegates at the PCE congress are currently being negotiated. They will meet again, possibly after the PSUC Central Committee meeting, which in all likelihood will be held 16-17 May.

Contradictions

The contradictions between the two organizations, which arose especially at the last PSUC congress, stem, according to Francisco Frutos, from the elimination of the term "Eurocommunism " in certain foreign policy formulations and from the pronouncement against nuclear energy, among other aspects. However, Frutos wished to point out that the Eurocommunist strategy was not adopted precisely at the Ninth PCE Congress. He denied that the PSUC is being pressured by the PCE, although he admitted that relations have been impaired. He stated several times during the conversation with journalists that most of the last PSUC congress' resolutions remain valid.

MADRID DEPUTY MAYOR EXPLAINS PCE RESIGNATION

LD121537 Madrid ABC in Spanish 10 May 81 p 7

[Text] Madrid--Ramon Tamames, PCE deputy and central committee member and deputy mayor of Madrid, announced on national radio yesterday morning: "I am leaving the PCE."

Asked in the Madrid Council whether the PCE is prepared to lose someone as important as Tamames, he replied: "I believe that yes, it is prepared to do so. I would even say that it is very willing to do so, with regard to certain people.

"I have informed the party secretary general of my intention to leave. I told him yesterday (Friday) by telephone and I informed him that I would announce it on Monday, waiting for the grief which we all feel because of the past few days' events to pass."

Regarding the reasons for his departure, Tamames said: "I believe that my conception of the party as a political group differs almost radically from the leadership's current policy, and I am leaving. What is more, I am leaving very calmly, because for the past several months I have been presenting my stances on a real decentralization of the party, its organization as a federal party, the pursuit of a genuine democracy, respect for the minorities and an efficient organization to monitor the peoples' aspirations and desires; and a regeneration too, so that the party's image is that of what the country regards as a regenerating party.

"Since none of this is happening or even about to happen (I presented 51 amendments to the central committee and none of the principal ones were adopted) , of course, there is no sense in my remaining there.

"Life is not circumscribed by a particular party, not by the parties as a whole. I believe that the parties must subject themselves to a thorough self-criticism. They aren't providing the expected service. I believe that it is necessary to recall Article 6 of the constitution, which states that they are social protagonists, but that they must be very democratic. I believe that they are not so democratic and that as social protagonists, they aren't playing the expected role," he added.

As for whether he will join the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE], Tamames said: "I don't intend to join the PSOE. I have neither asked to join nor do I know whether they want me. I have many friends in the PSOE, ranging from Gergorio Pecesbarba to Alfonso Guerra via the entire intermediary spectrum and they always say to me: 'Our doors are open.' But I don't want to enter those doors; I have no such aim."

Asked whether his departure implies that he will relinquish his deputy mayorship of Madrid, Tamames said: "This is clear. The PCE leadership has stated clearly that whoever leaves is subject to the local elections law. And the law is categorical. What I feel is a certain sadness and I want to tell the people who voted for me that I am leaving the council not because I want to, but because the law says that I must, if the party says so. If it were up to me, I would continue to serve the people of Madrid, but I should point out that I am unable to stay.

AIDE REPORTS STATUS OF LIBYAN 'PEOPLE'S BUREAU'

LD120911 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 8 May 81 p 25

[Text] Finland will treat the representatives of the Libyan People's Bureau in Helsinki as diplomats, the Foreign Ministry has announced. Foreign Ministry Secretary Hannu Maentyvaara announced that the Finnish approach to those employed at the Libyan People's Bureau was modeled on that of the other Nordic countries. Finland has no problems in its relations with Libya.

"The bureau is considered to be Libya's official representation in Finland and the bureau will be included in the diplomatic calendar under the description which the Libyans themselves desire," Maentyvaara said.

The Libyans have informed the Foreign Ministry that they intend to use their diplomatic rights, that is, tax immunity and the right to courier mail, if necessary.

Maentyvaara pointed out that, if they want to, the Libyans could renounce diplomatic immunity, but that this would not change the Foreign Ministry's view of the representatives.

The people's bureau which has been set up in Helsinki consists of five Libyan representatives, who have been given diplomatic credentials by the Foreign Ministry. The bureau will begin working in full in about 2 weeks.

The Libyans themselves have announced that they will not be making use of the usual diplomatic indicators. The staff goes under the name of a people's committee. The Foreign Ministry said that the committee's first secretary, Muhammad Na'as, will be ranked with the charges d'affaires of other diplomatic missions.

DEFENSE COMMITTEE DISCUSSES WARTIME AIR MEASURES

LD111557 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 7 May 81 pp 3, 24

[Text] Southern Finland's air defenses will be made more effective. The objective is to prevent all flights over Finland during a possible crisis between the superpower blocs. On Wednesday the Riksdag Defense Committee visited the southern Finland flying safety center in Tampere and the airbase under construction at Birkala which, according to the parliamentary Defense Committee's recommendations, will have half a squadron of defensive intercepters.

According to Defense Committee Chairman Tapani Moerttinen (National Coalition Party) Birkala should receive its first aircraft in 1984. In 1984 and 1985 the Satakunta flight will also be moved.

According to Moerttinen, no consideration has yet been given to the idea of making air defenses more effective by acquiring missiles, but technical developments are nevertheless being followed. Moerttinen considers that territorial surveillance by aircraft is best suited to Finnish conditions.

Moerttinen said that there was still no decision about what sort of aircraft Birkala would have. But the Satakunta flight will soon be acquiring new Hawk trainers.

Unofficially, experts say that there are few alternatives when it comes to purchasing half a squadron, because servicing considerations and spare part availability present certain obstacles. Draken or MIG intercepters would be the ones considered. Half a squadron normally comprises around 10 aircraft.

According to Moerttinen, the price of such planes is also uncertain. However, it is necessary that Finland acquire these aircraft to maintain its defense credibility, Moerttinen pointed out.

The transfer of the Satakunta flight from Pori also means that 150 families will have to move either to Birkala or Tampere. The Riksday Defense Committee and representative of Tampere and Birkala councils discussed the problems which the move would involve on Wednesday. During its visit the Defense Committee also discussed the use of Tampere airbase for civilian flights. The old Haermaelae airport is still in use, but will soon be closed. The Air Force does not think that transferring civilian traffic to Birkala would be desirable.

NORWAY

PAPER SEES 'POSITIVE RESULTS' FROM NATO MEETING

LD081607 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 7 May 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Useful NATO Meeting"]

[Text] The first meeting between NATO's West European allies and the new Reagan administration in the United States has had positive results--the Americans say "yes" to negotiations with the Russians before the end of the year on the Eurostrategic nuclear arms. This means that the alliance has been able to confirm its December 1979 resolution both to acquire new nuclear arms and to negotiate with the Soviet Union for a reasonable balance of such arms in Europe. A U.S. "no" to negotiations would in effect have been a cancellation of the second half of the alliance's joint decision. When we now have a round of talks, probably in November, half of the period will have gone between the 1979 resolution and the deployment of the first new Western arms in the fall of 1983--a period which the Russians so far have tirelessly used to direct new modern nuclear arms against Western Europe while at the same time saying that they are ready to negotiate.

On the Western side the problems have eased, but not solved in any way, now that the green light has been given for talks between the United States and the Soviet Union. In several Western European countries--especially West Germany, The Netherlands and Belgium--opposition to the NATO resolution is growing, despite Russian rearmament. Last weekend, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt saw how several of his oldest collaborators, including a member of the government, were removed from the party leadership in one of the West German Federal states because of their support for the NATO nuclear resolution. It cannot be taken for granted that all NATO governments will succeed in adhering to this resolution--and the greater the doubt, the smaller will be Russian interest in entering into real compromises.

This growing opposition is not primarily due to the NATO resolution itself, but to general skepticism toward the United States' new and tougher foreign policy. The whole of this conflict once again confirms that it is incredibly difficult to pursue a realistic rearmament and power balance policy in NATO if it is not accompanied by a foreign policy which presents credible openings for arms talks and detente with the East. At the meetings the United States will have the difficult double task of convincing the Russians of the earnestness behind the West's call for balance and convincing the Western Europeans of the genuineness of the U.S. desire for negotiations--and we do not know which will be the more difficult.

Nevertheless, this week's meeting in Rome has led to useful clarification, while at the same time the Western Europeans have given their support to extremely sharp warnings to the Soviet Union. The occupation of Afghanistan remains "completely unacceptable" and constructive East-West relations require the Russians to give "concrete indications" that they want to put an end to their worrying rearmament, refrain from using force or threats of force and not create or exploit crisis situations in the Third World. And an invasion of Poland would "fundamentally alter the whole of the international situation." The allies support France's proposal for a European disarmament conference and given strong support to the "truly nonaligned" states in the Third World. Everyone must contribute to the development of these countries' economies, the NATO communique said--obviously addressing the Russians, who are as modest with their aid to developing countries as they are generous with their budget.

TRIBUNAL PASSES 'CAUTIOUS' JUDGMENT ON USSR

LD111011 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 6 May 81 p 5

[Bo Kage Carlson report: "Cautious Judgment Against Soviet Union"]

[Text] On Tuesday the Afghanistan tribunal declared the Soviet Union guilty of crimes against international law in connection with the invasion and occupation of Afghanistan, but judged that further investigation of the accusations of violations of human rights was necessary. The tribunal has therefore appointed a commission of investigation. Once in Afghanistan, the commission will try to find support for the accusations of torture, the use of banned weapons and the murder of prisoners of war.

The judgment states that the invasion and occupation by Soviet forces is a crime against the UN Charter and the Declaration of People's Rights which "The Peoples' Permanent Tribunal" (the organization behind the Afghanistan tribunal) has established.

As far as the violations of human rights are concerned, the tribunal states that it has collected material which can be considered the prelude to proof of gross and repeated crimes. However, the tribunal considers itself to need more complete and more detailed information before it makes a definite pronouncement on this question. Thus the tribunal chose to be as doubtful about some of the information presented as many earlier observers had been. Several of the testimonies were fairly vague and did not really stand up to the crossfire of questions from the 14-man jury.

One reason for the tribunal's relatively cautious judgment, SVENSKA DAGBLADET has been told, is concern for its continued international status. It cannot afford to be subjected to criticism for judgments based on shaky evidence. The dilemma was solved by the appointment of the commission which will work further on the mountain of information presented to the tribunal.

In reply to a question from SVENSKA DAGBLADET about the status of the tribunal and about its right to sit in judgment on others, its chairman, Francois Rigaux from Belgium, said: "We are trying to act in a vacuum in the international arena. Aggression has taken place and has been condemned by the United Nations, but without result. This has left a field open for us. "We represent, you could say, democratic opinion. And we also represent the people whose rights have been violated.

"The tribunal's international composition also guarantees that we are representative. Our jury does not only consist of Western Europeans. We also have members from North America, Latin America, Asia and Africa."

Rigaux also said that the tribunal had also had a meeting with Social Democratic Party Chairman Olaf Palme Monday. At this meeting, which had been requested by Palme, he was informed of the tribunal's work. "Palme is an internationally known figure and enjoys great respect in wide circles on international questions."

Rigaux also said that Palme's involvement in the Vietnam cause, not the least in connection with the Christmas bombings in 1973, had made the meeting especially important.

At the press conference at which the judgment was announced, Rigaux also revealed that the names of the members of the commission of investigation which will travel to Afghanistan have already been chosen. However, their names cannot be revealed until they have accepted. It will be a relatively small group of experts consisting of legal, medical and military experts and someone who knows the local languages.

If possible the commission will travel around in the areas controlled by the Soviet forces and the Karmal regime. But if the commission is not allowed entry, it will limit its investigation to the guerrilla areas. In this latter case the commission's activities must for obvious reasons remain secret, Rigauk said. The judgment which the tribunal arrived at will now be submitted to international organizations and the world's governments, including those in Moscow and Kabul. Depending on the results of the commission of investigation's work, it might be necessary to hold another session of the tribunal to study its results.

GDR FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS COMMUNIST PARTY CHAIRMAN

AU081328 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 7 May 81 p 2

[Text] Stockholm (ND)--In the spirit of proletarian internationalism, a cordial meeting between Oskar Fischer, GDR minister of foreign affairs and SED Central Committee member, and Rolf Hagel, chairman of the Workers Communist Party of Sweden, took place in Stockholm. During the talk, the workers class' special responsibility in the struggle for maintaining and securing peace and against the NATO course of an intensified arms race was stressed. Rolf Hagel mentioned that the NATO decision on deploying new U.S. medium range missiles in Western Europe, and also in Sweden, caused concern and led to a broad union of peace forces. This is expressed in the present collection of signatures for creating a nculear-free zone in northern Europe, Hagel said.

More on Fischer's Visit

[Report by NEUES DEUTSCHLAND correspondent Klaus Schoen on GDR Minister of Foreign Affairs Oskar Fischer's visit to Sweden from 4 to 6 May 1981]

[Summary] Referring to Oskar Fischer's visit to Stockholm, Ola Ullsten, minister of foreign affairs of Sweden, said: "We were able to state how purposefully our two countries, although they have diverse social orders, support peaceful cooperation among all countries and measures promoting detente." The meetings of Oskar Fischer with Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin, Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten, Riksdag President Ingemund Bengtsson and Olof Palme, chairman of the Social Democratic Labor Party, demonstrated the value of constant consultations and talks at various levels and increased economic cooperation. The GDR stressed the necessity of starting negotiations on the basis of the principle of equality and equal security in order to achieve agreements on limiting and reducing armaments, in particular in the nuclear field. Both countries stressed their readiness to actively contribute to convening a conference on military detente and disarmament in Europe.

DAGENS NYHETER VIEWS COLLAPSE OF RULING COALITION

LD081359 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 5 May 81 p 2

[Olof Kleberg Editorial: "Resignation at Last"]

[Text] The end is reached, nothing is achieved [rhyming play on Swedish translation of title of Shakespeare's "All's Well That Ends Well"]. The Moderates yesterday left the second nonsocialist three-party government. The more than week-long crisis led to the outcome that had been expected.

Last week the Moderate Coalition Party's leadership locked itself so firmly in its criticism of the tax agreement between the parties of the center and the Social Democrats that they did not leave themselves many escape routes. The Center Party and the Liberal Party which considered a broad majority fully necessary for the implementation of the reduction in marginal tax were not prepared to jeopardize it.

The Moderates' demands 1) to reach a written agreement on taxes with the other two government parties, and 2) that they be given answers to seven questions, did not leave much room for negotiation.

Gosta Bohman [Moderate Coalition Party leader] called this an "offer." But it is possible to accept or reject an ordinary offer without too far-reaching consequences. This offer had the character of an ultimatum. The Moderates did not give any indication of how many answers to the seven questions had to be correct for the other two government parties to pass the test. But it seemed as if they needed to get them all right. Thus the Moderates lost the game of who was going to assume the responsiblity for the fact that a nonsocialist three-party government is now splitting for the second time. They were not fired by Prime Minister Falldin but had to tender their resignations themselves.

Now comes the next step--who will now be blamed for things going like this? At his press conference yesterday evening, Gosta Bohman gave a skilful exegesis of the text. It is the Moderates who keep their word, who do not disappoint the faith placed in them, who give clear answers--and thus it is the two other government parties which represent the opposite. It is a rewarding role which Gosta Bohman is playing. And it is not as if it does not suit him. He wants to be a gentleman among politicians.

The Moderates' line would have been more credible if during the life of the three-party government they had loyally worked so that it would function confidently and unitedly. But this has not been the case. The Moderates have used their party apparatus to dissociate themselves from the views of the other parties on many questions. It has been the parties of the center which have had to be loyal.

The objective of this spring's tax negotiations was both to initiate reforms in 1982 and to create broad agreement, in part so that they would be pursued even if the Social Democrats won the election in 1982. The Moderates have not been willing to reach a compromise on the date for the reforms, and hardly even to reach an agreement with the Social Democrats. And here things could not go on.

But what have the Moderates actually achieved? They are now hoping to achieve greater influence outside the government, according to Moderate Under Secretary of State Carl Bilot. They would be able to direct a weak center government as they liked. Other Moderates are presumably dreaming of new elections and a massive victory.

But it is not certain that the Moderates will get so close to power again. The concept of nonsocialist unity has been dealt a severe blow.

NAVY ATTACKS SUSPECTED FOREIGN SUBMARINE

LD111150 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1030 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] At about 0400 this morning, a Navy helicopter dropped several detonating charges on a suspected foreign submarine off Braaviken, south of the Gustaf Dalen lighthouse. Since the light detonating charges were dropped, the Navy has made no new contact with what is suspected of being a foreign submarine. The search was initiated after a customs officer cutter saw something resembling a submarine southeast of the Gustaf Dalen lighthouse yesterday afternoon.

COMMANDER IN CHIEF OUTLINES DEFENSE CUT PLANS

LD111611 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 6 May 81 p 7

[Interview with Swedish Armed Forces Commander in Chief Lennart Ljung: "Eight Military Units To Be Disbanded"]

[Text] Eight different military units will be disbanded beginning in 1985, if the commander in chief's proposals for savings go through. With the aid of rationalizations, mergers, transfers and natural wastage among personnel, the commander in chief expects to save 7 billion kronor during a 10-year period.

However, it is by no means sure that commander in chief Lennart Ljung's proposals will win the approval of the politicians. He presented his list to the Defense Ministry and the Defense Committee on Tuesday, and in the final analysis it is these bodies which will decide which units are to be disbanded.

"In making my list, I have only taken account of economic and defense consideration," Lennart Ljung said. "It is very possible that my proposals will be quashed by the politicians in the Defense Committee. The politicians take account of regional policy and employment considerations in their decisions. I cannot."

The commander in chief's savings proposals are a weighty part of the Defense Committee's proposals which are to be presented to the government this fall, to be put before the Riksdag next spring. "We have really looked at everything with a magnifying glass to find areas where savings can be made. Unit closures are last-resort measures."

The point of the savings is an attempt to transfer funds to the Armed Forces' wartime organization by reducing their peacetime organization. The proposals have also taken into consideration the fact that annual conscript intakes will be smaller in the 1990's. It is expected that there will be 6,000 fewer conscripts per year. The Armed Forces' training facilities have an overcapacity already. "We have based the proposals on two approaches. The first involves rationalizations, mergers and coordination. This will affect various bodies, headquarters staffs and so on. Here we will make savings of 3,800 men in 10 years. As far as the second part is concerned--the closures--we will eliminate 2,200 jobs in the same period."

This adds up to a total of 6,000 employees, of which 1,500 are military posts, the rest civilian. All savings will be achieved through attrition.

"The first part of our proposals has included things like transport, purchases, care of materiel, health care and so on, which can be shared by various establishments in the same garrison location. The same is true of training facilities. There could be more joint training within the antiaircraft, radar and helicopter services."

The armed services also have land and premises scattered around the country, from large installations to small plots of land. "Plus many buildings of architectural interest which some other authority must take over if we are to make savings. As far as major expenses are concerned, it is possible for us to do less flying in the Viggen. Our pilots can fly the SK60 instead. Fuel is expensive." And the money which will be saved will be used in the Armed Forces' wartime organization.

"Of course, it may seem strange to close KA 5 in Haernoesand. Combat readiness will of course suffer; mobilization will be poorer and volunteer organizations in many places will have a harder time. But we must help to offset this by acquiring more boats, for example, for Haernoesand or by expanding the mobile coastal artillery."

According to the commander in chief it has turned out to be cheaper to disband a unit than to move it. But the savings do not come immediately, but rather in the long term. "These proposals will save around 700 million kronor a year. But on the other hand we would save more if we did not have to transfer the army's technical college from Barkaby to Oestersund and the Armed Forces Research Institute to Botkyrka. "This alone will cost us 550 million kronor and is in my opinion unnecessary, but it is a political decision."

As far as personnel is concerned the proposal has also been raised to give short-term appointments to conscripted officers to improve the uneven age distribution in the Army, but this question will be subject to further discussion.

Commander in Chief Lennart Ljung proposes that military units in the following places be disbanded in order to free economic resources for the armed forces' wartime organization:

Luleaa: Boden-Luleaa surveillance army area (Sweden's smallest defense unit, with two posts).
Haernoesand: KA 5 will disappear by 1985 at the latest. All that will be left will be headquarters, Norland coastal artillery defenses.
Oerebro: I 3 will disappear by 1985 at the latest.
Tullinge: F 18 in Tullinge. The Air Force's Soedertorn school will be run down.
Nykoeping: The Army's flying school will be moved to F 6 in Karlsborg.
Linkoeping: T 1 to be run down by 1987, together with F 13 in Malmslaett.
Karlsborg: S 2 to be disbanded by 1984. The following year, K 3 in Skoevde will move into Karlsborg's old fortress. The defense forces' helicopter training will also be localized in Karlsborg.
Joenkoeping: A 6 will be run down by 1986 at the latest. The artillery officer college will be moved to Linkoeping.

Newspaper's Comment

LD081025 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 4 May 81 p 6

[Erik Liden report: "10 Regiments on Commander in Chief's 'Deathlist'"]

[Text] I 3 in Cerebro, A 6 in Joenkoeping, T 1 in Linkoeping, T 2 in Skoevde, T 4 in Haessleholm, S 2 in Karlsborg, K 1 in Stockholm, KA 5 in Haernoesand, F 18 in Tullinge and the Naval Staff College in Naesby Park will be closed by 1992.

This is the thrust of the "deathlist" of military installations which Commander in Chief Lennart Ljung will present to the government Tuesday after tough negotiations with the heads of the different service branches. The proposal is still not finalized, for the commander in chief will go through the document again with his closest defense chiefs before he goes to the defense minister Tuesday morning.

This means that at least 10 military establishments will be closed over the next 10 years. With the closures which the Riksdag has already approved, such as that of F 1 in Vaesteraas, and the personnel cuts to be made in military staffs and authorities, the commander chief expects to be able to save around 5 billion kronor between 1982 and 1992. This money will be used to create a more efficient wartime organization in the form of arms and equipment. Just over 5,000 people will disappear from defense personnel lists in the same period.

A prerequisite for the savings being real, and not just theoretical, is that the new investment in the regiments which are to absorb those disbanded must be extremely limited.

Thus the commander in chief says, for instance, that P 2 in Haessleholm can only be allowed to remain in existence if T 4 in the same town can be moved there without extra expenditure. This means that some of the tank training must be moved to P 6 in Kristianstad and P 7 in Revingehed.

In Kristianstad the commander in chief does not advocate a merger of P 6 and A 3. This would not produce any savings and the training facilities of P 6 are too small. On the other hand, there will be a partial merger in Sollefteaa between I 21 and T 3 in order to minimize T 3's need for refurbishment.

In Oerebro I 3 will disappear as a training regiment, though the regional defense headquarters there will be allowed to survive to make the necessary combat preparations. When S 2 leaves Karlsborg, K 3 from Skoevde will move into the old fortress. K 3's quarters will be taken over by T 2, whose barracks will be closed.

Training at the Air Force school at F 18 in Tullinge will be transferred to F 14 in Halmstad. But F 10 in Aengelholm, which was threatened with closure, will be reprieved. F 6 in Karlsborg will also be given a reprieve. There is no question of closure before 1992.

As things look now, K 1 will also disappear from Stockholm. It will either be disbanded or transferred to I 1 in Kungsaengen. One reason is that headquarters staff needs K 1's present accommodation. If the politicians want to keep the mounted lifeguards, stables costing 12 million kronor will be needed in Kungsaengen. Then the horses will have to be transported to and from Stockholm by truck.

Despite the Navy chief's protests, the commander in chief wants to move training at the Naval Staff College in Naesby Park to the Naval training center at Berga, south of Stockholm. Similarly, the commander in chief wants to merge all coastal artillery in Vaxholm and the Naval training centers with the Naval base in Karlskrona. He also wants to close the new dockyards in Goeteborg and all diver training on the west coast.

When KA 5 in Haernoesand is closed, certain parts of the Norrland coastal artillery will be kept there (the staff organization). When A 6 in Joenkoeping disappears, the Artillery Officer College will be transferred to A 1 in Linkoeping. The conscripts will be split between A 1 and A 3.

At the same time as the commander in chief is presenting his view of the defense forces' future pared-down peacetime organization, the Defense Committee's "death patrol" [committee working group to decide on closures] is in the final stages of its work and will present its recommendations aroudn midsummer. The commander in chief's proposals will form the basis for the closures but they will be complemented in these recommendations y considerations of local economics. The final proposals will then form part of the Defense Committee's final recommendations, which are expected around 1 November. The cuts are made possible by the fact that 5,000 fewer conscripts per year will be trained in the 1990's.

THATCHER, SCHMIDT END TALKS, HOLD PRESS CONFERENCE

LD121024 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0938 GMT 12 May 81

[Text] The rift in relationships between Britain and West Germany has been healed following talks at Chequers yesterday between Mrs Thatcher and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

At a joint press conference today Mrs Thatcher spoke repeatedly of the "warm personal relationship" she had with the German leader. Herr Schmidt said the meeting had taken place in a "relaxed and friendly atmosphere."

He went on: "I am convinced that if there are problems between the United Kingdom and Germany, they can be, and will be, solved."

He said he looked forward "with confidence and expectation" to the British presidency of the EEC, which starts in June.

Herr Schmidt was asked if the two countries were friends following the bitter rows at the last European summit, but Mrs Thatcher butted in: "Yes, we are."

Herr Schmidt laughed and shrugged: "She says so."

Both leaders welcomed the arrival of the new French President Francois Mitterrand to the European political scene.

Mrs Thatcher said: "It is for France to choose her president and for us to work with France's choice."

She was looking forward to establishing with Mitterrand the warm personal relationship she had with Herr Schmidt she said.

Britain and Germany have been drawn together by their joint concern for a radical reform of the EEC budget. Germany is the largest contributor and Britian the second largest, but they could run into trouble on this issue with the new French president.

Mrs Thatcher expected "hard negotiations and bargaining." But she hoped preliminary decisions on reform would be taken by the end of the British presidency at the end of the year.

Mrs Thatcher said it was not fair for two countries--particularly Germany--to make "such very heavy contributions" when other countries had a richer income per head than Germany.

Herr Schmidt insisted there had to be a ceiling on contributions to the budget, and he warned there could be no solution in which some countries received unlimited net transfers, and others had to pay out unlimited transfers.

Mrs Thatcher also stressed that both countries were anxious to get an agreement on a common fisheries policy.

On trade with Japan, Herr Schmidt said Europe had "a legitimate right" to ask the Japanese to be more forthcoming in opening up their markets.

But he warned against any new trade war. There was nothing more dangerous these days than a drift towards protectionism.

12 MAY PAPERS COMMENT ON ELECTION OF MITTERRAND

DAILY TELEGRAPH

LD121117 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 12 May 81 p 14

[Editorial: "A New France?"]

[Text] Why the French have exchanged the comparative stability of M. Giscard d'Estaing for the uncertainties of Francois Mitterrand is a fascinating question. The new president conducted a campaign of unexceptionable blandness in order not to scare off those dissident Gaullist voters whose support he needed. On this basis, the French can have very little idea of what lies in store for them. But Mitterrand has spent 35 years in French politics (the Communists have nicknamed him Cro-Magnon man) and he has done much, said much and written much. He is not, as is being fashionably said, an enigma.

The first myth to be scotched is that of a soft, rural type who is never happier than when legging it over boundless fields. This is an ad-man's dream. Mitterrand earned a reputation for pragmatism and occasional ruthlessness under the Fourth Republic, notably as minister of the colonies, and he did not build up the modern French Socialist Party by making daisy chains. He will be nobody's fool, not even the Communists'.

His experience, however, is that the Communists form an indispensible part of the left. Of course, he would ideally prefer to govern with only Socialists. But the Socialists do not themselves make up a majority in the French National Assembly, and it seems inconceivable that they could ever do so. In any eventuality, Mitterrand must have Communist support, and those right-wingers who hope that he may turn to the centre are surely deceiving themselves. For all its bitter divisions, the French left does comprise some sort of common tradition, and in the past Mitterrand has shown no immovable ideological objections to entering alliances with the Communists. In the 1977 French municipal elections, for example, the Socialists and Communists in tandem made considerable gains at the expense of the right. A similar arrangement is foreseeable in the National Assembly elections which Mitterrand is pledged to call in June. More probably, he would prefer (again to avoid scaring middle-ground voters) to come to an arrangement with the Communists after elections.

In either event, he could not govern for long without an overall parliamentary majority, even allowing for the great powers invested in the president under the Fifth Republic. This would also apply if the united left failed to muster enough votes. Such is the hope of the Gaullists who see their hero Jacques Chirac stepping into the breach. But if the combined left does win a majority--and Sunday's result may well work the other way--then Mitterrand will find himself in the position of a Harold Wilson or a James Callaghan, only worse. He will be forced to include some Communist ministers in his government so long as they are prepared (as they will be) to row back a little on Afghanistan and Poland. They will not rule the roost, but they will try to expedite and doubtless to elaborate Mitterrand's own plans for a wealth tax, limited nationalisation, a higher basic wage and a 35-hour week. Let us, therefore, be brave and make a prediction: that in one year's time France's rate of inflation and of unemployment will be up; that her industrial production will be down.

Can Britain expect any more obvious benefits from a Mitterrand government? As far as the Common Market is concerned, the new president is said to be relatively pro-British, but this did not prevent him from criticising Giscard during the campaign for not being "plus viligant" in pursuing France's case against Britain in respect of mutton, fish and agricultural prices. Such rhetoric is electorally popular in France and will remain so.

As far as the defence of the West goes, Mitterrand's natural pro-NATO and anti-Soviet inclinations will be inevitably diluted by the inclusion of Communists in his government, and perhaps disastrously so. Such will be the likely pattern of his whole regime, and though Mitterrand will hedge the Communists here and block them there, France seems bound for unavoidable decline so long as he remains her president.

MORNING STAR

LD121115 London MORNING STAR in English 12 May 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Unity Is the Way"]

[Text] The light of capital from France is confirmation clear that the political map of Europe has changed dramatically.

The reactionary run of power, lasting from the day when in 1958 Charles de Gaulle climbed on the general's backs to seize power in a coup, has finally been broken.

Things will never be quite the same again in the "France of 200 families"--the giant monopolists who for so long have held that country in their grip--nor in the creation of European big capital, the Common Market. That's for sure.

Mitterrand's victory creates an opening toward the possibility of real, lasting fundamental change. His success has unleashed forces for change and unity which many doubted were present--especially those who had the misfortune to know France's working-class movement only from the reports in the Fleet Street press.

Just how cynical much of that coverage has been was well illustrated by a sentence in a leader comment in yesterday's DAILY EXPRESS: "Now that the campaign is over the electioneering slogans about a President Mitterrand depending on Communist support can also be finally dispensed with." Like others it offered the "hope" that Mitterrand would show himself to be "moderate."

Already the manoeuvring and scheming has started in the salons of Paris--aiming to surround Mitterrand with personalities to the liking of the monopolists, to force his hand by a speculative rush in the stock exchange, and to weaken his determination to press ahead with his election manifesto.

Within France and abroad there is a fear that Mitterrand's breakthrough in France might be emulated here in Britain--with a Labour Party consolidating its policy positions and roots at a time of reactionary government this surely is well in the cards.

Jacques Chirac, the other candidate of the right alongside Giscard, indicated yesterday that he wanted to see his supporters and Giscard's go into the coming assembly elections on a unified platform.

Against a united right, determined to do all it can to frustrate any turning to the left, the left must develop its unity. The extent to which that is achieved around clear left alternative policies will be the extent to which this week's victory fulfils its promise.

NORTHERN IRELAND SECRETARY REAFFIRMS ULSTER POLICY

LD081237 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 8 May 81 p 32

[James Wightman report: "We Will Not Bow to Blackmail, Atkins Tells IRA"]

[Text] After the funeral of Robert Sands and in face of similar fasts by other IRA prisoners, Mr Atkins, Northern Ireland secretary, declared last night that the government would not give in to the latest demands for political status.

"The government's position is perfectly clear," he said in a statement. "We are not prepared to concede the principle of political status for which Robert Sands was ordered to die, nor are we prepared to do so to prevent others taking the same course."

Sands had taken his own life "either by his own decision, or on the instructions of those who felt it was useful to their cause that he should die." He added: "Whatever the reason, it was a tragedy that he should die. Whatever the reason, it was a tragedy that he should have added his name to the list of those who have died in Northern Ireland as victims of a campaign which can contribute nothing to the resolution of the historic and deep-seated problems in this province."

Mr Atkins, who reported to the cabinet yesterday on the Ulster security situation, then drew a contrast between Sands's death and the killing of Constable Philip Ellism, 33, who was murdered in Belfast on Wednesday and whose funeral, the secretary of state said, "deserves no less publicity."

"The dead constable differs from the dead Mr Sands in that his death was not of his choosing," said Mr Atkins.

"The two bereaved families can surely not be the only two who realise that there can be no worthwhile dividend from terrorism."

He added; "I regret very much the death of any person, whether policeman, soldier or citizen going about his daily business who is murdered by those who claim to be acting in pursuit of a political objective. All of us know that the claim of political justification is bogus."

"We have established one of the most humane and liberal prison regimes in the Western world," he stated. "The government has taken serious account of the findings of the European Commission on human rights. And we will continue to do so."

Although concerned with the well-being of all prisoners, the government was not prepared "to give in to blackmail in the form of a hunger strike or of any other form of pressure."

HEALEY, GILMOUR DEBATE UK, U.S. FOREIGN POLICY

LD081241 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 8 May 81 p 12

[Peter Pryke report: "Innocents Massacred With American Aid, Healey Claims"]

[Excerpts] The American Government's military aid to El Salvador was being used only to massacre innocents and should cease forthwith, Mr Healey, shadow foreign secretary, said in the Commons last night.

Calling on British foreign ministers to bring pressure on Washington to get military aid stopped, he said: "They must put an end to the training of terrorists in death squads in Florida. "There is absolutely no excuse for a government which accuses the Soviet Union of encouraging international terrorism to allow that to happen on American soil."

Mr Healey urged Sir Ian Gilmour, lord privy seal, to ask the United States to "cease the bullying of Nicaragua."

There was a worrying and unresolved conflict in Washington between the Conservative ideologues and the Conservative pragmatists.

If the ideologues were to win it would result in increased instability in the Third World, and would present great dangers to world peace and the unity of the Western alliance.

In an attack on the prime minister's style of diplomacy, as displayed in her recent visit to Washington and Asia, Mr Healey said it was "half John Wayne, half calamity Jane--blazing away at targets of the most vulgar political opportunism."

"I am glad to say she shot herself in the foot over the rapid deployment force by appearing to offer support which it would be impossible for us to provide, and by scaring the Gulf out of its wits."

He accused Mrs Thatcher of having reduced British relations with India to their lowest-ever level, and of having prevented the recent European summit debating important issues such as Poland, detente and disarmament.

A call for a definitive statement on Labour policy on defence was made by Sir Ian, who dwelt on the confusion caused by Mr Foot's unilaterialism; the declaration by Terry Duffy the engineers' leader that unilateralism was "a never never land" policy, the call of the Labour Party conference to lower spending on defence, and the view of Mor Shore that the present level of expenditure was reasonable given the threat.

In a brief reply, Mr Healey said that Europe had enjoyed 32 years of uninterrupted peace based on the existence of NATO. This view was overwhelmingly supported by the Labour Party. Supporting the NATO strategy of deterrence, he said: "We must accept that the political tensions in Europe since 1945 have been such as in any previous period of world history would have led to war."

Sir Ian, opening a debate on foreign affairs, said he did not think that the United States had the remotest intention of intervening militarily in El Salvador. Recent reports had indicated that the elections were being planned there next year.

The presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan was the major obstacle to East-West contact and co-operation. In the meantime Britain was prepared to keep open channels of communication to prevent misunderstanding. But the primary cause of the present strain was the failure of the Soviet Union and its friends to act with restraint in the international arena, and create a climate for genuine arms control and disarmament.

The prime minister's visit to the Gulf had been a great success.

Sir Ian said if progress was to be made on the Middle East Israelis must move from their entrenched positions.

Mr Toby Jessel intervening, asked if it was realistic to expect the Israelis to give up strategic land to people who were sworn to destroy them.

Sir Ian replied: "I also question whether it is realistic for Israel indefinitely to keep land which by any stretch of the imagination does not belong to them."

Mr Andrew Faulds calling for the involvement in the discussions of "Chairman 'Arafat, a responsible and moderate leader of the Palestinians," asked if the importance of this could be impressed on "that implistic cretin, the President of the United States."

Sir Ian replied that that sort of language applied to the head of state of our major ally was neither accurate nor helpful.

Dr David Owen, parliamentary leader of the Social Democrats and former Labour foreign secretary, challenged Mr Healey and demanded to know the Labour Party's policies. "Is the Labour Party going to stick to the defence strategy of NATO and its commitments to the European Community, because these are central issues which affect the livelihood of every single person in this country," he said. "For the opposition to be drifting by default into a position of outright opposition to the European Community is not good enough."

ISRAELI SENTENCED TO 2 YEARS IMPRISONMENT

NC120817 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 12 May 81 p 1

[Text] Moshe Antoine Bavli, an Israeli of French origin, aged 41, who was arrested in connection with the bomb explosion which nearly killed a Syrian journalist at Limassol on the night of January 3rd last, was charged before the assize court at Limassol today.

The police withdrew the first two charges of conspiring to kill Hani al-Hindi and for attempted murder against him, and the accused pleaded guilty to the other five counts, for which he was sentenced to two years imprisonment starting from the date of his arrest on January 2nd last.

The charges on which Bavli pleaded guilty were: Conspiring with other persons to keep watch on al-Hindi by unlawful means, circulating with a false document (Canadian passport) with intent to deceive the authorities, driving with a forged international driving licence--each entailing a sentence of two years--illegal entry into Cyprus without a passport (3 months), and use of a wireless set without a permit from the Council of Ministers (6 months)--all to run concurrently.

Bavli was arrested by the Limassol police for suspicious loitering on January 2nd, the day before a bomb explosion in the car of Syrian journalist and publisher Hani al-Hindi, residing at Limassol for the last two years, seriously injured him. Al-Hindi was rushed to the Limassol hospital, where he had his left arm amputated, and later was flown to Beirut.

The accused had since been held in custody with successive renewals of remand orders, until the completion of police investigations, during which over one thousand statements were taken from people in and outside Cyprus.

[Text] Mr Tornaritis, the republic's attorney general, left for London this afternoon for talks at the British Foreign Office on the question of the compensation that the British Government owes the Cyprus Government for its bases in Cyprus. The talks will open tomorrow and continue until Friday.

From London, Mr Tornaritis will go to Syracuse, Sicily, to participate in the international seminar on the draft of the international penal code and the draft on the establishment of an international criminal court.

PAPER SAYS U.S., NATO, TURKS PREFER KLIRIDHIS

NC091146 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 9 May 81 p 1

[Text] The Turks (and of course the Turkish Cypriots) as well as the United States and NATO want, after the 24 May elections, to move the Cyprus Government toward the Democratic Rally [DISI] of Kliridhis, in whom they place "unlimited confidence and who they consider is capable of political maneuvering."

This is stressed in the latest issue of the Athens magazine POLITIKA THEMATA in an analysis of the situation before the Cypriot parliamentary elections.

At the same time, however, it points out:

The Turks, Turkish Cypriots, Americans and NATO, in describing Kiprianou, say that he is a "stiff negotiator who does not move from his initial position and considers the basic points of his policy for a settlement of the Cyprus issue as not negotiable."

In its analysis, among other things, POLITIKA THEMATA says: "The Turkish Cypriots want and expect the DISI's Glavkos Kliridhis to be the winner in the elections. He has concentrated all the forces of the rightwing in his ranks and, for years now, has openly declared that he opposes President Kiprianou's policies.

For months now Western journalists following Kliridhis have said that he has mobilized in his party's ranks all rightwing elements, including EOKA-B.

The Turkish Cypriots particularly believe and publicly declare that if Kliridhis wins the elections, the negotiations between the two communities will advance because, as far as the Greek Cypriots are concerned, "only Kliridhis can negotiate and reach an agreement with us."

The magazine then notes the recently expressed NATO view that in order to ensure Cyprus' strategic position, it is better for the Turkish troops to occupy 40 percent of Cyprus rather than "solve the Cyprus problem."

POLITIKA THEMATA stresses that in pointing out such a "practical" view "on the security of Cyprus" as a military mainstay in the Middle East, it is not at all difficult to explain why the Turkish Cypriots refuse every territorial concession and insist on being intransigent.

Under these conditions, it is not an accident that the Turkish Cypriots and Americans want Kliridhis to win the 24 May elections. Kliridhis would "negotiate better than Kiprianou for a 'solution' of the Cyprus issue"!!!

Secret Meetings Alleged

NC130712 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 13 May 81 p 2

[Text] According to evidence obtained by SIMERINI chief editor Alekos Konstandinidhis which he is not publishing, however, chairman of the Rally Party Glavkos Kliridhis, who also heads the party ticket, is an honorary member of Denktas' National Salvation Party and receives instructions from that party's leadership.

According to the same evidence, Glavkos Kliridhis was put at the head of the Rally Party ticket following backstage activities by the National Salvation Party leadership.

Furthermore, the evidence reveals that a secret protocol exists between the Rally Party and the National Salvation Party on the basis of which Kliridhis was put at the head of the Rally Party.

The evidence also reveals that even now Kliridhis still receives instructions from the National Salvation Party leadership which considers him to be an instrumental member of the party. Specifically, on the basis of Konstantinidhis' evidence, Kliridhis has frequent secret contacts with leading cadres of the National Salvation Party and more specifically with the chairman of the party, Denktas and also with Cagatay.

ROLANDHIS DISCUSSES INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS ISSUE

NC122010 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 12 May 81

[From the "Echo of Events" program: Interview with Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis by Kostas Serezis of Greek Radio and Television in Athens; date not given--recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr Minister, many hopes have been pinned on the inter-Cypriot talks. Would you tell us where the talks stand today?

[Answer] Mr Serezis, allow me to go back a little so I can better brief our viewers. As is known, the Turkish invasion of Cyprus was in 1974. This action was condemned in many international forums. As a result of the invasion, about 40 percent of Cyprus was occupied, one-third of the Cypriot population became refugees and thousands of people were killed. Since then, the UN secretary general has exerted many efforts toward an rapprochment between the two communities, so that we may proceed toward some progress or solution of the Cyprus problem. But there had not been any results fot the past 6 years. Finally, last summer--in August, specifically--a formula was reached following 12 months of efforts by Dr Waldheim. The formula was accepted by both sides and we opened the dialogue last September. At the beginning, the atmosphere was cordial--I should say that it continues to be cordial--and there was a positive spirit in the entire process of the dialogue and we have emphasized this fact with sincerity. Therefore, I believe that, with the same sincerity, we should also emphasize now that unfortunately, 7 to 8 months after the dialogue opened, there has not been any substantive progress in the intercommunal talks. In other words, I cannot say that we have really made progress in questions of substance--something which evokes pessimism about the whole procedure.

[Question] What do you think is the reason?

[Answer] I tell you, for the Cyprus problem to be solved, there should be the political will in Ankara to solve it. The victim cannot solve a problem created by an invasion, it is the perpetrator, it is the invader who should solve it. Consequently, if Turkey does not make the political decision to solve this problem, I believe we will neither see progress nor a solution.

[Question] Are all indications convincing that Turkey has not yet made such a decision?

[Answer] I tell you, it is said that because of the forthcoming elections in the Turkish Cypriot community--these elections are allegedly being held because we do not recognize them, they are illegal as far as we are concerned.

[Question] Chronologically, when are they scheduled?

[Answer] They will be held at end of June, on 28 June. So, it is said that because of these elections, Mr Denktas is hesitant to submit proposals on Cyprus. Consequently, we have to wait until summer to see his proposals, his actual proposals, on the Cyprus problem. Of course, I should tell you that we have also heard the same things in the past, because in our area elections are held some times in Cyprus, Turkey, Greece and sometimes there are other problems. Thus, any progress in the Cyprus issue is continuously postponed in expectation of some development.

[Question] Are you implying that elections in any of these countries is being used as a pretext not to submit proposals?

[Answer] At least it was used in the past. For this reason we should be reserved. I would not like to say that we completely reject this position, but our past experience has been so bitter that we should be careful. We shall wait until summer to see if there are any proposals or progress. I should tell you that these three summer months will be critical because later, in October, there will be the commonwealth summit in Australia and then there will be the UN General Assembly. These are international conferences of great importance and, of course, Cyprus and its government will have to take the decision--if no progress in the Cyprus issue is made by then--whether to take the issue to the United Nations in 1981 or follow the same procedure followed in 1980 and postpone the appeal in light of the dialogue. I believe that, if the dialogue proves sterile until September, the government will have to examine the entire matter from the beginning.

[Question] Considering the entire matter from the beginning, in the event the dialogue turns out to be sterile, will this then mean that the dialogue will be interrupted?

[Answer] At least its credibility will be severely curtailed. The dialogue is a procedure that until then will have been tested, for about 12 months, and if it does not bear fruit, it is natural that its credibility will be diminished to a great extent. As we know, as the international community stands today, it is from the dialogue that we expect the practical solution of the Cyprus problem. By saying this, I would not like to downgrade the value of the UN resolutions or the value of internationalization, because we should know that today we are a state, we are a government, because we are recognized by the international community. It is because of this that today I am here with you as the foreign minister of an independent country, and we cannot risk this international status. I must also tell you that even at this time--when we must be careful at international forums in order to give the dialogue the opportunity to advance--we have not abandoned our international contacts. Because, alas, if we abandon these contacts, we will end up having two administrations in Cyprus--our administration and that of Mr Denktas--and finally Cyprus will be partitioned in this manner; namely, what the Turkish Cypriots are probably seeking--partition--will be achieved through the lack of internationalization.

[Question] Mr Minister, a great deal has been said about the role the European Community could play toward a solution of the Cyprus issue. What is your opinion?

[Answer] There is no doubt that both the community and the countries comprising it, as well as certain other Western countries, have levers--both economic and political--in Ankara that they could use to help toward asolution of or progress in the Cyprus problem. Of course, whatever is done it should remain within the UN framework. We cannot risk any position that would deinternationalize the Cyprus problem for the reasons I have already stated.

[Interviewer interrupts] And downgrade the...yes?

[Rolandhis continues] It would be terribly risky for Cyprus. If we do this, the end result may be partition. Consequently, while the issue remains internationalized and while the UN secretry general is the person entrusted with the task of solving the Cyprus problem, we accept help from various countries which could contribute toward progress in the solution of the Cyprus problem. I also believe that many of the really powerful West European countries, as well as the United States, could contribute in this direction by exercising their influence on Ankara.

[Question] You are in Athens en route to various parts of the world. Please tell us about your contacts and what will be the benefits, if there are going to be any, for the Cyprus cause and its promotion.

[Answer] This is part of our campaign to be in contact with governments. From here, I will go to Berne on an official visit to Switzerland, then I will go to Strasbourg.

[Question] Before going to Strasbourg, if I am not mistaken, at the same time you will be in Switzerland, Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen will also be there.

[Answer] Yes, I have been informed that on 12 May Mr Turkmen will also be there. That will be the second day of my official visit to Berne. In any case, no meeting between myself and the Turkish foreign minister has been arranged. As you probably know, Turkey does not recognize us as a state and, consequently, does not agree to such meetings.

[Interviewer interrupts] Nevertheless, it is the only country.

[Rolandhis continues] It is the only country out of the 150 UN member countries. Mr Turkmen will also be in Strasbourg, where I will go later, for the Council of Europe meetings. Of course, he should go there in his capacity as the foreign minister of a member of the Council of Europe. I will then go to Hungary on an official visit, and finally I will visit the United States, where I will meet with both Mr Haig and Mr Waldheim. I also believe that these meetings will be very important, particularly in view of some expected--at least, as it is rumored--developments this summer.

[Question] Some developments regarding Turkish intentions for progress in the inter-communal dialogue?

[Answer] Exactly, yes. I am saying this, of course, in conjunction with all that I have already said--that all these countries could, if they so desired, play some role in the Cyprus problem.

[Question] Will your meeting with the U.S. secretary of state be a formality or will substantive matters be discussed?

[Answer] The meeting will be substantive, and I would like the Americans to understand it in this context. It will be my first contact with the new U.S. secretary of state. Consequently, we will discuss the Cyprus problem in depth, we will see what are the U.S. Government's positions and I will explain our positions to Mr Haig. I would like to hope that this meeting will result in some influence, or pressure on Turkey for progress in the Cyprus problem.

[Question] Mr Minister, recently your Greek counterpart--you are also Greek--Foreign Minister Mitsotakis made certain statements on the Cyprus issue expressing optimism. How do you view these statements?

[Answer] Mr Mitsotakis also said in the past that he considers the Cyprus issue as the first national issue of Hellenism. Virtually, we the Cypriots depend on Hellenism, on its strength. We believe that today Hellenism is a solid entity that could constitute the substructure of our struggle. Mr Mitsotakis, as the Greek foreign minister, really considers the Cyprus problem the first national issue both of Greece and Hellenism. For this, I appreciate very much the stand he has adopted. At the same time, Mr Mitsotakis also has the same information concerning the developments expected next summer which, as I have said, I do not know whether they will occur or not, I prefer to wait and see what happens in the summer. It is within the framework of this information that Mr Mitsotakis has mentioned all this you have said.

DENKTAS CRITICIZES KIPRIANOU REMARKS ON BORDERS

TA121247 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 12 May 81

[Text] President Denktas has described Greek Cypriot leader Mr Kiprianou's idea of justice and morality as peculiar. He was commenting on a statement by Mr Kiprianou that the Greek Cypriots denied the existence of borders in Cyprus. President Denktas said that Mr Kiprianou's declarations were of no use because boundaries existed and were as much a reality as Mr Kiprianou's past record. President Denktas said: In federations, boundaries exist and crossing over these boundaries or settling in different provinces or states is tackled by different federations in different ways. Here in Cyprus the security requirements of the Turkish Cypriots enforce on us different considerations in finding a proper formula to this particular problem. President Denktas stressed that denying boundaries as partitionist was nonsense. He said that without boundaries the Turkish Cypriot community would again be subject to threats of enosis.

On Mr Kiprianou's laying down what was called the basic principles which should be safeguarded in a federal state, President Denktas said that Mr Kiprianou was forgetting that Cyprus was not yet a federal state but the merely split parts of a partnership state in which the Greek Cypriot side has been trying to Hellenize Cyprus by destroying the Turkish Cypriot community and ignoring their inalienable rights. He stressed that Mr Kiprianou also ignored the fact that what led to this deep division was the inhuman, unlawful treatment accorded to the Turkish Cypriot community from 1963 to 1974. President Denktas recalled that according to Mr Kiprianou, the 1963-1974 period was a happy and prosperous period while the Greek Cypriot administration was literally mowing down the Turkish Cypriots in the name of enosis.

The president said: Apparently, it was this kind of grotesque justice and morality which made the Greeks kick the Turkish Cypriots out of the government and the budget. And it was this kind of Greek Cypriot justice and morality which made them throw the constitution of Cyprus into the trash can and run the island by rule of thumb.

President Denktas concluded by saying that with this record, in which Mr Kiprianou had taken an active part, Mr Kiprianou was the last person on earth to speak of justice and morality.

BAYRAK RADIO REPORTS AMBASSADOR STONE'S REMARKS

TA121206 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 12 May 81

[Text] The U.S. ambassador to Lefkosa [Nicosia], Stone, has expressed the belief that Cyprus has a bright future. Ambassador Stone who will soon leave the island because he has completed his term of office here also expressed the hope that the problems of the island would soon be solved with the good will to be displayed by the two sides.

Pointing out that the Cyprus problem has a negative effect on the relations between Turkey and Greece, two NATO members, Stone stressed that the U.S. administration has always shown interest in the solution of the Cyprus problem.

EDEK, ALGERIANS RELEASE COMMUNIQUE ON TALKS

In his message, Evren said: On the occasion of your being elected president, I extend to you and the French people my sincere wishes of success. I am convinced that during your term as president, the relations between Turkey and France will take a new leap in accordance with the existing traditional ties of friendship between our countries and our nations.

EVREN COMMENTS ON TORTURE, POLITICAL PARTIES

NC121114 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 7 May 81 p 9

[Blent Zarif report from Bonn]

[Text] In its "Tages Themen" program the other night, German television, Program I, showed Head of State Gen Kenan Evren, in mufti, who pointed out that good friendships manifest themselves in times of need. He added that "Turks fully appreciate the aid extended to them."

Responding to questions from the program host, Gen Kenan Evren said that the lies about torture in Turkey were being fabricated in the West. He also said that this kind of propaganda was tendentiously created and deliberately exaggerated by Turkey's enemies. Gen Evren continued: "Political parties in Turkey have not been abolished; only their duties have been temporarily suspended. When the election day is fixed, they will resume their duties. The 12 September operation in Turkey was imperative. Had someone else been at the head of the Turkish Armed Forces, he would have acted precisely in the same way. He also would not have allowed Ataturk's principles to be trodden underfoot.

"Although rarely, there are still occasional acts by the security forces against the laws of the country. But as soon as this is found out, action is taken against those who abuse their duties and responsibilities. Before long, you will see that our courts will give these people the punishment they deserve."

GREEK FISHING BOAT SEIZED FOR UNAUTHORIZED ENTRY

[Text] Ankara, 12 May (AA)--A Greek fishing boat was seized by Turkish patrol boats Sunday, 10 May, for entering Turkish territorial waters without authorization off the southern shores of Thrace. The crew of four are being detained pending an investigation.

Foreign Ministry sources in Ankara said they received a request from the Greek ambassador for the release of the boat and the crew, which might have taken a shortcut on its way from Dedeagac (Alexandroupolis) to the island [of Mitilin]. The crew might have to appear before a local court before they can be released, sources said.

[Text] The Turkish police announced today that four Greek fishermen who are being detained by Turkish harbor police under the allegation that they entered Turkish territorial waters will stand trial at the court of (?Mitilin) island. The Turkish court has ordered the fishermen's release from police detention but banned their leaving the island, to which they were taken by the Turkish harbor police.

WORKERS EXPELLED FROM LIBYA ARRIVE IN ISTANBUL

[Text] Istanbul, 12 May (AA)--Two hundred workers expelled from Libya on the grounds that they had gone on strike claimed the Turkish contractor with whom they were at odds owed them the equivalent of 40 million TL. The Turkish contracting firm "Etrak" had failed to pay them for overtime on Bairams [Muslim festivals] and the indemnity for working under desert conditions as it had promised, the spokesman for the group of workers, who returned to Turkey by air Tuesday, said. Their appeal to Libyan authorities had been to no avail, and that was why they had gone on strike, he added.

The strike had resulted with the death of two Turkish workers on 15 April, they said, and finally their expulsion by Libyan authorities. They intended to appeal to Turkish authorities to obtain the funds due to them the spokesman added.

COMMANDER REPORTS ANTITERRORIST ACTIONS FOR MONTH

TA121616 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1530 GMT 12 May 81

[Text] Erzurum, 12 May (AA)--The martial law commander of Erzurum, Agri, Kars and Artvin provinces announced a total of 178 right-and left-wing terrorists and separatists were captured in his region in operations held between 11 April and 11 May. One hundred and one of these terrorists were extreme leftists, 16 were rightists and 29 were separatists, the commander said. Some 1,311 infantry rifles, 5,357 guns, 2,318 shotguns and 429 dynamite sticks were captured in the same operations. Thirty-one of the terrorists were students, 27 teachers, 6 workers and 6 housewives, the commander's statement announced.

Leftist Militants Captured

[Text] Sixty-six militants of an illegal extreme leftist organization that murdered many citizens in acts of terror committed especially in the Aegean region have been captured in Izmir. With the capture of these 66 militants, the number of captured militants belonging to this organization has reached 1,398--of whom 5 are dead.

According to a statement issued by the press and public relations office of the Aegean Army and Martial Law Command, since 1977 the militants martyred 13 policemen, killed 45 citizens and a member of their own organization in operations conducted in Izmir, Usak, Denizli, Balikesir, Manisa, Aydin and Ankara. They also wounded 67 persons, 19 of them security officials. The Aegean Region Central Committee chairman and members of the organization are among the 66 captured in operations conducted in the last month. Of those captured, 22 are university students, 17 high school students, 2 unemployed, 3 workers, one civil servant, one a teacher and another the director of a student dormitory.

Various types of weapons and goods stolen in robberies committed by the organization were found in searches conducted in the militants' hideouts. Security forces officials said that Halil Saglam, Kemal Kackar, Selim Martin, Ayit Eray, Kemal Ciftci, Fatma Isik, Tugrul Tekin, Halil Ahlat, Oktay Subay, Musa Erdal, Aynur Sunar, Fatma Gulaktan, Turhan Ozcelik and Adnan Akkaya who are responsible for the various committees of the organization are being sought.

INTERIOR MINISTRY CLARIFIES DUAL NATIONALITY LAW

[Text] Ankara, 12 May (AA)--Recent amendments to the law on Turkish nationality allow Turkish citizens to have dual nationality, the Interior Ministry announced in clarifying some points related to the law.

According to the new Turkish nationality law, any child born to a Turkish father or mother has the right to be a Turkish citizen at birth.

Another important amendment in the Turkish nationality law is the right accorded to the citizen without losing his or her own Turkish nationality. Any Turkish citizen who seeks another citizenship without losing his own Turkish nationality should apply to the Interior Ministry. The Interior Ministry will grant permission to the person seeking dual nationality, provided that he is major and sound of mind. In order to gain this permission, one must have completed his military service and should be able to provide documents to prove that he is eligible for another country's nationality. Those who want to preserve their Turkish nationality should inform the Interior Ministry within three years after receiving the permission mentioned above.

Those who have dual nationality must fulfill their duties as Turkish citizens. Otherwise, they risk loss of their Turkish nationality.

VOTCP: DEMIREL, JP SHOULD BE 'BROUGHT TO JUSTICE'

TA1211126 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 12 May 81

[Commentary: "Demirel and the Reactionary JP Administration Should Be Brought to Justice; All the Accomplices of the Fascist NAP Within the State, Army and People Should Be Exposed"]

[Excerpts] The prosecutor's indictment in the fascist NAP case, which was prepared on the basis of documents, reveals that this party is a fascist party, that it has adopted the fascist ideology, that NAP leaders--primarily Turkes--issued direct orders to commit political murders and mass massacres and that the fascist NAP attempted through plans for a coup to seize the state in an atmosphere of confusion. Although the links of this fascist party with the CIA, with imperialist intelligence organizations and with counterguerrilla elements are still being kept quiet, the fact that this fascist party and its administrators played the main role in turning the country into a blood bath clearly has been exposed.

The following is now a very burning issue: Who nurtured and supported this fascist party, included it in governments and helped it penetrate into the state mechanism, the army and the police? Who made Turkes a deputy prime minister and brought him to the head of the National Intelligence Organization [NIT]. The answers to these questions are evident. Demirel and the reactionary JP administrations are the chief accomplices of the fascist NAP and Turkes. All the connections of the fascist NAP with the JP administrations should be exposed and the latter should be brought to justice. The names of the capitalists who raised money for the likes of Turkes should be made public. The rich persons and the landowners who organized the fascist NAP in central Anatolia, in eastern and southeastern Anatolia and in the various provinces and districts of the country should be exposed one after another and they should be brought to justice.

The fact that the bloody nature of this fascist party was exposed in the indictment, which is based on evidence and confessions in the NAP case, has again confirmed the statements and warnings issued so far by all the antifascist forces in our country and especially by the Turkish Communist Party. It was once again clearly revealed that the fact that our people, all the progressive and patriotic forces and hundreds of thousands of persons shouted "the fascist NAP and its organizations should be closed down" and "murderer Turkes and the NAP leaders should be brought to justice" and held massive demonstrations against political murders and massacres was extremely justified.

Demirel--the accomplice of the fascist NAP--and the reactionary JP administrators should be brought to justice. The extensions of the fascist NAP within the army, policy and state mechanism should be exposed. All patriots and democratic forces: Cooperate against reactionary provocations and the operations to save the fascist NAP leaders!

TCP GREETS ROMANIAN PARTY ON 60TH ANNIVERSARY

TA090843 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 9 May 81

[Message by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen to the Romanian Communist Party Central Committee on the latter's 60th anniversary; dated 8 May--read by announcer]

[Text] Dear comrades, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee sincerely congratulates the 60th foundation anniversary of the brotherly Romanian Communist Party [RCP]. The RCP was established with the traditions of the 100-year national liberation war, the harsh struggles of the Romanian working class and the effect of the Great October Revolution which started a new era. The RCP was in the foremost ranks of the class struggle. It guided the action of the national front against Hitler's aggressors and against the Antonescu dictatorship. It played a decisive role in the antifascist rebellion of 23 August 1944. Since then, it has been guiding the construction of a multilaterally developed socialist society in Romania and the struggle for the constant raising of the people's standard of living and for the increase of the country's economic potential.

The TCP is waging a struggle, under harsh conditions, to weave the single front of all the national democratic forces against imperialist impositions, against the country's dependence on NATO, against the monopolies' merciless exploitation, against the junta's oppression of all the progressive forces, for national independence and democracy, for the workers' rights.

The TCP supports the development of the Turkish-Romanian relations in many aspects. The TCP and the RCP are attached to each other with brotherly and internationalist ties.

I hope that the 60th foundation anniversary of the RCP will be a year of new victories in the path of peace and socialism. Please accept our communist greetings.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen, 8 May 1981

THORN HAS RESERVATIONS ON MITTERRAND'S ELECTION

LD121600 Hamburg DPA in German 1337 GMT 12 May 81

[Text] Saarbrucken (DPA)--President of the EEC Commission Gaston Thorn has expressed an unusually critical attitude toward the French presidential election. In an interview for tomorrow's SAARBRUCKER ZEITUNG Thorn said of Francois Mitterrand's election:

"We know that Mr Mitterrand was elected with communist votes. We also know that the PCF, at least at leadership level, will not be one to express the most constructive and classical European ideas. Thus we are all faced with the question: How will Mitterrand govern or be allowed to govern between a potential Communist Party brake on the one hand and on the other the RPR, that is, to say, the Chirac group which, as we know, is now also announcing various reservations? It will not be easy."

The fact that Mitterrand has now moved to the top position in France--a man who has been out of government affairs for 24 years--creates problems, Thorn said, "both human, at party level and also at national political level." Thorn added: "We in Europe thus ask ourselves whether this will not require a long followup period. We are very serious about this." An edited version of the interview was prereleased to DPA.

COMMISSIONER CHEYSSON: FRANCE BOUND BY AGREEMENTS

LD131135 Paris LE MONDE in French 12 May 81 p 11

[Text] "The PS is approaching change at the head of the republic in the knowledge that it is bound by the international agreements signed by France, be it the Atlantic alliance, the EEC or other agreements," European Commissioner for Development Problems Claude Cheysson stated in Brussels. Mr Cheysson, who supported Mr Mitterrand's candidacy, added that "the desire for change which has been demonstrated in France does not mean ignorance of the pledges which bind this country--pledges on the basis of which Mr Francois Mitterrand's team will work."

He nonetheless stated that France should have fundamental discussions with its Atlantic allies on the content of the alliance and on questions such as the high level of U.S. interest rates.

Mr Cheysson also observed that Sunday's election demonstrated that alternation is possible within the framework fo the Fifth Republic constitution: "This is, in fact, a consolidation of the Fifth Republic." Finally Mr Cheysson added that discussion on reducing the working week could only take place within the European framework.

COMMISSION TO AID PAKISTAN'S REFUGEE RELIEF

LD130947 Brussels LE SOIR in French 1-2 May 81 p 1

[Text] On Wednesday the EEC decided to grant aid amounting to 20 million European accounting units (840 million Belgian francs) to Pakistan to help that country meet the needs of the Afghan refugees. At present there are 1.65 million Afghan refugees in Pakistan, 45 percent of whom are children and 35 percent women. According to the UN high Commissioner for Refugees, there will soon be 2 million.

The EEC also granted aid amounting to 210 million Belgian francs to Kampuchea and the neighboring countries (notably Thailand) to meet the needs of the Khmer populations who have remained inside Kampuchea or taken refuge in neighboring countries.

REPORTAGE ON DEFENSE MINISTERS' SPRING MEETINGS

TA122103 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 12 May 81

[Text] U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger has appealed to NATO member countries to provide for transit, stocking and bivouac facilities for the Rapid Deployment Force being envisaged for the Middle East.

Weinberger was speaking this morning at the first session of the NATO defense planning committee spring meetings being held in Brussels. He also called on the NATO allies to increase their defense expenditures, in view of the Soviet threat.

AKAJANS News Agency reports that speaking at the same session, Turkish Defense Minister Umit Haluk Bayulken recalled that before any action was taken in an area outside of the NATO boundaries, the countries of that area should be consulted. Today Bayulken held two separate meetings with the U.S. Defense Secretary and the Italian defense minister, Lelio Lagorio. Common defense issues were taken up during the talks.

Turkish Minister's Comments

TA131554 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 13 May 81

[Statement by Turkish Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken, speaking on 13 May from Brussels via telephone on the NATO defense ministers' meetings--recorded]

[Text] During today's meeting, we first discussed the 1981 defense ministers' instructions covering from 1983 to 1988. The instructions comprise the measures that should be taken to maintain the deterrent force of the alliance in the light of current international conditions and the military capabilities of the Warsaw Pact. We then reviewed the long term defense program. We studied the measures to be taken within this framework to secure more advance developments in the field of equipment cooperation. Lastly, we discussed the report summarizing the latest situation of the talks on the mutual and balanced reduction of forces. Unfortunately, we noted--regretfully--that significant developments haven't been registered in these talks.

This morning, I also had a meeting with my U.S. colleague, Mr Weinberger. We briefly reviewed bilateral military relations and the current phase of the military aid to be extended to our country. Our meeting was held in a very friendly and understanding atmosphere. I will visit Washington in the near future as his official guest. We also exchanged views on the subjects we wish to discuss during that visit. Our talk was very fruitful.

NO AGREEMENT REACHED AT AUSTRIAN-USSR GAS TALKS

["M.F." report]

[Summary] Yesterday, Tuesday, the latest Austrian-Soviet round of talks on Austrian natural gas imports from the USSR in exchange for pipeline equipment ended without agreement on the gas price and financing conditions. The Austrial Oil Administration still maintains that it cannot accept the Soviet demand to link natural gas prices with oil prices, since in that case, natural gas could no longer be sold at competitive prices. Moreover, the Soviets want to pay only 7.75 percent interest on the 15-18 billion schillings loan from the Austrian Kontroll Bank that would be required to finance the Austrian pipeline equipment deliveries, while the Kontroll Bank cannot go below the fixed export financing interest rate of 8.7 percent.

The sides agreed to resume the talks early in June. The Soviet delegation will be leaving Austria today for Italy where it will also conduct negotiations on the gas export project. Austria is interested in importing an additional 4 billion cubic meters natural gas quota, and in exporting to the USSR sheet metal for pipes and other pipeline equipment.

KRONEN-ZEITUNG COMMENTS ON PRAVDA ARTICLE

AU111213 Vienna KRONEN-ZEITUNG in German 11 May 81 p 2

[Kurt Seinitz report and commentary on 10 May PRAVDA dispatch by Vienna correspondent Igor Melnikov on Austrian state treaty ban on missile weapons]

[Text] Moscow/Vienna--Last weekend, the Moscow party organ PRAVDA surprisingly broached the question of the missile ban for Austria and, in this context, reaffirmed the validity of this specific impairment of our country's defense capability.

PRAVDA criticizes all those forces in Austria which want to achieve a lifting of the missile ban stipulation contained in the state treaty. PRAVDA especially rebuffs People's Party defense spokesman Ermacora, who is reminded by the Kremlin paper that the paragraph 13 of the state treaty is binding for him, Ermacora, too.

This poses the question to Austrian political quarters of why PRAVDA reminds us at this particular time, in these days of crisis in international politics, of the missile ban, that castration of any modern defense effort. Was this warning, this shot across the bows, caused by the Kremlin's speculating about military actions in Europe in connection with Poland and the unrest in the multinational Yugoslav state? It is indeed interesting that the Kremlin in all these years has never reminded Austria so unequivocally of the missile ban, and that it even tolerated the equipping of our federal army with missile weapons from the CSSR. This PRAVDA article of last weekend can only be regarded as an additional indication that Austria is earmarked as a country the Red Army will march through if, for example, the Soviets want to crush ailing Yugoslavia to obtain access to the Adriatic Sea.

GOVERNMENT DOCUMENT DEFENDS ALLIANCE POLICY

[Text] Bonn, 13 May (DPA)--Deterrence only functions when it is clear to the opponent that it is impossible for him to win. This NATO principle is one of the basic statements in a document in which the Federal Government defends its unswerving alliance policy in the increasingly sharp public controversy over the NATO twin decision. The extensive document, on which the Defense Ministry, the Foreign Office and the chancellor's office have cooperated and which has just been published, substantiates positions that are questioned by the leftwings of the coalition parties.

The document, which lists the (?current) arguments of the counterarming opponents and which counters them with a detailed exposition of the Federal Government's stance, above all underlines the European security interest. This, it says, forbids the taking of a free security policy ride under the American ICBM protective umbrella.

In the public debate, which is far from having reached its climax, Bonn also is keenly watching a similar critical dispute in the USA. Responsible diplomats point especially to the influential Reagan adviser Edwin Meese who, in a TV interview, stressed the intention of achieving unquestionable military strength before any negotiations with Moscow. From this, the liberal Washington POST deduced that the offers of negotiations made to Moscow so far were only intended as a tranquillizer for nervious allies.

The Federal Government's main concern is the prevention of "political blackmail" through the acceptance of military imbalance. In its document, the Federal Government replies to the argument that "Europe isn't threatened by the USSR and its allies; rather, the USSR is interested in good... relations with West Europe" as follows: "The Federal Government does not assume that the USSR is planning a military attack against West Europe and the USA.... [all ellipses as received] Nonetheless, it is arming to the teeth. Decisive, therefore, isn't what the Soviet leadership wants at the present, but what it could do in the long term with its offensive forces.... The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has shown that military supremacy can.... influence the foreign policy risks a country is prepared to take. And vice versa, military imbalance creates insecurity and mistrust on the inferior side and makes it blackmailable." The Federal Government denies the argument that Soviet supremacy is imaginary, by quoting long-range reconnaisance data that is uncontested in the alliance. Moscow presently has 220 operational missile launchers for the (?SS-20), which carries three independent warheads--equivalent to the power of 660 independently targetable nuclear missiles. According to the latest information, a second missile is available for each launcher.

The document stresses that not a single one of NATO's planned 572 individual medium-range missiles can be deployed before the end of 1983 and that, as before, the ideal situation being aimed at is making the counterarming part of NATO's twin decision superfluous through Soviet disarmament.

The Federal Government's statement, which informed circles regard as being addressed as much to the responsible American allies as to its internal political opponents, points expressly to joint responsibility of all NATO allies for the decisions of December 1979, when the counterarming and the offer of negotiations were decided upon in Brussels.

BUNDESWEHR BUDGET INCREASED BY DM850 MILLION

[Text] The Bundestag decided today to increase the Bundeswehr's budget for this year by DM850 million. According to reliable information obtained by DPA, the money is to be raised by cutting other budgets and not by another new credit being raised for defense spending.

GISCARD D'ESTAING ACCEPTS GOVERNMENT'S RESIGNATION

LD131044 Paris Domestic Service in French 1000 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] During today's cabinet meeting, the president made a statement which Elysee spokesman Jean-Marie Poirier has just reported to us:

[Begin recording] As you know, the premier this morning tendered his government's resignation to the president of the republic. The president of the republic said: I accept your resignation and that of the government. I ask you to ensure that current matters are expedited until the next government takes up its duties. The president of the republic then made the following statement:

As I accept the resignation of Premier Raymond Barre and his government, I insist on saluting the work they have accomplished. Thanks to government action, the franc has maintained its value, the budget deficit has been limited, social security has been brought back into equilibrium, the French economy--supported by a powerful current of modernization--has resisted the effects of the crisis better than others and the worsening of the employment situation has been combatted through professional training and by a continued effort to create jobs. France's interests have been defended effectively in European and international bodies. Certainly, it wasn't in the government's power to make disappear the causes and consequences for France of the international crisis. At least it constantly tried to protect our country from them. I am sure, the president of the republic said, that public opinion will not delay in giving credit to the work accomplished. [end recording]

BARRE ANNOUNCES POLITICAL PLANS, CRITICIZES CHIRAC

[Text] In a statement published on 12 May by the Lyons region dailies, Raymond Barre confirmed his intention to play an active part in the parliamentary election campaign and made it clear that he will stand in the fourth Rhone constituency where he was elected in 1978, with the RPR's support. He also condemned Chirac's attitude, as he did on Monday morning, but without naming the Paris mayor. "Those who aspired to lead France toward a third path are now able to gauge the responsibility they took," he said in particular. "As soon as my duties are over, I will resume in Lyons the political action necessary to save France from the advent of a political, economic and social system subject to Communist control." Barre added: "Respect for the French people's choice and loyalty to our institutions must not curb either our vigilance or our determination. In the coming parliamentary elections, we need a broad agreement among republicans for freedom and progress in Lyons, in Rhone-Alpes, and throughout France. In that way, we will be able to safeguard the Fifth Republic in the future."

Questioned on Monday after a conversation at the Elysee with Giscard d'Estaing about the statement he made at the Hotel Matignon in the morning, the premier also said: "I'm not a party man. I have no ambition to become a party leader. If people have not yet realized that, it is just too bad."

LE MONDE ANALYZES OUTGOING MAJORITY SPLIT

LD140801 Paris LE MONDE in French 13 May 81 pp 1, 5

[Noel-Jean Bergeroux article: "Giscard d'Estaing Wants To Lead a Center Rally"]

[Text] Daggers were drawn in the outgoing majority as early as Monday morning. It had not taken many hours after Mitterrand's election for this to happen.

The Giscardians, reeling under the blow of defeat, didn't have to wait long to find out whether they could openly voice their bitterness toward Chirac or whether they were to contain themselves to preserve their electoral future. The answer came from the Hotel Matignon with Raymond Barre's statement. Without taking special precautions, aside from not mentioning the Mayor of Paris by name, the current premier condemned those who played "double or nothing" with the Fifth Republic's fate.

Was Barre acting on his own initiative without taking the trouble to consult the current president first? There was reason to wonder: Early Monday, some UDF officials had taken care to warn their friends against the dangers of excessively violent behavior within the majority. "We still have too much to lose to allow ourselves the pleasure of settling scores," some were saying. And they advised people to wait for more specific instructions.

The premier had clearly not taken it upon himself to launch an offensive. A short statement by Giscard d'Estaing issued by the Elysee spokesman late in the afternoon adopted the same tone. It even went a little further.

This time, the word "betrayal" was mentioned. The outgoing president announced that he would address "the 14.64 million men and women who placed their trust in him, despite criticisms and premeditated betrayals, immediately after the end of his presidential term."

The spokesman specified that Giscard d'Estaing would indicate to those voters "the path to follow to defend France's vital interests." He added: "This path isn't that of the popular front or of a retrograde confrontation between right and left, but that of a democratic rally in the middle ground of French politics."

Thus, Giscard d'Estaing has confirmed his decision not to withdraw from the political battle and to lead his supporters into the parliamentary election battle. Of course, the practical way in which this desire might be expressed remains to be decided, if only because of the constraints imposed on him by his life membership in the Constitutional Council. But the desire to fight is clear, as is the desire not to leave the way clear for Chirac.

It is true that, before being accused of betraying and playing "double or nothing" with the republic's fate, Chirac had shown that he did not intend to waste any time. In an initial stance Sunday evening, he called for people to rally "without partisan spirit." Late Monday morning, in a way which could only be interpreted as a desire to reply to Barre, he proposed no more and no less than joint candidates in the outgoing majority for the parliamentary elections.

This proposal could not really be accepted by the Giscardians. With 155 RPR deputies against 119 UDF deputies, the Paris mayor is assured of maintaining a clear advantage even if negotiation made some arrangements possible. It was, therefore, an entirely different principle which Lecanuet put forward late in the afternoon. Using less critical and less clear words to condemn the "divisions" and "mistakes which prompted the defeat," the UDF chairman suggested a simple agreement on "standing down automatically and without ulterior motives." He also indicated that, out of a concern for "clarity," his party would put forward candidates in every constituency. Center for Social Democrats president-delegate Bernard Stasi adopted an identical stance Tuesday morning and also recommended the adoption of a "government program."

Thus, the election battle has started in the outgoing majority itself. There are two questions facing the camp which has just lost the presidential election--that of tactical efficacy and that of the coalition leader.

Does efficacy require joint candidates or primaries in all constituencies? It is obvious that many Giscardian voters will refuse to vote for Chiracian candidate in the first round (and vice versa).

In these circumstances, primary elections would make it possible for the differences to be marked before the first round and, possibly, to be blurred before the sesond round. On the other hand, in some constituencies--these in which the left might win in the first round--the left's adversaries are obliged to field joint candidates. In this case at least, the outgoing majority should take note of what RPR Secretary General Bernard Pons regarded as essential on Monday: "to overcome its disappointments" and forget its recriminations." If that is possible....

Back in 1974, Chirac proposed a quasicomplete unity and his partners refused. The UDF was, indeed, created to counter that need. Moreover, it was pleased that happened. Some people are self-righteously pointing out that it is a pity for the outgoing majority that Chirac is in favor of joint candidates in parliamentary elections and not in presidential elections. The same people point out that in 1974, Chirac "dropped" his party--the Union of Democrats for the Republic which supported Jacques Chaban-Delmas--to assure the victory of his political camp (led by Giscard d'Estaing) and that in 1981, he weakened his camp to preserve his party and his own future.

Of course, the leadership question was raised as soon as it was known that Giscard d'Estaing had been defeated. If the outgoing president goes into battle, he will not go alone. He will have Chirac opposite him--nobody dares say beside him. Although the mayor of Paris is putting on a show of trying to rally everybody, Giscard d'Estaing seems to be thinking more of a liberal movement in which Chirac's supporters would scarcely have a place.

Moreover, Barre is clearing the way and showing his determination to campaign, which does doesn't prevent him from cultivating his own image. It is an image which he wants--that of a combative, nonparty man loyally playing the alternation game.

It was confirmed Monday that before the second round of the presidential election, the premier had informed Mitterrand's entourage that, should Mitterrand win, he could count on the government chief's sense of civic duty to oppose any possible attacks on the franc. It was Barre who intervened personally to ensure that Papon stepped up exchange controls on the borders.

Finally, the Hotel Matignon tends to regret the way in which the campaign was fought, holding the view that Mitterrand's program was not adequately contested. Some people are even making it clear that if the premier had been allowed to take part in this campaign, he would have "torn" the Socialist candidate's proposals "to pieces...."

Too late... But the outgoing majority will not be short of aspiring leaders or causes of conflict in the parliamentary elections.

LECANUET PROPOSES PACT WITH RPR FOR ELECTIONS

LD131155 Paris LE MONDE in French 13 May 81 p 11

[Text] UDF Chairman Jean Lecanuet issued the following statement early in the evening on Monday, 11 May: "The majority's divisions have brought the defeat of its candidate in the second round of the presidential election. We are not responsible for those divisions. These past divisions must be condemned and they must be ended in the future. The UDF is anxious to pay tribute to Valery Giscard d'Estaing's action in the face of the problems arising from the international economic crisis.

"A new political battle is about to begin--the battle for next month's parliamentary elections. The UDF intends to mobilize in a clear and efficient way to avert the danger of a Socialist and Communist majority in the future assembly.

"Clarity requires that the UDF should put forward in each constituency a candidate who will express its democratic and social reactions and will take a firm stance in the center of French political life. Efficiency requires that the mistakes which led to defeat in the second round of the presidential election are not repeated in the second round of the parliamentary elections.

"The UDF will fight to win. It is proposing that an agreement be reached with the RPR now on standing down in each other's favor in the second round. This decision to stand down should be automatic and without ulterior motives. In other words, it must be accompanied by an ardent, sincere and effective mobilization in favor of the candidate who is ahead in the first round."

Agreement Reached

LD132342 Paris Domestic Service in French 2300 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] Jacques Chirac of the RPR and Jean Lecanuet of the UDF agreed this evening on the forthcoming National Assembly elections. The agreement envisages either one or two candidates for each constituency, depending on the particular constituency. Talks on the nomination of various candidates will begin as from today [14 May]

LE MONDE ON SOCIALIST NEED FOR CENTER LEFT BLOC

[Excerpts] The future head of state has given PS National Secretariat member Pierre Beregovoy responsibility for a "presidential network," which will have the job of establishing contact with the parties and trade unions which want such contact. In fact, Beregovoy (who is surrounded by the people who made up the Socialist candidate's staff--Paulette Decraene and Nathalie Duhamel, Jacques Attali, Michel Vauzelle and Jean Glavani) is also responsible for "useful" contacts, notably with the representatives of the government, to make the transition smoother.

Contacts are to be established with the leftwing parties, but also with the ecologists and leftwing Gaullists, according to Pierre Mauroy. Indeed, the Mayor of Lille stated on Europe 1 on Tuesday morning: "It will be up to all those who rally round Francois Mitterrand to discuss a government contract at party level." "Of course, there are the Communists and Socialists, but others are involved in this rally: the Left Radicals, the ecologists and the leftwing Gaullists who voted for Francois Mitterrand." The Left Radical Movement [MRG] National Bureau, for its part, has already announced not only that the Left Radicals are "prepared for the opening of program discussions with the leftwing and progressive forces" with a view to the parliamentary election, but also that they hope for "the formation of a broad Socialist and democratic front to support the new president's action" as early as the first round.

From the PS viewpoint, the parliamentary election involves two dangers: the danger of seeing the Communist voters who abstained in the first round of the presidential election boosting the PCF's results again and the danger of those sections of the population who were seduced by Chirac in the first round and who helped to elect Mitterrand in the second round, rallying to the RPR banner again in June.

Thus, it seems necessary for the Socialist leaders to give structure to a center left which, once formed, might make it possible to counterbalance the PCF and which, above all, might make it possible to keep that section of the Gaullist voters who rallied to Mitterrand.

The MRG seems a priori well-placed to carry out that operation, judging by its parliamentary representation. However, that is not the case: first, because Mitterrand seems to blame Crepeau for persisting in his candidacy. Indeed, the president-elect has reason to think that he would have achieved a better result in the first round if Crepeau had not stood (the MRG candidate obtained 2.21 percent of the votes). Second, missing the target (the people attracted by Chirac and hostile to Giscard d'Estaing) benefits Michel Jobert's movement of democrats and all those with Gaullist or pro-Pompidou allegiance.

The odds are certainly against forming a center left pole in the space of a few weeks, but it is probably essential for the Socialists to do so. The latter is also relying greatly on the "presidential dynamism" and on the aggravation of dissent within the outgoing majority, which undoubtedly helped to prompt Francois Mitterrand's election.

MITTERRAND ADDRESSES SOCIALISTS ON TASKS AHEAD

LD132049 Paris Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] Francois Mitterrand this afternoon made his first public statement as president-elect of the republic. While addressing some 200 Socialist parliamentarians in a large Paris hotel, he presented himself as the rallying point for all of France.

[Begin Mitterrand recording] I will continue to be carried by your desire, by your work, your ideal. Nothing will separate us. However, already other tasks await both of us. Together we are called upon to speak in the name of the country--you for the fraction of citizens that you represent, a very important fraction, the most important.

More important still, tomorrow I will be called upon for the whole country--both those who voted for and those who voted against. It is simply a question of having common-sense, which in my opinion will quite simply be the sense of democracy without complicating matters. This democracy is based on the balance of its powers. I will exercise my own fully. The others must exercise theirs in the full competence which they have been given by institutions. It's as simple as that. [end recording]

MITTERRAND ADVISER CITES INTERIM GOVERNMENT AIMS

[Report on statement made by President-elect Mitterrand's adviser Jacques Delors; date and place not given]

[Text] The new government will be a real government. It will only last 4 weeks, but it will have full government powers as laid down in Article 37 of the Constitution. This government will have three missions:

First, it will give a group of experts the job of drawing up what the United States calls a "state of the union" report--on the state of France and especially the state of the French economy.

Second, it will have meetings with the leaders of the big employers' organizations, trade unions and other organizations to promote a broad dialogue which will later be carried on by the government and by its ministers and will relate to specific points.

Third, this government will, during its 4 weeks, take the measures which Mr Mitterrand has promised and which will reflect the trend, will be a kind of first step along a path to be pursued later, once the parliamentary elections are over.

These measures fall into three types: The first will relate to increasing the wages of the lowest paid categories and to a reasonable revival of economic growth through public investment in the framework of a government's statutory prerogatives.

The second category will relate to increasing the minimum wage, after consultations with the employers and trade union organizations and once we have reached agreement on the place this minimum wage is to have in the framework of the general incomes policy and taking account of the constraints on enterprises.

Third, this government will take a few initial measures--they will however be limited in view of the constitutional documents--to show that the trend in employment is being reversed.

But we will not "stand idle": During this period, we will plan more important measures aimed at reversing the course of events in the employment sphere.

There will be no grenelle [reference unknown], we are not in the casino at Monte Carlo. We are here to discuss things point by point.

The existence of the trade unions must be fully recognized and society must be steered out of the no dialogue situation. It is impossible to create a prosperous economy without detailed social dialogue. The golden rule is to face up to the reality of the trade unions and not to interfere in them....

The state cannot magically solve all problems. There will be no witchhunt, no petty or grand revenge. I am confident that Raymond Barre will handle outstanding business soundly and will consult us until power is handed over.

LE MONDE VIEWS MITTERRAND FOREIGN POLICY OPTIONS

[Editorial: "A New Style"]

[Text] Incredulity is being replaced by perplexity. Before the first round of the presidential election, few governments believed it was possible for power to change hands in France. After the second round, all are wondering what the 10 May election means. It is essentially on his economic and social program that the president-elect campaigned and even the television debate did not show up any fundamental differences between the two candidates' foreign policies. However, any policy is a whole, and its domestic and foreign aspects are indivisible.

It is, therefore, the West European socialists, whether in government or in opposition, who welcome Mitterrand most warmly. Universal suffrage has not been kind to them recently and many hope that the Socialist victory in France will mark a reversal in the trend.

The FRG, France's main partner, where, despite recent disappointments, the socialists are still firmly installed, is a special case. Although Chancellor Schmidt has established close relations with the outgoing president, Brandt, one of the pillars of the SPD, is an old friend of his successor. If necessary, Schmidt, who congratulated Mitterrand with significant alacrity, would use Brandt as an intermediary to ensure that French-German agreement--the cornerstone of European building--remains a priority for the two countries.

Regarding relations with Moscow, and, more generally speaking, East-West relations, a great deal will depend on the nature of the new government: What role will the Communists play in the government and the majority? The superpowers--both conservative--clearly wanted the incumbent to remain as president and feared that the change which has come about might alter the European balance.

Mitterrand has always stressed the importance of the Third World and development problems. He may abandon some of the "gimmicks" of which Giscard d'Estaing was so fond: The Afro-European "trialogue" is probably not vital. The new president will most certainly try to reduce the least attractive aspects of French trade, such as arms sales, and will not handle South Africa with kid gloves.

The fact remains that France, a medium-sized power, economically fragile and engaged in a world battle, will have to reckon with the economic and political situation in the future as in the past. Any cooperation with the Third World costs a great deal initially even if the investment is ultimately profitable. The Israeli-Arab conflict raises an obstacle to cooperation with the Arab world, and even with the whole Third World, which Jerusalem's enthusiasm over Mitterrand's victory isn't likely to remove.

The foreign policy pursued by states is dictated essentially by geography, with history accounting for the rest. Diplomacy is a matter of style, determination and tenacity which produces efficacy. Mitterrand's style is very different from that of Giscard d'Estaing. He has generosity and feeling which his predecessor too much neglected. Furthermore, a man who has taken 16 years to attain his goal can be relied upon to show determination and tenacity.

TROOPS IN CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC TO BE REDUCED

LD132134 Paris Domestic Service in French 2100 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] The number of French troops in the Central African Republic is to be reduced. The decision was taken in Paris before the 10 May election of Francois Mitterrand as president of the republic.

WESTERN COUNTRIES AGREE TO RESCHEDULE MADAGASCAR'S DEBTS

LD061153 Paris LE MONDE in French 6 May 81 p 44

[Text] The Western countries have decided to reschedule Madagascar's foreign debt to "facilitate economic recovery" in that country, the French economy minister has announced.

This rescheduling applies to the debt repayments due from 1 January 1981 through 30 June 1982. The Madagasy Government will make these repayments over a 9-year period, with a possible 4-year extension.

Representatives from the 11 countries which are members of the "Paris club" (FRG, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Spain, France, Italy, Japan, Britain, Sweden and Switzerland) "are aware of the recovery efforts" made by the Madagasy Government. In addition, the "Paris club" noted "with satisfaction" that the Madagasy Government has drawn up an economic and financial program which was given the backing of an IMF confirmation agreement on 13 April.

POPE 'OUT OF DANGER' AFTER ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT

[Text] Vatican City, 13 May (ANSA)--Pope John Paul II suffered three gunshot wounds this afternoon while riding in an open car into Saint Peter's Square for the Wednesday afternoon general audience. He was rushed to a local hospital and entered the operating room at 1555 GMT. First word from the hospital on the pope was that his condition was not critical, no vital organs were apparently hit.

In addition to the pope, an American woman tourist, Mrs Anne Odre of Buffalo, New York, was hit by gunfire. A second woman was also said to be hurt in the attack. She has not yet been identified.

The attack occured at 1517 GMT. The announcement was given by a prelate over a microphone in Saint Peter's Square. "The holy father has been wounded," he told the crowd [word indistinct]. The prelate then asked those present to pray for the pope.

A man believed to have been [words indistinct] on the site by Italian police who rescued him from the crowd, who had apparently knocked the gun from his hand and attacked him.

The pope suffered three gunshot wounds at the level of the pancreas. He fell into the arms of his secretary and his car raced into the Vatican grounds. At 1529 an ambulance was seen leaving the Vatican with its sirens going full blast.

The pope was taken to the Rome hospital Policilinico Gemelli. He was conscious and taken into the operating room at 1555 GMT. Doctors removed the bullets and did an intestinal resection. The pope was declared out of danger. The pope will turn 61 years old in 5 days, on Monday, May 18. It was learned that the assailant was a Cypriot Turk who gave his name as Mehmet Ali Agca and his age as 23. INTERPOL is verifying this information.

Immediately after the attack, police and carabinieri surrounded St Peter's Square. After the first scenes of panic among the crowds, people began crying and praying.

In the meantime it was learned here that Mehmet Ali Agca is accused in Turkey of having killed the editor of the Turkish daily "MILLIYET", Abdi Ipekci in February of 1979.

That November he wrote a letter to "MILLIYET" stating that he had escaped from the Kartal military prison near Istanbul in order to assassinate the pope during the pontiff's sojourn in Istanbul. Mehmet Ali Hagca is reportedly enrolled at the university for foreigners in Perugia (central Italy).

Condition Termed Satisfactory

LD132056 Vatican City International Service in Spanish 2030 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] At 2215 the operation on Pope John Paul II ended. Although the second medical bulletin will not be issued until 2300 tonight, we have learned from the doctors who took part in the operation that the pope is in satisfactory condition. His strong and healthy nature will enable him--in the opinion of the doctors--to overcome the post operatory difficulties.

[Text] Rome, 14 May (ANSA)--The Turkish rightwing extremist who tried to kill Pope John Paul II Wednesday did so "to protest Soviet and United States imperialism and the genocides they are waging in Afghanistan and El Salvador." The handwritten and signed explanation of the assault was found by Italian police in the pocket of 23-year old Mehmet Ali Agca a few hours after the Turk had unloaded a nine-caliber [as received] Browning in St Peter's Square, hitting the pope in the lower stomach.

The surgeons who operated on the 61-year old church leader yesterday disclosed little more than his "satisfactory condition" after more than five hours under the knife. "The pope was lucky," doctors said after removing the perforated portions of his intestines. "Given his strong constitution," they added, "we are sure he will return to normal." This morning, the Polish-born leader of the world's 700 million catholics was still in the intensive care unit of Rome's "Policlinico Gemelli," one of the Italian capital's biggest and best-equipped hospitals.

His thwarted assassin in a fugutive from Turkish justice, which sentenced him to death for the murder of a leftist journalist. Agca's Turkish police file shows him as a member of the new-Nazi Nationalist Party, whose leaders have been charged by Ankara's military junta of "trying to intall a fascist regime through the use of force."

Police said Agca arrived in Italy last Saturday, May 9, flying into Milan's Melpensa Airport aboard a charter flight from Palma di Majorca, the capital of the Spanish Mediterranean island. He was travelling on a passport in the name of one Faruq Osgun, the same document with which Agca visited Italy in April and enrolled in an Italian language course at Perugia's university for foreign students.

According to police, Agca 'acted alone' when he tried to kill the pope Wednesday after years of planning the assault. The man first threatened to slay the Catholic Church leader in November 1979 during a papal visit to Istanbul. He wrote a letter to a Turkish daily claiming that he had escaped from jail for the specific purpose of killing the pope.

Now the Turkish youth will be tried in Italy, according to the 1929 concordat covering church-state relations, and may be given anywhere up to a life sentence for his sensational gesture.

Agca shot the pope before an estimated 20,000 people in St Peter's Square Wednesday, just as the pontiff was riding into the square in an open car for his weekly general audience. The gunman was laying in wait for the pope behind a column as the amiling church leader leaned over to greet the crowds and scoop an infant in his arms.

Agca knelt down and fired four shots at the pope as the car approached at 15:19 GMT. The injured pope leaned forward and then backward, falling into the arms of his Polish secretary, Msgr Stanislaw Dziwisz, who was aboard the open car along with the pope's personal attendant. The car headed full speed back into the Vatican walls, where the pope was transferred to an ambulance and rushed to the hospital.

The assailant tried to flee in the ensuing confusion, but was stopped by guards and the angry crowd which, according to police, would have lynched Agca had their men not hurried him off. They said the gunman had to receive first aid treatment for minor injuries at the central police station before undergoing questioning. During his short-lived attempt to flee the scene, Agca discarded the Browning automatic war hand gun used in the attempt on the pope's life.

Two women were hit by gunfire. One of them, 61-year old Anne Odre from Buffalo, New York, was reported to be in critical condition at the Santo Spirito hospital just a few yards from the Vatican, where surgeons fought all night to save her life. The American woman was hit in the left breast and internal organs were seriously injured.

The other, a 21-year-old Jamaican woman by the name of Rose Hall, was reported to be on the road to recovery from a fractured left arm.

The crowds in St Peter's Square, after their initial panic, stayed on late into the right praying for the pope.

Meanwhile, the latest medical bulletin as of this writing reported that "all (the pope's) functions are working satisfactorily" after an operation necessitated by "multiple visceral lesions caused by a firearm wound through his abdomen and sacrum". Dr Francesco Crucitti, one of the surgeons who took part in the operation, reported that the pope was also wounded in the right arm and the second finger of his left hand. "There was a great deal of blood loss when he arrived and three liters of blood were transfused during the operation" the surgeon said, adding that the surgical team had to remove several portions of the pontiff's colon, damaged by the bullet wound, as well as perform a temporary colostomy to by-pass normal colon function. Physicians most fear an infection in the intestines, according to Crucitti's account, which also indicated that the present "reserved prognosis" will stick for at least seven or eight days.

The pope's cardio-circulatory conditions were said to be "good and stable" and his kidney functions "normal".

Police Identify Assailant

LD132022 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1945 GMT 13 May 81

[Report from Rome police headquarters]

[Text] According to the Questura [police] press spokesman a short while ago, the man's name is not Mohamed Ali Agka, as reported before in error, but Mehmet Ali Agca of Malaka or Malakia. He was born 9 January 1958 and is a Turkish terrorist sentenced to death for criminal acts in his country. He was being sought by an international warrant. Leaflets written in Turkish were found in his pockets with which, according to a first interpretation by a translator, the terrorist tried to justify his criminal act. His political leanings are uncertain but it does seem that he is a Turk and not an Armenian, as reported in the first contradictory news which was difficult to control. It also seems that he acted alone, without any accomplices, and that the report that there was another accomplice was due to the first interpretation of the movements of the crowd.

Assailant's Motive

LD132303 Rome in Italian to Europe 2200 GMT 13 May 81

[Summary] A leading official of the DIGOS [expansion unknown] told us about the contents of the document which the pope's attacker had in his pocket. "The document says: I killed the pope in order to do justice for genocide committed against thousands of people every day by Russian and American imperialism, especially in Afghanistan and Salvador." These are the motives behind his action. "In the second part of the document he indicates solutions which, according to him, should be implemented to solve these problems. No information, however, has been given about these solutions. It is the part of the document which so far has not yet been released. The police have ascertained that the attacker arrived in Italy a week ago. He arrived in Milan by air from Spain."

Reactions to Shooting

AU131925 Rome ANSA in English 1915 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] Rome, 13 May (ANSA)--Italy was stunned by the news that Pope John Paul II had been shot today and head of state Sandro Pertini immediately rushed to the hospital where the pontiff was being operated on for three gunshot wounds.

Premier Arnaldo Forlani and Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo also hurried to the hospital.

Further Report

AU140907 Rome ANSA in English 0850 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] Rome, 14 May (ANSA)--A mixture of grief and anger was hanging heavy over Italy today as the nation joined in unison to wish Pope John Paul II a speedy recovery from the injuries he received in Wednesday's assassination attempt.

The first tangible sign of non-partisan sympathy for the church leader came yesterday as soon as news of the attack broke and virtually all state and political leaders rushed to the hospital where the pope was operated on for his gunshot wounds. Among the first well-wishers to arrive was chief-of-state Sandro Pertini, a friend and admirer of the Polish-born pontiff.

In less than an hour after the pope's arrival, the waiting area next to the operating room was filled with practically all of the ministers in the Rome government. The speakers of the two houses of Parliament and the leaders of almost all of the nation's political parties. Among the visitors were the secretaries of the Italian Communist and Socialist Parties, who were surprised with the news of the assassination attempt at a pro-abortion rally in which the pope had come under heavy fire for his "interference" in Italian affairs.

The pope was shot while a campaign was in full swing in Italy for Sunday's referendums, the two most important of which will decide the fate of the nation's 1978 abortion legislation.

The government and labor unions, which were supposed to have met yesterday for a highly-anticipated showdown on anti-inflationary measures, agreed to put off the match for a few days. According to observers, the meeting will not take place before Sunday's referendums.

Meanwhile, as world reactions to the attempt on the pope's life continued to pour in, the secretary-general of the Arab League voiced his "deep abhorrence and condemnation" of the attack.

Arab League Leader Chedli Klibi said he couldn't understand the motives for the "criminal assault" in a statement issued in the Italian capital last night: "All mankind is unanimous in its respect for his holiness. Everyone who has faith in peace and brotherhood respects the generosity of the holy father's teachings and the courage of his actions. The league particularly holds his holiness in high esteem for his well-known coherence and sublime uprightness as well as for his sensitivity to (the league's) cause."

SENEGAL FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS PERTINI, COLOMBO

[Text] Rome, 13 May (ANSA)--Senegal's Foreign Minister Moustapha Niasse has been received here by head of state Sandro Pertini. The encounter took place in the Quirinale Palace Tuesday afternoon in the presence of the respective ambassadors. The situation on the African Continent and prospects for the development of bilateral relations were discussed. Niasse delivered a message to Pertini from the Senegalese chief of state.

Earlier in the day, he met with his Italian counterpart Emilio Colombo. Niasse voiced appreciation for the contacts established between Italian diplomacy and progressive African countries. Last month Colombo went to Ethiopia and at the end of May he will receive the Angolan foreign minister in Rome.

Colombo assures Niasse that Italy planned to do its duty towards friendly African countries like Senegal. Senegal's Economic Planning Minister Louis Alexandrenne will be coming to Rome in a few months. Italy already takes part in many development projects in Senegal. Italian participation in the Senegal River valley project to irrigate a vast area on the country's north, has been upped from 20 to 38 billion lire thanks to a new loan on especially easy terms. Italy has also helped create a veterinary school in Dakar and is involved in various urban planning projects.

Trade between the two countries is tipped in favor of Italy (around twenty billion lire in 1980). Italy imports (?leeks), phosphates and fish, and exports to Senegal plastic materials, finished products and canned tomatoes. Among the Italian companies working in Senegal are Cogeco (which builds bridges), Italconsult (urbanization work), Fiat and a group of companies (Cegefar, Torno, Imprecilo and Astaldi) which is building dikes on the Senegal River.

ROMANIAN VICE PRESIDENT DISCUSSES RELATIONS WITH PSI

LD121145 Rome AVANTI in Italian 28 Apr 81 p 18

[Text] One of the most prominent personalities among the foreign guests attending the [Italian] Socialist congress is the vice president of the Socialist Republic of Romania [Council of State], who granted us the following interview:

[Question] How do you regard the development of relations between the Romanian Communist Party [RCP] and the PSI?

[Answer] The RCP and the workers of the Socialist Republic of Romania are following with profound interest the PSI's activity to promote and strengthen unity of action among the workers and democratic revolutionary forces with a view to realizing the aspirations to progress and prosperity of the working class of the Italian people and a number of innovative transformations in Italian society and to safeguard peace, security and international cooperation and collaboration.

I am pleased with the relations of friendship and cooperation that exist between the RCP and the PSI, a particular contribution to whose development has been made by the meetings and conversations between RCP Secretary General Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu and PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi. We are sure that the relations of friendship and cooperation between our parties will continue to develop and intensify in the future too, on the basis of our peoples' interests in the cause of democracy and peace.

[Question] Are you pleased with the relations that exist at present between Italy and Romania from the political and economic viewpoint?

[Answer] We wish to stress with satisfaction that the traditional relations of friendship and affectionate cooperation between our two countries and peoples are developing positively and fruitfully. I am sure that these relations will continue to expand in the future too in the political, economic, technological, scientific, cultural and other fields of activity. This benefits our peoples and is a positive element on the international plane.

[Question] What role does Romania intend to play now in the context of international relations?

[Answer] The RCP and Socialist Romania are conducting full and fruitful activity on the international plane. A most important role in the conception and formulation of Romanian foreign policy is played by Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, leader loved and respected by our party and our people, outstanding figure of the contemporary world, untiring struggler for a better and fairer world, for freedom and for the peoples' independence and sovereignty.

Our country is successfully carrying out cooperative action on several planes with all the socialist countries and at the same time is paying heed to friendship and cooperation with developing countries, while intensifying cooperation with capitalist countries and all the peoples of the world.

Romania devotes particular attention to the strengthening of cooperation and security in Europe. We believe that everything must be done to ensure a successful conclusion to the Madrid Conference, the convening of a conference on "confidence and disarmament," a halt to the deployment of new missiles in Europe and progress toward negotiations for their total elimination.

As our party secretary Ceausescu stressed, it is in our peoples' interests to do out utmost for a united Europe that will ensure broad economic, technological, scientific and cultural cooperation on the basis of respect for the social system of every people and the independence and sovereignty of every country.

We are pleased that in the report delivered to this congress by Comrade Craxi, a number of proposals in this very direction were put forward. Romania is working with perseverance for the realization of disarmament and, first and foremost, for nuclear disarmament. It is more necessary than ever to act to halt the rearmament race, to gradually begin reducing military spending and allocating funds for actual economic and social development and for aid to developing countries.

[Answer] Romania is imparting a major thrust to the development of goodneighborly relations of cooperation with the Balkan countries and is acting to strengthen confidence and cooperation in this region. Romania is in favor of the adoption of measures that will lead to the region's transformation into a zone of peace without nuclear weapons.

[Question] In his report to the congress the PSI secretary spoke of the policy of negotiation as the only possible way to achieve peace and good international relations. What is your opinion in this connection?

[Answer] We esteem the PSI's position on the need to resolve international conflicts solely by negotiation, this being the only rational path capable of eliminating any temptation to resolve conflicts through force or threat of force, which can only lead to increased tension.

FOREIGN MINISTER ON IBERIAN, EUROPEAN TIES

LD130943 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 8 May 81 p 19

[Pablo Sebastian undated interview in Madrid with Portuguese Foreign Minister Andres Goncalves Pereira]

[Text] Question: Mr Minister, for some time Spanish-Portuguese relations haven't transcended the plane of rhetoric. When do you believe that it will be possible to achieve specific results that will demonstrate that the two peoples aren't living with their backs to each other?

Answer: For a long time, relations between the two countries were subject to the coldness of the dictatorial regimes that ruled both states. Next, we experienced our respective processes of political change and governmental instability. Nevertheless, in Portugal, we now have a normal situation with a stable government, an assembly elected for 4 years and a head of state recently elected for 5 years. This will permit real cooperation with specific forms of action. Some immediate examples of this new situation are the final agreement on the construction of a border bridge across the River Guadiano, close to Ayamonte and Villa Real de San Antonio, and another bridge over the Minho between Tuy and Valenca. We also have agreed to initiate technological and financial cooperation in the nuclear energy field. The Guadiana bridge will be a major engineering project open to international tender, and will cost over a billion [currency unspecified].

Question: What are the plans for cooperation in nuclear energy? Are the problems of the contamination of river waters, about which Portugal is so worried, embraced in this context?

Answer: Portugal wants to participate in the nuclear powerplant construction projects initiated by Spain--the country with the more advanced technology in this industry. We want to be involved as shareholders and in the construction of the various aspects of the nuclear powerplants. Spain, for its part, could be involved in the construction of nuclear powerplants in Portugal, in accordance with the program established by our government, and it is envisaged that, in the event of a crisis, border installations could provide energy supplies to both countries, depending on the circumstances and the time. This cooperation will develop in the immediate future. It is envisaged that a Spanish delegation of specialists in two weeks will visit Lisbon to finalize the details of this joint project.

The contamination aspect is governed by an agreement, which has already been ratified by the Portuguese parliament and has yet to be passed by the Spanish senate.

Question: What opportunities for Spanish-Portuguese cooperation are there with regard to the negotiation process for the Iberian Peninsula's entry into the EEC? Once inside the EEC, might specific problems emerge between Spain and Portugal over the free circulation of goods and manpower?

Answer: There is at present an exchange of information on the negotiations with the EEC, which is useful and which we will continue. The point is that though the negotiation processes are technically the same, the negotiations are very different for the two countries because of the enormous differences of the problems facing each state in relation to the EEC. Therefore, it isn't possible to talk in terms of concerted action. On the other hand, these negotiations are almost public, and as far as we are concerned, they don't constitute a field of rivalry with Spain to see who will join first or to secure a particular date. We believe that the two countries' entry will be simultaneous and that the most important aspect for us is not the final date but the terms on which we join the EEC.

Once we are in EEC, Europe, I am sure that there will be problems of adjustment and competition. We must make a great effort to accept the EEC regulations, which include the free circulation of workers, goods and capital; and, of course, we must not think that, once the transitional periods are over, there can be any obstacles to or problems in free circulation throughout EEC territory.

Question: Mr Minister, you have just attended the spring Atlantic council meeting in Rome. Could you give us some details of how the debate developed on the matter of Spain's possible NATO membership? Isn't there some jealousy between Spain and Portugal with regard to playing a prominent strategic role?

Answer: The Atlantic council's talks are secret and I cannot disclose their content. What I can tell you is that final agreement was reached for NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns to inform the media that the alliance's 15 countries will accept Spain's membership application without any kind of opposition when the Spanish people decide to announce their decision to join the alliance. It is true that the issue was examined from the viewpoint of East-West relations and within the framework of the talks held on these realtions, which embraced the subject of the deployment of missiles in some European countries and the resumption of nuclear arms negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union.

However, the idea that Portugal might be jealous of Spain's entry into the alliance because of strategic considerations is untrue. On the contrary, Spain's entry will strengthen southern Europe's representation within NATO and more particularly the Iberian Peninsula's role. As far as we are concerned, there are no objections and no sense of rivalry. Spain's contribution will complement and strengthen the peninsula's defense role.

Question: Do you believe that the winter meeting of the Atlantic council scheduled for December could approve Spain's entry into NATO?

Answer: It isn't impossible, though it all depends on Spain--when the Madrid government finally decides to set the NATO membership process in motion. Then, the Atlantic council will give its approval. Nor is it essential that this happen at the winter ordinary session. The council can meet whenver it wants, and has indeed held meetings for much less important reasons than Spain's possible entry into the alliance.

Question: Are there any major problems with regard to compensation for the occupation of farms? And what about fishing?

Answer: There are no political disputes. With regard to fishing, we hope to find specific solutions to the problems to be discussed during the negotiations that will begin in June, when the existing temporary agreement between the two sides lapses. At that time, an attempt will be made to draw up an agreement to last until the countries join the EEC. From then on, EEC regulations will govern these relations. It isn't true that Portugal lacks the political determination to resolve this matter, in which we must all now suffer restrictions. Be that as it may, Portugal will offer Spain more advantages than the EEC will grant it.

Question: Another terrorist act against the army was committed during your stay in Madrid. What are your thoughts on this?

Answer: Any political upheaval in Spain worries us because it always has unfavorable effects in Portugal, which is natural. Nevertheless, we can say that we trust in the values of freedom and democracy and in the Spanish representative institutions.

TWO CIVIL GUARDS KILLED, ONE INJURED NEAR BILBAO

NC140942 Paris AFP in English 0916 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] Lemona, North Spain, 14 May (AFP)--Two civil guards were killed in a bomb attack in the Basque country near here today and a third was badly injured, officials said.

The guards were in a three-car convoy escorting an explosives consignment to a building site in Lemona, near Bilbao. Their vehicle was caught by an explosive device hidden on the road, the officials said. The attack was not immediately claimed.

MINISTER: NO PROVEN SOVIET-TERRORISM CONNECTION

LD132014 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 13 May 81

[13 May Hector Arenas interview with Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca at Barajas airport--recorded]

[Excerpts] [Hector Arenas] Foreign Affairs Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca has said at Barajas airport that there currently is no proof which directly associates the Soviet Union with terrorism in Spain. This statement was made by the Spanish foreign minister just before leaving on a special flight to Strasbourg to take part today and tomorrow in the meeting of ministers of the Council of Europe. Among other things, the ministers will discuss the Madrid CSCE and the situation of terrorism on the continent.

[Question] Does the government yet have any serious evidence of the connections between internal terrorism and terrorism in the rest of the world?

[Answer] There are presumptions, there are impressions. However, at the moment, as far as I know, there is no (?clear) proof.

UCD CHAIRMAN ON NATO ENTRY, CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES

LD081415 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 3 May 81 p 11

[Report containing apparent text of interview granted to Europa Press by Union of the Democratic Center Chairman Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun; date and place not given]

[Text] Madrid, 2 May--Spain's possible entry into NATO, the policy of consultation, the socialist proposals for entering the government, the UCD's [Union of the Democratic Center's] internal situation and the armed forces stance following the 23 February coup are some of the issues broached by former Defense Minister and current UCD Chairman Augustin Rodriguez Sahagun in an interview granted to the press.

The interview, as it proceeded, is verbatim:

[Question] What are the reasons for what could be described as an acceleration by the government with respect to Spain's entry into the Atlantic alliance?

[Answer] I don't believe that you can speak of an acceleration. The stance of the UCD government and of our party with respect to the alliance has been explained repeatedly. This was done by the previous governments and by Calvo-Sotelo at his investiture session.

Delaying a decision of this kind at a time when the current treaty with the United States is expiring makes no sense, since any bilateral negotiations with the Americans must be conducted taking into account the process of joining the Atlantic alliance.

Moreover, joining the alliance will enable Spain to take part in decisions which today escape our influence, although they involve us indirectly. In the military aspect, it would strengthen us by helping our armed forces to improve their doctrines and their training, making progress in their process of constant modernization.

[Question] In view of the opposition's reactions, could this issue hamper the policy of consultation?

[Answer] I sincerely don't believe so, nor would it be logical. The decision to join the Atlantic alliance is an act of consistency with our membership in the Western world, which, as I said earlier, was already announced by Calvo-Sotelo at the investiture session, when at the same time, he offered the opposition open dialogue for the autonomy-based vertebration of the state and defense of the constitutional order. Action is being taken to this end. While at the same time, the government is seeking to make progress on economic and social issues with the social agents in undertaking a policy which will promote employment. There are obviously other issues with the aim of ensuring the state's efficiency in the new model. Thus, for instance, there is the reform of the legislative chambers' standing orders to give the chosen system greater efficiency and effectiveness.

[Question] To what do you attribute the reiteration of the socialist stance in favor of a coalition government?

[Answer] This is what they have been doing on one pretext or another since shortly after the 1979 election. The UCD already has expressed its stance on the matter. A democratic system requires the possibility of a government alternative, and that would disappear with the formation of a coalition government. Moreover, this would confuse the electorates of both parties and would be unlikely to be viable and efficient in view of the differences existing between the two parties' programs. The best way to defend the democratic system is to endorse the normality of its own dynamic, and this entails clearly differentiating all the parties' platforms.

[Answer] Not at all, the statutes are essential parts of the constitution of the state of the autonomies. The law of harmonization isn't aimed at reducing anything but at an appropriate ordering of the overall design and its efficiency. The aim is that we should have a strong and efficient state, which also means strong and efficient autonomies, since the autonomous communities are the state. And in this task, the principal political forces must cooperate in a spirit of open dialogue, setting sence of the state above any other consideration.

[Question] In what way do you believe the events of 23 February have affected the political situation? Do you believe that we are in a supervised democracy?

[Answer] No, I don't believe that we are in a state of "supervised democracy." We Spanish like to apply adjectives to things when what we should do--each of us on the basis of our level of responsibility--is to give substance to the noun--"democracy"--by everybody cooperating in strengthening the system and consolidating the model of coexistence which we have freely chosen. This is why I am concerned about the image which may be created or conveyed, and even plays on words. And, of course, I am concerned about the campaigns of deception which some extremist sectors are seeking to conduct. But I am certain that the great majority of the members of the armed forces don't want any leading role of a political nature for the latter, but want to be able to devote themselves with the utmost professionalism to performing the tasks assigned to them by Article 8 of the Constitution on defending and guaranteeing our sovereignty, our independence, our territorial integrity and the constitutional order, and all this, under the orders of the nation's government and the supreme command of his majesty the king.

KEKKONEN, USSR'S ARKHIPOV DISCUSS JOINT PROJECTS

LD131110 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0930 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] Finnish-Soviet joint projects, the further construction of Kostamus and nuclear power cooperation were discussed in talks between President Urho Kekkonen and the first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, Ivan Arkhipov, in Helsinki this morning. Arkhipov arrived for a 3-day visit to Finland this morning in order to attend the inauguration festivities of the second nuclear powerplant in Loviisa. During his busy program he will have discussions on the development of Finnish-Soviet economic relations and nuclear power cooperation between the countries.

In the afternoon, Arkhipov will visit the Helsinki shipyard of Waertsilas and will be briefed on the present state of the nuclear icebreaker project to be built jointly. The inauguration of the Loviisa-2 nuclear powerplant will take place tomorrow.

Further Details on Talks

[Excerpts] Cooperation projects between Finland and the Soviet Union in the next few years have been thoroughly discussed in talks between the first deputy prime minister of the USSR, Ivan Arkhipov, and President Urho Kekkonen. Arkhipov arrived in Finland today for a 3-day visit.

First Deputy Prime Minister of the USSR Ivan Arkhipov said that the trade between our countries had developed in the right direction. He said that our trade will probably double from the present figure to R25,000 million during 1981-85. In addition, in an interview granted to the television news, Deputy Prime Minister Arkhipov said that Finnish and Soviet companies will start talks on an extension of the Norilsk copper and nickel combinate in Siberia.

Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto gave a dinner in the guest's honor this evening. Tomorrow Arkhipov will attend the inauguration festivities of the Loviisa-2 nuclear power plant.

Nuclear Plant Agreement

LD141022 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0930 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] The Imatran Voima power company and the USSR's Atomenergoeksport initialed an agreement this morning on the feasibility plan for a 1,000 mw nuclear power station. According to the agreement, the plan will be completed by the end of next year. The plan seeks to achieve the highest possible degree of domestic production, over 70 percent. Imatran Voima has now concluded agreement on feasibility plans for a 1,000 mw power station with the Soviet Union and for a 900 mw power station with France.

Celebrations are taking place today to mark the 10th anniversary of Finnish-Soviet nuclear power cooperation at the Loviisa nuclear power station of Imatran Voima. President Urho Kekkonen and Ivan Arkhipov, the first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, are attending the celebrations.

SWEDEN

PARTY SPOKESMEN IN BROAD AGREEMENT ON DEFENSE

LD130755 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 11 May 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Defense in the Riksdag"]

[Text] For obvious reasons, last Thursday's Riksdag defense debate was overshadowed by other events. It also contained the somewhat curious circumstance that the government's bill was more or less supported by the spokesman for the opposition, namely former Defense Minister Eric Kronmark (Moderate Coalition Party). His foremost opponent was also a member of the opposition, namely former Defense Minister Eric Holmqvist (Social Democrat). Defense Minister Anders Dahlgren (Center Party) refrained from taking part in the debate at all....

Let us distinguish between the debate's security policy section and its budget section. Even though the Social Democrats did not agree 100 percent with the picture of the security situation painted by the government and a majority of the members of the Defense Committee, it can be said that the differences in views of the international situation among the four democratic parties in the Riksdag are very small. They are all worried by international rearmament and by the threat posed by nuclear arms, and are keen to maintain the Nordic balance--or rather stability--in which the strength of the Swedish Armed Forces plays an important role.

However, there is a gap, in reality an abyss, between these four parties and the Communists. In a long--much too long--speech on security policy, Communist Left Party Deputy Oswald Soderquist succeeded in avoiding saying a single word about the Soviet Union's colossal arms buildup; on the other hand Soederquist spoke with detail and verbosity of the threat from NATO. Does the man himself believe what he is saying?

As far as the defense budget is concerned there is good reason to quote Eric Holmqvist, who noted that Kronmark had "resumed his seat in the chamber." "In certain respects Kronmark has been an extremely strong spokesman for the defense forces. On various occasions in the past I have expressed my respect for his ability, as a moderate defense minister to keep the defense forces out of the reach of the visitation now affecting other major areas of public spending so badly.

"I see that Kronmark stressed in a farewell interview that at times he has had to put up a tough fight. At the same time as reminding the Riksdag of this, I would also like to say that Kronmark has also been party to the weakening of the country's independence and power to act. During the years in which we have had a nonsocialist government, our economic dependence on the rest of the world has continued to grow. If we continue down this path we will soon be in a situation in which we no longer have any real freedom of action--something which is necessary for a country which wishes to stand outside alliances and ties and to be able to pursue an independent policy." So much for Holmqvist.

There is not much to object to in his description of Kronmark's ambitions and results. It is unfortunately the case, as is well known abroad, that for several years now Sweden's defense capability has been hollowed out, mostly as a result of the unfortunate social democratic Communist Left Party defense budget agreement in 1972.

But things could, as Holmqvist hinted, have been worse. And this would have been the case in particular if the Social Democratic policy on defense spending had continued to be the will of the Riksdag after 1976. Fortunately this has not been the case.

Of course, defense forces cost money. But who wants to deny, when we look around in the world, that freedom is worth its price?

PAPER VIEWS FOOD SITUATION IN EVENT OF WAR

LD130827 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 5 May 81 p 6

[Thomas Michelsen report: "Worse Meat Shortages Than During the Last War"]

[Excerpts] We would have much more bread and potatoes to eat but much less pork and other meat if Sweden were isolated for any lengthy period, as it was during World War II. In actual fact the reductions in amounts of pork and other meat available would be considerably larger than during World War II. The reason is that Swedish agriculture has become more sensitive since the forties, more dependent on imported chemicals and on imported machinery.

The foodstuffs industry is also more sensitive; the dairies, for example, which pack all milk for drinking in cardboard cartons lined with plastic. When this plastic runs out the dairies may be forced to put all milk in bottles intended for beer or soft drinks. Crisis planners have discussed the possibility of using the breweries to distribute milk in a crisis situation.

The plastic used to pack Swedish milk has been given priority in crisis planning. The foodstuffs industry would be supplied with plastic. But if the plastic runs out there is no chance of returning to the use of glass bottles in the dairies. There are no machines left which could deal with this. But the breweries could still pack milk in bottles--until the aluminum cans take over. Then the only possibility remaining would be to distribute milk in ordinary buckets.

The National Board of Economic Defenses and the National Agricultural Marketing Board presented on Monday joint studies and proposals for emergency Swedish foodstuffs procedures during a war. If Sweden is to be able to survive a 3-year period of isolation, investments of 730 million kronor will be necessary. Investments of over 1 billion kronor would be necessary to survive a 5-year period of isolation.

One major problem is that Swedish agriculture has become so dependent on imported chemicals and imported machinery. The worst problems involve nitrogenous fertilizers and pest control preparation. Emergency planning intends to increase the stockpiles of these chemicals in particular or the raw materials for them. It is this which costs 700 million kronor for a 3-year crisis. But despite this stockpiling, the production from Swedish fields is still expected to fall drastically.

When the use of nitrogenous fertilizers is reduced to a level one-third of what it is today, the planners expect that crop yields per hectare will fall to between 55 and 65 percent of what they are today. In order to be able to feed the Swedish population on these smaller crop yields it will be necessary to introduce some changes in diet.

There will be less pork and other meat on the table. Instead there would be more potatoes and bread. There will always be lots of milk. The planners even expect to increase the population's milk consumption. The goal is to be able to avoid rationing milk, potatoes and broad. Instead it will be pork and other meat which will be rationed.

The production of broiler chickens would be stopped almost entirely. However, one type of animal production will be allowed to increase--the number of cows would increase during a crisis. But because they would be getting less imported feed, each cow would produce less milk. But in total the Swedish people would have more milk than today, but the amount of cheese produced would be cut.

BENN URGES TROOP WITHDRAWAL, UN FORCE IN ULSTER

[Nicholas Comfort report: "Benn Seeks UN Peace Force in Ulster"]

[Text] Mr Wedgwood Benn yesterday called for the withdrawal of troops from Ulster and the involvement of the United Nations in the province's future.

The left-wing challenger for Labour's deputy leadership said on BBC radio that he had always believed that "the British military presence is a major part of the problem." He called for "the people of Ireland, north and south" to be left to resolve the question for themselves.

Mr Benn's remarks, in direct contradiction to party policy, are a fresh embarrassment to Mr Foot, who has kept him without portfolio on Labour's French bench since he replaced Dr David Owen. And they have infuriated several shadow ministers, both because of the convention that policy is expounded by the relevant spokesman and because they are seen as pre-empting new policy talks.

There was already tension between Mr Benn and shadow cabinet colleagues because of his calls, prior to the death of Robert Sands, the IRA hunger striker, that he be allowed to take his seat at Westminister.

His remarks yesterday followed a dispute the night before with Mr Foot and other national executive members over a resolution claiming that "repression and torture" were being practised in Ulster prisons in preparation for their use against the labour movement in Britain.

Mr Benn, with Mr Dennis Skinner and Mr Tony Saunois, the young socialist, wanted the motion debated in a departure from the practice of referring all Ulster matters straight to the committee under Mr Alex Kitson, party chairman.

A motion was eventually referred to the working party by nine votes to three, with Mr Foot and Mr Healey on the opposite side to Mr Benn.

But despite criticism from within the shadow cabinet Mr Benn was speaking for a sizeable minority of Labour MPS in demanding a new initiative.

The problem is that veteran campaigners for a united Ireland view his interest with suspicion and others recently convinced of the need for change regard his support as counter-productive.

In his radio interview, Mr Benn said many people in the party and outside now say the need for a new political initiative and believed present policy had reached a dead end.

"When you have the pope, the secretary-general of the United Nations, Mrs Gandhi, American congressmen and the European Commission on Human Rights coming in, people in this country have a responsibility to seek a new initiative of a political character."

"The time has come when we may have to ask the United Nations to set up an international commission, ask for a UN peace-keeping force in Northern Ireland and, when the UN force is established, withdraw British troops. "British troops are a major part of the problem: It is very unfair on them, they are in a hopeless position, civil liberties are being eroded and we have got to find a way to allow the solution to be found in Northern Ireland itself."

Finally, in apparent negation of the government's "guarantee" to the Protestant majority, he said: "I don't think there is any future in a policy that hinges on a pledge that leaves British troops permanently in Ireland and prevents the Irish people from finding a solution themselves."

TO VIMA REVIEWS SOURCES OF TENSION WITH TURKEY

NC121511 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 12 May 81 p 8

[Text] Ankara once again appears intransigent over the question of jurisdiction of the new Larissa headquarters with the result that relevant negotiations at military experts level have been "put on ice" and installation of the new headquarters has been postponed. It is now 8 months since Greece reintegrated within NATO, and no progress is being made in the most important of the unresolved issues in Greek relations with the alliance, as a result of Turkish intransigence over the establishment of the new Larissa headquarters, the commander of which will have operational control over the entire Aegean airspace for NATO.

Ankara's position is related to the recent hardening of the Turkish side on the questions of Aegean airspace at a bilateral level. It was the subject of discussions in Brussels last week by General Gratsios, the chief of the Greek National Defense Staff, with General Rogers and the Turkish chief of staff during the allied maneuvers "SHAPEX 81." In the meantime, a new tension in Greek-Turkish relations was created by the apprehension of a Greek fishing boat, the "Planitis 2," by a Turkish patrol boat within Greek territorial waters between the islands of Limnos and Mitillini. Other fishing boats from Limnos, Samothraki and Kavalla were fishing with "Planitis 2" at the time.

Greek Ambassador to Ankara Papoulias has already taken the necessary steps for the release of the fishing boat and its crew. At the same time, the Greek consul general in Istanbul is due to contact the Greek fishermen, who are held on the island of Imroz. The fishing boat was manned by Captain P. Koutras and a crew consisting of G. Sirianos, Kh. Kaiktsidhis and D. Maliktzis. According to published reports the captain of the fishing boat attempted to gain speed as soon as he became aware of the intentions of the Turkish patrol boat in an effort to avoid the apprehension of his boat. The Turkish patrol boat opened fire and forced the Greek fishing boat to follow it.

In an interpellation in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday, EDA, the United Democratic Left, Chairman I. Iliou requested that the government take measures to counter the base Turkish demands which are aimed at limiting our country's sovereign rights over Limnos island and particularly to reject Turkish demands, supported by NATO and the United States, for the demilitarization of the border island in contravention to existing treaty provisions.

RALLIS BRIEFS PAPANDREOU ON NATO, U.S. BASIS ISSUES

NC130920 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 0900 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] Official opposition leader and PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou visited Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis at the Political Office at 1000 today. They discussed various questions of domestic and foreign policy of interest to the country.

Speaking to representatives of the press after the meeting, Papandreou said that he asked primarily to be briefed on the question of the non-use of the Limnos Island airfield by NATO during the latest exercises of the alliance. The PASOK chairman added he was fully briefed on this question, on negotiations on the U.S. bases issue, and on Greek-Turkish affairs. Papandreou expressed satisfaction over the full briefing he had received from the prime minister.

KKE SCORES GOVERNMENT REJECTION OF SOVIET PROPOSAL

NC121558 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 12 May 81 p 3

[Excerpts] Speaking yesterday at the Acropole Theater to the meeting organized by the Athens party organization, KKE-Exterior Central Committee Secretary General Comrade Kharilaos Florakis said: Dear friends and comrades, big and serious social, economic and cultural problems are facing our people and we are being called on to deal with them.

However, all these problems cross with one focal problem, a general problem, the problem of peace.

The deterioration of the international situation to a dangerous degree is obvious. The U.S. Government is enlarging the programs for nuclear and other arms and it is imposing a similar policy on its NATO partners. It is massing navy ships in the Middle East, it is declaring national liberation movements "international terrorism" and it is forming a special corps for direct intervention. It is intensifying anti-Sovietism and stepping up disruptive activites in socialist countries, especially in Poland. It is strengthening neofascist regimes and encouraging the establishment of autocratic and militarist regimes. In this way it is hoping to find a way out of the crisis and to recover lost ground.

However, this new Cold War attack is taking place at a period when the correlation of forces has changed at imperialism's expense, at a time typified by a strong movement to defend peace, democracy, national independence and resistance to a Cold War.

Typical of this is the warm reception given by governments, distinguished personalities and people to Comrade Brezhnev's proposals, expressed at the 26th CPSU Congress--proposals that give realistic solutions to the great problem of peace preservation and defense.

However, friends and comrades, we should not relax; especially since our country's position in the critical area of the eastern Mediterranean--mainly because of the policy of the government of the right, a policy of subjugation to U.S.-NATO imperialists--is experiencing even more strongly, even more dramatically the international threat against peace.

The government has subjugated our country to the plans of the NATO militarists. It is renewing the maintenance and expansion of the U.S. bases. It has allowed the installation of nuclear arms in our country and has converted our soil into firing ranges for NATO exercises directed against the neighboring socialist countries. As a typical example of Cold War policy and national subjugation there are the well-known orders that were published last week as a result of the military map exercise in the area of Macedonia. The government accepts the arms race between Greece and Turkey that is being cultivated by the Atlantic masters. It elevates the imperialists to the position of umpires in Greek-Turkish differences, who then encourage the provocations of Ankara's milatarists and manipulate the tension between the two countries to serve their broader plans in the area.

Through the policy of the right, our country is in danger of involving itself in the military adventurisms of the U.S. and NATO imperialists in the dangerous oil zone and in danger of experiencing big national adventures.

The government of the right is demonstrating such Atlantic blindness and slavishness toward the imperialists that it does not exploit the possibility of our country evading destruction in a possible nuclear war. It has rejected the Brezhnev proposal to conclude a special Greek-Soviet agreement through which the Soviet Union would provide guarantees not to use nuclear arms against our country in a possible clash, provided our country does not store nuclear arms on its soil.

In view of the inestimable dangers threatening our country, a true rally of all patriotic and peace-loving forces is needed against the policy of Atlanticism, for the removal of nuclear weapons and foreign bases from our country, for our country's withdrawal from NATO, so that Greece may become nationally independent, a factor in disarmament, peace and cooperation in the Balkans, the Mediterranean and the world.

GOVERNMENT REACTS TO ATTACK ON POPE JOHN PAUL II

Assailant Identified

TA131912 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 13 May 81

[Excerpts] It has been announced that one of the two assassins who attempted to kill Pope John Paul II is Mehmet Ali Agca, the suspected murderer of Abdi Ipekci, editor of the Istanbul daily MILLIYET. Agca was captured by the Italian police after the attempt on the pope's life but his accomplice succeeded in escaping.

In a message to Pope John Paul II, Head of State General Kenan Evren expressed his regrets over the attempt on the pope's life.

Evren Message

TA132036 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 13 May 81

[Excerpt] Mehmet Ali Agca, the assassin who tried to kill Pope John Paul II, had killed the editor of the Istanbul daily MILLIYET on 1 February 1979. Agca, who escaped after the murder, was captured and was sentenced to death by a court. However, Agca succeeded in escaping from the Kartal military prison on 25 November 1979.

Head of State General Kenan Evren sent a message to the pope as soon as he received the news of the attempt on the pope's life. The message said: It is with great regret that I have been informed of the attempt on your life. I deeply deplore this despicable attempt on your life on my behalf as well as on behalf of the Turkish people that has suffered so much at the hands of senseless terror. I would like to express my best wishes for an early recovery.

In a message sent to Pope John Paul II, Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu said: It is with great regret that I have heard about the savage assassination attempt on your life. I denounce with all my heart this savage and despicable aggression and express my wishes for an early and complete recovery. Religious Affairs Director Tayyar Altikulac also denounced the assassination attempt on the pope and said: Attacks on religious personalities have international impact.

Statement on Extradition

TA140759 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] The government has issued a statement following the assassination attempt on Pope John Paul II. The statement is as follows:

It has been understood that the assassination attempt on the pope has been perpetrated by Mehmet Ali Agca, who escaped from prison while being tried for the murder of the late journalist Abdi Ipekci. The grief of the Turkish Government has doubled in the face of the fact that this despicable assault was perpetrated by a person who maintains Turkish citizenship although he is very far from being a real Turk.

This terrible incident should, in any case, prompt a second reflection by those who maintain that the freedom of the persons who organize the movements against Turkey under the guise of demonstrations in Europe and international terrorism should be respected.

Representations have been made with the Italian Government to secure the extradition of Agca--who is a representative of international terrorism--to be brought to justice for his crime in Turkey after serving his sentence in connection with his crime in Italy. Two Turkish INTERPOL officials are being sent to Italy to aid Italian authorities.

GOVERNMENT RELEASES DETAINED GREEK FISHERMEN

TA131605 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1600 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] Andara, 13 May (AA)--The four Greek fishermen who had been detained when their fishing vessel entered Turkish territorial waters in the northern Aegean without authorization Sunday were released by the public prosecutor of Canakkale Wednesday. Ankara sources said prosecutor had considered the case from the humanistic point of view and had released the four-man crew of the trespassing fishing vessel as a gesture of good will between two neighboring countries.

MILITARY COURT CONDEMNS TERRORIST TO DEATH

TA132101 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] The 1st military court of the VI Corps and Martial Law Command [in Adana] has condemned to death Ali Aktas, accused of killing Sulhi Aksoy in the Iskenderun District of Hatay on 9 June 1980. The trial of the illegal Revolutionary Path [Dev Yol] suspects continued today in the 2d military court. The court released 5 out of the 97 suspects being tried. The trial was postponed to 26 May 1981 to allow more witnesses to appear before the court.

PRESS REACTION TO REAGAN ARMENIAN MASSACRE REMARKS

NC131033 [Editorial Report] The Istanbul Turkish-language press for 8-10 May includes the following comment on President Reagan's 24 April speech on the occasion of the Jewish genocide anniversary which reportedly contained references to the Armenian massacre:

In a commentary by Mehmet Ali Birand in the 8 May MILLIYET, Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis is quoted as having reacted to the President's speech by saying: "Why did you [President Reagan] react so strongly? Similar demonstrations were staged in Athens last year. You did not raise your voice then. This time only a few opposition party members took part in the demonstrations. No one from the party in power was there. We used our influence with the television network and the Greek press to persuade them not to publicize the demonstrations. We tried to prevent the demonstrators from demonstrating outside your embassy. The participants were Greek citizens of Armenian orgin. How can we legally ban such demonstrations? Turkey reacted strongly through a stern note of protest. We were perplexed. Do you react in the same manner to demonstrations held in other countries with which you are on most friendly terms"/

Birand then goes on to say: "In a way Mitsotakis is right, but if the situation is impartially evaluated, our reaction seems to be a bit too strong. In the way he spoke, Mitsotakis must have been referring to the recent blunder committed by President Reagan. As you know, the White House issued a statement last week on the occasion of the anniversary of the Jewish genocide by the Nazis. For the first time, this statement described the Armenians as a community which has suffered a similar fate. The Turkish Foreign Ministry was bewildered, because this was the first time the most important person of the United States was making an extremely important change in his attitude. Not only the Turkish Foreign Ministry, but the U.S. State Department as well was startled. Extremely extensive diplomatic whisperings and telegram exchanges followed. The State Department was not aware of the statement put out by the White House, and it was a situation that could not be rectified. Turkmen discussed this matter at great length with Haig in Rome and expressed deep disappointment. However, it was too late. It became known later that one of the president's speech-writers was an American of Armenian origin who managed to squeeze in a few words [about the Armenian massacre]. How can such an undignified thing be allowed to happen?"

Birand concludes: "Now what are we going to do? Shall we give the United States a note of protest? Or shall we demand the dismissal of the Armenian speechwriter? Mitsotakis would be justified in adopting a different attitude toward the Americans. Diplomacy cannot easily accept double standards."

In an editorial in HURRIYET on 9 May, Oktay Eksi writes: "According to reports in the press yesterday, certain representations have been made on behalf of Turkey on the reference to the Armenian massacre. If it is possible to believe, U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig told Foreign Minister Turkmen in Rome that 'the phrase in question occurred in the statement accidentally' and that he 'deplored' it.

"Let us admit that this statement was dexterously prepared, because although 24 April has nothing to do with the genocide and tyranny of the Jews by Hitler, the White House issued the statement on this day which has a special significance for the Armenians."

On 9 May MILLIYET carries a commentary by Teoman Erel on President Reagan's speech in which he writes: "It is understood that the cowboy president did not act purposefully. He was tricked by an American speech writer of Armenian origin in the White House." "But President Reagan, who is introduced to us by the Americans as 'a friend of the Turks,' was grieved us even if he did not mean to." Erel then refers to genocide of red Indians by the Americans and concludes: "Just to pay the cowboy president back in the same coin, shall we, we wonder, organize a meeting in Istanbul to condemn the red Indian genocide?

On 10 May CUMHURIYET carries an article by Ilhan Selcuk entitled "The Truth in Reagan's Speech," in which Selcuk writes: "36 years have elapsed since World War II. Reagan addressed a meeting organized in Washington in order to commemorate the anniversary of the Jewish genocide. Everybody should denounce the tyranny of the Nazis. Nevertheless, it cannot be said that all acts undertaken by Reagan are adequately humane. We cannot argue that the U.S. President has been justly concerned with what has befallen the Palestinian people. Neither do we think he would like to address a meeting to be held on the extermination of the red Indians."

Ilhan Selcuk expresses his misgivings about the allegation that the reference in President Reagan's speech to the Armenian massacre had accidentally found its way into the speech and asks: "Is the White House's policy toward Turkey formulated by such undignified personnel? No. It would be sheer frivolity to attribute the incident to an accident."

Turkmen Addresses Meeting

TA141707 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] The Council of Europe Committee of Ministers meeting has begun in Strasbourg. Speaking at this morning's session, Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs Willibald Pahr requested that the issue concerning the struggle against international terrorism be discussed first. On Pahr's request, Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen made a statement and expressed his views on international terrorism. The Turkish Radio and Television [TRT] team in Strasbourg reports Turkmen as saying that the cooperation necessary, especially among European countries, to struggle against terrorism cannot be obtained, and that the attempt on the life of Pope John Paul II is a clear example. Turkmen then strongly denounced the attack against the pope by a Turkish citizen. Recalling that Mehmet Ali Agca, who made the attempt on the life of the pope, had killed a prominent journalist in Turkey and that he had been condemned to death, Turkmen drew attention to the fact that many recourses had been made to various European countries in an effort to capture Agca but with no result. Turkmen added: The person responsible for the unforgivable attack was able to circulate freely in West European countries after having escaped from prison. The attack was encouraged by the fact that the countries concerned have not been able to show the necessary courage and cooperation regarding the struggle against terrorism.

In the last part of his statement at the Council of Europe Committee of Ministers meeting, Turkmen called for the speedy conclusion of the activities regarding the resolution on the struggle against international terrorism.

Speaking at the afternoon session of the committee, Turkmen explained activities concerning a return to democracy in Turkey. Referring to the relations between the Council of Europe and Turkey, has started and there can be no return. Lami Sesar and Kunter Kunt from the TRT news center report Turkmen as saying that the major goal of the administration in Turkey is to establish a healthy parliamentary democracy and that a program has been prepared to this end.

Turkmen added that the Turkish people and government have a strong belief about strengthening democracy. Referring to the relations between the Council of Europe and Turkey, Turkmen said that every Turkish citizen is convinced that parliamentary democracy will be enhanced regardless of the attitude adopted by the Council of Europe. Turkmen later referred to the latest developments in Turkey and the strengthening of democracy. Noting that the most basic human right, namely the right to live, was in danger before 12 September, and that over 5,000 people have been killed as a result of terrorist activities in the last 2 years, Turkmen said that the illegal arms and ammunition caches seized in Turkey reached an incredible amount. Turkmen added that the arms and ammunition seized could be sufficient to equip the armed forces of many Council of Europe member countries. In the last part of his statement, Turkmen stressed that Turkey attaches great importance to mutual security and cooperation in Europe.

Meanwhile, the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly decided that the relations between Turkey and the council be taken up again at the assembly's September and October sessions. The resolution on Turkey prepared by Austrian parliamentarian Ludwig Steiner was approved at the parliamentary assembly's afternoon session. According to the resolution, relations between the Council of Europe and Turkey will be taken up again at the parliamentary assembly's September-October sessions. The assembly refused to extend the terms at the assembly of the Turkish parliamentarians on the ground that there is no parliament in Turkey at the moment. Danish Socialist parliamentarian (Budsun's) proposal that the terms of the Turkish parliamentarians not be extended was adopted by 51 votes against 48. Ten members abstained from voting.

Further Turkmen Comments

TA141939 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has said that the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly's decision not to extend the terms at the assembly of the Turkish delegates was in line with Turkey's expectations. In a written statement issued after the assembly's decision on the issue, Turkmen said that the Council of Europe statute granted the right of representation only to members elected by parliamentarians. Noting that, therefore, it is impossible for Turkey to send delegates to the parliamentary assembly, Turkmen said: Actually, Turkey did not make such a request. Turkmen added that the parliamentary assembly decision will not adversely affect relations between Turkey and the Council of Europe.

UK'S TUGENDHAT URGES EEC COOPERATION IN DEFENSE

[Alan Osborn report: "EEC Action on Defence Urged"]

[Excerpts] A call for the 10 Common Market countries to establish greater co-operation in the field of defence policy was made yesterday by the senior British EEC commissioner in Brussels, Mr Christopher Tugendhat. Stressing that he spoke personally, Mr Tugendhat said there were sound practical arguments for involving the community in defence. "If we are to develop European industry, particularly the modern high technology industries, on a community-wide basis in order to be able to hold our own against American and Japanese competition, then we must accept that defence and defence related industries will be involved as well" he said in a lecture given at St Andrews University yesterday. Mr Tugendhat added that more systematic European co-operation in defence and security was likely to flow from the development of political co-operation. He said it was "surely inevitable" that EEC ministers would develop such co-operation to the point where it involved issues of defence as well as foreign policy.

His speech follows an informal meeting of EEC foreign ministers last weekend in Venlo, Holland, at which it was agreed to work to include security matters in regular discussions on political co-operation.

One of the decisions taken at Venlo was to explore ways of improving political co-operation though Mr van der Klaauw said it was too early to talk of a permanent secretariat as urged by the West German foreign minister, Mr Genscher.

In his speech yesterday Mr Tugendhat called for the European governments to play a greater role in common procurement policies in the interest of developing EEC industry. He drew a connection between general procurement and the purchasing of defence equipment claiming it was a mistake to assume that the latter was the responsibility exclusively of NATO or other defence institutions. "It is wrong...to talk as though the community and the European pillar of NATO are worlds apart. It is for the most part the same countries and governments who comprise the two," he said.

Although Mr Tugendhat is a former Tory MP and expects to return to political life in Britain when his term as EEC commissioner expires in four years' time, his speech yesterday was a personal one. He intends to make several more on European issues. However it is known that the foreign secretary, Lord Carrington, is anxious to extend and improve political co-operation and this is likely to prove a major theme of the British presidency of the EEC which begins at mid-year. On the other hand the notion of drawing the EEC countries into defence responsibilities is one that has aroused political problems in the past and by raising the issue at the moment Mr Tugendhat can expect to arouse considerable controversy.

APEL, PRESS COMMENT ON DEFENSE BUDGET ISSUE

Defense Minister's Interview

DW141200 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2030 GMT 13 May 81

[Excerpts from reporter Schawer interview with Defense Minister Hans Apel; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Did Apel threaten to resign in the cabinet meeting?

[Answer] At no time. I don't consider that an adequate way to proceed in a political dispute with friends. Objective arguments must do the convincing, not the threat of personal consequences.

[Question] Your department only counted on a deficit of DM1.1 billion. How will you handle the difference?

[Answer] One has to look at the size of the amount. We have a budget of DM40 billion. DM400 million is 1 percent of it. It ought to be possible to make do with DM850 million, particularly because it would enable us to finance the final amount for Tornado and because this will enable the Bundeswehr to carry out its exercises. Fuel can be financed, even if we have to economize. Repairs and procurement, which have become more expensive, will be possible. In the end, questions will remain in every budget. This also holds true for other departments. Austerity will remain the main law at Hardthoehe.

[Question] In what fields will you make economies?

[Answer] Everywhere.

[Question] Is it possible that the Bundeswehr will need more than DM850 million this year? Are more deficits possible?

[Answer] I can't imagine it, but I am no prophet. If the fuel price explodes, for example, or if there are sudden massive price increases in this field, then a situation may come up where things may have to be thought through again. But everybody at Hardthoehe and everybody in the Bundeswehr must be firmly determined to make do with these amounts. It is impossible for the Defense Ministry to demand more money at regular intervals. There are certainly limits to the patience of those involved.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG Commentary

DW141227 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 14 May 81 p 4

[Commentary signed Bar.: "Small Change for Apel"]

[Text] The government may have given itself a short breathing space with the cabinet decision on clearing up problems in the 1981 budget. The figures outlined for the defense budget make it possible for Hans Apel not to resign. From the chancellor's point of view, it leaves room for the thesis that the still missing DM350 million doesn't hurt external security in any way. All this doesn't come so close to being dubious as to justify the reproach of having purposefully not told the truth regarding the budget.

This house of cards, set up with a financial and political wind blowing in its face, will not last. If the defense minister appears before parliament in this fiscal year demanding one additional mark, he will be dropped like a hot potato by his own comrades. They aren't likely to be prepared to scratch 10 million here and there from the rehabilitation program for the handicapped or the storage of crude oil in order to put together 1 billion for defense purposes.

The chancellor knows it and, therefore, the compromise that has been found isn't much more than a postponement of payment commitments until next year. In doing this, however, Hans Apel will become the troublemaker of the 1982 budget and the entire medium term financial planning up to 1985. That could possibly be the end of a crown prince.

Yet, it would be unjust to hold only the defense department responsible for the fact that this is the most windy budget every adopted in Bonn. Overshadowed by the political and financial-economic defense budget, it has hardly been realized that, due to sloppy planning, a DM4 billion lump also will have to be added to the budget of the labor minister. The whole 1981 budget is an unspeakable impudence for the taxpayer.

DIE WELT Editorial

DW131138 Bonn DIE WELT in German 13 May 81 p 6

[Ruediger Moniac editorial: "An Army Without Money"]

[Text] He who burdens Defense Minister Hans Apel with all the guilt for the financial misery of the Bundeswehr doesn't quite do him justice. Apel doesn't bear the responsibility alone. The current state of the armed forces is the result of a more than 10-year-old social-liberal policy which put its stakes on detente while underrating the role of a militarily supported safeguarding of peace. Now the insight that counterarmament in the field of missiles is reasonable and necessary can no longer be spread among the clientele of this policy.

It became normal in the past decade to legitimize foreign policy vis-a-vis the Soviet Union with the hope that a decrease in the armed forces potential in East and West would soon be forthcoming. The United States attempted to decrease the number of intercontinental arms. The same motive explained the efforts of West Europe and North America to win over the Soviet Union for a balanced decrease in conventional armed forces on the European continent (MBFR). Both attempts ended in disappointing results, regardless of how different the reasons for it may be.

However, these attempts produced a highly negative "success" for our, the Atlantic, security in the minds of some people in Western democracies: groups of importance when it comes to the respective government's ability to act demand "disarmament"--even at the price of absolute defenselessness vis-a-vis external military influence.

In this climate, the Bundeswehr is fighting for its existence. Occasionally, it seems that it stands alone. It is surrounded by a touch of social "isolation." It is being abandoned by a large part of the SPD and by a part of the FDP. Even in the union parties, which appear outwardly to be "closely rallied together," doubts come up as to whether a militarily oriented will of the state to stand its ground would be the proper political and moral answer to the intensified armament of the Soviet Union. The realpolitik standards in the Federal Republic have deteriorated so much in the meantime that sober military planners in the Defense Ministry from the ranks of the SPD are being called "insatiable sandbox strategists" when they make demands entailing expenditures to preserve the ability to defend central Europe.

The pressure of demagogical intimidation has gotten a creeping erosion process going in the Bundeswehr. No responsible general can say frankly that the point has now come or will soon come when the armed forces will be unable to fulfill their defense mission. "Measuring" combat and defense strength is a most difficult objective task, one hardly manageable with mathematics alone. This explains the hesitation on the part of leading military men to make alarming statements in public. Aside from this, there aren't many soldiers who would be prepared to say: "Here I stand, I cannot do otherwise." Granted, it isn't their main task to deal with their political environment.

But cases appear more and more frequently showing that the defensive strength of the troops is deteriorating and that this is obvious to everybody. What is the good of air-bases with the Tornado all-weather and night combat plane to the air force without the corresponding protection against attacks from the air? What is the navy supposed to do with destroyers which don't have helicopters for long range defense against submarines? What is the good of such an efficient early warning system as AWACS if the necessary highly qualified personnel cannot be made available in time? Where is the deterrent effect of the army supposed to be if the supply of decisive combat ammunition is used up in no time at all?

Every question indicates an omission, and the list can be prolonged at random. Why have command centers in bunkers not been "hardened?" What will be the consequences of neglected military-scientific research and development? What will be the consequences of the lack of noncommissioned officers and officers for the all-round training of troops and to see to their combat readiness? What does the poor state of civil defense mean for the defense readiness of the country?

The catalogue of questions indicates that the SPD-FDP coalition long ago switched to neglecting the Bundeswehr in an irresponsible way. When in the last decade military defense lost its leading budget position under the influence of detente policy to the advantage of expenditures for the "social network," the consequences remained invisible for the time being. Along with growing state expenditures in general, the Bundeswehr also received more money every year at that time. But this time is long gone. Finance policy is no longer able to master the problems of the Bundeswehr.

Only the courage for a political change of course can change the situation. Priorities were rearranged in France as early as in 1979. After years of neglect, the defense budget moved at that time in front of expenditures for education. The military in Great Britain was given at the same time under the new Conservative government chief a much better position with regard to financial allotments.

The new U.S. President is giving the armed forces large sums.

And Bonn? Since 1970, the share of defense expenditures decreased in the federal budget from about 25 to a current 17 percent. Apel complains about that publicly. But he doesn't have the courage to tell his own party plainly what the security of the country costs.

DIE WELT: PUBLICIZE SOVIET THREAT INFORMATION

DW140939 Bonn DIE WELT in German 14 May 81 p 6

[Commentary signed CVB: "Too Secretive"]

[Text] Caspar Weinberger demanded in Brussels better enlightenment of parliaments and of the public with regard to the Soviet military threat. If people in the West understood the threat, they would be prepared to make sacrifices, he said. That is quite obvious. But then, high representatives of his staff appeared at a press conference to expound this standpoint--and they had to pass when they were asked about details. A document depicting the threat, which had been worked out by the NATO military staff in Brussels, was much clearer. If Brezhnev said 2 years ago in Prague that as a result of detente policy, Moscow "will achieve most of our aims in West Europe," and "in 1985, it will be in a position to implement our will wherever necessary," then the whole speech belongs on the table. If it is true that the Soviets are now building large aircraft carriers, then the evidence belongs on the table. We mustn't keep secret from the Soviets what they themselves are saying and building--or are the Americans afraid that the full unfriendly truth could paralyze the West instead of spurring it on?

CONSTITUTIONAL COUNCIL NAMES MITTERRAND PRESIDENT

NC150917 Paris AFP in English 0909 GMT 15 May 81

[Excerpt] Paris, 15 May (AFP)--The Constitutional Council today officially proclaimed Francois Mitterrand, 64, as president of France, following his election victory over outgoing President Valery Giscard d'Estaing on Sunday.

The council said the changeover would take place no later than midnight on May 23.

Council President Roger Frey visited the president-elect at his Paris home shortly after the proclamation, to tell him officially of the election result. They were expected to discuss a timetable for the Elysee switchover.

Giscard Contacts Mitterrand

LD142046 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 14 May 81

[Excerpt] Giscard d'Estaing wants the handover of power at the Elysee to take place as soon as possible, for example on 19 May, the day of the anniversary of his own election. This is what he suggests this evening in a letter to Mitterrand.

Giscard writes: The numerous problems which you have to deal with do not make a long period of transition desirable. I am ready, if you are in agreement and subject to the consent of the Constitutional Council, to hand over my powers to you on any date which you find convenient from 19 May.

LE MATIN LOOKS FORWARD TO MITTERRAND PRESIDENCY

LD141511 Paris LE MATIN in French 11 May 81 p 2

[Editorial: "The Alternation Test"]

[Text] One hesitates to reveal here the emotion and joy which swept our newspaper's editorial rooms yesterday. Mitterrand is elected. These are three incredible words, as a poet writes in our columns. Although we didn't want to count our chickens before they were hatched, we had nonetheless thought for a long time that there was a strong movement toward Francois Mitterrand's victory.

In addition to that evolution, which could be described as structural, there was a circumstantial split in the majority between Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Jacques Chirac--a split whose consequences have still not been fully gauged. Although we must not allow ourselves to be carried away, we must also gauge the hope which was born yesterday. It is like those great moments when France teeters, suddenly and serenely releasing the forces of imagination and movement. These are what might be termed the "miraculous points" in the web of our history--points which turned to the advantage of all this country's political families. It cannot be overemphasized that this is what democracy is and that, in the present-day world, a democratic regime is a privilege.

We will know very soon whether the Fifth Republic's institutions, put to the alternation test, are capable of giving the new team which will be formed the same legitimacy and the same stability which Charles de Gaulle, Georges Pompidou and Valery Giscard d'Estaing enjoyed in turn. In any case, history, which is never rebuffed by paradoxes, meant for the man who was General de Gaulle's most loyal and most determined adversary to now have the task of proving that the 1958 Constitution fundamentally respects the great republican principles.

Indeed, in the very second following the election of a man to the supreme office, it is an underestimation to write that he is already a different man. Francois Mitterrand is no longer either the PS candidate for the Elysee nor the rival of Valery Giscard d'Estaing or of Jacques Chirac's allies. He is the head of state and, in that capacity, represents all French people. One of his main priorities must be to never to forget that for one moment.

For the fourth time since 1958, therefore, the election of the president of the republic has not given rise to any major incident. The institutions have functioned well. Although the results were very close in 1974, they were never disputed, and the left accepted Valery Giscard d'Estaing's victory with an acute sense of democratic loyalty. There is no reason to think that the present losers will behave any differently. And, moreover, the short statement issued by Valery Giscard d'Estaing and the remarks made by the main RPR leaders clearly indicate that everybody is prepared to respect the verdict of universal suffrage.

This same calm loyalty was expressed by Georges Marchais, and it is clear that the PCF leader was expressing a feeling shared by his voters who unambiguously gave their votes to Francois Mitterrand.

Consequently, all the conditions are right for making Francois Mitterrand a great president and for making this 7-year term a great chapter in our history. In the face of so many favorable--in the political sense of the term--conditions, it is necessary and vital that everybody maintain a calm approach and a critical attitude of mind.

L'HUMANITE EDITORIAL HAILS SOCIALIST VICTORY

[Rene Andrieu editorial: "The Rejection"]

[Text] So, Giscard d'Estaing has been soundly defeated and Francois Mitterrand elected president of the republic by a considerable margin. This election has aroused great joy in the country. How could we fail to share it? How could we fail to feel immense satisfaction yesterday evening at the sight of the melancholy faces of Lecanuet, Chirac and the other leading lights of the ousted majority. We have always spearheaded the struggle against the present government. We called on the 4.5 million Communist voters to vote for Mitterrand and that call was heeded. The mass transfer of our votes to the Socialist candidate was decisive.

This results in a clear indication of the unpopularity of the outgoing president's policy. Nobody could forget that in the first round, on his own admission, three-fourths of the voters cast a vote of clear protest or defiance against him.

Between the two rounds, he no doubt tried to rally the right around him. Indeed, he realized that in voting for Chirac, 18 percent of the voters had condemned a government policy openly denounced as disastrous for France by the RPR leader. He was at least hoping for a vote of resignation and fear in which the specter of chaos which he was desperately brandishing would play a considerable role. Well, he failed.

The exasperation with Giscard clearly finally prevailed over any other consideration. Chirac's about-face hasn't made anybody forget that he held the outgoing president up to public condemnation only yesterday.

By choosing to vote for Mitterrand, we wanted to defeat Giscard and to preserve the chances of imposing a fundamentally new policy capable of wresting our country from crisis through fundamental structural reforms and a big majority movement which would be reflected in the formation of a government in which Socialists and Communists would be present. In far from ideal conditions, our voters have once again demonstrated their passion for union by voting for the Socialist candidate.

Yesterday's vote clearly shows the French people's rejection of the Giscardian policy and the deep desire for change which they feel. We must now ensure that this desire isn't disappointed as has all too often been the case in the past. In this context, not everything depends on us but a great deal depends on our struggle and our ability to convince the workers of the importance of what is at stake.

Through Georges Marchais, our party announced yesterday evening that it is prepared to assume all its responsibilities. It is quite clear that the vocation of a president brought to power by the left should not be to pursue the right's policy but to advance boldly along the path of reforms, to satisfy the trade unions' demands, to form a government with the left and not with the right and to take the necessary measures to end unemployment and money's insolent domination over the nation's life.

LE MONDE VIEWS COMMUNIST PARTY OPTIONS AS LIMITED

LD141001 Paris LE MONDE in French 13 May 81 p 10

[Patrick Jarreau article: "PCF Seeking Political Conditions for an Election Recovery]

[Excerpts] On Sunday evening, the PCF, through Georges Marchais and other leadership members speaking on television in the Place de la Bastille, said it is ready to assume all its responsibility, at all levels, particularly in government. The PCF secretary general seemed uncertain of the ways in which the Communist voters' contribution to the movement which carried Mitterrand to power could be rewarded in that movement. Initially, it seems that Marchais accepts Mitterrand's approach which consists in forming a homogeneous Socialist government and leaving it to the parties which supported him in the second round to negotiate a "government contract" with a view to the parliamentary elections.

The PCF secretary general has indicated, however, that each party would stand in those elections with its own program. He stated that the left has always acted in that way. In March 1973, however, the PCF, the PS and the Left Radicals all defended the joint government program which they had signed 8 months previously; in March 1978, the leftwing union was broken but the Socialists and Communists continued to refer to that same program for which each was proposing a different updating.

The PCF's whole campaign for the presidential election was aimed at convincing its voters and, beyond them, all those who had believed in a union dominated by the PS, that the left could not be victorious in France without a strong PCF. The 26 April and 10 May ballots have just demonstrated that the reverse is true: The PCF has been weakened and the left has won. This is a double setback for the PCF leadership. Its policy has been rejected by one-fourth of the Communist voters, and the PS is in the strongest position that a party can hold under the Fifth Republic. This situation leaves the Communist leadership little room to maneuver.

The Communist leadership, which has been weakened electorally, is also in a weaker position in the trade union movement. The CGT, which had aligned with the PCF's stances toward the PS, also called on people to vote for Mitterrand. The intentional and open coordination between the party and the confederation's Communist leadership is such that the CGT officials must now refrain from any initiative which might be seen as seeking to palliate the PCF's political debility. The existence of an opposition in the CGT led mainly by the Socialists assures Mitterrand of a sounder hold on the confederation's options than he could hope from the French Democratic Confederation of Labor's moderating role, judging from the past.

At least initially, therefore, the only option open to the Communist leadership is that of support for a union on the precise terms against which it has been fighting for 3 years.

While the search for political agreements should, according to its assertions, crown the advance of a "people's movement" inspired by the PCF's lines, it is now calling for a government contract with a party whose candidate won on his own in the second round almost three times as many votes as Marchais won in the first round. The president-elect can--not only de jure but also de facto--demand that the PCF revise its policy in such a way as to make possible the agreement it is demanding. Can there be an agreement between a party which is demanding that the minimum wage be increased to Fr 3,300 per month "immediately" and a president elected on a program making provision for sector-by-sector negotiations? Can there be an agreement between a party which is saying "no, once and for all" to the entry of Spain and Portugal into the Common Market and a president who envisages a gradual integration process? Can there be an agreement between a party which advocates the "simultaneous dissoultion of the military blocs" and a president who advocated in his campaign a "redefinition" of the Atlantic alliance?

In a way, the PCF is seeking to recreate the 1974 situation, but Mitterrand isn't the left's "joint president" and the PCF is no longer the main partner in the coalition which elected him. Can it in the space of 2 months--politically first and then electorally--take the opposite course from the one it has treaded over the past 7 years?

LE MONDE WEIGHS PARLIAMENTARY ELECTION PROBLEMS

Chirac Proposal

LD141405 Paris LE MONDE in French 14 May 81 p 8

[Andre Passeron report: "Chirac Proposes a 'Pact for a New Majority'"]

[Excerpt] Chirac has proposed the joint drafting of a "pact for a new majority." According to RPR parliamentary group leader Claude Labbe this document should be based primarily on the reform proposals which were put forward by Chirac during his presidential campaign and in which, according to him, public opinion showed particular interest. UDF parliamentary group leader Roger Chinaud, speaking on behalf of his friends, proposed the joint drafting of a "platform of action for a liberal and social parliamentary majority." Given what little taste the UDF and RPR have for specific and binding programs, it is difficult to see what separates these two proposals, aside from the different wording. Moreover, will the UDF be able to oppose some ideas dear to Chirac when Giscard d'Estaing loudly adopted them between the two rounds of the election and publicly congratulated their author?

Chirac, who has stated officially that he doesn't want to become the leader of the opposition, is nonetheless acting like the driving force in the outgoing majority's move toward unity. The mayor of Paris is addressing himself expressly to all other movements--notably the national center of independents and peasants and the radicals--which would like to negotiate with him too, while at present the UDF is only envisaging a meeting with the RPR. Chirac also is proposing that a new label be chosen for all these candidates, as was frequently the case under all the republics, from the Leftwing Cartel in 1924 to the Union of Republicans for Progress in 1973 and including the Republican Front in 1956, for instance.

Chirac, who doesn't want to start any polemics about the past election, is no longer even mentioning Giscard d'Estaing's name. Strangely enough, the same is true of UDF group chairman Chinaud who, to every question he is asked about the defeated president of the republic, replies consistently and with a degree of irreverence "the past doesn't interest me."

Labbe was more direct when he said: "Men who have suffered a personal and policy defeat cannot lead the new battle to victory."

Chirac, however, is the only majority representative to have emerged from the presidential campaign with all his titles intact, Mayor of Paris, deputy for La Correze, chairman--de facto if not de jure--of the RPR and with an aura of prestige endowed by a campaign regarded as active and eff tive.

Against the PCF Above All

The coming election battle will naturally be waged against the leftwing candidates. But the PRP group seems to consider that although the objective is to preserve the number of seats which gives the outgoing members their majority now, priority will be given to attacks against the PCF. Vosges Deputy Philippe Seguin was loudly applauded when he said: "We must put our forces in position to prevent the sum of Communist and Socialist seats getting a majority," and he explained: "Voting RPR will not create a government crisis and will not prevent the new president from carrying out his functions.... In the future, the only veto we must pronounce is the one against the PCF."

In conclusion, he stated: "Voting RPR means ensuring that the man elected last Sunday will be neither a Kerenskiy or an Allende." These statements, which interested Chirac a great deal--so much so that he asked for a copy--reveal the feelings and plans which a number of Gaullist deputies still secretly cherish about the gap which a section of the RPR would be prepared to fill alongside the Socialists in the future majority should there be a Communist defection or if Mitterrand appeals to them.

Preparations for the election campaign which Chirac will lead in any case, at least for his own party, are being stepped up. Contacts with the UDF will take place only between the mayor of Paris and UDF chairman Lecanuet, the former accompanied by Labbe and Pons. The two chairmen had a telephone conversation back on 11 May. Without waiting for an agreement to be reached, the RPR will hold an expanded central committee meeting in Paris on Sunday, 17 May, at which Chirac will deliver his first "platform speech."

UDF Difficulties

LD141429 Paris LE MONDE in French 14 May 81 p 8

[Noel-Jean Bergeroux article: "UDF Facing a Major Crisis"]

[Text] What can be done to prevent the presidential defeat from being transformed into a parliamentary rout--this is the first question facing the UDF and the rest of the majority. But this raises a second vital question for the Giscardians: What can be done to prevent what the UDF represents on the French political scene from being fatally overshadowed or vanishing? Some people in the UDF ranks give priority to the first question, hence the troubles and disagreements which were observed on Tuesday.

The man who is primarily and most deeply affected is Valery Giscard d'Estaing. The outgoing president could scarcely be expected to suffer such a major defeat without showing his bitterness and resentment. He did so fairly strongly and, no doubt, with a definite lack of political timing. In condemning "premeditated betrayals" he expressed a rancor which most of those who supported him share and understand. He also demonstrated--since Chirac was the target--that he doesn't intend to allow the mayor of Paris a free hand and yet he tried to begin to answer the second question relating to the survival of what the UDF represents.

Nervousness

But at the same time, Giscard d'Estaing went too far. He showed a degree of nervousness which shocked the deputies, some UDF leaders and leaders of the union's constituent parties. Moreover, the condemnation of "betrayals" was followed by moves by the outgoing president himself, who telephoned several of those leaders to ask them to publicly blame Chirac for the defeat.

It was in the same state of mind that Giscard d'Estaing asked Lecanuet on Monday to ensure that the UDF would not accept the proposals on united candidates for the parliamentary elections put forward by the RPR and to announce that the UDF would put forward candidates in each constituency. He asked Chinaud to assert similar directives to the deputies.

The latter was certainly not in the same frame of mind since the UDF group meeting produced very criticial stances toward the current president. The specific criticism made related to the excessively harsh and tactically inopportune attack on Chirac. Generally speaking, the deputies find it difficult to forgive the current head of state for losing his own battle and for making them run the risk of losing theirs. Discussion in the National Assembly and in its corridors on Tuesday ran along these lines: He has placed us in a dangerous position, how can we get out of it without him? This amounts to saying: "Let's ditch Giscard."

The deputies are ruthless when their electoral survival is at stake! Furthermore, there are some people who thought he had failed in his duties by "stooping" to attack his rival.

The UDF leaders and the apparatuses of the constituent parties, however, have adopted more moderate positions. Here too, Giscard d'Estaing's attitude is being received with some reservations but they are nonetheless not yet adopting the same line as the deputies. Indeed, efforts are being made to find a middle course taking account of the need not to aggravate the dissent within the outgoing majority and the party leaders' desire to preserve their party's elected representatives. Lecanuet and Chinaud will take responsibility for election preparations, will meet with the Gaullist leaders and, in fact, will try to do their best in a situation which is, to say the least, dangerous, complex and unstable. One of the objectives is to find a middle course between breaking with Chirac and an agreement which would be too much to the Paris mayor's advantage.

That leaves the second question. Beyond the blunders and divergent initiatives, the Giscardians need to maintain a liberal, centrist or moderate "pole"--the description varies according to who is discussing the project--at the center of political life. It was this vital need that the outgoing president mentioned on 11 May when he spoke of a "democratic rally." The aim is no more and no less than to prevent the UDF's collapse, if only at parliamentary group level. Indeed, the Elysee and the Giscardian alliance headquarters fear that some deputies might be attracted by the RPR and others by the PS.

Hence, the plan for a party or a movement whose image is still vague--an idea which is being rejected by many UDF constituent party leaders. There might also be an attempt to dress the UDF in new clothes, with a change of title and the inclusion of a number of leading figures who supported Giscard d'Estaing, notably RPR ministers.

The outgoing president, for his part, will probably not stand in the election. Morelion, the deputy who stood in for him, made that clear on Tuesday. Furthermore, he will not directly lead the parliamentary campaign but will strive to keep his place in political life by guiding his supporters and making his directives and judgements known.

Nonetheless, Giscard d'Estaing and his supporters have two difficulties to overcome: Closing UDF ranks behind the outgoing president will not be easy at a time when his defeat is prompting the constituent parties to seek greater autonomy and freedom of judgment. Leading a political battle, even from a distance, is a long shot when the troops are reluctant to follow a man who has just suffered a defeat.

NUCLEAR FUEL DELIVERED TO JAPAN FOR RESEARCH

NC141454 Paris AFP in English 1442 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] Paris, 14 May (AFP)--France has delivered a shipment of non-military nuclear fuel to the University of Tokyo for research, informed sources said here today.

The fuel is of a special reduced enrichment formula made by the French Cerca Company under terms of the nuclear non-proliferation pact, the sources said. Cerca, jointly owned by Pechinery-Ugine Kuklmann and Framatome, was the first to commercially produce the fuel, which cannot be used in nuclear weapons.

Nuclear specialists said the fuel, destined for the University of Tokyo's research reactor, was of a 20 percent for weapons. It was Japan's first such nuclear purchase abroad, a Cerca spokesman said.

The International Atomic Energy Agency has recommended that low enrichment fuel be henceforth used exlusively in nuclear research reactors to promote the peaceful use of atomic energy.

BULLETIN REPORTS POPE'S RECOVERY 'SATISFACTORY'

AU141824 Rome ANSA in English 1817 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] Rome, 14 May (ANSA)--The recovery of the pope was reported this afternoon as satisfactory but he is still listed in serious condition following surgery last night which lasted 5 hours, according to a bulletin released by the medical staff of Rome's Gemelli Polyclinic, where the pope is under medical surveillance in the intensive care unit. The bulletin was issued at 1700 GMT.

VATICAN SECRETARY OF STATE RETURNS TO ROME

[Text] Rome, 14 May (ANSA)--Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, the Vatican secretary of state, returned to Rome this morning from the United States and, after a brief stop in the Vatican, was taken to Gemelli Polyclinic where Pope John Paul II is recovering from surgery following the attempt on his life yesterday.

Visibly shaken and tired from the trip, the cardinal reported that he had learned of the shooting of the pope about half-an-hour after it occurred, "while I was on a flight to New York". He disclosed that, "the American Department of State contacted the pilot of the plane via radio who immediately informed me of what had happened".

Msgr Stanislao Dziwisz, the secretary of the pontiff who was in the open car with him at the time of the shooting and remained at his side in hospital, was substituted at the pope's bedside today by the other papal secretary, Father John Magee.

REPORT ON PRESS REACTION TO ATTEMPT AGAINST POPE

[Text] Rome, 14 May (ANSA)--The attempt on the life of Pope John Paul II carried out in Saint Peter's Square yesterday afternoon swept all other issues off the front pages of the Italian dailies today.

Editorial comment on the gesture which polarized the nation and the entire world ranged from speculation on the motives acted on by the lone gunman, a 23-year-old Turkish right-wing extremist identified as Mehemet Ali Agca, to examination of the state of tension prevailing in Italy at the time of the attack.

The pope was shot while a campaign was in full swing for Sunday's referendum voting. The two propositions which have generated the most heat will decide the fate of the nation's 1978 abortion law. The pope had thrown the full weight of his spiritual authority behind the referendum sponsored by the church-backed right to life movement aimed at outlawing abortion except in cases of a serious health risk for the woman. The rival proposition would strike down the 1978 law to allow abortions outside state clinics and eliminate the need for parents' consent for girls under age 18.

The big Rome daily, IL MESSAGGERO, headlined its editorial, "a deplorable act which has no roots in Italy," and affirmed: "It is amazing that some, even authoritative figures, on the Christian Democrat side have sought to link the terrorist gesture to the referendum campaign by speaking of an incitement to 'hate and violence' and the 'climate of intolerance'."

The organ of the ruling Christian Democrat party, IL POPOLO, commented today that "violence and terrorism have made their bloody entrance even into the sacred enclosure of the Vatican". Further down in the editorial, IL POPOLO insisted that "we must chop away and get at the roots of an absurd violence and all of its manifestations".

For the Communist Party paper, L'UNITA, "we can find only one word, bewilderment. "A cruel act arriving from abroad came to profoundly disturb Italy at an extremely sensitive time," the daily noted in reference to the rival abortion referendums which have pitted lay forces against Catholics and sparked calls for a revision of the section of the 1929 treaty which regulates church-state relations.

In comment on the same state of affairs, IL TEMPO, a right-of-center Rome paper, declared, "in these sad days in Italy, we are breathing the air of a 'culture' of hate, oppression and confusion. Today, now that the life of the head of the Roman church is in danger, certain figures who have exploited everything for their political aims over the past few weeks, who have fallen back on every art and technique to stamp out the truth, these figures are launching the noxious and dire appeal to not exploit the terrorist attack against the pope for the purposes of domestic political considerations," IL TEMPO said.

The attempt on the life of the pontiff, according to the Rome journal, LA REPUBBLICA, "might be the work of a madman. It might also represent the final step of a plan, a plot...which, if there is one, would be an attempt to destabilize the international situation, to incite people against people, religious communities against each other and to fire up the level of tension in various spots around the world".

The authoritative Milan paper, CORRIERE DELLA SERA, denied that "the polemics registered in the last few days between lay forces and Catholics" as a result of the rival abortion referendums on the ballot next Sunday and Monday "carried any real weight in the criminal act."

RED BRIGADES CLAIM SHOOTING OF NAPLES COUNCILLOR

NC150904 Paris AFP in English 0858 GMT 15 May 81

[Text] Naples, Southern Italy, 15 May (AFP)--Four youths shot Christian Democrat Naples City Councillor Rosario Giovine in the legs here early today. The four opened fire with pistols on Mr Giovine, 52, outside his home, before escaping.

An anonymous caller to the Naples newspaper IL MATTINO claimed the shooting on behalf of the Red Brigades terrorist organisation.

JUDGES SAY MIDDLE EAST WEAPONS SUPPLY RED BRIGADES

AU140931 Rome ANSA in English 0840 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] Venice, 14 May (ANSA)--Investigators believe that Italy's Red Brigades [RB] urban guerrilla organization has in the past received arms supplies from the Mideast.

Venice judges have leveled this new accusation against Mario Moretti, the "RB" military chief arrested in Milan on April 4 and being questioned here. The judges believe that Moretti received a large supply of arms from a Mideastern country in the summer of 1979. The supplies reportedly arrived by ship and included machineguns, hand grenades, anti-tank weapons, hand guns and munitions. The Middle Eastern country involved is believed to have been Lebanon.

According to the charges, local "RB" leaders came to Venice to pick up the weapons for distribution to terrorists in various regions of Italy.

DEFENSE MINISTER TO PAY VISIT TO PRC 21-27 MAY

AU141944 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] Rome, 14 May (ANSA)--Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio will be in China from May 21 to 27 for an official visit on the invitation of the Beijing Government, a ministry communique reported here today.

The defense chief will subsequently spend May 28 and 29 in Japan where he is slated to meet the prime minister and defense minister. During the same period, a delegation from the defense chiefs of staff headed by Fleet Admiral Giovanni Torrisi will travel to China.

PRESS, POLITICIANS' REACTIONS TO FRENCH ELECTION

LD131141 [Editorial Report] The Italian language press for 11 May gives very prominent coverage to Francois Mitterrand's victory in the French presidential election. Milan CORRIERE DELLA SERA carries the banner headline "Socialist Mitterrand Wins" followed by a commentary by Paris correspondent Alberto Cavallari under the headline "A Man of the West." Cavallari stresses the importance of anti-Giscard feeling in the success of the new president, whom he describes as "a special kind of socialist," "whose closest counterpart in the international is Brandt."

CORRIERE DELLA SERA also reports initial reactions from prominent Italian political figures. PSI Secretary Craxi reportedly described the result as "a significant event in the history of republican France" and "also a major success for all European socialists; the first sign of a recovery since a conservative and rightwing tide swept across the Western world." DC Secretary Flaminio Piccoli is cited as follows: "Mitterrand's clear victory marks a decisive moment in the definition of new economic and social directions for France. I believe that the lines of the Western and Atlantic option will remain unchanged, though obviously the new head of state's personal drive will impart a particular tone to foreign policy. This major Socialist victory immediately poses for Mitterrand the chief problem of relations with the Communist Party--a delicate and difficult problem, since the new French head of state has undertaken to dissolve parliament and hold further elections soon. Be that as it may, this victory confirms the decline in the credibility of the PCE and its leader. France is embarking on a very far-reaching change which, come what may, will take place under the banner of democracy and freedom which has always characterized French socialism. Last, it is interesting and significant to point out that this success by the French Socialism. is happening at a time when the German socialist party is in a profound state of crisis--so much so that the Social Democrats are losing in Berlin, while the British Laborites are splitting, with consequences which it is not yet possible to assess."

Turin's STAMPA SERA carries the banner headline: "Sensational Victory for Mitterrand" and frontpages an editorial headlined "A Different France," which portrays Mitterrand's victory as "a reward for saying an explicit and courageous 'no' to the Communists" and as "a major defeat for the Communists who, beaten with heavy losses in the first round, must now watch their former ally's great triumph, obtained not only without them but in spite of the violent battle unleashed against Mitterrand by the Communist Party and by the Kremlin itself." The editorial describes Mitterrand's "historical role and responsibility" "to show now in practice that socialism can exist without communism."

The Milan edition of the PCI daily L'UNITA frontpages an editorial headlined "A Historic Event," which stresses "the great opportunities and very great tasks facing the left" in France. "To make the most of this opportunity," it adds, "the left must thoroughly regenerate itself and strengthen its unity and capacity for government." The front page also carries a statement by PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer, who is cited as follows: "The defeat of the right and Comrade Mitterrand's election, partly through the indispensable contribution of the Communist votes, will certainly impart a thrust to the struggle of the leftwing and democratic forces, which are pursuing in Italy and all the West European countries the objective of real political and social change. We hope," Berlinguer concludes, "that in this struggle the workers and people's masses and their parties will succeed in establishing all the necessary agreements."

PCI: EUROPE MUST NOT 'DELEGATE' ARMS TALKS TO U.S.

LD121527 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 7 May 81 pp 1, 19

[Commentary by PCI International Relations Department Chief Gian Carlo Pajetta: "First Step"]

[Text] Almost all the commentaries in the Italian press on the Rome NATO meeting lack one preliminary consideration, without which it is difficult to understand its outcome. Assessed by some with an optimism that should be more cautious and by others out of anxiety for an explicit acknowledgement of the proposals put forward by the Soviet Union.

The Rome meeting was preceded by months of debate in every European country, by open resistance to the nuclear rearmament policy and by misgivings which successively emerged. even where acceptance seemed certain.

The discussion conducted in Rome was of a different kind, and some hopes were created because there has been a growing and more explicit awareness in Europe of the gravity of the situation, of the fact that another nuclear rearmament race, the sophistication of armaments and the emergence of new strategic hypotheses of a possible "limited nuclear war" have brought nearer and made specific the possibility of a conflict that might mean disaster for Europe.

We arenot interested now in seeking hawks and doves; we also consider it of secondary importance to ponder the domestic political motives which in some European countries have hitherto prevented the Pentagon's policy from being accepted as planned. The essential point is that in Europe it is in fact recognized by or within the governments themselves that the situation had become grave and that East-West tensions had to be attenuated. As demonstrated by several signs, this conviction has already led to the surmounting of divergences among political forces and even of narrow-mindedly nationalist ideas in several countries.

Perhaps it should be noted that the rivalry for special relations with the Americans is tending to give way to a new kind of "Europeanism," which can become an element of guarantee for the continent, of awareness of the danger and of determination to survive.

Of course, it is positive that the United States has to some extent understood the significance of and taken into account European resistance. On the other hand, it is equally positive that the Soviet Union is making it known that it refuses to consider Western Europe simply as a bridgehead or tool of the United States, or as a group of countries with which to deal singly, without bearing in mind that the ties of integration are a reality and constitute the elements of a unitary trend which should also lead to shared responsibility and lend Europe greater weight within the Atlantic alliance. There were hints in Rome (though their significance should not be exaggerated) of a European policy and desire in the direction of a new assumption of initiative and responsibility within the Atlantic bloc.

It would be foolish to regard every invocation of peace as rhetorical or every declared willingness to negotiate as hypocritical. Similarly, it would be wrong to forget that Europe can carry greater political weight partly because of the hesitations and fluctuations and internal difficulties appearing within the U.S. administration. The United States can fairly be reminded of the need to negotiate and to surmount the truculence of electioneering propaganda, and at the same time must not be encouraged (and nobody else must be encouraged) to pursue bipolarism.

It is here that several uncertainties arise regarding the decisions adopted in Rome. We must remember--and we Italians especially must remind our government--that we are members of the Atlantic alliance but not aircraft carriers for U.S. missiles or auxiliary troops. Any proxy given to the United States--albeit with express intentions and recommendations--involves a danger of accepting a timetable and forms of negotiation which can in no way be considered positive.

The question is: Should we delegate to the United States negotiations which could last right up until the missiles have been manufactured, shipped and deployed in our country and constitute a dangerous military target, and have in the meantime either authorized or forced the other side to manufacture and deploy more missiles? If so, it must be stated that negotiations must not be delegated to the United States alone; still less must we relinquish the aim of taking an active part in negotiations and in exercising a supervision that will involve the parliaments.

This means that Europe now has a major new and immediate responsiblity. Europe, which must not be a mere spectator, still less a supine spectator, has now both a duty and an opportunity to develop and expand its initiative for negotiation. To those who accuse us of wanting, almost deceitfully, a European disengagement, we reply that, on the contrary, we believe that Europe's involvement is now more necessary than ever.

This is the task of the European NATO countries, the EC countries, but it must not be regarded indifferently by the neutral countries, which would not be left unharmed by a disaster on our continent. It is a task not only for the governments and parliamentarians who must stimulate and supervise, but also for the people's forces. It is a task in which the European leftwing forces must hold a vanguard position. We Italian Communists, who were the first to call for a moratorium and negotiations, can urge the other political forces to raise once again, and immediately, the subject of the contemporaneity of negotiations and cancellation, which were themes in the policy of parties which accepted in Parliament the deployment of the new nuclear weapons. In Germany, Schmidt seems to be moving in a new way and Brandt seems to be encouraging him by demanding greater specificity and by hastening the implementation of a policy with regard to which he condemns several instances of timidity. Sweden's Palme told us in an interview with L'UNITA something which we had already pointed out with regard to the interests of the neutral countries, confirming what we always said about the possibility of joint action for peace among communists, socialists and social democrats.

What happened in Rome is not without importance. It would be dangerous to ignore it, but it would be more dangerous to consider it conclusive and to await developments.

We welcomed Brezhnev's detente proposals and consider it of the utmost importance that the Soviet Union centered its initiative on the subject of negotiations to discuss the balance, control and the balanced reduction of European theater weapons and other forms of rearmament.

We are not acting in the field of propaganda and are not interested in verbal challenges, while danger threatens. We are asking everyone, including ourselves above all, to act, irrespective of polemics that can become a pretext, and irrespective of the propaganda that ignores the real situation and factors affecting everyone. It is necessary to know and to make known the real facts of the matter, to be determined to leave no stone unturned in halting as soon as possible the machinery that has been set in motion, to arrest the rearmament race, which is a race to war. It is necessary right now to reverse the process and to carry out a balanced and controlled reduction of the weapons which are now making Europe a dangerous powder keg. In Rome it was said that this is possible; we must not allow it to remain a vain hope.

MARIO SOARES VIEWS SOCIALIST PARTY PROSPECTS

LD140859 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 1 May 81 pp 1, 4-5

[Maria Joao Avillez 26 April interview with Portuguese Socialist Party (PS) Secretary General Mario Soares; place not given]

[Excerpt] EXPRESSO: It is said that you don't know how to win, that with you things always remain the same...and that basically your victory has as yet scarcely begun. How are you going to hold out in this situation?

Mario Soares: In fact only what have been strictly termed "primary elections" have been held. The congress will not be easy. That is why I have called for great discipline and restraint on the part of all Socialists. It represents an important moment in the party's life. Currently, an atmosphere of great expectation exists in Portuguese society around the PS--extremely favorable. It would be a tremendous mistake to destroy the hope which os many voters (and potential voters) pin on us. We will not do so--I am certain of this--whatever the existing differences.

Moreover, I would like to tell you that I don't view the congress results in terms of personal victory. Rather, it is a matter of a collective victory--of the Socialists' self-determination, internal democracy and political maturity, whatever way they voted. Once the collective will has been formulated by the congress vote, it applies to all Socialists and is equally binding on everybody. In that sense, there are no winners or losers but all Socialists who democratically heed the congress decisions.

EXPRESSO: Who will compromise your team? What is the criterion? It is impossible that you cannot give me some names....

Mario Soares: As you know, there will be a majority and several minorities. But as far as I am concerned, I would like stances not to crystallize because the party's richness lies in its plurality, provided that this is understood in terms of constant dialogue and real cooperation. Everybody will be represented in the leadership bodies in proportion to the votes secured--on th national committee, on the political committee, on the national disputes committee and on the auditing committee. But the executive leadership--the political committee's standing committee--will obviously be homogeneous and will work in close cooperation with the secretary general, because both bodies will emanate from the same majority, now united by a coherent contract valid for 2 years, which is the strategy motion "new course for the PS."

As far as names are concerned, it is too early to speak of them because the choices this time will result from a general consultation of the grassroots through the delegates already elected--a consultation which is currently being conducted throughout the country.

EXPRESSO: What is happening with respect to the post which is to be created of director general of the party?

Mario Soares: Yes, there will be a manager of the PS, who will be not a political but a technical leader, who will have to work full-time without being able to accumulate other political duties (for instance, as a deputy), concerning himself essentially with the party's financial and administrative problems.

EXPRESSO: There is talk of Almeida Santos....

Mario Soares: Obviously not. Almeida Santos is a political leader of the utmost importance in the PS, with an exceptional--I would even say matchless--legal expertise, and he is and will remain an essentially political leader.

EXPRESSO: Apparently the Communist Party alone has not only led the opposition but has occupied its entire area. The unity demonstration yesterday (25 April) is proof of this. And by the way, what was your impression on seeing the PS, the Portuguese Democratic Movement and the Communist Party go down the avenue side by side...?

Mario Soares: Contrary to what you suggest, the Communist Party will be less and less able to aspire to lead the opposition to the Democratic Alliance. The communist movement is ebbing markedly throughout Europe. Look at what has just happened in France. The communist system's undisguised crisis (Poland, Czechoslovakia, Afghanistan, Africa, Cuba) cannot fail to have terrible repercussions on the European communist parties' traditional social base of support.

It isn't by resuming an outmoded mythology that it will be possible to respond to the aspirations of the present. What realistic prospect does the PCP have to offer the workers--even in the medium term? Isn't it correct that the workers wish above everything to see their fundamental problems resolved and that they are beginning to weary of shouting on the streets slogans which actually lead nowhere, beyond the perpetuation of a certain folklore?

EXPRESSO: But I was talking about the demonstration and the impact it had on you....

Mario Soares: The 25 April unity demonstration was deprived of the political significance which the Communist Party and its fellow travelers sought to attribute to it by the public statements, distancing themselves from it, made by several Socialist leaders and figures known to be close to President Eanes. No PS leadership body as such had any form of involvement in the demonstration. The fact that well-known Socialists took part in the unity demonstration represents an individual choice for which only those concerned are responsible and whose significance I don't believe there is any advantage in exaggerating.

EXPRESSO: Eanes will meet Helmut Schmidt this weekend. Is this a harsh blow for you? What topics do you believe the two politicians' conversation will broach?

Mario Soares: What an idea! Why? When I met Helmut Schmidt in Bonn about a month ago, he informed me of the possibility of that meeting. At that time, I received the impression that it would be a state visit. The newspapers now report that it merely is a private visit. In either event, it is a matter which doesn't concern me, but the respective governments. My relations with the FRG chancellor are on another level--that of cooperation between our two parties bilaterally and within the framework of the Socialist International. They are longstanding and particularly strong relations. President Eanes isn't interfering in them--nor could he--since he isn't a Socialist or party leader.

EXPRESSO: Matters are said to be changing between Eanes and the PS secretary general. After all, they must coexist because they are both being harried by the PCP to some extent....

Mario Soares: The 4th PS Congress begins a new stage in political life, conferring indisputable democratic legitimacy for the next 2 years on the national bodies elected at it. The president of the republic is beginning a new 5-year term. The interest of democracy and of the democratic institutions' stability requires of people holding office that they have the good sense not to allow disputes which belong to the past to be projected into the future. To that effect I have told your own newspaper that the conditions have been created for the normalization of relations between the president of the republic and the PS secretary general.

As for the second part of your question, I will tell you that I don't feel at all harried by the PCP. On the contrary, a line of total demarcation between the PS and the PCP having been defined, we are in a position to address successfully the communist electorate and the leftwing workers. We must be able to explain to them without complexes or aggressiveness the state of deadlock in which the communist movement in West Europe finds itself and the reasons for its total loss of credibility in the 1980's.

In fact, the next few years cannot fail to strengthen the democratic demands and concerns which are arising everywhere, and therefore, the only realistic leftwing alternative to the conservative governments in our geographical area is offered by democratic socialism.

EXPRESSO: You just answered me without answering me. What is this about conditions for a normalization of political relations having been created? Or rather, how will this be reflected in political practice?

Mario Soares: Normal political relations, that is, those stemming from the objective conditions of the Portuguese political situation, in the interest of both parties, without subjective burdens or emotional touches. [as published] Moreover, this has always been my rule of political conduct. This is why I have always striven--with respect to everybody--to safeguard personal relations at times of political differences. Why should I act differently with respect to the president of the republic, who over and above being a specific human individual is a state body of high importance for Portuguese democratic stability?

EXPRESSO: The Independent Social Democratic Association [ASDI], by putting forward its plan for revision of the Constitution, has prevented the Republican and Socialist Front [FRS] from so doing. What kind of front do you actually lead? Moreover, the ASDI is limiting it on its right with this stance.... isn't it? And obstructing its scope for maneuver? How come?

Mario Soares: The least that can be said is that the ASDI's unilateral initiative with respect to the revision of the Constitution has not helped at all to increase the FRS' credibility. This is also the union of the left for socialist democracy's interpretation.

What front do I lead? You ask me. Well, all this will have to be redefined after the PS congress in light of the new strategic course which will be adopted and in accordance with the new leadership team voted for.

However, I will tell you that it is an illusion to think that the ASDI can limit PS scope for maneuver on the right. This cannot be—and obviously is not--PS interpretation of the FRS. Following the 4th congress, the PS will appear with new credibility before the moderate electorate which already voted for the PS in 1975-1976 and which then successively shifted to the Democratic Alliance in 1979-1980. It is that electorate which we are able to recover without losing any possible influence over the really leftwing (noncommunist) electorate. But take note, to this end it is important to dispel ambiguities, accepting ourselves as we are, and to speak clearly and to speak the language of truth, exactitude and effectiveness, rejecting all behind-the-scenes maneuvers and "deals" among leaderships. As the responsible opposition party which we are, it is in our interest to engage in dialogue directly with the electorate and not with the party leadership—engage in dialogue with our loyal electorate (the most underprivileged sections of the population) and with our potential electorate, that is, the immense mass who want a change in the direction of progress, social justice and Europe, but with peace, balance and complete respect for human rights and freedoms.

EXPRESSO: What is, in short, your stance on the president of the republic's "strength" in being able to dismiss governments? And in this connection, what, in the PS secretary gemeral's opinion, should be extended and limited with respect to the president of the republic's powers in the coming revision of the Constitution?

Mario Soares: The PS (and there will be no differences among us on this) will be loyal to the agreements undertaken with respect to revision of the Constitution, both within the framework of the FRS and with the president of the republic.

The plan drafted by a tripartite committee, comprising Almeida Santos, Nunes de Almeida, Jorge Miranda and Antonio Vitorino, reached a consensus which seems to me very positive and which consists in neither increasing nor reducing the president of the republic's present powers, that is, those stemming from his specific province as president of the republic.

EXPRESSO: How do you believe the revision of the Constitution will proceed? You don't have enough deputies on your side to be able to effect it on equal terms with the democratic alliance, as you would like....

Mario Soares: In the first place, I believe that there should be a revision of the Constitution. Blocking the revision would be a triumph handed on a platter to the extreme right and the enemies of the democratic system which emerged 25 April [1974].

In addition, I believe that for there to be a revision, a minimum consensus will have to be found, and this implies concessions on the part of all interested sectors. Last, I believe that consensus is possible and must be found within the appropriate framework--which is the assembly of the republic--in open discussion before the entire country, responsibly.

EXPRESSO: You became "master" of two-thirds of something called the PS, whose identity nobody appears to know. Caught between social democracy and the East bloc democracies, with a hesitant course and an unhappy (not to say bad) experience of government, the PS, without undertaking opposition, may seem like a vessel adrift.... once and for all, what is the PS and what does it want?

Mario Soares: I protest against the expression "master of the PS," which isn't in keeping with a great democratic and responsible party which has held its primary elections under conditions of complete democracy and openness. Moreover, the PS is not--and will not be, I assure you--a vessel adrift. It isn't caught between social democracy and the East bloc democracies, because genuine social democracy is a form of democratic socialism and the East bloc democracies have nothing to do with socialism, far less with democratic socialism.

Nor do I believe that the socialist governments' experiences were as unhappy as you claim. In any event, that is the past. When the PS returns to power as a result of a new election, it will be to implement a policy which is genuinely reformist and in defense of the working classes, succeeding a rightwing coalition and not, as previously, by force of circumstances to set in operation the democratic institutions [created by the 1976 Constitution) and the economic machinery in a situation of precollectivism and near chaos.

What does the PS want in 1981? To be a European socialist party and the mainstay of a democratic and credible alternative to the present conservative coalition.

There is an enormous political area ranging from and including the sincerely social democratic electorate to the (noncommunist) leftwing electorate. It is the section of the country which wants reforms within respect for political democracy and human rights; which wants Portugal in Europe, solidly entrenched in the Western world; which wants development but with social justice and which wants the modernization of our backward structures in a civil society and in a genuinely democratic, nonbureaucratized and decentralized constitutional state. The PS is and should be increasingly the essential reference point for that immense electorate. Its importance--let if be emphasized--will be all the more decisive the more the Social Democratic Party allows itself to become entangled in the conservative coalition to which it belongs, as the party principally responsibile for a government without punch or stature, caught indeed between an aggressive restorationism and a conservatism without imagination or strength.

EXPRESSO: I already know that you will tell me no, but in any event I will speak out of turn: I believe that I am talking to a future runner for Belem Palace. With whose votes will you reach there? Those of the entire PS? And in addition to the PS, with the votes of the right? Of the Communist Party? How will it be?

Mario Soares: I have far closer and absolutely crucial goals. Winning the congress doesn't mean for me being reelected secretary general. It means ensuring a real new course for the PS, with a renewed, cohesive and effective team with external credibility. Making the PS a truly European, organized, responsive, disciplined and well managed party is no small task. The amateurish and spontaneous stage must be superseded, without PS losing its soul and its charm as a party of freedom and a genuinely popular and Portuguese party. New values emerged during the crisis which it is important to turn to account. But we cannot afford the luxury of dispensing with the consensus of the real abilities of those who don't support the majority. This will take time and tact to heal the wounds which certain more aggressive aspects of the polemics have caused, and real respect for a plural party conception which recognizes and encourages the right to differ, without allowing ourselves to fall into latent internal guerrilla warfare. Once the differences have been accepted and the difficulties and controversies resolved by the majority vote of the congress delegates, who represent the party as a whole, it is important to ensure respect for majority decisions which are binding on the entire party. But the minorities will be duly represented in the leadership bodies and their voices will be heard, as is essential, partly to prevent certain opposition groups from crystallizing--which would be grave for party unity--and to dispel tensions to which the internal debate has led and which benefit only PS opponents.

In addition, a new style of internal work is emerging from the debate, of consulting the grassroots and assuring them of constant participation in collective decisions. It is a new approach for the PS, to which I attribute the utmost importance.

EXPRESSO: You are evading my question, which is about the "race for Belem...."

Mario Soares: No, I am showing you that I have other goals which are crucial and take precedence--the party, the local elections, democratic stability in terms of alternation, the legislative elections.... In my opinion, the essential thing is that full functioning of the democratic institutions be ensured and that the country's problems, some of which are very grave and extremely urgent, be resolved for the benefit of the population, and both government and opposition must contribute to this end. The latest presidential election goes a long way--a very long way, even--in political terms. The president is just beginning his new term, which I hope will be stable, balanced and calm, without his allowing himself to become embroiled in the controversies of practical politics--something to which he is perhaps too prone and which can only discredit and diminish him. A good deal of water will flow under the bridge in 5 years, so it is very early to answer your question.

EXPRESSO: You say that the Democratic Alliance government is weak. But what are you doing to prove (and, moreover, to respond to) this? How do you intend (and by what means) to toughen your opposition to the government? And will that be credible? Basically, the opposite is being said. Look, Dr Alvaro Cunhall, for instance, told me a few days ago that you will probably lead the Social Democratic Party... although adding that this must be a rumor. But in any event, it was a rumor revealing something....

Mario Soares: As far as I can see, Dr Cunhal sometimes likes to indulge in humor. But his speciality is black humor.

Our opposition to the Democratic Alliance's conservative government isn't irresponsible. It is a responsible opposition which doesn't shout unrealistic slogans or demand the impossible. It can distinguish between conservatives who accept the democratic game and those who are nothing but prisoners of a rightwing dynamic, fully exploited by the Social Democratic Center Party, prisoners of a conservative government unable to respond to the profound aspirations of the moderate electorate which gave them power. This is why our opposition is far more effective and corrosive. Some political commentators already have begun to realize this. So let us bide our time.... The present government is still in its infancy and there is already talk of the need for a thorough reshuffle in the near future. There is already talk of a clear lack of credibility and exhaustion... But the major tests are yet to come.

In the PS we are in no hurry. The constant deterioration of the people's living conditions worries us, of course. And as far as possible, we will struggle to prevent that deterioration from intensifying. But direct experience of what a rightwing government in action is like and of its harmful effect is irreplaceable as a factor of self-determination. Once the internal crisis has been surmounted, we will emerge from the 4th PS congress with a new coherence and a new vigor. You will hear of us....

EXPRESSO: Will I? What is your opinion of the president of the republic's latest speech?

Mario Soares: Nothing in particular. This time the president of the republic, contrary to what he has done on other occasions, took refuge in enunciating abstract principles of indisputable political exactitude. He didn't ask about the schools or about the hospitals nor did he emphasize the need to improve the workers' purchasing power or the emigrants' lot. It is understandable. The innocuousness of his remarks also has a political significance, that is, that certain undesirable imnputations are taking away his ability for effective intervention. It is perfectly clear.

PRESIDENT EANES MEETS WITH U.S. DEFENSE SECRETARY

LD142336 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 14 May 81

[Excerpt] President Ramalho Eanes this morning met with U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who has now left Lisbon. Weinberger had taken part in the meeting of the NATO defense planning committee in Brussels, which also was attended by Portuguese Defense Minister Azevedo Coutinho, who then flew to Lisbon with the U.S. defense secretary.

Today, before leaving the Portuguese capital, Caspar Weinberger denied that the objective of his visit was the eventual enlargement of U.S. military bases in Portugal.

PRESS REACTION TO U.S. AMBASSADOR'S INTERVIEW

NC141446 [Editorial Report] Nearly all Cypriot dailies in Greek have carried comment on U.S. Ambassador to Cyprus Stone's press interview on 11 May, concerning prospects for the solution of the Cyprus problem.

The 13 May ELEVTHEROTIPIA in a commentary entitled "Stone's Bluntness," says that "The bluntness with which the departing U.S. ambassador spoke to the representatives of the Cyprus press is not unprecedented. It absolutely agrees with the majority of the cases when in the past the official and unofficial U.S. sides acted or dealt in any way with the Cyprus problem. It reveals the haphazard and suspicious tactics with which the U.S. factor confronts efforts that have been made for the achievement of a permanent solution of the Cyprus problem."

KHARAVYI 13 May in its "Views and Comments" column, entitled "Stone's Provocation," accuses Stone of having abused Makarios when Stone stated during his interview that "the first Turkish invasion was made because--as some people say--it had been encouraged by Archbishop Makarios." The commentary claims that "Washington not only gave its approval to its ally, Turkey, to invade Cyprus but even aided it. Therefore, Stone is infuriatingly provocative when he tries to transfer his country's guilt for its anti-Cypriot crime to the person of Makarios, whose policy was the main target of the coup and the invasion. The U.S. ambassador should immediately withdraw his invective." The commentary concludes that "judging from the rest of Stone's statement, one easily infers that the goal of U.S. policy is nothing else than the legalization of the invasion's faits accomplis."

On 13 May, ELEVTHERI KIPROS describes Stone's statement as clear and blunt and claims that it is "The first time a U.S. ambassador has spoken so openly, almost completely 'apolitically.' If at last Stone's country has decided to make us face our own responsibilities and call a spade a spade it is both to his and his country's 'credit.'" The comment goes on to say that "we also agree with the ambassador's judgment that 'some form of demarcation' will become necessary of the areas that will be under the administration of each of the two composite parts of the federated state, as is the case in all federal countries." The comment concludes by asking Stone to "Convey these thoughts and feelings to the people who formulate your country's foreign policy. We believe you love Cyprus and the United States. We believe you are equally interested in the restoration of justice in this country and in the long-term U.S. interests in the area, because both depend absolutely on each other."

TA NEA, on 13 May, carries the speech of EDEK Secretary General Takis Khatzidhimitriou at Psevdhas on 12 May in reply to Stone's press interview. Khatzidhimitriou calls the U.S. ambassador's statements "preelection fireworks aimed at strengtheing the extreme right." Then he adds: "The U.S. ambassador also indirectly expresses his support for the Turkish junta. He considers the junta leaders prestigious and capable of solving the Cyprus problem. However, if things are so, why has the dialogue reached an impasse due to Turkish intransigence? How does one explain the fact that 9 months have elapsed since the junta was imposed [on the Turkish people] and the Cyprus problem is in a worse, instead of a better, position?" Khatzidhimitriou adds: "If the United States is truly interested in the solution of the Cyprus problem, there are the UN resolutions and the framework for its solution inside the international organization. It can turn in that direction." In conclusion, the secretary general states: "The ambassador's statements also show the international interest [which exists] for the elections of 24 May and the confrontation between the two courses--adjustment to Turkish occupation and foreign interests as against the course for national salvation and freedom."

On 14 May, O FILELEVTHEROS deals with the ambassador's press interview in a comment entitled "Let Them Turn Toward Ankara" which isolates two points in Stone's statements. The first point is that Reagan is in a hurry to see the Cyprus problem solved and O FILELEVTHEROS observes that if Reagan really wants to see the problem solved "the first thing Washington should do should be to address itself to Ankara. That is where it should direct its attention by throwing the weight of the effective influence it has persuading or coaxing Turkey to come to its senses." The second point deals with Stone's remark that "mutual concessions are required in order to reach some compromise solution." O FILELEVTHEROS points out that "The Greek side is the victim. It is from the Greek side that the Turkish side has extracted [concessions], yet since 1974 and on (we ommit the past) it is our side that constantly advances [as published]. By following a clearly extortionist methodology, Denktas and Ankara constantly extract [concessions]. The Greek side pays with some concessions to break every deadlock they cause! And this is done usually following some vague promises by third parties that: This time the Turks will give something! But they do not give. Finally something is kept by them in addition to the many things they have usurped through violence."

On 14 May, TA NEA returns to the ambassador's statements and in a short comment asks "Why does not the Cyprus Government declare that the Cyprus people are interested in solving their problem in accordance with the principles of law and their own interests and not in accordance with U.S. and NATO interests, because these are precisely the sources of the Cyprus people's hardships."

The progovernment paper I ELEVTHEROTIPIA of 14 May reports that the refugee organization Free Kyrenia has sent a cable to Ambassador Stone protesting his statement on refugees. In an announcement released by Free Kyrenia, it is claimed that two things are clear from Mr Stone's statement:

1. Turkey's intention is the consolidation of the faits accomplis and the implementation of a partitionist solution.

"2. The Americans who have every opportunity to pressure Turkey for the restoration of the Cypriot people's human rights--rights which have been so unlawfully and violently trampled by Turkey--do not intend to do anything of the sort."

The announcement calls the government and the political parties of Cyprus to rally together and to struggle unitedly in order to withstand every pressure for a "compromise" which would be tantamount to "betrayal of our inalienable rights and legalization of the faits accomplies." The announcement appeals to the refugees to be firm with their demand for their return to their homes.

A shorter version of the Free Kyrenia protest to Ambassador Stone is also carried by the morning daily ELEVTHERI KIPROS of 14 May, and by the afternoon daily I DHILINI of 14 May.

KIPRIANOU SENDS RECOVERY MESSAGE TO POPE

NC141140 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] President of the Republic Kiprianou has sent the following telegram to Pope John Paul II. We in Cyprus were profoundly shaken when we learned of the revolting attempt on your life. On behalf of the people, the Cyprus Government and myself, personally, I convey our deep sumpathy and best wishes for your quick recovery. May God protect and strengthen Your Holiness.

DEFENSE MINISTER'S COMMENTS AFTER NATO MEETING

[Text] National Defense Minister Averof, who returned from Brussels at noon today, stated that it is completely unfounded that commitments have been undertaken connected with the expansion of the scope of responsibility of the alliance. This question, he said, was discussed with the defense ministers and it was decided that no one can do anything outside the scope of the alliance without having consultations with all the members.

On his arrival, the national defense minister answered questions on the Limnos issue, as well as on other issues discussed at the NATO session.

Mr Averof particularly said: Various questions were discussed, and all of them are within the framework of the study of the imbalance of power existing between East and West. In 1960 there was absolute Western superiority, almost a monopoly of nuclear power. During the 1960-1970 decade, (?superiority) was diminishing, and during 1970-1980 decade, Eastern superiority emerged, that is, Warsaw Pact superiority over NATO. The force of retaliation exists, but the imbalance is continuing. All have put their hopes on the various efforts for disarmament, on controlling the arms race, on the (?Helsinki principles) and on the various contacts and dialogues that were taking place. Unfortunately, I must say that all these things, known to all the world, have been largely proven wrong.

Human rights are violated in many places--even in the West, as has been the case in Cyprus, while in other countries things have been worse. The arms race, far from being reduced, increases the tension of [word indistinct]. We wish to return to detente, we wish to return to peaceful coexistence regardless of the differences in regimes. This is a need for mankind, a need for all. This is a need for our people who are peaceful and who are living in difficult places--of course difficult from the geographic position as well. In order to achieve this, it is necessary to have some kind of balance of power, which has been disturbed.

Asked if this imbalance is due to the decision of the alliance for a 3 percent increase in the contribution of the European allies, Mr Averof said: Of course, the Council of Ministers has been studying the facts and means through which some balance of power could be achieved, because without such a balance it would be impossible to hold a dialogue on equal terms. All discussions at the NATO Council were held within this framework.

Asked about the Limnos question, Mr Averof said that this question was not discussed. Besides, he added, this question, which is important for us, would have been most insignificant within the framework of [NATO] discussions. Moreover, we have no need to discuss it because it is wrongly believed by some that NATO is a super organization that can solve all the problems. NATO deals with defense; it does not get involved in differences among allies, particularly when these differences are of a legal nature and when two divergent views exist. In other cases, I can say that it is wrong on its part not to get involved--as it failed to do so concerning our own issues in 1974. But in general, this is not a super organization with unlimited jurisdictions so that we may take our differences there in order to settle them.

The question of Limnos is from one aspect a legal question and from another a "real fact." In the case of the "real fact" we apply all those things which are based on our legal beliefs and needs, but without harming anyone. From the point of view of a legal question, there is no way of (?appraisal) since the international community does not have an organization that would be able to settle differences, with an executive power to implement the solution that it would furnish. For this reason, I think that the status quo will be continued and I think that the status quo does not do us any damage whatsover.

Finally, asked about the question of expansion of the scope of responsibility of the alliance and the possibility of undertaking commitments by various governments, Mr Averof said: As for the latter, I categorically deny it; no one has undertaken any commitment. What was discussed is included in the communiques, both the one released in Rome at the foreign ministers session and the one released at our session in Brussels.

The communiques say that there have been discussions on questions which are outside the scope of the alliance and which concern basic interests of members of the alliance. On this question, a discussion of a general nature was held, and what was decided is that no one can do anything outside the scope of the alliance and without having consultations with all the members.

As to what the other members would do--as various ministers and myself have stressed--this is their own affair because we are a partnership of sovereign democratic states and this partnership cannot bind us for such cases.

Therefore, the undertaking of a commitment for action outside the scope of the alliance is out of discussion. It is admitted that there is such a question, but nothing would be done, even by the party that would like to act without any consultations. There is nothing else.

AKROPOLIS: STAND ON LIMNOS ISSUE NOT NEGOTIABLE

NC141504 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 14 May 81 p 12

[Dispatch by K. Moskhonas]

[Excerpt] Brussels, 14 May--The Greek positions on the issue of Limnos are not negotiable. The area is militarized and the Greek Air Force will remain at the island's airfield to protect the national territory. This statement was made yesterday by National Defense Minister Averof to Greek press correspondents in Brussels.

Mr Averof specifically stated the following: About Limnos: the Greek views remain unaltered and the island will remain militarized in accordance with the Montreux Treaty, despite Turkish objections.

The Greek defense minister clarified the question of Limnos, which has been created by NATO's refusal to make use of the island's airfield following Turkish objections. As is already known, a Greek protest has been lodged on this.

Mr Averof stressed that the Greek side will not perpetuate the question of Limnos; its positions remain unaltered regardless of what may happen. He also pointed out that there are three ways to remove the disagreement with Turkey: war, which is not favored by anyone; arbitration, which he does not approve of personally because there is no reason to entrust our national rights to foreigners; and finally dialogue, which will not lead anywhere because the views of both parties are irrevocable. Mr Averof concluded: What remains is to stick to our views, that is why we should keep the Greek Air Force at Limnos.

Asked whether NATO could settle the dispute, Mr Averof said that the alliance would not like to become the arbitrator because this is a legal issue. He added that although our position is strong, we will not leave the decisionmaking on a question that concerns our national rights to foreigners.

MITSOTAKIS RETURNS FROM EAST BERLIN VISIT

EVREN STATEMENT ON ATTEMPT ON POPE'S LIFE

TA141123 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 14 May 81

[Statement by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in Istanbul on the assassination attempt on the pope--recorded]

[Text] I hope that this incident will constitute a warning to some of our indifferent European friends. The attack on the pope is a very shameful incident. The fact that the perpetrator was a Turkish citizen only increases our regret. It will be recalled that this person was already condemned to death in Turkey. However, he has been able to escape abroad. Some of our European friends have in the past extended protection to such people under the cover of political refugees. This has been the result.

The same was true when Afghanistan and the Gulf war confirmed our claim of Turkey's importance in the Middle East. We hope that this last incident will also confirm our repeated warnings of the dimension international terrorism has reached.

We extend our best wishes to Pope John Paul II--a [word indistinct] and great spiritual leader--for a prompt recovery.

UN ENVOY ON EUROPEAN ATTITUDE TOWARD TERRORISM

TA141157 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] In a statement following the assassination attempt on the pope, Turkey's permanent representative at the United Nation Amb Coskun Kirca has said that this assault has shown how justified Turkey was in its demand for joint measures by all countries against international terrorism. Noting that numerous European countries are sheltering terrorists who flee from Turkish justice, Kirca recalled that Turkish authorities warned European countries on various occasions that joint measures should be taken against law evaders. Pointing out that certain circles in Western Europe viewed these warnings as moves against the freedom of thought and expression, Kirca said: The despicable assault against the pope has demonstrated how justified Turkey is in its warnings.

According to an ANATOLIAN Agency report, Kirca also said that the Turkish police warned the Italian authorities about 15 days ago that Mehmet Ali Agca could be in Italy.

Kirca explained that Turkey has launched a battle against all types of terrorism and that the attempt on the pope has no connection with Turkey or the Turkish people.

In his statement to journalists on the incident, Turkish ambassador to Washington Amb Sukru Elekdag noted that the Turkish nation is greatly grieved over the incident and called on all countries to join their resources aginst international terrorism.

EVREN, COMMANDERS ARRIVE IN ISTANBUL FOR EXERCISES

TA141353 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren went to Istanbul to observe the military exercises codenamed "Your First Duty-81" organized by the 1st Army command. He is accompanied by the National Security Council members, Ground Forces Commander Gen Nurettin Ersin, Air Force Commander Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya and Gendarme Commander Gen Sedat Celasun. General Evren and the National Security Council members were received at Yesilkoy Airport by 1st Army Commander Gen Necdet Urug, Istanbul Governor Nevzat Ayaz, War Academies Commander Gen Halim Sezer and Mayor Lt Gen Ismail Hakki Akansel.

After expressing his views on the assassination attempt against the pope, General Evren left the airport with the commanders by helicopter and went to the 1st Army headquarters in Selimiye.

The citizens cheered General Evren on his arrival to Selimiye. He was received with a military ceremony in front of the headquarters. Later, General Evren conferred with the 1st Army commander. After this meeting, the military exercises began.

After the exercises, which will last 2 days, General Evren and the commanders will go to Gebze to tour the Turkish scientific and technical research organization [TUBITAK] installations there. General Evren will then inaugurate the Sariyer Ataturk forest. After that, General Evren will go to Arifiye to commission the spare parts workshop of the ground forces command 1,010th army equipment main repair factory. National Defense Minister Bayulken and Navy Commander Vice Adm Nejat Serin will also attend this ceremony.

General Evren will then open an exhibition in Topkapi Palace entitled "Ataturk in the Turkish Press." General Evren and the commanders will return to Ankara on 16 May.

GOVERNMENT COMMENT ON EUROPE ASSEMBLY SUSPENSION

TA140636 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 14 May 81

[Turkish Government statement issued in connection with the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly meeting held in Strasbourg--read by announcer]

[Text] The Turkish Armed Forces, which sprang from the bosom of the nation, acting with a sense of historic responsibility and on behalf of the Turkish nation, accomplished--within the chain of command and control of the armed forces--the 12 September 1980 operation at a time when multifaceted attacks against the existence and independence of the Turkish Republic--which is an indivisible whole together with the country and the nation--and against our democratic regime--which was sincerely adopted and deserved by our people--as well as divisive and destructive instigations and action, anarchic activities and armed terror, which de facto abolished the right and freedom to live fearlessly and the security of property that should definitely be insured and protected in a civilized community and in all states, were rapidly spreading. The reasons necessitating this operation and the goal of the operation were explained by the most responsible people of the Turkish Republic including the head of state of the Turkish Republic. Despite the fact that parliament was dismantled and despite the fact that the responsibilities of these organs were shouldered by the National Security Council, our government continued to send since 12 September the members of the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly to the establishment's meetings without any political prejudice. The purpose of this attitude can be summarized as follows: Turkey has traditionally considered itself as an indivisible part of Europe and this understanding has always constituted one of the basic principles of its foreign policy. As a matter of fact, immediately after the establishment on 5 May 1949 of the Council of Europe, Turkey became a member and has participated in the activities of this organization uninterruptedly since then. In addition, Turkey has always sincerely supported the organizational goals cited in the Council of Europe statute. This support is still valid. As a matter of fact, the Turkish people find parliamentary democracy the most suitable form of government for themselves, and the prevalence of justice and respect for human rights are the basis for this form of government.

The existing administration in Turkey has announced a program aimed at establishing parliamentary democracy, which is its basic goal. It was also announced that the constituent assembly will be established between 30 August and 29 October this year as a first step in this program which constitutes a transition period. The process of establishing democracy in Turkey has begun and we have entered the period of transition to a parliamentary democratic regime.

We receive with understanding the fact that the Council of Europe is following our efforts directed toward establishing democracy. However, it is impossible to understand and accept the very harsh and unjustified criticism during the discussion of the Turkish administration. In addition, the fact that the propaganda by the extensions outside the country of the sources of terrorism that for a long time abolished the right and freedom of life of the Turkish people and that, therefore, is the cause of the incidents that lead to the 12 September operation can still be effective causes disillusions and troubles the Turkish administration determined to establish democracy in Turkey. The deplorable attempt on the life of the honorable Pope yesterday clearly shows to the world how fearful and dangerous the organization of the extensions of these terror sources is.

The behavior of these groups cannot be met with tolerance. The unity of the Western democracies, which are the defenders of human rights, without being influenced by the negative propaganda being disseminated by the enemies of democracy in the struggle against terrorism and their support of countries that are, so to say, waging a struggle in the field, has become a necessity that can not be delayed a day longer.

Law No 378, which is still valid, stipulates that members to participate in the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly be elected by a parliament formed through elections, in other words, to be elected by the Turkish Grand National Assembly. The law does not allow these people to be elected by the government. It is legally impossible to send members to the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly since the Turkish Grand National Assembly has been dismantled. Therefore, our government has not requested that the terms of the former members be extended. The decision that the former members cannot continue their terms in the assembly was in line with the views of the Turkish Government. This decision does not affect the essence of our relations with the Council of Europe and without a doubt, our institutional relations will continue.

COURT GIVES LEFTIST MILITANT DEATH SENTENCE

TA141120 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 14 May 81

[Excerpt] The 1st military court in Erzurum has condemned Necdet Sozbir to death for the premeditated murder of three persons and an attempt on the lives of two others. Sozbir killed village watchman Mustafa Kaya, Muzaffer Kartal and Altif Sahtoptas who were sitting in a coffeeshop in the Kenanbel village in the Cildir District of Kars, and wounded Huseyin Tektas and Casim Toptas. Sozbir belongs to an illegal leftist organization.

SCHMIDT DEFENDS SECURITY POLICY, WARNS CRITICS

Newspaper Interview

LD152206 Hamburg DPA in German 2015 GMT 15 May 81

[Text] Hamburg, 15 May (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is convinced that the Soviet Union and the United States this autumn will negotiate on limiting missiles in central Europe. In an interview carried in NEUE RUHR/NEUE RHEIN ZEITUNG (Saturday's edition), the chancellor said that the two great powers will (?talk) with one another because these negotiations are in the interests of both sides. However, the talks will be difficult and probably last a very long time.

Schmidt stressed that with regard to policy on security, he could still rely on the SPD lower house Parliamentary Group and the coalition partner FDP. With reference to the accusation made by SPD Deputy Karl-Heinz Hansen that he is conducting secret diplomacy against his own people on security policy questions, Schmidt said that he has ceased replying to attacks of this kind. The chancellor, in reference to (?public criticism) of the (?counterarming demanded) in the twin NATO decision, said that the Americans want to create a counterweight to the alarming Soviet arms buildup, (?which), he is convinced, has to be. The United States can only abandon counterarming when the Soviets are ready to [word indistinct] some of their missiles.

The text of the interview was prereleased to DPA.

Speech in Recklinghausen

[Excerpts] Hamburg, 16 May (DPA)--In a speech in Recklinghausen, the federal chancellor criticized his own party. We cannot cope with the problems of the eighties, he said, "if we behave in our party as we have in some places recently." In view of the four elections to be held in 1982, it is pointless to delude oneself about the situation in the SPD. In its current state, the SPD cannot afford to spend many evenings in local associations, "discussing abstract and esoteric themes." Anyone who makes the SPD gamble away its governmental responsibility should know that no union government can continue the SPD's policy of peace and detente.

Schmidt emphatically warned his friends against the "stupid talk" that the Federal Republic is rearming under SPD leadership. He stressed the need for equilibrium in Europe so that one could not be "swallowed overnight," as happened to Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Afghanistan and might happen "to another country tomorrow." The chancellor also criticized remarks made by theologians on the danger of war. Some believe "that they are more credible than others because they talk at the same time about God." Whoever questions the principle of equilbrium "capitulates and surrenders us." He referred to "figments of the imagination even though this time they are peddled by theologians and not by communists."

Further Report

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 16 May (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt (SPD) has made his political fate dependent on the realization of the NATO twin decision. Speaking in Recklinghausen on Saturday, he emphasized the significance of disarmament negotiations. With only a few days left before Schmidt's trip to the United States, leading SPD politicians and party bodies this weekend once again stressed the needed for arms limitation. At the same time, differing views of the NATO twin decision within the SPD have become apparent once more. This decision provides for the deployment of medium-range missiles in West Europe, while at the same time, offering disarmament negotiations to the Warsaw Pact.

Addressing the local SPD chairmen of the Western Westphalia region, Schmidt made plain: "I stand or fall" with the realization of the two component parts of the twin decision, "and not only with the start of negotiations, but with their ultimate success." Schmidt urged his party to close ranks still further.

Warning to Bavarian SPD

[Excerpts] Wolfratshausen (DPA)--The disputes in the SPD and the criticism from its ranks of the Federal Government could lead to a change of coalition by the FDP this year, according to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, SPD deputy chairman. "It would be good if some party members would realize," Schmidt warned at the Bavarian SPD party congress in Wolfratshausen near Munich today, that through public quarrels with their own government and with their own comrades "they can bring about such a situation this very year."

As last night in Recklinghausen, the chancellor told his Bavarian comrades also that he could "no longer bear responsibility for the Federal Government" if the proposals against the NATO twin decision submitted at the SPD party congresses express party opinion.

Schmidt, who will be in Washington on Wednesday, warned against doubting the U.S. will for peace. "Stop listening to those who want to convince you that the Americans are your enemies and the Russians your friends." The chancellor, who expressly advocated reconciliation with the Soviets after the war, voiced his doubt to the effect that "the protective roof of a communist dictatorship" would be better for the Federal Republic than the current situation.

"We Social Democrats stand by the alliance with the United States without if's and but's." A policy of detente toward the East is possible only in solidarity with the North Atlantic alliance. Referring to the controversial proposal on the security and arms policy on which this party congress too will have to decide, Schmidt said: "Anyone who ignores the balance of power is an illusionist who is neglecting peace." He will fight all out to ensure that the Federal Republic is not drawn into a policy of weakness.

Wolfratshausen Speech

[Text] As much as I understand the opinion outlined here, I myself could not bear the responsibility vis-a-vis my own conscience and in view of all the experience gathered in 11 years of government activities, I could not bear the responsibility for such a policy pursued by the federal chancellor and I could not implement it. Understand me correctly, some of you obviously did not want to understand it this morning: If this became the opinion of the SPD in the Federal Government, it would have not only grave foreign and security policy consequences, it also would have most grave domestic political consequences. And it would lead to the replacement of the current government and government coalition by a completely different one.

I say this here most clearly. It isn't meant to be compulsion or an attempt to exert pressure, but every Social Democrat must know that he cannot want to pursue a different policy every 2 years with the people he has appointed to top positions in the Bundestag or even the Federal Government. These people have a conscience too. They cannot be forced to twist their conscience.

CHANCELLOR DISCUSSES U.S. VISIT, ARMS NEGOTIATIONS

[Text] Bonn, 17 May (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt apparently intends to urge the American leadership to begin U.S.-Soviet negotiations on nuclear medium-range missiles in Europe in the early fall during his visit to Washington this week.

In a ZDF (German television 2) interview today, Schmidt referred to the agreement reached at the NATO council meeting in Rome to begin actual negotiations this year following talks between Washington and Moscow in September. He said: "I would like to see these negotiations start as soon as possible, in the early rather than the late fall." However, this still depends on the joint preparations for the negotiations within the alliance.

According to Schmidt, an "itemized agenda" of the planned U.S.-Soviet negotiations will not be drawn up during his talks in Washington. This cannot be done because other European partners are interested in this topic and not just the FRG.

On the same ZDF program, CDU/CSU Chairman Helmut Kohl strongly criticized the SPD's attitude toward the NATO decision on the deployment of new nuclear missiles and the simultaneous offer of negotiations to the Soviet Union. He said that there is a very great danger that the FRG Government will have to revise its approval of the NATO decision because of pressure from the SPD and armament opponents.

The chancellor and government no longer have a majority in the SPD for the counterarming decision, which was strongly supported by the CDU/CSU. Kohl said: It is a fact that the chancellor's international negotiating position has been weakened by the SPD's attitude. This will also be true during Schmidt's visit to the United States.

The CDU/CSU expects Washington's foreign policy concept to "become clearer still and perhaps more quickly than expected," Kohl said. The CDU/CSU is very eager to see the two parts of the NATO decision become clearly indivisible. One result of the chancellor's trip, apart from the indivisibility of the two parts of the NATO decision, will have to be an open and honest response by the Federal Government to the American question of whether Germans are prepared for the necessary sacrifices and mutual burdens.

The chancellor announced that he will also raise in Washington the issue of high U.S. interest rates, which unfavorably affect the FRG's economy and currency. Other European states also are suffering because of these high interest rates. It is possible that the Americans will understand our concern without being able to help, Schmidt added. One visit is not enough to clear this up as it is essentially a matter for finance ministers and issuing banks to discuss. The chancellor expressed his general conviction that he will be returning from his U.S. visit "with very good results and a well satisfied feeling."

GENSCHER COMMENTS ON ARMS TALKS, NATO DECISION

[Text] Bonn, 16 May (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher says he expects the American-Soviet negotiations on European medium-range missiles to begin at an early date. He told FDP officials in Bonn today that the NATO council has decided to open negotiations before the end of this year. This doesn't mean that negotiations will begin in the last few days of the year. He expects that at its winter meeting the Atlantic alliance will hear a report on the initial negotiations. They will not be easy, so no time should be lost.

The minister emphasized the importance of both parts of the NATO decision. Only an undoubted will for defense and negotiations holds out the promise of successful arms control negotiations. Whoever wants to implement only one element will endanger security and disarmament. The Federal Government and the federal chancellor can rely on the FDP's unqualified support for their policy of securing peace, he said.

'KREFELD INITIATIVE' SIGNERS SEND LETTER TO SCHMIDT

DW151128 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 15 May 81 p 4

[Open letter sent by the "Krefeld initiative" to Federal Chancellor Schmidt in Bonn on 14 May 1981]

[Text] In an open letter, the "Krefeld initiative" opponents of nuclear armament appealed to Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Bonn on Thursday to revoke approval of the stationing of new medium-range weapons in central Europe. The letter reads:

Esteemed Mr Federal Chancellor, we ask you to take notice of the fact that up to now more than 800,000 citizens of our country--including above all deputies and members of your party--have signed an appeal demanding that the Federal Government revoke its approval of the stationing of Pershing II and cruise missiles in central Europe.

It is above all due to the support our initiative received from the trade unions and churches, from culture and science, women's and youth organizations as well as from the ecological movement that this result was achieved in not quite 6 months, though the "Krefeld appeal" had been passed over in silence or slandered as "being communist infiltrated" by a majority of the press. From this, it can be gathered that in reality an even larger number of fellow citizens would desire a reexamination of the Brussels decisions of 12 December 1979.

At any rate, nothing can gloss over the fact that more and more Germans do not agree with the planned stationing of nuclear medium-range weapons in their country, all the more so since they don't consider this plan--in contrast to the official version--an acceptable response by NATO to the Soviet missile armament, which they, too, reject. But rather, they see it as the result of changes in U.S. thinking concerning nuclear warfare in which the "counterarming" weapons have become indispensable in themselves with no connection at all to the Soviet SS-20 missiles.

Considering this state of affairs and in view of the U.S. Government's openly expressed striving for supremacy, one cannot believe that it is interested in concluding the negotiations announced in Rome with a result that would make it possible to do without "counterarming."

This is why the fiction of the "dual decision" should no longer obstruct the cancellation of this armament project, all the more so since NATO, even without the land-based medium-range systems, possesses a nuclear potential "in and for Europe" which is larger than merely sufficient for reliable deterrence.

The "balance of horror" after all requires an equivalence of threatened damage and not a similarity of the means of war that are kept ready.

Based on the trust we enjoy from more than 800,000 fellow citizens and on behalf of them, we therefore appeal to you to clearly point out in your talks with the U.S. President that stationing U.S. nuclear medium-range weapons on German soil is out of the question and that, apart from this, arms control negotiations must be entered immediately and without any preconditions with the aim of achieving a mutual reduction of all so-called Eurostrategic weapons.

We address this appeal to the chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany because he is borne by the citizens of only this country, who, for this reason, can demand from the government of this country only that their wishes and fears be taken into account.

Also, millions of people in other countries of central Europe and in the United States as well, whose spokesmen, such as politicians, scientists and ranking military men address the public, likewise expect the Federal Republic of Germany to take the first step against "counterarming" because the Federal Government's stance was decisive for the passage of the Brussels decisions of 12 December 1979.

You yourself said in the past: "Besides, I believe, that one will be able to demonstrate quite successfully to the people that opponents of nuclear armament stand in the front-line together with outstanding leaders of mankind such as Albert Schweitzer or Pandit Nehru, in a frontline with more than 9,000 scientists in 40 countries of the world who through their signature have testified that they consider nuclear armament madness."

It honors you that you have thought and said this. On behalf of Germany and its neighbors, we ask you to act according to this judgment which is still valid today.

OFFICIALS HOLD TALKS WITH ROMANIA'S PUNGAN

Carstens Meeting

AU142013 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1748 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 14 May (AGERPRES)--Messages of salute were exchanged between Presidents Nicolae Ceausescu and Karl Carstens during the call paid by Vasile Pungan, minister secretary of state, on the president of the Federal Republic of Germany.

During the interview the sides appreciated the ascending evolutions of the Romanian-West German relations and reasserted the will of both sides to develop and diversify the collaboration on multiple planes between Romania and the Federal Republic of Germany.

Pointing to the special role of the summit dialogue, the sides expressed the belief that the Romanian official visit of President Karl Carstens, that is to be paid, will be an important moment for stimulating the deepening cooperation between the two countries, to the interest of both peoples, of international peace and security.

The call passed in a cordial atmosphere.

Other Talks

AU151943 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1805 GMT 15 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 15 May (AGERPRES)--During his West German visit Vasile Pungan, minister secretary of state conducted talks with Gunther van Well, secretary of state the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and met Berndt von Staden, director general at the federal chancellery.

He also called on Franz Josef Strauss, minister-president of the Bavaria land, chairman of the Christian Social Union.

In the spirit of the Romanian-West German summit understandings the sides examined aspects of the bilateral relations and the possibilities of further developing them.

BRAZILIAN PRESIDENT ARRIVES FOR 3-DAY VISIT

LD170932 Hamburg DPA in German 0905 GMT 17 May 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 17 May (DPA)--Brazilian President Joao Baptista de Oliveira Figueiredo arrived in Bonn today for a 3-day working visit. Figueiredo, who will begin his talks with the Federal Government tomorrow, was welcomed at Cologne-Bonn airport by Hans-Werner Graf Finck von Finckenstein, head of Bonn protocol, and then proceeded with his entourage to Gymnich Castle near Bonn.

FRANCOIS MITTERRAND SET TO ASSUME OFFICE 21 MAY

[Text] Paris, 15 May (AFP)--French President-elect Francois Mitterrand will take over from outgoing head of state Valery Giscard d'Estaing on May 21 at 9:30 a.m., it was announced tonight.

The announcement was made jointly by the Elysee Palace and Mr Mitterrand's [words indistinct]. It said an agreement on the date had been reached between the outgoing president's chief of staff, Jacques Wahl, and the president-elect's chief aide, Pierre Beregovoy. Negotiations were necessary because the French Constitution is imprecise about when exactly the changeover is due after an election. The French Constitutional Council ruled that Mr Giscard d'Estaing could bow out as of May 19. Mr Mitterrand had been expected to take over on the 24th at the earliest.

On the compromise date of May 21, the arrival of the new president at the Elysee will be followed by inauguration ceremonies, the communique said.

Addresses Socialists

LD151207 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 May 81 p 16

[Text] Francois Mitterrand made a speech to the Socialist deputies and Socialist members of the European Assembly in a Paris hotel on Wednesday, 13 May. He told them: "This is a very unusual meeting. I promised myself to say nothing until my investiture and not to make any statement which didn't come from the heart. I am no longer the Socialists' president, I am the entire French people's president. But I am still your friend, especially in the sphere of the major choices affecting the evolution of our society." "I will continue to feel supported by your work and your idea. Nothing will separate us."

Stressing that parliament frequently had been "unjustly attacked," he added: "I will exercise my responsibilities as president of the republic in full. Others must exercise theirs within the scope of the authority invested in them by the institutions. It is as simple as that. In a few days, you and I, each in our own sphere, will have another great responsibility when we go to the country again and ask it to give us the means of carrying out our action. Thanks largely to you, I have become the French people's president. Let's rejoice before facing the event and before having to win the day for the greater benefit of our compatriots."

Views French-Spanish Ties

LD151055 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 12 May 81 p 21

[Report on EFE 11 May interview in Paris with French President-elect Francois Mitterrand]

[Text] Paris, 11 May--The new French president believes that French-Spanish relations are "not as good as they should be" and proposes "a direct dialogue" to improve them, according to statements made to EFE.

This direct dialogue is suggested especially on the controversial issue of Spain's entry into the Common Market, "which is what is tainting these relations."

In his only remarks to the Spanish press, the newly elected French head of state presented in an exclusive interview with EFE his ideas about cooperation between the neighboring countries in foreign policy, the Mediterranean and Latin America.

[Question] What could Europe's Ten do to facilitate a lasting consolidation of Spanish democracy?

[Answer] If we want to consolidate democracy in Spain, its Common Market membership must serve more to resolve problems than to complicate them and, therefore, it is important that it be properly carried out and prepared. We are well aware of what Spain can contribute to Europe in economic and political terms and are aware of its openings toward Latin America and the Mediterranean, as well as of the wealth of its culture, and therefore its European membership is a fact. Spain already has resumed the path of democracy. What needs to be done now is to establish negotiations on clear footings.

The French head of state did not conceal that fact that "there are economic contradictions to be resolved. I and the Socialist Party have presented them in what we call proposed preconditions--agricultural, industrial and regional."

All observers agree that these conditions, affecting the reform and reorganization of markets within the EEC, are neither easy to achieve or immediate.

Therefore, Mitterrand is proposing the idea of a direct dialogue, not only between governments--which hasn't existed in a continuous form--but also between political parties, between farming and industrial representatives and even between the councils involved.

He also said that "at present, the Common Market is functioning very badly and Spain's entry could be an opportunity to improve it, which could benefit both the Spaniards and ourselves."

With regard to the chances for agreements between Spain and the EEC on the economic aspects of membership, the new French head of state said: "Such opportunities exist if both sides are aware of the problems that must be surmounted and if a real negotiation strategy is established."

Mitterrand views this strategy as something that "must attempt to guarantee both Spain's democratization and the essential transformations of EEC policies in the present crisis, which is having serious repercussions on the agricultural and regional sectors of workers affected."

[Question] Do you believe, now that the presidential elections are over, that the subject of Spain's EEC entry will be clarified and that it will be possible to adopt definitive stances?

[Answer] If what you mean is that the policy of the past 7 years has fluctuated a great deal on this issue, I agree with you. As far as I am concerned, my position has already been defined.

Francois Mitterrand's specific proposals for Spain are a dialogue "to establish what is complementary in the two countries' economies within the EEC" and also consultations on certain aspects of foreign policy.

DEFFERRE DISCUSSES NEW GOVERNMENT COMPOSITION

LD151205 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 May 81 p 16

[Text] Gaston Defferre, chairman of the Socialist group in the National Assembly, was the guest on France Inter's "Face the Public" program on Wednesday, 13 May, when he stated that the government which will replace Barre's "will comprise men and women who have accepted Francois Mitterrand's program and clearly demonstrated the fact during the election campaign." He added: "This government may, therefore, comprise not only Socialists but Left Radicals who supported Francois Mitterrand, leftwing Gaullists who also supported him and men who support the Socialist Party, while not being members of it, and who have clearly demonstrated that."

With regard to the possibility of Communist participation in the government, the mayor of Marseilles indicated: "So far, the question hasn't been settled. I think we can say that it would be difficult to have Communist ministers in this first government for this reason: Francois Mitterrand said during his campaign that, to form a government, agreement was necessary on a program--a program of government action. We don't want one of those governments we have had, especially in the last 7 years, which are doomed to ultraconservatism because the government members don't agree among themselves. There was a fundamental disagreement between the Communists and us when the joint program was broken. Now therefore--after Francois Mitterrand's installation in the Elysee--the political parties, especially the Socialists, Communists and Left Radicals, must establish contact and see whether it is possible to reach an agreement on a government program. That strikes me as common sense and even political honesty."

[Text] Paris, 15 May (AFP)--The French left is tipped to win next month's general elections according to an opinion poll by IFOP (Institut Francais d'Opinion Publique), to be published Monday by the Paris weekly LE POINT.

Of the 1,595 people polled Tuesday and Wednesday, 36 percent said they would vote Socialist, and 13 percent Communist in the first round of the general elections. With some 3.4-3.5 going to other left-wing parties, the French left could score 52 percent, the poll suggested.

In the first round of the last general elections, in 1978, the Socialists scored 22.8 percent, and the Communists 20.6 percent.

This week's poll was conducted two days after Socialist leader Francois Mitterrand won Sunday's presidential elections. As soon as he takes office next week, Mr Mitterrand is expected to disolve parliament, controlled by the right, and call general elections.

According to the poll, parties which form parliament's current majority were expected to win 39 percent of the votes in the first round of next month's elections.

The UDF, a party created around outgoing President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, would score 20.5 percent of the votes, and the neo-Gaullist RPR Party 18.5 percent. Three percent would also go to the extreme-right, the poll said. In the first round of the 1978 elections, the UDF scored 20.2 percent, and the RPR 22.4 percent. Ecologist candidates are credited with some six percent of voting intentions in the election, the poll said.

According to the poll, 37 percent believe the left will have a majority in parliament following the second round of voting in the general elections. But 27 percent believe a new majority will consist of Socialists and members of the former conservative majority.

Of those polled, 57 percent said they were rather, or very, satisfied with Sunday's election of Mr Mitterrand, while 28 percent said they were rather or very, dissatisfied.

One person in ten believes Mr Mitterrand's election will change their life for the worse, 38 percent believe the change will be for the better, and 37 percent believe there will be no change.

Asked who might best lead the right in the coming election campaign, 42 percent chose Jacques Chirac, leader of the neo-Gaullist RPR, while 31 percent opted for outgoing president Giscard d'Estaing.

The poll found that 70 percent believe there will be Communist ministers in Mr Mitterrand's government.

CHIRAC WARNS AGAINST SOCIALIST-COMMUNIST MAJORITY

LD171258 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 17 May 81

[Excerpts] An extraordinary Rally for the Republic committee meeting was held this morning and Jacques Chirac made an important speech.

[Begin Chirac recording] On 10 May, French men and women primarily showed their desire for change. They wanted a change of team, a change of policy. The results of the presidential elections being what they are, the existence of a Socialist-Communist majority within the National Assembly would deprive French political life of any balance, counterweight or safety barrier against the collectivist temptation which, unfortunately, inhabits an important faction of the leaders of the Socialist Party and, naturally, the Communist Party. It is therefore of capital importance that in the spirit and observance of the Constitution the new majority should be able to ensure for France a change without risks. These are the stakes of the legislative elections: "yes" to a change in policy, "no" to a change in society. [end recording]

CHIRAC, LECANUET ISSUE JOINT STATEMENT ON 'PACT'

[Text] On Friday, 15 May, Jean Lecanuet and Jacques Chirac were to solemnly sign a "pact" linking the two parties they lead--the UDF and RPR--with a view to the parliamentary elections in June. The two leaders announced this agreement after a 3-hour meeting in the senate between Wednesday night and Thursday morning. They issued the following joint statement: "Jacques Chirac and Jean Lecanuet met at the senate on 13 May 1981. With a view to the coming parliamentary elections, they decided to unite the efforts of all who are attached to defending the Fifth Republic's institutions and the values of freedom, responsibility and progress.

"To that end, they decided to draw up a pact which will specify the broad outlines of the future action which they will put forward for the French people's approval. This pact will be signed in the next few days. It will be signed by every candidate.

"The two parties they represent are determined to win for France. "Success depends on their agreement. This agreement has been reached. It will be expressed first in an election agreement which will take account of the situation in each constituency, either by a single candidate or by two candidates.

In the latter case, each of the two candidates must promise: not to indulge in any polemics between themselves, to stand down automatically in favor of the candidate placed in the lead by universal suffrage; to play an active part in the second round campaign in favor of the single candidate.

"Talks with a view to granting investitures to the candidates who will promise to support these principles will start on Thursday."

This joint declaration is a compromise. Back on Monday, 11 May, late in the morning, Chirac proposed that the outgoing majority sign a general agreement for single candidates. A few hours later, after talks with Giscard d'Estaing, Lecanuet announced that, out of a concern for "clarity," the UDF intended to put forward a candidate in each constituency. The UDF deputies however decided in favor of an agreement with the RPR and the drafting of a common platform. The agreement, which was announced between Wednesday night and Thursday morning, takes account of both Chirac's wish to give new dynamism to the outgoing majority's election campaign and of the Giscardian leaders' desire to preserve the current which the UDF represents.

BULLETINS ISSUED ON POPE JOHN PAUL'S CONDITION

ANSA Report

AU161402 Rome ANSA in English 0805 GMT 16 May 81

[Excerpt] Rome, 16 May (ANSA)--Despite the "regular" evolution of his health conditions and a "gradual tendency towards improvement," the post-operative condition of Pope John Paul II "is serious and concern has not subsided" and his doctors are not yet in a position to "say whether he will live," according to the chief of the hospital where the pontiff is recovering from a five-hour operation performed Wednesday evening after suffering bullet wounds in an assassination attempt.

Prof Emilio Tresalti made the statement to the press last night after the last medical bulletin was issued by the pontiff's doctor at 1700 GMT and which said that the patient was steadily improving although his temperature continued to remain above average.

The statement issued by the director of the Gemelli Polyclinic cast a dark shadow on the optimism triggered by the sixth medical bulletin announced only a few hours earlier. Tresalti said that "the major danger remains infection" which could still develop after the pope underwent abdominal surgery for multiple lesions caused by a bullet that perforated the abdominal cavity. Nevertheless, recovering in the intensive care unit of the hospital, the pope followed mass and received communion.

[Excerpt] Rome, 17 May (AFP)--Pope John Paul II, recovering from an assassination attempt Wednesday, "was active during the morning and sat up in a chair for half an hour towards noon," according to his latest medical bulletin. But he continues to have a fever and "laboratory tests do not show any modification in his state," the bulletin said.

POLICE SUSPECT TERRORIST PLOT TO KILL POPE

[Text] Rome, 15 May (ANSA)--Italian anti-terrorist police are pursuing efforts here and abroad to substantiate thinking that Mehemet Ali Agca, the Turkish national held for the shooting of Pope John Paul II Wednesday, enjoyed the cover and financing of an international terrorist organization.

Rome magistrates and police, working with anti-terrorist police in Turkey and West Germany, have reportedly come to the conclusion that the 23-year-old Agca is only a gunman for a powerful organization and that he did not carry out his attempt on the life of the pope alone, as he maintains.

In the language of the arrest order signed by Rome Public Prosecutor Achille Gallucci and Assistant Prosecutors Domenico Sica and Luciano Infelisi, the young man carried out an "attack on the figure of a head of state...with the assistance of a persons still unknown." Gallucci told newsmen today that, "for us, there is documented evidence that Mehemet Ali Agca did not act alone. He is a killer who was engaged by an international group for subversive purpose."

Though the Rome judges failed to provide further indications to back the idea that Agca had an accomplice, the thinking that he moved with the cover and financing of some organization was substantiated by further probes into his movements around Europe and the financial means available to him since he fled Turkey in the winter of 1979.

The false passport he travelled on, after his escape from a Turkish prison where he was under a sentence of death for the killing of a leftwing journalist in February 1979 bears the visa stamps of Bulgaria, West Germany, Switzerland, Spain, Italy and Hungary. The passport is in the name of Faruq Ozgun.

As far as has been determined, Agca was never short of cash and, according to investigators, the convicted killer could count on an income of close to one hundred dollars per day. As no checks or checking account have been traced to Agca, it is thought that pickup points in a number of European cities had been arranged to keep him in cash. "There can be no discussion on the fact that he enjoyed protection and complicity," one police official said and added, "but on this point he is keeping his mouth shut".

Police are also following up two other leads in the country today. One centers on a contact Agca is said to have had in Perugia, where he was enrolled in the university for foreign students in the central Italian city, where he was reportedly recently seen with another Turkish national.

Rome police are asking for the cooperation of their colleagues in Palermo to determine whether Agca was in the Sicilian city in December and picked up money accredited to an account in his name in a Palermo bank.

AFP Report

NC161230 Paris AFP in English 1222 GMT 16 May 81

[By Serge Mannucci]

[Text] Perugia, Central Italy, 16 May (AFP)--Police investigating the background of Mehmet Ali Agca, the right-wing Turk arrested after the assassination attempt on Pope John Paul II on Wednesday, are concentrating on the university for foreigners here where Agca was registered as a student. They have already interviewed the university's 40 Turks without result in the search for possible accomplices, and university sources said they were preparing to go through the files of the thousands of students.

"Two African students" and a "young blonde woman" were variously said by different sources to be on the wanted list, but detectives seemed to face a mammoth task, as some 10,000 students a year pass through the 18th century Gallenga Palace which houses the university.

Although Perugia is small and most students are in lodgings with local people, the university is an ideal centre for illegal immigrants and, by implication, terrorists. Most students are from the Third World, signing on for three-month courses for a fee of 150,000 lira (130 dollars). Registration can be obtained by post and is a useful aid to obtaining the entry visa to Italy required for visitors from certain countries. After that it is only necessary to put in an appearance at Perugia to collect the necessary residence permit before disappearing, as Agca did. The university authorities are well aware that hundreds of students, including Congolese, Egyptians, Hungarians, Libyans, Iraqis and Mexicans, do not follow the courses in Italian language and culture wholeheartedly, but they cause no trouble and cannot be forced to attend.

All 40 Turks here have denied any knowledge of Agca, with one exception, but this is not surprising, given their unusual habit of avoiding each other, unlike the other nationalities which tend to stick together.

One of the group explained that with the "difficult" situation at home Turks who met each other abroad did not always know with whom they were dealing and preferred to play safe. The exception is Aytul Endican, 21, who rememberd showing Agca the way to the Gallenga Palace. She told police he was well dressed but noticed nothing unusual about him and did not see him a second time.

SOARES REPORT TO PS CONGRESS URGES RECONCILIATION

LD141553 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 9 May 81 pp 3-4

[Text] In his report [to the Socialist Party (PS) congress], which covers party activity from 1979 to 1981 and whose dominant tone is one of criticism and self-criticism, [PS Secretary General] Mario Soares calls for the "pacification of internal tensions" with a view to "contributing to the strengthening of unity-through-clarification" of the Socialist Party. Pointing out mistakes and shortcomings in organization, he asserts specifically that the secretariat's activity, as well as his own and that of other national bodies, has not been such over the last 2 years as to cause them to appear "haughtily self-satisfied." "For my part," he stressed," I accept my share of responsibility."

Mario Soares did not read out his report; he simply presented it by highlighting the most prominent points. The document, which was only made public on the morning of the congress, is one of the documents distributed to the delegates and the news media, along with an "annex" containing a letter from Antonio Macedo about his duties as acting secretary general and reports by the national secretariat members responsible for labor (Maldonado Gonelha) and international relations (Rui Mateus).

The conclusions of the national auditing committee's reports, a note on the party weekly (ACCAO SOCIALISTA), the communique on the committee organizing the congress and the outgoing secretariat's report, on which we report elsewhere, also were presented in an annex.

These documents will not be voted on but, Mario Soares said, "I deemed it necessary to make them public as something important." Moreover, the entire speech which Soares delivered in presenting the report was to the effect that "there is nothing to hide" and "we will not discuss the past."

"This plural committee will be a guarantee of this congress' impartiality and plurality," he said, extending a special greeting to the committee directing the proceedings. Soares also greeted General Ramalho Eanes--"the elected president of the entire Portuguese people"--the Council of the Revolution, the representatives of the parties of the Socialist International attending the proceedings and the delegates of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola, the Mozambique Liberation Front and the African Independence Party of Guinea and Cape Verde, announcing the presence of Spanish Socialist Workers Party Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez on the last day of the congress.

Soares also made a call for calm, asserting that "over and above all our differences, we are socialists, we all have the duty of socialist fraternity." This call was heard in the report itself, in hoping that this congress will be "the congress of pacification of internal tensions," contributing to the "strengthening of unity-through-clarification, once the differences have been accepted and resolved by the congress delegates' free vote, which will undoubtedly have to define the PS collective will."

"This result can only be achieved by accepting as normal and even necessary the confrontation of ideas and plans for organization and the inevitability (which must not be dramatized) of certain excesses of zeal and enthusiasm in disseminating and advocating them," the document emphasizes. Broaching party activity, whose appraisal he wanted to be "as factual and objective an account as possible," Mario Soares acknowledged that to a large extent "the failures are due to short term imperatives," although not disregarding "shortcomings in organization, less judicious choices of personnel and the concentration of too many tasks and responsibilities in a few hands."

Referring to the political events which influenced party activity, the PS secretary general stated that they were "frustrating and constituted challenges not always easy to meet," resulting in "internal dejection and disputes." Among these events, he highlighted: "The Mota Pinto government's antiparty and restorationist policy"; the failure to form a PS government with majority parliamentary support (the PS plus independent social democratic deputies) and the consequent dissolution of the assembly; the formation of the Democratic Alliance, its success in the interim election and the formation of the Sa Carneiro government, with "its demagogic electoral policy"; the formation of the Republican and Socialist Front (FRS) and the determining of an election strategy "with relative sacrificing of PS identity" and its defeat in the 1980 election; "the lengthy and difficult negotiations" which preceded the decision to give General Ramalho Eanes Socialist support, the latter's statements at the 14 October 1980 press conference and the secretary general's decision to withdraw his support from him in opposition to the national committee's decision; "the death of Sa Carneiro and Amaro da Costa and the problems which this created at the level of the Democratic Alliance and of the country"; the "democratic decompression" resulting from General Eanes' election victory, with the consequent "exacerbation of some internal tensions among leading PS cadres"; and last, "the psychological atmosphere of internal guerrila warfare" during the precongress stage and the polemical dispute of the delegate elections.

"Following this sequence of events, it would be a miracle if we were satisfied with ourselves and in agreement on the reasons for our difficulties," Soares said.

Pointing out the causes of the mistakes, Soares referred in particular to "defects and shortcomings in organizational structure"--something which, in his opinion, explains the fact that all the motions submitted at the congress are accompanied by proposals for radical amendment of the party rules. They are shortcomings which were exacerbated by the concentration of cadres and services in the 1979 and 1980 elections.

However, not everything was bad, in Mario Soares' opinion. "Much that is positive has been done," he said, proceeding to list the many actions carried out in the various fields (political, party and parliamentary) over the last 2 years.

Mario Soares did not fail to broach two issues: that of the setting up of the FRS and that of the party's financial situation. With respect to the former, the PS secretary general, although not denying the front's potential, refuses to endorse the overoptimistic view of the secretariat's report, when it describes the FRS as "a popular and powerful force," and as an "electoral coalition with multiplying effects and not those of the mere addition of the individual influences of the parties comprising it." As for the financial situation, Mario Soares stated that as a result of the elections, the PS has been left "financially exhausted, indebted and with onerous burdens for the future." Hence, in his opinion, it is necessary to create new sources of finance for the PS.

GOVERNMENT NAMES NEW AMBASSADOR TO MOROCCO

LD071501 Lisbon in Portuguese to Timor, Macao and Australia 1100 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] The Government of Morocco has conveyed its approval of the nomination of Dr Fernando Delfim Maria Lopes Vieira as Portugal's ambassador to Rabat. He will replace Dr Jose Joaquim de Mena Mendonca, who has been there for the past 7 years.

Dr Lopes Vieira was until his latest nomination Portugal's ambassador to Budapest. He was posted there in November 1974, after holding diplomatic posts in Thailand, Italy, Britain, Denmark, the Netherlands and Switzerland.

CALVO-SOTELO: MILITARY 'NO PROBLEM' IN SPAIN

LD151231 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 9 May 81 pp 10-11 (review section)

[Teresa Presas interview in Lisbon with Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo; date not given]

[Excerpts] [Calvo-Sotelo] Please choose a topic other than the military. Journalists greatly like to exploit this issue in a sensationalist manner: Well, the fact is that it constitutes no problem in Spain nowadays. I must say that so far I have not undergone the slightest pressure from the armed forces. So leave them in peace where they are.

[Question] And where are they?

[Answer] The dangerous elements are in prison, and you may rest assured that they will stay there for a long time. As for the relations which they maintain with the outside world, they are the same as any other detainee and depend on the judge. The government cannot interfere or demand special measures with respect to them, since the judiciary, as in any democracy, is independent of the executive. But I can tell you that Tejero will not leave us under 20 years. And he will be sent very far away; we are considering an island, where he can be more peaceful. [answer ends]

Calvo-Sotelo asserts that he regards as "newspaper stuff" the Spanish press' recent revelations according to which another coup in Spain is imminent. "The proof is that I am here, calmly spending the weekend, and I have not spoken with Madrid since I arrived here. As you can see, I am not at all concerned."

And yet preventive measures in the barracks were decreed on the occasion of Tejero Molina's birthday.

"I do not mean by this that the coup was a joke. They were very grave and anxious moments."

According to Calvo-Sotelo, the civilians involved in the coup have been identified and are under surveillance. So, in the Spanish prime minister's opinion, the expression "watched-over democracy," which appeared in the news media following the 23 February abortive coup, makes no sense. On hearing it, Calvo-Sotelo immediately corrects his interlocutor and speaks of a "watchful democracy."

Another Transitional Government?

With Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo's investiture, approved by an absolute majority in a second vote held after the military uprising, greater political consensus was hoped for with respect to the government's activity, which would mark the end of a period of transition and the beginning of the country's real political organization. However, 2 months later, opinion polls published at the beginning of April were recording a significant fall in popularity for the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD]—the governing party--in favor of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE]--the largest opposition party. So it is legitimate at this moment to speak of a weak government.

"Life is always transition," the Spanish prime minister commented. "Even with respect to my government, we are 18 months away from legislative elections, and after they are held everything could change."

The new UCD government rejected from the outset the PSOE proposal of a coalition, preferring a "policy of consultation" on the major state issues, such as the causes of the attack, terrorism and the consolidation of the autonomy process.

With respect to the last-mentioned aspect, Calvo-Sotelo met 30 April with Felipe Gonzalez to discuss the central government's relations with the autonomies--specifically, the role of the government representatives, the transference and status of public officials and a new overall political course with respect to those regions.

State and Regions

"In the autonomy process priority should be given to the state and not, as hitherto, the autonomous regions--that is, a state which includes autonomous regions and not autonomous regions which form a state."

The appointment of an expert on administrative law--Prof Garcia Enterria--to study these problems was agreed between the two leaders. The report is to be drafted within 2 weeks and will be followed by talks with the various parties.

I do not know as yet whether the discussion of that study will be conducted simultaneously with all the parties or with each individually. It is frequently easier to reach an agreement when there are fewer different stances involved."

Patience Toward EEC

The principal issue for opposition to the current Spanish Government lies essentially in the country's economic situation, which is gravely affected by increasing inflation and unemployment affecting 1.5 million people, representing 11 percent of the working population. As for Spain's entry into the European Community, which is also advocated by a broad section of the opposition, the steps recently taken by the Spanish prime minister suggest that in the neighboring country, too, the issue has ceased to be regarded as the "priority of priorities," and the government's effort seems to be centered more on accelerating entry into the Atlantic alliance.

"It could be said that we are impatient to enter NATO and patient with respect to entry into the EEC. The European Community currently has 'family' problems to resolve which, as such, do not concern us. But it is an issue which interests me greatly, since I devoted myself to it for 2 years."

Felipe Gonzalez: A Great Statesman

A man of liberal monarchist tradition, Calvo-Sotelo made a point at the very beginning of his mandate of emphasizing the points of agreement between his viewpoints and those of the socialists, while at the same time revealing a tough intransigence with respect to the communists. He now asserts:

"My relations with Felipe Gonzalez are excellent. At the personal level he is a very affable and brilliant man. At the political level he is an interlocutor with whom you can engage in dialogue, and he has above all a noteworthy sense of the state, and this is not the case with other members of his party."

Calvo-Sotelo categorically rejects the assertion that his government is more conservative than the previous government.

"I have 15 ministers, of whom only one did not belong to Adolfo Suarez' government team. As for the divorce law, it has been approved in full in the congress and will now go through in the Senate. If I had wished, I could have prevented this from happening. And as for the university autonomy law which created so much controversy, it was Felipe Gonzalez himself who suggested to me that we forget it, since it was technically bad. So I cannot see in what way I am more conservative than my predecessors."

CARRILLO DELIVERS REPORT TO PCE CENTRAL COMMITTEE

LD150923 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 8-14 May 81 pp 9-13

[Apparent text of PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo 5 May report to PCE Central Committee: 'The Threat of the Broad Right"]

[Text] I will try to be brief because I believe that the aspects of the situation which we examined at the previous central committee meeting are basically still the same and also because this meeting's agenda is full enough to prompt me not to overburden it with a long policy report.

I believe I could start by saying that Spain is now experiencing a syndrome connected with 23 February. Some 2 and 1/2 months have gone by since then and we must recognize that the record of this period is basically not at all positive. The major popular demonstrations which took place on 27 February, practicularly in Madrid and Valencia, have not had the sequel on the political plane needed to surmount the situation created by the attempted coup d'etat. Following these demonstrations, an effort was made to maitain the impetus for joint political activity among the four state-based parties which participated in them. A number of meetings were held to this end, but the Popular Alliance very soon split away from the interparty body which planned them and now the body is in fact practically stagnating.

A number of joint meetings have been held in Madrid Province, attended by figures from the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD], the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] and our own party. In the youth field, where perhaps the results have been most positive, the youth organizations of the four parties are conducting significant political action in defense of the Constitution. A few days ago in Madrid, there was a youth meeting organized by them to this end. But in general, I believe that it can be said that this impetus for joint action among the constitutional forces has not developed, has not been maintained, as the scale of the 27 February demonstrations might have prompted one to hope.

Thus, the result is that the recovery of morale which this demonstration represented for the people's and democratic forces in many places has declined and the 1 May demonstrations showed that an even lower ebb has been reached in morale, even among the leftwing forces.

Calvo-Sotelo Moving Further And Further Right

In the institutional field, the lull, the interruption of this impetus for a response to the coup d'etat, has been reflected in the fact that Calvo-Sotelo's single party government has remained and, as we forecast at the previous central committee meeting, is apparently inclining increasingly toward implementing the policy desired by the Spanish broad right.

In fact, we don't know whether we are dealing with a government which is really governing or with a cardboard government behind which other power forces are determining the country's political course. We aren't sure that we are not dealing with a transitional team paving the way for other political solutions, which might or might not be the coalition government which the PSOE and we have proposed as the solution to our present situation.

It must be said that Calvo-Sotelo, having formed his government and aware of its weakness, did propose what has been dubbed a policy of consultation. And in the only conversation which he has had with us, this proposal took the specific form of the formation of two committees--one political, the other economic. The political committee in fact stemmed from a suggestion made by the head of state on the night of 24 February, when he met with the leaders of the state-based political parties.

At this meeting, which was attended by Suarez, but not by Calvo-Sotelo, and by the leaders of the PSOE, the UCD, the Popular Alliance and our own party, the head of state suggested the need for an understanding among the political parties to tackle which at that meeting was called problems of state. The point was that the coup had created a situation in which the civilian government had been severely weakenend and an effort for cooperation among all the political parties was needed to resolve the situation.

A committee of this kind could discuss matters such as guarantees for protecting the democratic system, issues such as the antiterrorist struggle, the autonomies and unemployment in a fully responsible manner, and some of them with the discretion which at that time was considered necessary to adopt effective measures without prompting negative reactions. In other words, basically, the idea of a political committee, together with the idea of an economic committee, was a kind of reconstruction of something like the Moncloa pacts, with the difference that the formation of these committees meant the existence of a supervisory body, a body which would monitor the implementation of the decisions taken by it. Although we felt and still feel that a coalition government would be preferable, we believe that at the present time it could be a useful temporary solution which would make it possible to restore the authority of the civilian government and to make progress along the path of consolidating the democratic process, with all its shortcomings.

UCD-PSCE Consultations

But the fact is, after these conversations, there has been no political committee and, in practice, no economic committee either. Neither of these committees has functions and we as a party have not participated in any policy of consultation, nor do we believe that in fact any such policy of consultation exists. It seems that the government and the PSOE have indeed consulted on certain topics. Clearly, the government and the PSOE reached an agreement to form the technical committee on the subject of the autonomies.

In conversations with Pio Cabanillas [prime minister], on the one hand, and Felipe [Gonzalez, PSOE secretary general], on the other, it emerged that neither was very sure of this committee's usefulness or whether it would resolve anything. Nevertheless, they had reached an agreement to form it. This committee apparently is drafting documents and I don't believe--so far, we have received no detailed information--that it is helping in the least to resolve a problem which is fundamentally political, rather than technical.

It also seems clear that the PSOE and the government consulted at least on the subject of the law of states of alarm, emergency and siege, because in the committee debate the PSOE's stance was in defense of the bill. In other words, the PSOE has to some extent entered into something other than the policy of consultation originally offered by Calvo-Sotelo, namely, a policy of partial and temporary agreements with Calvo-Sotelo. without realizing, I believe, that this policy is very dangerous for the PSOE itself. In this way, instead of bringing the possibility of coalition governments nearer, it is making it even more remote, since if the PSOE offers its outside cooperation in the measures which the government considers necessary, Calvo-Sotelo will feel no need to include it in the government and the PSOE could thus bear the full cost of a policy of participation without reaping any of the benefits which it could provide.

Because, moreover, as I said at the beginning, it is becoming increasingly clear that Calvo-Sotelo is moving increasingly toward implementing what we have called the policy of the broad right. I would sum up this policy of the broad right as follows: to try to circumvent the formal aspects of the coup d'etat, to achieve by more or less constitutional means the formation of a rightwing government supported by the Reagan administration and by the military and financial powers that be and to seek, on the basis of this backing, electoral support to legitimize the establishment of this government of the broad right.

Calvo-Sotelo's sudden visit to Bonn, designed both to hasten Spain's entry into NATO and to outmaneuver the PSOE, is, I believe, one of the most decisive factors in this approach which I ascribe to Calvo-Sotelo.

Toward Regressive Modification of Constitution?

I believe that one cannot now rule out the possibility of this approach developing even with a view to a modification of item 8 of the Constitution, an attempt to introduce a regressive amendment to the electoral law and, taking advantage of the lack of unity on the left and among the progressive forces and of the psychological and moral effects of the coup d'etat among the public, to attempt, I repeat, to establish a rightwing majority that will restrict democratic freedoms and the autonomies. I believe that this is the approach which we are witnessing and against which we must make a stand.

At the same time, I believe that we must not underestimate the fact that all the information available to us suggests that putschist preparations continue. The putschists have an important factor in their favor, namely, a weak government lacking in determination to bring the weight of the law to bear on them, an increase in overlenient attitudes, the psychological depression of the leftwing forces and the campaign which the putschists are conducting in the country, particularly in the army. This is a campaign of misinformation designed to show that the coup was prepared with the agreement of the head of state and that the head of state betrayed the soldiers at the last moment, and which is even trying to implicate the PSOE in the coup, on the basis of Mugica's ambiguous conversations with General Armada last year, which have been the subject of speculations and on the basis of which Tejero has gone as far as to assert that PSOE members would have stood up in the Cortes to support the formation of the government headed by Armada, which would have resulted from one of the forms of the coup.

I believe that as far as the king is concerned, the maneuver is clear: to cause a confrontation between the army, on the one hand, and the king, on the other, and to spread suspicion and doubt about the king's behavior at the time in question.

I believe that we cannot and must not be misled by this provocation because Tejero's insinuations and statements about the king's part in the coup are entirely inconsistent with the pattern of the coup and frankly conflict with what happened on the night of 23 February.

This being the case, I believe that our opportunities for action are relatively limited. They must be directed toward isolating the putschists and requesting and demanding that they be severely punished, because a failure to punish them would provide the go-ahead for preparations for another coup d'etat.

I believe that the provocation which we witnessed yesterday in Madrid and Barcelona, where we saw the surprising reappearance of the 1 October Armed Revolutionary Group [GRAPO], which Ballesteros and Interior Ministry authorities had dismissed as finished only a few days previously (this provocation, like other attacks attributed to GRAPO, claimed as its victim a general of liberal leanings) is an indication that in various ways the conditions for a repetition of the coup d'etat are still being prepared.

This could be used by Calvo-Sotelo to try and justify his NATO membership policy and concessions to the military and financial powers that be and even to the church hierarchy and to portray this policy as the only way to prevent another coup d'etat.

I believe that the fact that Calvo-Sotelo has not continued to hold talks with us but has nevertheless again talked at length with Felipe Gonzalez and remained in contact with the PSOE is an attempt to win the PSOE over to this viewpoint or at least to neutralize the PSOE so that it doesn't oppose this policy of the broad right.

Lack of Mobilization in the Parties

I believe that this, very generally and very briefly, is the situation confronting us. What has our stance been with respect to this situation since 23 February? We have tried to continue the action of the constitutional parties, peoples action and the mobilization of the masses, though, we must admit, without any significant results. Moreover, I would like to add my doubt that the party as a whole has properly espoused this approach, in other words, that the party at all levels has mobilized to promote and implement this approach. The fact is that we often criticize the methods of imposing policy from above, the institutional policy, we point to the need for more mobilization but I believe that in practice in most cases we wait for the problems to be resolved from above and that the party as a whole is not following, is not providing the followup and specific action in this direction. Perhaps the weakness in this connection is being influenced at the moment by the fact that we are in the midst of preparations for our 10th congress, that we are very busy with the subjects of the 10th congress and that there is something of a conflict between preparing for a party congress under such conditions and at the same time the need to concentrate all the party's strength on political action that will enable us to withstand the pressure of the forces of the extreme right and the broad right.

Nevertheless, it seems clear to me that we must try to make a major effort to combine the precongress debate and activity in preparation for the congress with political action in connection with the situation that we are facing, and moreover that we must try to complete this precongress debate as soon as possible and hold the congress as soon as possible so as to concentrate properly on the problems of the country's specific political situation.

PCE's Parliamentary Activity

Our activity has also developed in the institutions. Specifically, in parliament: here in the weeks following the coup, we approved the penal code reform bill, modifying and improving it. I believe that we did what was right because the penal code reform bill in its final form is a positive one and that the problem lies not in the law but in the government.

We also have adopted a positive "yes, but" stance not on the government's approach to the law of harmonization but on the agreement reached among the political forces--an agreement which rejected the approval of the government's approach and which simply referred to the topics which this law might embrace and which should be covered in further bills presented to the congress of deputies.

We did issue a reply to those questions, expressing several reservations, because we believe that although the method pursued by the government is not ideal, some of the points raised, such as the regulation of the use of flags, which seems unimportant but which we know has been extensively used by the extreme right, had to be resolved.

Obviously, if these bills are unsatisfactory when they are presented, we will vote against them without our initial answer constituting any commitment to approve them.

Then came the law of states of alarm, emergency and siege. Since there has been some dispute among us on this topic, I would like to say that the need for this law from the constitutional viewpoint is beyond dispute. This law is envisaged in the constitution (and in all democratic states, there are laws which allow for such states of emergency) and, I repeat, in principle we aren't opposed to such a law, which could even be necessary for a government comprising us communists, in the face of rightwing forces using unconstitutional and illegal struggle methods against the power of the state. Our position on this law isn't just one of principle by any means, as some comrades have believed.

During the debates on the bill at plenary sessions of the Congress of Deputies, the communist group secured major changes and amendments to the substance of the law. The most important of these was undoubtely the approval of the verbal amendment presented on our behalf by Nicolas Sartorius, excluding strikes in the public services as a reason for declaring a state of alarm. But apart from this, we also succeeded in ensuring that a state of emergency would not imply the paralysis of the activity, work and meetings of political parties, trade unions and social organizations, which was possible under the original version of the bill.

We also managed to ensure that this organic law makes it clear that parliament can modify government bills declaring states of emergency or siege.

Nevertheless, despite achieving these results, the communist parliamentary group and the party's standing committee decided against voting for this bill and it took this decision because during the weeks subsequent to 23 February we came to realize that the government was introducing a number of bills, all of which in practice were designed to limit freedoms and exercised a demoralizing influence on the democratic forces. So when the time came to vote, we decided to abstain, to explain our position and to explain it basically in terms of the foregoing, because the approach pursued since the coup had been an approach which didn't strengthen the morale of the democratic forces and which didn't create agreeable prospects for these forces. Serious and unfounded misgivings emerged about the government's will to respect the autonomy processes and to continue implementing the autonomy policy and there were serious doubts about the approach of the whole of the government's policy. I believe that this stance on the part of the parliamentary group, in accordance with the party's standing committee, was a correct one, which encouraged some reflection within the socialist party on the path along which the government might lead to us if things continued as they were.

Nevertheless, I don't yet know what conclusions the PSOE will reach in this reflection. I feel worried about Felipe Gonzalez' statement that, irrespective of the government's stance on NATO, they were prepared to pursue the policy of consultation--a policy of consultation, there is no such thing. If anything, it would be a policy of outside PSOE cooperation with the government.

We have decided to convene another meeting of the PCE Executive Committee because we believe that there is a need for a very serious examination to see whether we can reach an agreement on what form a real policy of consultation should take. I believe that in any case the Communist Party cannot commit itself to a so-called policy of consultation that doesn't exist. And if the PSOE decides to do so, we must distance ourselves from that stance, without adopting an aggressive anti-PSOE attitude.

In this connection, there is something that I would like to clarify, namely, that I didn't intend this distancing by the party from what could be a substitute for a policy of consultation to apply to the trade unions. In other words, in my opinion, the Workers Commissions Confederation must make every effort not to be excluded from any negotiations that may be held on the subject of umemployment--on condition, of course, that it doesn't approve the negotiations if they produce negative results. But I believe that in the trade union field, we must remain cautious and make an even greater effort than in other fields, to ensure that the workers commissions participate in whatever negotiations are held in connection with unemployment and other socioeconomic topics.

Lowest Ebb of Democratic Change

It is certain, and I believe that nobody is unaware, that we are facing a frankly difficult situation. We said at our previous central committee meeting that we had reached the lowest ebb in the process of democratic change, and I believe that the events of the past 2 long months confirm it.

This being so, we must formulate a policy of resistance whereby we will strive to surmount the situation so as to restore the initiative of the democratic forces, the people's initiative, and I believe that in this connection our central committee must--pardon me for repeating myself--formulate at this meeting a specific offer to all the democratic constitutional parties to set aside the individual aims of each party, each party's specific objectives, until the 1983 elections with a view to reaching an agreement on unemployment, the development of the autonomy process, terrorism and the suppression of putschism and the approach to the democratic reform of the state administration.

People will say: Well, we have been proposing this in one form or another for some time. I believe that we must continue to present this objective despite the obstacles to attaining it, which I believe are clear. And I believe that on the plane of the nationalities and regions the need for this is as great as at the state level. For the autonomy process and the established autonomies are still weak enough for neither the Basque Nationalist Party nor democratic convergence to be able to defend them on its own.

Leftwing Unity Guarantee of Democracy

I believe that we must try to reach an agreement on this proposal first and foremost with the PSOE; also with the UCD and I would say also with the nationalist parties. This would mean shelving the subject of NATO, and I believe that we must be very firm about this. This firmness would be based not on any bloc interests but on Spain's national interests. While proposing the shelving of this subject, this meeting should also reach an agreement on a campaign of explanation at all levels, a mass campaign, on this subject of cooperation among the democratic forces, of the offer that we are making on the subject of NATO and on the need, in the last resort, to make it the subject of a referendum.

I believe that the first move in this direction must be a meeting with the PSOE leadership, and I believe that we must strive to ascertain with the PSOE the left's real chances of altering the course of events. If the left reaches an agreement and acts united, it will be very difficult to form a government of the broad right and also to carry out a coup d'etat.

I believe that unless the PSOE makes a clear option for joint action with us, it runs the risk that Calvo-Sotelo's hope that the PSOE will take a long time reaching the government, will become a reality. I believe that we must not underestimate at all the effects of early elections now on the leftwing forces, the PSOE and ourselves--effects which could be negative.

In other words, we must strive to reach an agreement with the PSOE. And though it may seem like a peripheral topic, a matter not very directly related to what we are talking about, I believe that throughout this struggle for the unity of the leftwing and progressive forces in our country and Europe the Workers Commissions Confederation's entry into the European Trade Unions Confederation is a very important objective.

Provocative Anticommunist Campaign

I believe that we must all be aware of something that could happen, which some people are trying to make happen, namely, the attempt to ostracize the Communist Party--and not only to ostracize the PCE but to launch a provocative anticommunist campaign in Spain. And it seems to me that we can already see this attempt in the exaggerated and provocative character which the stance which the government is rapidly adopting toward the Soviet state could assume.

I believe that we must distinguish between the independent policy that the party must pursue and guarantee at all costs--an independent policy that must accept that if a foreign diplomat in this country is found conducting espionage he will be expelled--and the attempt that the government seems to be making to limit, to reduce the presence of Soviet representatives in Spain, to create a degree of tension in Spain's relations with the Soviet Union that would in fact be simply a concession and a capitulation to the Reagan administration's demands. In other words, we must differentiate between the two aspects of the issue and realize that in this stance there is also a desire to direct and promote an anticommunist campaign in the country, directed primarily against us, the Communist Party, so as to isolate and ostracize the PCE.

I believe that these intentions aren't easy to realize but of course everything will depend partly on our position and also on us not underestimating the danger of isolation. The danger of isolation is real.

We are aware that the situation within the left and within the party in this country is now a very difficult one. We must make an effort to bring the entire party into line with the political tasks of the moment. In fact, if our effort in connection with this proposal failed, we would have to consider lowering our sights somewhat with a view to coordinating and jointly mobilizing the leftwing and progressive forces and also with a view to a resumption of democratic political activity by a number of people who participated in the anti-Francoist struggle, but who have been ostracized during this democratic period. I believe that as long as we are in the midst of a congress process, like it or not, the party will have greater difficulties in implementing stimulating and developing at all levels--not only from above, I repeat once again--a policy of initiative among the leftwing and democratic forces.

I would end by saying that this is a difficult situation, from which we will emerge, which we will resolve, but which will test the party members' communist steadfastness and in which we must be mentally and politically prepared to withstand all the real difficulties which we will encounter until we reverse the situation, until we change the objective conditions in which the democratic process now finds itself in Spain.

PSUC REAFFIRMS EUROCOMMUNIST STANCE, INDEPENDENCE

LD180800 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 18 May 81

[Text] In Barcelona, the Catalan communists [PSUC; Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia] spent the weekend debating a matter of such political importance as whether to return to the definition of Eurocommunist, which was rejected and removed [from the congress theses] at their recent fifth congress.

The gap that opened up between the PSUC and the PCE of Santiago Carrillo, who is currently in Romania with his friend, Ceausescu, was an important point of reference in the debate.

The PSUC Central Committee this morning announced its resolution, according to which the party reaffirmed its Eurocommunist nature. It also reiterated the PSUC's full independence in working out its international strategy and confirmed its belief in the existence of one culture and community in Catalonia. The resolution was approved by 63 votes in favor, with 33 against. The PSUC has called a conference for 10-12 July to debate and approve the document, and also to debate and approve the materials for the 10th PCE Congress scheduled for July, and to elect delegates for it.

POLICE STOP USSR OFFICIALS AT AIRPORT, FREE SAILOR

LD161631 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1500 GMT 16 May 81

[Text] Officials from the USSR Embassy in Madrid attempted to get a Soviet sailor, who last week asked for political asylum in Spain, out of the country this morning. Thanks to intervention by the police, the attempt did not succeed. Shortly after 0900 this morning, police on duty at Barajas airport noticed the Soviet sailor accompanied by several of his embassy's officials. The Soviet group was confronted by the frontier police as they were about to board an Aeroflot plane for Moscow. The police then invited the Soviet officials to leave the airport. Reliable sources have said that the Soviet sailor will have to make a statement alone, without any witnesses or coercion of any kind, on whether he wishes to uphold his request for asylum or whether he wishes to renounce it.

COMMISSIONS MEET ON SPANISH-U.S. TREATY RENEWAL

LD131130 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] The commissions which will negotiate the renewal of the Spanish-U.S. treaty of friendship and cooperation have now begun a series of contacts to set conditions for holding the talks. The Spanish Government now has the documents ready to put forward for negotiation. On the Spanish side, it has been indicated that attempts will be made to ensure that the new treaty brings greater advantages to the country by increasing American cooperation in various fields. The two great areas in which Spain will be negotiating will be defense and cooperation in science, technology and education.

PAPER REPORTS SECRET AKEL-KIPRIANOU AGREEMENT

NC161721 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 16 May 81 pp 1,

[Text] AKEL has decided to advance its goals for political and social transformation immediately after the parliamentary elections. Cross-checked reports by I DHILINI say that the AKEL leadership will demand--if it has not yet done so--the cooperation of the president of the republic and of his party in exchange for Mr Kiprianou's stay in office for another 5-year period.

In any case, it is a fact that a secret agreement has been concluded between AKEL and the president for cooperation in the House and the government after the parliamentary elections. According to our authoritative reports, this is the reason for the termination of AKEL's flirting with Tasos [Papadhopoulos, Center Union Party leader].

According to the secret agreement, President Kiprianou has undertaken to do the following:

1. To proceed with the reshuffling of his council of ministers in order to remove those ministers who are disliked by AKEL.
2. To remove from various posts those individuals who are accused of having been involved in indecorous activities--this would make the president appear to be proceeding with a change in the established order of things.

AKEL, for its part, with the trade unions, the farmers organizations and so forth, which it is controlling, will seek the creation of serious labor unrest by submitting extravagant and unreasonable demands. In this way it would cause a serious showdown between employers and employees, to be followed by a wave of unemployment.

Further, AKEL will demand of the president the nationalization, first of all, of a number of vital enterprises and later the nationalization of other smaller private enterprises, thus creating the basis for the "communisticization" of Cyprus. Along with the nationalizations AKEL will also demand the taking of a number of legislative measures.

The existence of a secret AKEL-Kiprianou agreement is proved by the fact that the [AKEL] leadership has withdrawn all the well-known remarks it has made about Mr Kiprianou. As is well known, AKEL had accused the president of being incapable, indecisive, of having committed various mistakes and so forth. According to authoritative reports, these remarks were withdrawn during a special AKEL Central Committee meeting at which self-criticism was carried out. This is why the AKEL minutes do not include the charges that the AKEL secretary general, the deputy secretary general and other leading members have made against the president.

Report Denied

NC171407 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 17 May 81 p 14

[Statement issued by the Government of Cyprus in Nicosia--date not given]

[Text] The Democratic Rally papers are continuing and intensifying their slanderous campaign against the president of the republic. They have carried unfounded and false allegations that are the figment of the imagination. Today's issue of I DHILINI reports that a secret agreement has allegedly been concluded with AKEL for the nationalization of industries and firms after the parliamentary elections.

We view this allegation as unworthy of any attention because no agreement, either of this or of any other nature, has been concluded between the president of the republic and AKEL. The Democratic Party has also issued a similar denial.

PAPER CALLS FOR CARE IN NICOSIA-ATHENS RELATIONS

NC110912 Nicosia I DHIMOKRATIKI in Greek 11 May 81 p 2

[From the "Democratic Comment" column: "Care and Responsibility"]

[Text] Over-stressing reports--which have even been denied--about an alleged rift between Athens and Nicosia most certainly fails to serve any national interest. On the contrary, this damages relations and develops a climate of suspicion which can be destructive to our struggle.

Such questions must be handled with much more responsibility and in a positive spirit. Even if a rift or a misunderstanding did exist, it is our duty to contribute toward smoothing things out instead of creating tension. We are not in favor of concealing developments and in ignoring reality. In this case, however, what is needed is wise handling and a careful and constructive approach by each one of us.

DENKTAS REPLIES TO LATEST KIPRIANOU STATEMENTS

TA141449 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] President Denktas has said that the progress in the Cypriot communal talks depends on radical changes in the Greek Cypriot attitude. The president was commenting on statements made by the Greek Cypriot leader Mr Kiprianou while receiving the credentials of the Italian Ambassador to Cyprus.

President Denktas said that as long as the Greek Cypriots keep forgetting their [words indistinct] on the Turkish Cypriot community in 1963 and their 11 years of efforts till 1974 to annihilate the community and continue to call their administration the legal government of Cyprus, the solution of the Cyprus problem would be difficult. He stated that at present there was the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus in the north and the Greek Cypriot administration in the south of the island, and that both were equal in all aspects. He reiterated that a bizonal federal system could be established in the island if these two administrations reached agreement through negotiations on an equal footing.

He called on Mr Kiprianou to stop living in a dream world and see the realities. Referring to Mr Kiprianou's call for peace and justice, President Denktas said that if the Greek Cypriots wanted peace they would not have attacked the Turkish Cypriot community and if they wanted justice they would not have usurped the rights of the Turkish Cypriots.

President Denktas said that Mr Kiprianou was mentioning the very small Latin, Armenian and Maronite communities in the island with the aim of reducing the partnership rights of the Turkish Cypriot community, but that this did not represent the realities in Cyprus and was only a propaganda campaign. He reiterated that such propoganda campaigns did not conform with good will which was necessary for a solution of the Cyprus problem.

President Denktas recalled that since 1965, the Greek Cypriots have always rejected proposals by the Turkish Cypriot side which provided guarantees safeguarding the rights and status of the Turkish Cypriot community, saying that they were partitioning, he said that this attitude has led the island into many calamities. President Denktas repeated that a solution to the Cyprus problem [word indistinct] the island in the hands of the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot communities. He stated that Greek Cypriot claims that Turkey was intransigent is not sincere but simply propaganda. He recalled that the mass graves of Turkish Cypriots is an example of what would have happened to the Turkish Cypriot community had Turkey not mounted the 1974 peace operation in the island.

President Denktas concluded by saying that peace and justice could only be established in the island in a bizonal federal system respecting the rights and status of the Turkish Cypriot community.

DENKTAS COMMENTS ON NEW KLIRIDHIS PEACE FORMULA

TA141440 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] President Denktas has said that a solution to the Cyprus problem could be found only by the two national communities in the island and not by the Western bloc, the Eastern bloc or the nonaligned group. He was answering to questions this morning by correspondents on Mr Kliridhis as harbouring the same views as Mr Kiprianou but trying to show a flexible outward appearance. He stressed that Mr Kliridhis also wanted to see Cyprus as part of Greece, and this was why Mr Kliridhis also wanted other countries to exert influence on Turkey.

President Denktas said that Mr Kliridhis was basing his propaganda on a formula solution which provides for its acceptance by the West, the East and the nonaligned countries. He said this was wrong because the solution was in Cyprus and the basis for it was contained in the resolution of the summit meeting with Archbishop Makarios in 1977. He said that this provided for a bizonal federation.

After he commented on the formula by Mr Kliridhis, which calls for a recourse to the UN Security Council with proposals on the substance of the Cyprus problem, President Denktas said that the Security Council would not fall into such a trap because this would mean direct intereference in the internal affairs of Cyprus. He stressed that nobody could enslave the Turkish Cypriot community and usurp its founder partnership rights.

When pointed out that Mr Kliridhis was also calling for the strengthening of Cyprus' defense, President Denktas said that the Greek Cypriots were thinking that by doing so they would strengthen their position at the negotiating table and defend them against any Turkish expansionist action. He said Mr Kliridhis was only trying to comfort himself because Turkey would not make any moves against southern Cyprus and that there was no need for such action.

He stressed that any further increase in the Greek Cypriot defensive power would only make the Turkish Cypriot community more suspicious and determined to strengthen its own defenses. He stressed that this would not help the establishment of peace.

President Denktas concluded by saying that Mr Kliridhis, who was calling for a full co-ordination between the Greek Cypriots and Athens should not complain of the coordination and cooperation between the Turkish Cypriots and Ankara.

MITSOTAKIS SATISFIED WITH RESULTS OF GDR VISIT

NC152006 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 15 May 81

[Text] Mitsotakis expressed full satisfaction on the outcome of his GDR visit at the meeting he had today with information media representatives. The foreign minister said, among other things, that a draft agreement was signed to expand the equipment at Iraklion port in Crete. He added that our country will cover the pertinent expenditure by providing agricultural products to West [as heard] Germany. Mitsotakis invited his GDR counterpart to visit our country. The invitation was accepted.

PARLIAMENT CLOSURE MAY IMPEDE U.S. BASES AGREEMENT

NC151445 Athens I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 15 May 81 p 1

[Text] It appears that the agreement on the U.S. bases will not be ratified by the present Chamber of Deputies. According to reports, the government intends to close the Chamber for the summer vacation sooner so that--even if agreement is reached--there would not be enough time to take the question of the bases to the Chamber for discussion and ratification.

At the beginning of this, Mr Rallis told political correspondents who accompanied him on his tour of Thessalia that the Chamber would close down "around 15 or 20 June." Yesterday, however, authoritiative parliamentary sources said the Chamber will close toward the end of May or during the first 10 days of June at the latest. This change narrows the margin for the timely submission to the Chamber of the new Greek-U.S. agreement. However, although the negotiations on this agreement have been stepped up, instead of bridging the differences between the two parties, they have rather broadened them.

Yesterday an authoritative Greek source told ELEVTHEROTIPIA that "only a very decisive political initiative could possibly lead to the agreement being signed by 20 May, and its subsequent ratification by the full Chamber."

The possibility of such an initiative the U.S. side should not be ruled out, and if this were to lead to fresh and really satisfactory proposals and the conclusion of an agreement, the bill ratifying the agreement could be submitted for discussion "in time."

PAPANDREOU, RALLIS CLASH ON FOREIGN POLICY, NATO

NC172006 Athens NEWS in English 17 May 81 p 4

Relations with Greece's neighbors--except Turkey--were "excellent" the PASOK Chairman said, noting that, as regards the latter, his party had warned the government repeatedly about the "dangerous dialogue" with Turkey--"dangerous both for our territorial integrity and peace in the area." For only more concessions to Turkish insatisableness could come from such a dialogue, Papandreou said, a policy which is obviously "nationally unacceptable."

While Attila remains on Cyprus, Papandreou said, the government should not be forging good relations with Turkey, nor commit our country to participation in festivities for Ataturk's birthday. Calling our reentry in NATO a "terrible mistake," Papandreou said the alliance refuses to even admit that Turkey constitutes a threat to our territorial integrity--let alone NATO's role in the 7-year dictatorship and the invasion of Cyprus. He accused NATO of "both overtly and covertly" supporting Turkish claims against Greece.

Likewise, Greek-American negotiations on the future of U.S. military bases in Greece, the PASOK chairman said, were "fruitless" because the Americans had no reason to want a new agreement, preferring the "humiliating" (for Greece) terms of the '52 agreement.

PASOK's position as regards the EEC remained the same, Papandreou said: "Plebiscite," and, until that happens, continuation of the fight within the EEC to minimize our losses from our entry.

Asked to comment on the Papandreou address, Prime Minister Rallis expressed his "satisfaction" that the opposition leader knows the definition of the term "moderate climate." But with his speeches the prime minister charged, Papandreou was assidously cultivating "unacceptable tension."

Papandreou had expressed satisfaction over the briefing he received from the prime minister recently, Rallis charged, but soon afterwards did not hesitate to "maliciously distort" the information he received.

The opposition leader's charge tnat the government is somehow remiss in its efforts to safeguard the national interest is patently false, the prime minister said adding that some good might result from the Greek-Turkish dialogue, most probably by mid-summer. But Mr Papandreou, Rallis said, says "stop the dialogue," evidently having decided to return to his "sink the Hora" [Turkish marine survey ship] line. "And one cannot help but wonder: does Mr Papandreou want war?"

PAPER CRITICIZES AVEROF'S ROLE IN NATO CONFERENCE

[From the "Radical" column: "The 'Order' of Washington"]

[Text] Recently in Brussels, National Defense Minister Averof lived the "happiest moments of his life." There, in the NATO gathering and in his special meeting with his U.S. counterpart Weinberger, he had the opportunity to show with deeds that official Greece--the rightwing Greece--that had sent him as its representative, is the "most faithful" and "most devoted ally" of Washington. Weinberger got "whatever he wanted" from the NATO "partners." Naturally, Greece's representative had no objection whatsoever. He aligned himself with all the demands of the "patron" power to increase the "defense" expenditures to 3 percent yearly (after allowing for inflation) as our country's contribution to strengthening the "Rapid Deployment Force"; to install in Western Europe and in Greece nuclear missiles--"Pershing 2" and "cruise"; to expand NATO authority in the Middle East, Persian Gulf, Indian Ocean and wherever the Pentagon hawks deem the interests.. of the "free" world are being hurt! The "New Democracy" government's willingness to satisfy all of Washington's wishes has particularly impressed the U.S. delegation. The wishes were such that..."supernationalist" Averof avoided mentioning the Limnos issue so as not to spoil the..."allied" atmosphere and play down the Cold War wrath against the USSR and other socialist countries.

Before the NATO gathering appeared... "free of all blemish" and in all its old... "grandeur" the picture of "nationalist Greece", as presented by Foster Dulles in his famous doctrine and Peurifoy [former U.S. ambassador to Greece] in his official reports to the State Department. Thus Weinberger invited Averof to a special meeting and gave him the U.S. Pentagon's "order" which, from now on, will be the A to Z of the "New Democracy" government's foreign policy. And not only its foreign policy. The "order" contains in detail all the obligations for the alliance, one of which is the expansion, by every "sacrifice"... "the danger from the north, "the redeployment of Greek troops to the northern borders (the eastern borders are being guarded by the troops... of wise General Evren) and the continuous and strong reminder... of the "Soviet threat"! Averof received with an indescribable satisfaction the "order" from Weinberger's hands and brought it to us as his trophy.

TERCUMAN REVIEWS BACKGROUND OF GREEK ISLANDS ISSUE

NC180750 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 13 May 81 pp 1, 9

[Report from Ankara by AKAJANS correspondent Ozdemir Kalpakcioglu]

[Text] It has been learned, after an official announcement by the Athens Government that Limnos Island has been militarized, that the conditional Greek sovereignty over the islands in the strait of Dardanelles, the Aegean islands and the Dodecanese are on the agenda with new dimensions and being viewed with great seriousness.

The 1913 London conference between Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Italy and Russia was held to determine the status of the islands. In 1914, these countries served a memorandum on Turkey and Greece, informing them that these islands should remain Greek but that they should not, in any way be fortified or used for military purposes. The memorandum contained this paragraph: "At the same time, these states undertake to use their influence on Greece to secure the implementation of this provision."

So far, Turkey has not made representations to these six big countries--the guarantors of the conditional sovereignty and the nonmilitarization of the islands--over Greece's militarization of the Aegean islands, because it had hoped that these disputes would be solved bilaterally.

As Greece worried, lest Turkey should make such representations, it has looked for loopholes that could allow militarizing the islands--contrary to agreements--and sought to turn the radar installations on Limnos island over to NATO. When this was turned down by NATO, Greece suggested that it participate in the "SIMEX-81" NATO exercises with its air squadrons taking off from this island. But NATO rejected this also. Thus, Greece's plans to legalize the militarization of other islands like Limnos has proved unsuccessful.

Upon this, the Athens Government announced that it has militarized Limnos island in accordance with the Montreux Treaty. Greece was thus at variance with NATO because of its dispute with Turkey.

Making a second announcement, in which it expressed disagreement with Turkey over whether the militarization of Limnos contravened the Lausanne Treaty, Greece quoted Tevfik Rustu Aras, Turkish foreign minister in 1936, as having stated in the Turkish Grand National Assembly that the objection to the militarization of Limnos and Samothraki Islands had been removed by the Montreux Treaty. Ankara says that Aras had expressed his personal opinion and that his words were not binding.

At a time when tension between the two states has been removed and the continuation of the dialogue ensured at the recent NATO foreign ministers' meeting in Rome, Greece's attitude has compelled Turkey to review its stand on the conditional Greek sovereignty [over the islands].

According to well-informed sources, Turkey is preparing to make representations to the six states that assumed responsibility in 1914 concerning these islands.

FOREIGN MINISTER RETURNS FROM EUROPE MEETINGS

TA162041 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 16 May 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has returned to Ankara after attending the meetings of the Council of Europe Ministerial Committee. In a statement to Turkish Radio and Television at Esenboga Airport, Turkmen talked about the issues discussed by the Council of Europe Ministerial Committee. He said that at the meeting, the ministers of the member countries openly expressed their trust in the assurances of the Turkish Government that there will be a return to a parliamentary democratic system.

Turkmen said he stressed at the meeting that the visa requirements for Turkish citizens must be lifted within the framework of European cooperation. He said he explained that it was necessary for the concerned countries to sign the migrant worker agreement as soon as possible. Turkmen said he again stressed that all countries must cooperate against international terrorism.

MINISTER DEPARTS FOR GREECE FOR ATATURK CEREMONY

TA161100 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 16 May 81

[Excerpts] State Minister Ilhan Oztrak departed for Greece today to participate in the ceremonies to be held in Salonika on Tuesday 19 May for the public opening of the house in which Ataturk was born. In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport before his departure Oztrak expressed his hope that the ceremonies for the inauguration of the Ataturk house in Salonika on 19 May would augur the beginning of a constructive period in relations between Turkey and Greece.

DEFENSE MINISTER RETURNS FROM NATO MEETINGS

TA150736 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken returned home today after participating in the NATO Defense Planning Committee meetings held in Brussels. In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport, Bayulken said that the talks were held in an atmosphere of complete harmony and cooperation. Pointing out that measures against threats outside NATO were discussed in the talks, Bayulken said that the importance of military aid to Turkey, Portugal and Greece was stressed during the discussions. Noting that great importance was attributed to Turkish views, Bayulken said that the issues of military assistance and cooperation were taken up in his talks with the U.S. defense secretary as well as the Italian and the FRG defense ministers.

In reply to a question concerning the attempt on the Pope's life, Bayulken said: This incident has proved the necessity of joint measures by civilized countries and of cooperation among them against such inhuman acts.

DEATH PENALTY DEMANDED FOR 14 RIGHTISTS

[Text] Erzurum, 15 May (AA)--The trial on the "Sivas incidents" of September 1978, in which 11 persons were killed, over 100 injured and 500 homes and shops destroyed was continued at a martial law court, the martial law commander for Erzurum, and three other eastern provinces announced.

In a 186-page indictment, the military prosecutor demanded the death penalty for 14 right-wing extremists appearing as defendants in the case, including former president of the right-wing "Idealist Youth Association" Muhsin Yazicioglu, on charges of instigating armed uprising and mass murder under Article 149 of the penal code. He asked for prison sentences ranging from 16 to 30 years under Article 141 for 45 right-wing defendants he charged with organizing clandestine groups called clans in local government offices, and prison sentences of 5-10 years under Article 168 for 166 defendants, including both right-and-left-wingers, the latter being charged with arming in order to retaliate to the right-wing group.

ANKARA SAYS 4,075 SUSPECTS APPREHENDED IN APRIL

TA161555 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1520 GMT 16 May 81

[Excerpt] Ankara, 16 May (AA)--Some 4,075 suspects were apprehended in April announced a martial law communique in Ankara today. The rate of delinquency regressed by 70 percent compared to October 1980, the first month following the 12 September military takeover.

CHANCELLOR'S FORTHCOMING U.S. VISIT DISCUSSED

Schmidt Interview

DW181200 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1710 GMT 17 May 81

[Hans-Joachim Reiche interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Bonn--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] This first, detailed dialogue with the new U.S. President will be taking place, Mr Chancellor, even before U.S. foreign policy has been finalized. Does this curtail your options?

[Answer] I rather consider this an advantage because many a matter in the stage of emergence can be influenced along the lines of our interests and ideas.

[Question] At the last NATO conference in Rome, it was agreed that talks will be opened between the U.S. secretary of state and the Soviet foreign minister on disarmament options on the occasion of the UN General Assembly in the fall. Will you, Mr Chancellor, try during your forthcoming talks in Washington to fix positions for these talks and, above all, will you try to obtain definite dates so as to guarantee a smooth, adequately fast pace?

[Answer] No, we will not stipulate any positions on the issue. This is impossible, if alone because several European partners are interested in this and not just the Federal Republic of Germany. But we definitely will discuss the subject. I am quite satisfied that the council of ministers meeting in Rome produced such a far-reaching consensus. As far as the timing is concerned, the parties in Rome were agreed that the United States plans to talk with the Soviet side in September for the purpose of opening the actual negotiations before the end of the year, instead of merely conducting talks. I would like to see the negotiations opened as soon as feasible, preferably earlier in the fall than later. But this also depends on the preparations which must yet be made jointly in the alliance.

[Question] The United States, Mr Chancellor, will have to assume considerably greater burdens and responsibilities in the Gulf region in the broader sense of the word. Will you be prepared during this U.S. visit to grant relief to the United States elsewhere, that is to say, where we are competent and responsible?

[Answer] It may well be that it will turn out to be that way for the Americans in the future. By the same token, this may well be true in the future for other NATO partners as well. It will not be applicable to our armed forces, for we cannot send them on missions outside the geographical area defined in the treaty, the North Atlantic treaty. We already have stated to the Bundestag that we are prepared to help if need be, so that no gaps will occur here in Europe. Besides, we do help with economic means, for example, outside the treaty area.

[Question] You mean the aid to Turkey?

[Answer] Turkey is still located within the treaty area, but I mean Pakistan, for example.

[Question] Mr Chancellor, the United States expects us to make greater efforts in security policy. Conversely, we are somewhat concerned about the U.S. economic policy, and particularly its currency policy. The difference in interest rates most clearly testifies to that. Will you be raising any demands on the United States in that respect?

[Answer] "Demands" is too strong a word to use, Mr Reiche. Surely, preparatory to the summit meeting of the seven great industrial democracies scheduled to be held in Ottawa, Canada, in July, we will be talking about monetary policy in the world as well, but also about interest rate policies. After all, it isn't only the Federal Republic of Germany but other European states as well who suffer from the very high interest rates. This definitely will be a subject of discussion.

I fail to see, by the way, that this has any connection with the topics of security policy. But it may well be that the Americans will indeed understand our anxieties without, however, being able to meet us halfway. This will have to be found out. And it will be impossible to clear this up in just one visit. Essentially, this is up to the finance ministers later, and up to the banks of issue.

[Question] Will it be a difficult dialogue because something has changed in our country?

[Answer] A lot has changed in the United States as well, much more than in our country. This will be my fourth talk with Ronald Reagan. I had a most detailed discussion with him in the summer of 1979 on world political issues, on whether the United States can lead the Western alliance and in what way it must be led. This time, I am going with a very good feeling. I am quite sure that we will be dealing with all the subjects you mentioned, Mr Reiche, with all world political and economic issues between us, in fact. This will also include Africa, Latin America, Southeast Asia. This applies to the Gulf region as well. And I am positive that in view of the profoundly rooted German-American partnership, and considering the two good meetings we have had with Mr Weinberger as well as the two we had with Mr Haig, we will return home with very good results and a feeling of great satisfaction.

[Question] Are you being impeded by the domestic scene which, after all, has given rise to doubts about the dual decision--will this make the talks difficult?

[Answer] No, I don't think so. Such criticism exists in quite a few European countries, not just in ours. It has existed in our country from the very outset.

[Question] But it keeps growing, Mr Chancellor.

[Answer] True, but what counts is the Bundestag and the majorities therein. And there, the Americans can depend on us.

[Question] Could this issue some day burden the coalition?

[Answer] You cannot rule this out theoretically. I don't think it probable.

Genscher Comments

LD181150 Hamburg DPA in German 1032 GMT 18 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 18 May (DPA)--FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher said he is confident U.S.-Soviet negotiations on arms limitation will take place. Speaking today to the FDP Presidium, he described the talks which began 15 May between Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Soviet Ambassador Anatoliy Dobrynin on nuclear medium-range missiles as an expression of U.S. desire to begin these negotiations as quickly as possible in accordance with the decision of the NATO foreign ministers' conference in Rome.

FDP spokesman Herbert Schmuelling said Genscher assumes formal negotiations will be held soon after the September meeting between Haig and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko in New York. The statement by the NATO foreign ministers that negotiations would begin this year doesn't mean the start will be delayed until the end of the year. The Federal Government is interested in receiving initial information on the state of negotiations at the next NATO foreign ministers' meeting in December.

Genscher described Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's visit to Washington as important for the Federal Republic's relations with its most important alliance partner. Genscher assessed his own talks in Washington and Rome as an encouraging sign for the further friendly development of German-American relations. The chancellor is visiting Washington with the unlimited support of the coalition partner--the FDP--for joint security policy and German-American cooperation, the foreign minister stressed.

Government Circles

[Excerpts] Bonn, 18 May (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt intends to press for an immediate and serious start to U.S.-Soviet negotiations on limiting nuclear medium-range weapons in Europe, when he visits Washington. Bonn government circles today stated that, in his talks with U.S. President Ronald Reagan and his government, the chancellor will emphatically and clearly express Bonn's and the European allies' hope that a very serious attempt at negotiations with the Soviet Union be made.

Concerning another important matter, the chancellor, who goes to Washington on Wednesday and will meet Reagan on Thursday, intends to express Bonn's objections to the U.S. policy of charging high interest rates and to request a lowering of the interest rate. According to government circles, Schmidt will draw attention to the fact that the high U.S. interest rate is preventing the West European central banks and governments from lowering interest rates to activate their economic policy. In the Federal Government, however, the prospect of getting the United States to change its policy on interest rates at short notice is viewed with scepticism. Bonn is expecting the U.S. policy of high interest rates with continued inflation to go on for some months.

While the U.S. Government, according to information from Bonn, has November in mind for the start of negotiations on medium-range weapons, Schmidt has come out in favor of early autumn. Bonn government circles again expressed their confidence in the U.S. desire for negotiations. They point out that U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig and the Soviet ambassador to Washington, Anatoliy Dobrynin, are preparing for the negotiations more intensively than is being made public. They already have held more than 10 talks on this. These circles, however, take a sceptical view of the Soviet interest in negotiations.

With reference to the U.S. demands that the allies increase defense expenditures, Bonn government circles maintain that, while in the United States, the chancellor will state quite clearly that the Federal Government will not let itself be forced into a percentage increase in defense expenditure. As it had done for 10 years already, this year and next Bonn will implement an increase of some 3 percent in real terms, as sought by NATO. This is a NATO "intention clause" and nothing else.

According to these circles, the Federal Government would find it intolerable for the allies to refuse to recognize Bonn's aid to Turkey as a direct security contribution to the defense of West Europe. Bonn's high level of financial support for Poland also has to be regarded as a contribution. In Washington, the chancellor will also point out that the Federal Republic has made the biggest contribution in Europe to defense power, combat-ready forces, reserves that can be mobilized, combat equipment and training. Schmidt also will point to the importance of conscription. The chancellor no longer intends to enter into a discussion of the German defense contribution with governments whose countries are themselves not willing to effect the necessary introduction of conscription.

SCHMIDT LINKS POLITICAL EXISTENCE TO NATO DECISION

[Text] Bonn, 18 May (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today stressed Bonn's great interest in the success of U.S.-Soviet negotiations on medium-range weapons. In an ARD interview, he said: "It isn't enough for me that negotiations have started. I must ask that they also be conducted with the aim of achieving success" and that they be conducted with great energy. He said at least the Federal Government emphasizes this.

As for his threats to resign, made over the weekend, Schmidt said that, since the Berlin federal party congress in 1979, there has never been any doubt in the SPD that he considers the NATO twin decision and the implementation of both of its parts to be absolutely necessary "and I link my own political existence with it. There is nothing basically new in this."

Spokemen's Explanations

[Excerpts] Bonn, 18 May (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's threat to resign if the SPD withdraws its approval of NATO's twin decision of December 1979 has caused heated discussion in Bonn. While the CDU/CSU sees it as a signal for the collapse of the government's authority, the chairman of the SPD party council Karl Liedtke, said he is convinced the SPD will confirm the NATO decision to station nuclear medium-range weapons with a simultaneous offer of negotiations to the East at the next federal party congress in April 1982.

Government Spokesman Kurt Becker explained to the press in Bonn Schmidt's further remark over the weekend that he "stood or fell" with success in the disarmament negotiations between East and West. What the chancellor meant was that the negotiations must not only begin but must be held with the aim of achieving success. Asked what was to be understood as success, Becker replied that he didn't want to quantify this. One first has to await the course of negotiations. Asked whether Becker's explanations are to be seen as a watering down of the chancellor's statements, the government spokesman said it isn't his job to make such an assessment. Schmidt's remarks were intended to once again clarify the Federal Government's attitude.

Genscher Remark

[Text] Hamburg (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher is of the opinion that a rejection of NATO's twin decision by the SPD would endanger the coalition. In an interview on ZDF today, Genscher stressed that in this case it would not be the liberals but the SPD that was leaving the government because it would be abandoning the joint government policy. Genscher strongly stressed that Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's warning to his party at the weekend against dissociating itself from his government's security policy was justified.

Genscher said that the Federal Republic must keep to the position on the NATO twin decision hitherto held by the coalition and the entire German Bundestag in order to be regarded "as a credible partner in the West and a predictable talks partner in the East."

DIE WELT Commentary

[Gottfried Capell commentary: "Drawing the Sword"]

[Text] The decisive battle has begun. Helmut Schmidt has created clear fronts with a frank threat to resign. Every SPD organization knows now that it would voice no confidence vis-a-vis its own federal chancellor by demanding that the Federal Government reject NATO's dual decision on Eurostrategic nuclear arms.

Helmut Schmidt's demanding in an outbreak of fury at a party executive crisis session 2 months ago that the party show more solidarity so far hasn't helped. Neither did it help to win over the top echelon of the SPD in the Federal Republic to vote more or less unanimously for the Federal Government's policy and have these votes confirmed by the Bundestag faction. Schmidt must now wage his fight publicly.

It's realistic not to use the confidence vote as the sharpest weapon in parliament. Schmidt doesn't demand the agreement of the elected representatives of the people, who alone have the mandate to do this according to the basic law. The federal chancellor seeks support below parliament, he seeks it in his party. If he fails to rally the SPD outside the Bonn parliament, the successful confidence vote will be just a short-lived victory, which will not silence public discussions.

The federal chancellor instead introduces a plebiscitarian instrument in his leadership. His blow the day before yesterday against the internal party resistance is supposed to mobilize the genuine basis of the people's party against those intellectuals who don't want to accept that they, as the eloquent academical elite, belong to the establishment themselves.

Schmidt is facing the fight. He can quickly decide the dispute to his advantage. But if it lasts for one whole year up to the Munich party congress next April, he has drawn his sword too early and thus in vain. If his adversaries outlast this year, time will probably work against Schmidt's policy.

KOHL INTERVIEWED ON SPD PROBLEMS, FRG-U.S. TIES

DW181131 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1710 GMT 17 May 81

[Excerpt from reporter Bodo Hauser's interview with Dr Helmut Kohl, chairman of the CDU/CSU Bundestag faction in Bonn--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Dr Kohl, do you see any danger that the Federal Government would have to revise its approval of NATO's dual decision because of the pressure exerted by the SPD and other circles?

[Answer] Yes, the danger is extremely great. If you carefully observed developments in the SPD in the past weeks and months, and millions of our fellow citizens could do that almost every Monday after some land or bezirk party congress of the SPD, you saw that Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and the Federal Government found no majority in their party for their policy which we, the CDU/CSU, strongly support with a view to the counterarmament decision. A situation has come up in the SPD similar to the last period of the Weimar Republic, where Social Democratic Chancellor Mueller had no majority for his policy in the cabinet. At that time, a party congress made a different decision than the government headed by the SPD. Mr Eppler said that it isn't clear at all who holds a majority with regard to this issue. Many things indicate unfortunately that he is right.

[Question] Do you fear that this pressure, emanating from the party, could weaken the federal chancellor's position in international negotiations when he visits America?

[Answer] It is obvious that this isn't just a fear, unfortunately it's a fact. Mr Hauser, one must make a distinction between the international voice, something that is officially stated by the meeting statesmen in the final polite communique, and public opinion in America, the commentaries of the press and the thoughts of the people there. The question pertaining to the position of the Federal Republic in 1981 is more urgent in Europe and also in America than it was a few years ago. That is a most dangerous development.

If you observe the discussion about the so-called counterarmament decision, you will see that criticism of the Americans, although this or that can be rightly criticized, takes place in a form as if partnership and friendship with the United States were the same as relations with the Soviet Union. This is something different to me with regard to moral quality. We have this partnership.

We must express our opinion to each other in the best meaning of this world. But doing this in a community characterized by friendship and partnership is something different, particularly if I know as a German that without U.S. protection there would be no future in peace and freedom.

[Question] Dr Kohl, you will go to America in a few weeks yourself. What concrete result does the opposition expect to come from the chancellor's visit to America?

[Answer] Well, I believe that there are a number of questions the Germans want to ask the Americans. The Americans have a new administration since the beginning of this year. With Ronald Reagan, they have a President who represents many hopes. The administration's taking over was somewhat delayed, so to speak, by the attempted assassination of the President. We expect the conception of U.S. policy, involving important foreign policy matters, to become even more clear. We expect very much, for example, that both parts of the counter-armament decision will be clearly worked out as belonging together. We expect preparedness to hold disarmament negotiations, really controllable worldwide disarmament negotiations, and, on the other hand, we expect that excessive Soviet armament must be faced decidedly for the sake of peace and freedom. Both things belong together, we don't give preference to one element or the other. That must be the outcome of such talks. Another result, so to speak, must be a frank and honest answer on our part to the question of the Americans: You Europeans, you Germans, are you prepared to make your contribution and the necessary sacrifices? Does division of labor mean to you that we will bear the burdens together?

GENSCHER BRIEFS OAU DELEGATION ON NAMIBIA EFFORTS

[Text] Bonn, 18 May (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher briefed an OAU delegation in Bonn today on the Federal Government's efforts to solve the Namibia problem. The delegation, led by Togo Foreign Affairs and Cooperation Minister Anani Kuma Akakpo-Ahianyo, stressed the wish of the African states for a negotiated solution for Namibia.

Genscher briefed the African diplomats on the latest meeting of the Western group of Five, which was held in Rome on 3 May. He also stressed the Federal Government's intention to use UN Security Council resolution 435 as the basis for a Namibia solution. This Security Council resolution calls for self-determination for the population of Namibia.

HUNGARIAN TRADE UNIONISTS VISIT FEDERAL REPUBLIC

LD152218 Budapest in Hungarian to Europe 1900 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] A Hungarian trade union delegation led by Sandor Gaspar, general secretary of the Hungarian Trade Union Council, is having talks in the FRG. During his stay, Sandor Gaspar stressed that, although it is a question of trade unions functioning in countries of different social systems, their task is common in this respect: both associations consider as their prime task the protection of the interests of workers, and they can make good use of each other's experiences. Sandor Gaspar also pointed out that trade unions fulfill a significant role in the life of Hungarian society and they count as factors of power.

In Duesseldorf, Sandor Gaspar also met with journalists. In his press briefing, he highlighted the significance of the fact that this time Hungarian trade union cultural days are also being held in the festive games of the Ruhr region, which is a good example of cooperation.

MITTERRAND MEETS NETHERLANDS SOCIALIST LEADER

LD180941 Paris LE MONDE in French 17-18 May 81 p 6

[Excerpt] Francois Mitterrand had a meeting lasting almost 45 minutes at his home on Friday, 15 May, with Joop Den Uyl, former Netherlands prime minister and chairman of the EEC socialist parties' union. According to Den Uyl, the talks related to the international European situation. "Mr Mitterrand reaffirmed his fidelity to the European idea as defined by the PS," the former prime minister stated. The two men also discussed the U.S. authorities' reaction to Mitterrand's election.

PCF POLITBURO MEMBER ON RELATIONS WITH SOCIALISTS

LD181452 Paris Domestic Service in French 0545 GMT 18 May 81

["Let's Talk Straight" program with moderator Joseph Paletou and Pierre Juquin, member of the French Communist Party Politburo]

[Text] [Question] In an interview in this morning's L'EXPRESS, Lionel Jospin, first secretary of the Socialist Party, noted just as everybody else has noted, the change of tone in the Communist Party's stance toward his party. However, he does state that there will be no agreement between the two parties unless there is some change in the Communist Party on, for example, the fundamental questions that have been debated, the speed of change, the importance of the public sector, Euromissiles, Afghanistan, Poland. Are you ready to negotiate, as was stated at your last central committee meeting? Do you think that you can agree on all questions?

[Answer] First of all, I would like to tell you I agreed with Lionel Jospin when he said last night in the Press Club broadcast that there had been an important change in France, that one can breathe easier, that the climate is better. I feel the same and I draw two conclusions: The first is that the right has been well and truly beaten, and I believe that in the coming parliamentary elections, it will be beaten even more. This so-called union for the new majority is a disgrace; it looks like a national union of the failed. The second conclusion I draw is that the people are not going to be disappointed. They expect great things from the new presidential majority to which we Communists belong. We are determined to do everything possible not to let the people down, to see to it that all goes well, to make a success of the change. And to achieve this, we are ready for all contacts, all negotiations, all openings of dialogue that will enable us to win at the parliamentary elections, to have a majority in parliament that is solid, well and soundly anchored to the left, well composed and balanced, and to govern together with all the forces that have contributed to the victory and are determined to apply new policies. You quote the first ideas thrown out by Lionel Jospin on the subject. You must understand that, being in the new presidential majority and prior to negotiations that have yet to get underway, I cannot anticipate these negotiations. But there is one fundamental point: The fact is there is no question of merging our two parties; there is no question of constituting a sort of single party--Socialists with Communists added. We aren't asking the Socialists to change by becoming something other than Socialists, and we ourselves aren't going to change by becoming something other than Communists. This said, in all the questions raised the problem is whether we, the Communists, and they, the Socialists, can keep our own opinions, our own judgments and yet govern together. To this I reply yes.

[Question] But Mr Juquin, can you be more precise on one question? On a matter like Afghanistan, can a Socialist-Communist government have two stances?

[Answer] I will reply on two matters. The first is that I apply to Afghanistan the remark I just made: We can keep our own respective judgments and opinions and seek, and find, practicable solutions to govern together. The second, well one just makes up a packet of existing questions because others can emerge in the world in which we are living today, a turbulent world, where there is movement and where many things are happening. But in spite of all this, we must try and govern together.

[Question] Since you have mentioned the Press Club, I heard mention yesterday of single candidatures being put forward. Do you, Mr Juquin, know anything about this?

[Answer] No, I am not going to anticipate the negotiations and I am in no way an expert on these electoral matters, but we have not proposed any specific solutions. Simply, it is a question of ensuring a coherent parliamentary majority, soundly anchored to the left, solid, and consequently to ensure the election of outgoing deputies and to conquer many rightwing constituencies. Naturally, the Communist group must be sufficient in numbers.

[Question] So the Communist Party, and Georges Marchais reiterated this at the last central committee meeting, finds itself in a complex situation. Is it due solely to the nature of the presidential election, to what was called the Chirac effect, and hasn't the Communist Party suffered a severe blow in this election? Do you think you will be able to win back the Communist electors who deserted you? You will have noted an IFOP-LE POINT poll which projects 13 percent for the Communists and 36 percent for the Socialists.

[Answer] This is a global, nationwide poll carried out in the turmoil of the elections. Things can evolve, and furthermore, the election takes place on a constituency-by-constituency basis. I must remind you of this. I hold you responsible for the vocabulary you have used. I don't treat the men and women who voted Communist as deserters. I think that beyond the Chirac effect, which was something of a final effect in the last days of the election, the presidential election possesses very particular characteristics: that of the effective vote. In broad terms, it means that men and women electors who habitually vote Communist wanted to vote in the first round so as to ensure victory in the second round. I think these voters still consider themselves Communists and will understand the need to ensure the reelection of Communist deputies, so as to secure a government that will encompass all the forces of the left, including the Communists.

[Question] Mr Juquin, there might well have to be an effective vote in the legislative elections too, so that the Socialist Party will be less subject to the grip of the Communist Party.

[Answer] There is no question of the grip of the Communist Party being imposed on anybody and it is also important that the Communist Party should not be subjected to the grip of anybody else. There must be a well-balanced regrouping of the forces that are going to rule together in the National Assembly and in the government.

[Question] A last word, in the wake of the presidential election, one saw certain Communists in disagreement with the leadership of the party abandon their silences. I am thinking pf men such as Henri Fiszbin. How do you view their initiative? They are demanding that there should be discussions. Do you look on this as a devisive activity?

[Answer] I am speaking here as spokesman for the Communist Party. I am not here to deal with individuals. Consequently, I can tell you and our audience as well that this question was not raised and that name was not mentioned at the central committee.

PCF MEMBERS SET UP INITIATIVE CENTER, NEW WEEKLY

LD181021 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 May 81 p 16

[Excerpt] Some 29 PCF members, including four Paris councillors, have decided to set up an "initiative center for reflection, research and debate," which they have named "Communist Encounters."

Chaired by Henri Fiszbin, Paris councillor and former first secretary of the capital's Communist Federation, Communist Encounters proposes to "contribute to the circulation of ideas and open discussion" within the PCF. It will publish a weekly--COMMUNIST ENCOUNTERS WEEKLY--which will be "a means of providing constant information on current ideological subjects in laiason with political life."

The people who have formed this center want to "promote discussion among Communists on all current issues without avoiding the most burning and controversial issues. Current ideological issues," they think, "cannot await anyone's pleasure."

The founders of Communist Encounters state:

"The workers' and democrats' desire for unity has swept aside reservations, difficulties and obstacles. The left has won. Francois Mitterrand's election to the presidency of the republic opens up broad prospects for change.

"As PCF members, officials and elected representatives, we fully share the hope which is inspiring the workers and we want to contribute to ensuring that, in this new historical situation, our party assumes the major responsibilities toward the working class and our people conferred on it by circumstances. The party must change radically in order to do that.

"The victory cannot disguise the defeat which the party suffered in the first round of the election. Its situation is causing concern about its ability to fully promote the implementation of the fundamental changes which the workers and democrats want.

"By deviating from its own strategy and by preventing a free debate from developing within itself on its actions and lines, the party has rendered itself unable to play its vanguard political role since 1977. It has been weakened by that and has been experiencing a political crisis for several years....

"The PCF's line and place are of major national importance. Hasty decisions to vary or question the political line without consulting the Communists cannot be taken with impunity."

They add: "The situation is creating a vast and urgent need among Communists for reflection and discussion. In the brief period between now and the new election campaign, the Communists will certainly discuss and give their opinions in their cells and in the leadership bodies; many organizations will certainly be anxious to give their verdicts. The party leadership would be assuming a serious responsibility if it failed to create the right conditions for collective reflection and formulation, and all the more so if it were to oppose this. It has a duty to encourage this by all the means at its disposal, especially the party press, before deciding on the line the campaign will take when the time comes."

PCF POLITBURO COMMUNIQUE ON MITTERRAND VICTORY

[Apparent text of PCF Politburo communique issued on 12 May: "Uniting All the People's Forces To Implement a New Policy"]

[Text] The PCF Politburo adopted the following communique yesterday:

The PCF Politburo reaffirms the terms of the statement made by Georges Marchais on 10 May, immediately after Francois Mitterrand's election to the presidency of the republic.

All Communists share the deep feeling of joy and hope which can be seen in the labor world, among young people, in the enterprises and the villages. In fact, this election is an initial victory for working men and women, for all the victims of capital's policy, with its injustices, its arrogance and its disregard for the dignity and rights of men and women.

Uniting all the people's forces to implement a new policy of social justice, progress, freedom, independence and peace--that remains and will remain our line. It is the line laid down at our 22d and 23d congresses.

We are prepared to encourage any step forward along this path, to go as far and as quickly as the workers and citizens themselves wish to go. We aren't wasting and will not waste any opportunity to secure changes. We are prepared for any progress.

Our objective was clearly fixed back at the national conference in October 1980, with which the PCF opened its presidential election campaign: to end Giscard d'Estaing's government and policy and to bring about real changes.

For 7 months, our party's campaign has been guided exclusively by that desire. Our candidate stood as an anti-Giscard candidate. His campaign dealt decisive blows to the existing government, made proposals for change and sowed important ideas for the new policy which is necessary.

The same desire for change and union motivated us. In the second round, our party mobilized to implement the central committee's call to vote for Francois Mitterrand. Our party and the Communist voters therefore made a full contribution to the 10 May victory.

We are prepared to assume all our responsibilities in the governments and at all levels of national life as from now.

Indeed, the new presidential majority must make the necessary effort to fulfill the people's hope. Since we belong to that majority, we want to make our full contribution to it. We are placing ourselves--with the corresponding rights and duties--fully at the service of action for change and for the democratic reforms it implies.

The 10 May victory could not have been won without the Communists. Similarly, the change cannot be brought about without the PCF's active support and original contribution.

This conviction is shared by the 4.5 million men and women who voted for Georges Marchais in the first round. We are sure that this conviction also is held by those men and women who, although they voted differently on 26 April, continue to regard themselves as Communist voters. This is a conviction which many more men and women will acquire in the struggle.

The PCF Central Committee will meet on 15 May.

Meanwhile, the Politburo calls on the party organizations and members to publicize and win support for our constructive and dynamic attitude, by continuing the broadest possible distribution of Georges Marchais' statement and of this Politburo document. It calls on them to act in the spirit of these documents, especially by organizing victory meetings and celebrations in the most diverse forms. It calls on them to hold these meetings and to carry out this task of explaining and debating primarily in the enterprises and in the working class districts. It calls on them--in conjunction with the communist Youth Movement--to address themselves particularly to young people, celebrating the victory with them and discussing the present and future. It calls on them to carry out an active PCF recruitment campaign on these occasions.

SHIPS ON MANEUVERS IN EASTERN MEDITERRANEAN

NC181749 Paris AFP in English 1745 GMT 18 May 81

[Text] 18 May (AFP)--The French aircraft carrier Clemenceau, two submarines, a cruiser, an anti-submarine corvette, an escort ship and a supply ship are on six-day manoeuvres in the eastern Mediterranean, the weekly "COLS BLEWS" naval and weapons magazine said today.

The precise location of the submarines was not disclosed.

The Clemenceau is carrying the latest French "Super Etendard" aircraft, which has a nuclear capability. The carrier underwent a refit last year to take the aircraft. The May 15-21 French manoeuvres coincide with growing tensions between Syria and Israel over Lebanon. Two U.S. aircraft carriers, the Independence and the Forrestal, are also in the region.

TROOP WITHDRAWAL FROM AFRICAN REPUBLIC SUSPENDED

AB151215 Paris AFP in French 1108 GMT 15 May 81

[Text] Paris, 15 May (AFP)--It was learned from reliable sources in Paris on Friday that the withdrawal of a company of French soldiers (about 150 men) from the Central African Republic, which was scheduled for the beginning of May, has been suspended until the President-elect Francois Mitterrand takes office.

The same source adds that this withdrawal was to correspond with the rotation--every 4 months--of French troops in the CAR, whose presence there falls within the framework of Operation Barracuda, the name of the operation that ousted former Emperor Bokassa from power in September 1979.

At the French Ministry of Defense in Paris, it is said that all movement of French troops in Africa has been suspended for now to enable the future French Government to adopt decisions after examining the issue of French units stationed on the continent.

It will be recalled that the French external action forces in the CAR comprise about 1,300 men--500 soldiers of the 11th Parachute Division are stationed in Bangui, while 800 of the 9th Naval Infantry Division are stationed in Bouar base, in the north of the country.

President-elect Francois Mitterrand has not yet made any precise statements about maintaining the presence of French soldiers in the CAR. In a statement to AFP after his election he said he did not think it suitable to reinforce the French external action forces excessively, as it would be incompatible with his foreign policy objectives with the Third World. He said, however, that these forces were necessary to protect French nationals abroad.

Finally the CAR, like five other African countries--that is, Ivory Coast, Gabon, Senegal, Djibouti and Comores--are linked to France by a defense agreement. On this point, the Socialist Party has expressed its willingness to renegotiate these agreements with the governments concerned, especially as the defense accord with the CAR dates from 1969.

PAPER VIEWS ELECTION EFFECTS ON FRENCH INTERESTS

[Editorial: "Mute France"]

[Text] The Socialist candidate's victory has surprised most foreign leaders, especially those of neighboring countries. How can they be reassured as quickly as possible if the president-elect if forced to keep silent? How can they be reassured unless he is loyally informed by his predessor of the major outstanding problems, unless he is not discreetly but really consulted on the interim measures to be taken? From this viewpoint, it is surprising that Giscard d'Estaing hasn't asked his successor to appoint a "mini-team" whose role would be to establish close links with the Quai d'Orsay. This practice is obligatory in the United States where it is extended to all branches of the administration. So far, however, the Elysee seems to be doing no more than passing on copies of some diplomatic telegrams to Mitterrand. That is very little.

This is particularly unsatisfactory since France's partners are not sitting back and doing nothing. Chancellor Schmidt was in London 2 days ago, where he suggested postponing the European Council meeting scheduled for 29 and 30 June in Brussels. That postponement may be desireable. But wouln't it be appropriate for the man who will soon be president of the republic to be consulted? It isn't personal pride, but national interests which are at stake.

However, it is with the Arab countries that the "check" to be paid is likely to be highest. Most of those countries were very disappointed by the election of Mitterrand, whom they rightly or wrongly see as an unconditional ally of Israel. If Paris' silence continues much longer, it will only lend credence to those fears, especially since the president-elect didn't conceal his hostility to the French-Iraqi nuclear cooperation program.

On the financial level, the most important event of the pasy 2 years has been the massive influx af Arab capital into the Paris market in the form of property investment and transferable securities (stocks and shares, especially those issued for state borrowing), or in the form of short term deposits in French banks.

It is difficult to assess the sums involved. But some sources put forward a figure of around $30 billion or more out of the $130 billion which constitutes France's exchange reserves. Hitherto, no move to withdraw the money has been observed, but nobody can forecast the decision which Arab investors will take in the next few months.

Force of circumstances--six Arab countries supply 60 percent of France's oil--has led France to extend its trade relations with its new partners.

Over the last few months, French industry won major contracts in the Near East, mainly in two countries: Iraq and Saudi Arabia--its main crude oil suppliers. The total value of "French" orders in this region of the world can be assessed at around several tens of billions of francs. New contracts were under discussion. A few days before the second round, the French negotiators encountered serious reservations among their interlocutors. The possibility of cancelling recent orders was even mentioned and several negotiations have indeed been in deadlock for the past 48 hours.

POPE TRANSFERRED FROM INTENSIVE CARE UNIT

[Excerpt] Rome, 18 May (ANSA)--Pope John Paul II celebrated his 61st birthday today in a private room at Rome's Policlinco Gemelli hospital, where he was moved out of an intensive care unit 5 days after undergoing extensive surgery for the removal of an assailant's bullet. The church leader was moved to a 20-square meter room on the tenth floor of the hospital, one of Rome's biggest and best-equipped, at 1200 GMT, shortly after reporters leaked out word that the transfer was expected to come later tonight. Despite apparent progress in the pope's condition, the hospital moved sophisticated monitoring equipment into the room next door in order to be able to keep a constant tab on his temperature, heart beat and breathing.

Improvement in the Polish-born pope's health was reported earlier in the day in the medical bulletin released by his doctors, according to which John Paul spent "a sufficiently restful night". The key barometers of his body's vital functions also showed "satisfactory" progress, registering a 140/90 blood pressure, a heart-beat of ninety per minute and temperatures close to 38 degrees centigrade (100 fahrenheit). Shortly before the pope was moved upstairs, Vatican press chief Father Romeo Panciroli disclosed that a group of foreign medical specialists, the names of whom have not been disclosed, will be coming to the Italian capital to check the pope's recovery.

CANADIAN PRIME MINISTER ARRIVES IN ROME FOR VISIT

AU182007 Rome ANSA in English 1945 GMT 18 May 81

[Text] Rome, 18 May (ANSA)--Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau arrived in Rome today for a 2-day work visit. Tomorrow he will have talks with Premier Arnaldo Forlani and Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo. The main purpose of their conversations is to discuss preparation for the summit of the world's seven most industrialized nations (the United States, Japan, France, Britain, West Germany, Canada and Italy) in the Western orbit. The summit will be held at Montebello Castle (?in Ottawa) on July 18 and 21.

Trudeau's Rome talks will center on the international situation in general, the energy crisis and relations with the Third World oil producing countries and those rich in raw materials.

DEFENSE MINISTER LAGORIO POSTPONES TRIP TO PRC

AU181620 Rome ANSA in English 1543 GMT 18 May 81

[Text] Rome, 18 May (ANSA)--Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio's scheduled departure for China tomorrow has been put off a few days. Sources at the Defense Ministry said the trip was postponed in order to enable Lagorio to attend the parliamentary debate on Italian freemasonry starting tomorrow in the Lower House. A new date for the minister's departure will be set later this week.

PSI SECRETARY GIVES VIEWS ON POLITICAL ISSUES

LD241331 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 9 May 81 pp 4-5

[Gianni Rocca and Eugenio Scalfari interview with PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi: "I Am a Leftwinger but I Do Not Want To Implement Communism in Italy"]

[Excerpt] [Question] Deputy Craxi, what is your opinion of Berlinguer? Do you believe that he has made any major steps forward or changes with respect to the PCI's traditional position vis-a-vis the Soviet Union? Do you consider the headway made by the PCI to be positive?

[Answer] Yes, I do consider it positive, inasmuch as some headway has been made. Berlinguer was one of the promoters of the trend which came to be called Eurocommunism. Perhaps it was a rather ambitious project, which underestimated the difficulties and obstacles; it was a desire to create a Western communist pole with entirely different characteristics from those of the orthodox communism of what Brezhnev calls real socialism. Berlinguer has imparted major thrusts and made important gestures in this direction. Of course, if what he has in mind is a process of historical transformation, which is what I believe should be done, he has not yet completed it.

[Question] So you are continuing to submit the PCI to an examination and reserving the right to judge when it has reached maturity. Deputy Craxi, do you not believe that the time has come to put an end to this kind of examination?

[Answer] In fact quite the opposite is true. It is the Socialist Party that is normally under examination, being investigated and--let us be frank--under accusation. This has always been so. We have always had to defend ourselves against the charge of not being socialists, of not being part of the left, of betraying the working class and so forth. We in turn concern ourselves with our neighbor, the party with which, for that matter, we have so many connections. We try to do so in a critical manner because we have a positive interest in its transformation.

[Answer] I did not raise the subject.

[Question] Would you like the Communists to be the ones to relaunch this proposal?

[Answer] What I would like--and what I hope--is that if the subject does arise the Communists will assess it more carefully than they did 2 years ago.

[Question] There is a contradiction in what you say. You say that the PCI is not yet mature, but express the hope that the PCI, no less, will help you in your ascent to the country's political leadership.

[Answer] I have already said that we are not in the least subjecting the PCI to an examination; we simply have an interest--precisely because we are a leftwing party--in the completion of its transformation into a Western socialist party. The left has a duty to look far into its future and to carry forward the necessary revisions to become an alternative government force. This applies to us Socialists, who have done so and will continue to do so, and it applies above all to the Communists. Nobody is being forced to abjure anything, but we are all obliged to reassess our past and to plan for our future.

[Question] Are you anticommunist?

[Answer] I am entirely opposed to any hypothesis of establishing any kind of communism in Italy. My ideas on this point are very clear. I am not saying whether in other countries communism was a good or bad thing at the time it emerged. What I am saying, however, is that there are neither the conditions nor the need to implement communism in Italy. If the PCI states that it does not want to implement communism in Italy either, then that suits me fine.

[Question] Deputy Carxi, how long will the Forlani government last? Give us your prediction.

[Answer] If I had to make a prediction on the basis of statistical precedents, the Forlani government should be approaching its demise, because unfortunately in Italy governments only last a year, or little more. Be that as it may, I believe that in a few weeks' time we must conduct a stocktaking of the political and government situation. On the basis of this stocktaking we will be able to answer your question.

GALLUP POLL: SUPPORT FOR SDP FALLS TO 11 PERCENT

[Text] Support for the Social Democrats [SDP] has fallen sharply from 19 per cent, last month to 11 per cent, according to the latest Gallup poll conducted exclusively for the DAILY TELEGRAPH.

At the same time, support for the Liberals has improved and it is obvious that the absence of hard news about the SDP since its launch has affected public interest and sympathy. The gap between the two main parties remains stable at a Labour lead of 3 1/2 per cent compared to 4 1/2 per cent last month.

The replies to Gallup's normal voting question: "If there were a general election tomorrow, which party would you support?" were:

	Today	Apr	end Mar	mid Mar
Cons.	32	30	30	30
Lab.	35 1/2	34 1/2	30 1/2	34
Lib.	18	14	18	18
Soc. Dem.	11	19	19	14
Other	3 1/2	2 1/2	2 1/2	4

A similar decline in support for the Social Democrats also appears even when people are reminded of the existence of the new party:

	Today	Apr	end Mar	mid Mar
Cons.	28	25	25 1/2	25 1/2
Lab.	29 1/2	29	24 1/2	28
Soc. Dem.	25 1/2	32 1/2	36	31
Lib.	14	12	12	13 1/2
Other	3	1 1/2	2	2

Despite this fall in support, an alliance between the Social Democrats and the Liberals, with a candidate from only one of these parties standing in each seat, is still ahead of either of the two main parties:

	Today	Apr	end Mar	mid Mar
Cons.	28 1/2	25 1/2	25 1/2	25
Lab.	28 1/2	28	24 1/2	27
Soc. Dem/Lib.	40	45	48 1/2	46
Other	3	1 1/2	1 1/2	2

Supporters of the two parties in the possible alliance, however, are not totally enthusiastic about the idea, particularly current Liberals. While 65 per cent of Social Democrats (in answer to Gallup's second voting question) think there should be an alliance, 21 per cent think not, and the remainder (13 per cent) are undecided. In contrast to this, 74 per cent of Liberals and 84 per cent of Social Democrats say they would vote for such an alliance.

Satisfaction with the three main party leaders and with the government as a whole has improved slightly compared with last month.

The survey was based on a nationally representative quota sample of 973 electors in over 100 districts between May 6 and 11. The "don't knows" excluded from Gallup's usual voting question amounted to 9 1/2 per cent.

Details of the standard "popularity" questions were:

"Do you approve or disapprove of the government's record to date?"

	Today	Apr	Mar	Feb
Approve	29	24	23	29
Disapprove	60	67	67	60
Don't know	11	9	10	11

"Are you satisfied or dissatisfied with Mrs Thatcher as prime minister?"

	Today	Apr	Mar	Feb
Satisfied	35	30	30	34
Dissatisfied	60	65	64	60
Don't know	5	5	6	6

"Do you think Mr Foot is or is not proving a good leader of the Labour Party?"

	Today	Apr	Mar	Feb
Is	26	21	23	22
Is not	52	54	52	49
Don't know	22	25	25	29

"Do you think Mr Steel is or is not proving a good leader of the Liberal Party?"

	Today	Apr	Mar	Feb
Is	63	60	63	64
Is not	17	20	15	16

APPOINTMENT COMPLICATES BRITISH-PLO RELATIONS

LD152052 LONDON PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1938 GMT 15 May 81

[by Tom McMullan]

[Text] Britain's relations with the Palestine Liberation Organisation are expected to become more complicated after the appointment of the PLO's London representative as a top Arab spokesman.

The Arab League today named Mr Nabil al-Ramlawi as the chief London spokesman of ambassadors of countries belonging to the League.

Britain does not give diplomatic recognition to the PLO and does not recognise Mr Ramlawi as an ambassador. As the doyen of the Arab ambassadors in London Mr Ramlawi would preside at meetings of the Arab Council and act as chief representative in dealings with outside groups, an Arab League spokesman said.

U.S. AMBASSADOR COMMENTS ON CYPRUS SETTLEMENT

• NC182102 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 13 May 81 pp 1, 13

[Ziya Akcapar report]

[Text] Nicosia (HURRIYET)--At a meeting he had with representatives of the press yesterday, U.S. Ambassador to Cyprus Galen Stone made important disclosures that have clarified the Reagan administration's Cyprus policy. The U.S. ambassador said that President Reagan regards settlement of the Cyprus issue as a priority matter. He maintained that a few months after the general elections in both the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot sectors, the Cyprus issue will receive great impetus and that through the solution to be found, a large number of the refugees will return to the north.

Ambassador Stone said: "Through the good will to be shown by both sides, the issues that have turned the two communities into enemies will be resolved in the near future." Saying that the efforts to resolve the differences might take 1 or 2 years, the U.S. ambassador added: The settlement of the Cyprus issue is a priority matter for my government, because the settlement of this issue will eliminate friction between Turkey and Greece, both NATO members."

Stating that a solution could be achieved through "the return of an important group of refugees to the north" and the settlement of the problems of the remainder through "the payment of compensation," Galen Stone further said that in the period ahead "the Turkish Cypriot side might make territorial concessions and the Greek Cypriot side might make concessions on constitutional issues." Galen Stone, who is returning to Washington on 21 May and who will be reassigned by the Reagan administration to a more important mission concerning Cyprus, though the nature of this mission has not been divulged, stressed that the "Turkish Government too wanted to see the Cyprus issue settled." Stating that the "compromise plan" that was jointly drafted by the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada in 1978 and that was communicated to the parties concerned by UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim was still valid, Ambassador Stone added: "It will be necessary after the settlement of the dispute to observe for some time certain restrictions on the borders separating the two sides. It should not be forgotten that even today freedom of movement in some states of America is still subject to certain restrictions."

O AGON: FRANCE WILL RETURN SAMPSON TO CUSTODY

NC140825 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 14 May 81 p 1

[Text] According to an assurance given by the French authorities to the Cyprus Government almost 2 months ago, N. Sampson [led 1974 coup against Makarios] will be delivered to the Cyprus authorities early in June. Already the Cyprus Government is preparing to submit a new demarche to the French authorities in the next few days, asking that Sampson be delivered to the Cyprus authorities on the basis of the assurance that was given about 2 months ago.

According to our reports, the demarche will be made after the parliamentary elections in Cyprus, which will be held on the same day the new French president, Mitterrand, assumes office.

In any case, the Cyprus Government is certain that Sampson will be in Cyprus early in June, and it should not be precluded that it may put him on trial again for crimes he has committed while he was away from Cyprus and because he violated the conditions on the basis of which he was allowed to go abroad.

It should not be precluded that members of the Cyprus authorities will go to the French capital to bring Sampson back to Cyprus as soon as the French Government is prepared to turn him over to them. The Cyprus Government knows all details of Sampson's recent movements abroad.

SOVIET JUSTICE MINISTER ARRIVES ON OFFICIAL VISIT

NC182034 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 18 May 81

[Text] Soviet Justice Minister Terebilov started a 4-day visit to Greece today. He arrived in Athens at 1445 at the head of a five-member delegation. During his visit, the Soviet minister and Greek Justice Minister Stamatis will sign on Thursday the first Greek-Soviet judicial aid agreement. This evening Stamatis hosted an official dinner in honor of Terebilov and the members of the Soviet delegation. Tomorrow the Soviet justice minister will confer with Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and will later visit the Supreme Court building. While in Athens, the members of the two delegations will start the second round of negotiations for the signing of the judicial aid agreement. The first round of negotiations was held last February in Moscow.

On arrival at the airport, the Soviet justice minister was welcomed by Stamatis, Secretary General of the Greek Justice Ministry Pilalis, Soviet Charge d'Affaires in Athens (Pushkin) and senior officials of the Foreign and Justice Ministries.

Shortly after his arrival, Terebilov expressed satisfaction at being in Greece and stressed the special significance attributed by his government to the signing of the first judicial aid agreement between the two countries. We greatly appreciate, Terebilov underlined, the progress achieved in Greek-Soviet relations, which we consider an important factor for peace and security in Europe as well as throughout the world.

Replying, Stamatis, after referring to the judicial aid agreement to be signed, expressed the belief this will be the start of further cooperation between the two countries in the justice sector.

Addressing Terebilov during tonight's dinner in his honor, Stamatis stressed that the deeper meaning of this agreement must be sought in the history of our two nations, in the depth of time and in our joint struggles for the prevalence of justice. I am certain that you will also agree that we must continue these struggles during our troubled and irrational times so that we can contribute toward establishing international law and order, strengthening peace and advancing the social progress and prosperity of our peoples. We will be happy, he concluded, if we progress together in this struggle under the criterion of expanding cooperation on the basis of mutual respect and confidence.

NEWSPAPERS REACT TO TURKISH SUGGESTION ON ISLANDS

Any Intervention Rejected

NC151735 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 15 May 81 pp 1, 3

Specifically, the Turkish news agency AKAJANS referred to "well informed sources" and mentioned that Turkey resolved to ask the countries that signed the 1913 treaty of London, in other words, Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Italy and Russian, to intervene on the question of arming the Greek Aegean islands--a situation which it has so far tried to avoid "because it hoped to solve all its problems with Greece through bipartite negotiations." This Turkish threat gave cause to PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou to demand the severance of the dialogue with Turkey and the negotiations with the United States on the bases issues, describing the new provocative positions of Ankara as an invitation for arbitration over the Aegean issue.

It must be noted, however, that in the past Turkey had once before made such an appeal to the great European powers which, however, remained without an answer, obviously because the countries for whose intervention Ankara asked do not agree with the interpretation that Ankara was attempting to give to international treaties.

Commenting on the Turkish threats, Greek diplomatic circles observed that the 1936 treaty of Montreaux--to which Turkey also refers--completely abrogated the status established by the treaty of Lausanne,which Turkey cites for the demilitarization of the Greek islands. Since, however, on the basis of the treaty of Montreaux Turkey considers the straits and the adjacent Turkish islands free of any obligation to demilitarize, the same applies to the Greek islands of Limnos and Samothraki which, with the abolition of the treaty of Lausanne, were also freed from any obligation to demilitarize. According to the same diplomatic circles the statement by the Turkish foreign minister at that time in the Turkish National Assembly in the presence of Kemal Ataturk and Ismet Inonu, recognizing the context of the treaty of Montreaux, is an acceptance of the status established by this treaty.

Diplomatic circles commenting on the Turkish news agency dispatch also observed, among other things: World War I and its aftermath created a totally new situation, which was at first settled by the peace treaty and then by the other international agreements reached at Lausanne in 1923.

The treaty of Lausanne provided for the demilitarization of the straits, of Limnos and Samothraki as well as of the islands of Imroz, Bozcaada and the islands of Laouses, which belong to Turkey. The fact that the provisions related to the demilitarization of Limnos and Samothraki were part of the provisions related to the straits can be concluded--in an indisputable way--from the minutes of the treaty of Lausanne. The treaty of Lausanne on the status of the straits was replaced in 1936 by the treaty of Montreaux which abrogated the entire status established by the treaty of Lausanne. Ever since that time, Turkey has considered the straits and the adjacent islands as free of any obligation for demilitarization. Naturally, the same applies to the Greek islands of Limnos and Samothraki which, with the abolition of the status established by the treaty of Lausanne, were also freed of any obligation for demilitarization. This very same opinion was held, until a short time ago, by Turkey itself.

This can also be deduced from a statement made, immediately after the signing of the treaty of Montreaux, by the Turkish foreign minister at that time, Rustu Aras: The Turkish minister said then that the conditions of the 1923 treaty of Lausanne, which provided for the demilitarization of the Greek islands of Limnos and Samothraki, were also abrogated by the treaty of Montreaux. We now read in the dispatch of the AKAJANS Turkish news agency that Ankara argues that it is not bound by that statement, which was nothing more than a personal opinion of Rustu Aras. Greece, naturally, does not argue that the statement of Rustu Aras in itself is an element of international law. It does believe, however, that the statement of an authoritative member of the Turkish Government, a statement made in the Grand Turkish National Assembly and in the presence of Kemal Ataturk and Prime Minister Ismet Inonu, and which was inscribed in the official minutes of the meeting, is not simply a personal opinion but an authentic Turkish acceptance of the status established by the treaty of Montreaux.

Papandreou Reaction

NC151746 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 15 May 81 p 3

[Text] PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou made the following statement: " I sincerely regret that forecasts that I have been making for years on the true intentions of Turkey and its claims, not only upon the Aegean continental shelf and airspace but also upon our islands, are now confirmed in such an impressive way.

We have repeatedly underlined that the Greek-Turkish dialogue for a solution in the so-called Greek-Turkish dispute could only have one context--the cession of Greek sovereign rights to Turkey. The continued gestures of good will, the abolition of Greek air corridors and firing ranges in the Aegean, the shrinkage of the frontier region of Limnos--all the unilateral concessions made to Turkey, as the government ought to have foreseen--had there been a government--could only have led to the encouragement of Turkey which today invites other powers to arbitrate over the Aegean.

At this exact moment, our country's minister of national defense mentions Limnos as a mere detail for "our alliance," the Atlantic alliance. Both the government generally and the minister of defense bear extremely heavy responsibilities. It is truly something unthinkable, something which insults our national pride, that he should take part in a Council of Ministers of the alliance without even protesting the treatment given to us by the alliance with respect to Limnos--Limnos which for us is the key to our national defense and to the defense of our country's national integrity. There is also, however, another historic responsibility for the government. It returned to NATO's military wing without even insisting on guarantees on whatever has to do with the eastern frontiers of our country.

This is not the moment to place the blame for historic responsibilities. These will be placed by the sovereign Greek people themselves. This, however, is a critical moment for the nation and for the future of Hellenism. The government has the duty to: one, stop the dialogue with Turkey; two, abrogate the Greek-U.S. agreement on the bases (1955-1956); and three, inform NATO that under the conditions being created, and so long as NATO continues its unconditional support of Turkish claims, the country will withdraw both from the military as well as from the political structure of the alliance. The "allies" ought to know that the Greek people will not betray even one single foot of territory and that they are ready--if despite their sincere hopes for peaceful progress in the Aegean it becomes necessary to defend our national sovereign rights and our fatherland's earth--to do so with all means. We call upon the government to stand up to the level of the historic circumstances that our country is now faced with.

KODISO Criticism

NC151804 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 15 May 81 p 3

[Statement by Pesmazoglou, chairman of the Party for Democratic Socialism [KODISO]; date and place not given]

[Text] Today's statement carried by the official Turkish agency challenging Greece's internationally recognized rights in connection with Limnos constitutes a fresh escalation of Turkish expansionism. The Greek Government must make it clear to the Atlantic alliance that Greece's participation in it [the alliance] is inconceivable since the inalienable Greek sovereign rights on the Aegean are not respected but challenged by Turkey. The attitude of the Ankara officials solely leads to the undermining of security in the region as well as the trustworthiness of the alliance. At the same time, it [the attitude of Ankara officials] constitutes a warning that an end should be put to every policy for concessions which, instead of smoothening problems, complicates them.

I KATHIMERINI Warning

NC161755 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 16 May 81 p 7

[Editorial: "Let Them Be Certain..."]

[Excerpts] Approximately 3 weeks ago we underlined the point that our country's foreign relations are going through a particularly critical phase, which is primarily dominated by increased tension in our relations with Turkey.

This increased tension is deliberately created--apparently--on the basis of a Turkish plan that consists of a deliberate "climaxing" of tension between the two countries by a series of provocative actions and gestures. The apex of the crisis is to be found in the latest Ankara demarche on the demilitarization of the east Aegean islands.

We will not expand into the legal considerations because the issue is not a legal one but political. We are confronted by an attempt to promote Turkish claims on Greek territory which remain as unchanged as the complex of factors--which also include a certain balance of power--from which they stemmed. This attempt, however, cannot be a coincidence, either in itself or in reference to its timing. It coincides with the appearance of a certain perspective and certain positions and trends of the new U.S. administration more generally, and particularly in the region of the Middle East and western Central Asia. Naturally this could be a very simple coincidence. We do, however, wonder if such an "onset" by Turkey could have been at all possible without the permission and tolerance of those strong factors in the international arena upon whom Turkey completely depends--in all sectors.

This question is rather understandable since the situation has to do with the "climaxing" of tension in relations with another country, a member of the Atlantic alliance, which weakens the southeast wing of this alliance and could even lead to its dissolution--a fact which is, at least, considered of primary interest to the factors we mentioned earlier.

It even becomes more understandable if one bears in mind that approximately 3 weeks ago the NEW YORK TIMES and the HERALD TRIBUNE carried an article by the well-known and usually well-informed U.S. journalist Sulzberger, which included the "report" that Washington would be prepared to guarantee Greek boundaries if Greece agreed to the demilitarization of the east Aegean islands.

Thus, 3 weeks later and as a sequel to the "climaxing" of provocations, we have Ankara's demarche on the demilitarization of the islands.

Is this a coincidence? We hope it is. Let us wish it is and let us not exclude such a possibility.

No matter what is happening, however, everyone can remain certain that the Greek Government, relying both on the miracle of a nearly perfect defense preparedness which was achieved during the last 7 years, will not tolerate the slightest alteration of the country's sovereign or other rights or defense potential and defensive positions. In addition, the Greek Government will permit nothing which could be an even indirect imposition, even "by force," against the rights and vital interests of all of Hellenism. From then on, the responsibility for any possible sequel--and its consequences--will rest upon others.

(Editorial [I KATHIMERINI] note: These views were written before the Turkish "denial" of Ankara's intentions was issued. If, as foreign diplomatic observers in Athens believe, the leaking of the relevant "reports" was aimed at sounding out Greek reaction, then the positions expressed in this editorial ought to satisfy the curiosity of the Turkish side.)

RIZOSPASTIS Criticism

NC162229 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 16 May 81 p 2

[From the "Radical" column: "The Inciters"]

[Text] The issue is not new. It dates--not to mention times even before that--from the time our country became the "advance sentry" of U.S.-NATO imperialism in the Balkans and the eastern Mediterranean basin.

Since then, every time the Americans and NATO have wanted to promote their own plans against our national and sovereign rights, they have proceeded accordingly and have aroused the chauvinistic and aggressive instincts of Ankara's sovereign circles against our country. The doctrine of "divide and rule" which it inherited from its very well experienced predecessor, British imperialism, has always been fully utilized, in accordance with their aspirations, to take the temperature of tension on the two sides of the Aegean so that their position remains paramount and they remain arbitrators and..."neutral" observers in the conflicts between the two "allied" countries. The past events of Smirna and Kostandinoupolis, the coup in Cyprus, the invasion of the Turkish troops of the Megalonisos and the primary criminal role of the Americans and NATO in all these events are well known, and we do not have to be more explicit about them here. Now, if our great "allies" and their alliance always appear to be in favor of Turkey--while they commit the same crime against the two peoples--this, of course, is not coincidental. This is due to the Greek rightwing and its government's servility, which, for 30 years now, have accepted all the national insults and humiliations without complaint. The "New Democracy" government (like the previous ones), bound to its Atlantic policy, does not dare to confess that the Americans and NATO are inciting Turkey's aggressiveness. But what it has tried to hide has been uncovered, without reservation, by the Turkish Government in statements by its official AKAJANS news agency. The statement stresses that NATO agrees with Turkey's views that Greece does not have the right to fortify the Aegean islands! The government may maintain that the Turkish news agency can say what it wants. Yes, but then it has the duty to explain to the Greek people why the Greek state news agency, APE [ATHENS NEWS AGENCY], which, in a commentary the day before yesterday dealt extensively with the issue of the armament of the Greek islands, has kept completely silent and has not replied to the AKAJANS revelation that NATO fully sympathizes with the Turkish views on Limnos. Thus, the Greek rightwing shows that it faithfully serves its masters. If it remains in power, it will serve NATO from now on even more faithfully.

KKE-Interior Statement

NC171947 Athens I AVYI in Greek 16 May 81 p 1

["Text" of 15 May KKE-Interior press office statement]

[Text] The KKE-Interior stresses that with the statement of the Turkish news agency AKAJANS, the Ankara militarists, with Washington's blessings, are arranging a further escalation of their designs against the Greek islands and the Aegean national sovereign rights.

The New Democracy government shoulders a great responsibility for this development, because with the return to the NATO military alliance with stricter terms than before and with the recent "unilateral arrangements" in the Aegean which express a course of unacceptable concessions to the imperialists' pressure, not only has it not blunted the Turkish aggressiveness aginst the national interests, but, on the contrary, it has strengthened the Turkish positions in the Aegean and whetted the appetite of the Turkish expansionists, who have occupied northern Cyprus for almost 7 years.

The tactic of making concessions and the return to Atlanticism must, without delay, be stopped. The only answer to the multisided pressures for concessions by the United States, NATO and Turkish chauvinism is a firm and decisive "no". In every case the implementation of a nonaligned national domestic policy constitutes today, more than ever before, a national necessity.

MITSOTAKIS SAYS TURKEY DENIES ARBITRATION MOVE

NC151952 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 15 May 81

[Text] Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis stated that the Turkish ambassador to Athens informed Director General of the Greek Foreign Ministry Roussos that reports by a Turkish news agency about a Turkish decision to resort to international arbitration on the question of the arming of Limnos Island do not reflect the truth nor do they express the views of the Turkish Government.

In statements to the press, Mitsotakis said the question of Limnos is one of the differences between Greece and Turkey. He stressed that the position of Greece to strengthen the defense of Limnos is very strong due to international conditions.

The Greek foreign minister said the talks between Greece and the United States on the bases issue continue at a rapid pace. Mitsotakis added Roussos and U.S. Ambassador McCloskey meet daily. He added that he can make no forecast as to when their talks will be concluded.

Turkish Ambassador's Denial

NC161653 Athens NEWS in English 16 May 81 p 1, 4

[Text] Turkish Ambassador to Greece Tahir Alacam yesterday assured Greek Foreign Ministry Secretary General Roussos that the Turkish news agency's report on Ankara's appeal to third countries on the demilitarization of the Aegean islands was "entirely imaginary and bore no relation to reality." Similar was the impression of Greek Ambassador to Ankara Mr Papoulias, who reported on the subject to the Foreign Ministry yesterday. The ambassadors of the countries named in the report denied any knowledge of the whole affair.

Concerning the dispute over the military status of Limnos, government sources said last night the matter remains open. They claimed Greece's position is strong adding that Turkey has its own views on the issue.

Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, meanwhile, yesterday expressed satisfaction at the release of the Greek fishing trawler "Planitis 2" and its four-member crew, and said the Greek fishermen were treated well by their Turkish captors. On the celebration of the Ataturk centenary in Thessaloniki, Mitsotakis said the event is organized at UNESCO's initiative, and that the government intends to go ahead with its plan to be represented at the celebration by Minister for Northern Greece Nikolas Martis.

PAPANDREOU ADDRESSES NEWSMEN AFTER MEETING RALLIS

NC141552 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 14 May 81 pp 1, 3

Since the two leaders agree that the elections should be held in the fall, it is reasonable that they will avoid giving an immature preelection character to their speeches in Thrace. At the same time, however, Mr Rallis and Mr Papandreou maintain their significant disagreements in the basic issues of domestic and foreign policy and each of them has undertaken to convince the Greek people of his program.

Answering a question on the defused climate, Mr Papandreou said:

"This depends on the style of the speeches. Our positions remain as they are. The substance will not change. Mr Rallis will not change his positions nor shall I change mine. Up to now, I would say that the tone in the country's political life in general is basically calm. As long as the positions are clear to the people and the people are in a position to make their choice, I believe this is the main objective. The aggravation caused by harsh language is proof of weakness and lack of convincing basic arguments. At this time, the people want to be informed of what is happening and what positions are adopted by the parties. Circles within the New Democracy party intend to polarize the situation and make a return to 'slogans' and 'antislogans.' We are prepared for everything but, in this preelection period, we prefer to inform the people of our program and make a review of the New Democracy's deeds and actions after the junta regime."

During his conversation with the journalists, the PASOK chairman said that he had not changed his positions after meeting with the prime minister. He made it clear that, in addition to his party's positions and clearly from a national point of view, the Rogers agreement for the return to the NATO military wing is contradictory to the establishment of headquarters in Larisa and that, for the first time, the question of responsibility limits is raised and the limits of control in the Aegean are disputed. From the national point of view, returning to, and staying in NATO, is fraught with dangers and would harm our national interests. The Naples headquarters always expresses the positions of Turkey; thus, the problem is what would happen with our stay in an alliance where--in addition to the arguments that can be cited--our sovereign rights in the Aegean are challenged.

Furthermore, Mr Papandreou made two comments of his own: He described Turkey's policy as more intransigent than ever and for this reason, in his opinion, no big issue seems to be making any progress because of the stalemate and intransigence now being maintained by the Turkish side. He added that the Turkish intransigence is more evident in the Cyprus issue.

In connection with the [U.S.] bases, the PASOK chairman said that it was his personal feeling that the agreement would not be signed so soon. He added that the Americans have no reason to hurry because the present status has acquired the form of capitulation through the 1953 and 1955 agreements and the United States cannot possibly get anything better.

PAPANDREOU OUTLINES PASOK'S POLICY TOWARD TURKEY

NC182200 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 18 May 81 p 15

[Excerpts] Late Saturday night, A. Papandreou, leader of the official opposition, delivered a dinner speech at Alexandroupolis in which he stated: "I imagine you understand how difficult it is for me to truly express all my feelings at this moment. The welcome you have given us has been unprecedented, full of emotion, liberation, hope and struggle, all at the same time."

"I would like to say a few words on the reply I received from the prime minister. I would first like to express my regret, because although the prime minister talks of a mild climate, he personally uses expressions that are not at all mild."

The prime minister said that PASOK wants war! These are very strong words and we do not accept them. We return them to him. PASOK not only believes in peace but it also takes an active part in all the European and Mediterranean efforts aimed at strengthening peace, detente and disarmament. The last person who can speak of peace is Rallis himself.

"There is something else. I believe that all of us Greeks have some experience in the meaning of Turkish foreign policy. The Turks exploit every concession and every withdrawal, but whenever they come up against firm granite unity between our people and our armed forces they fall silent, altering their tune and changing their song. The great mistake--and I will limit myself to only this description--of New Democracy is that it believed something that the maturity of the Greek people does not permit them to believe. This is that Turkey could be stopped with gestures of good will and conversations about friendship and cooperation. This cannot be done, particularly when Turkey is being encouraged and armed by our great 'allies.'

"Something very simple that the government must realize and that the people know full well is that Turkey, as well as the 'allies,' must understand that the Greek territory, our national territory, which has been won with struggles and blood and which is established under international treaties and agreements, is ours and it will remain ours. It is only harsh language that can today bring results on the international scale. This is the language that the New Democracy governments have not been able to use. This is the reason the concessions are creating increased Turkish audacity and an impasse that can only lead to a clash. Once Turkey understands the power, the will and the determination of the Greek people, then it will never touch us. This is my firm belief, which stems from the experiences of Greece and the Greek people. A hard and firm national position today means protection of both our territorial integrity and of peace. This is the message of the foreign and national defense policy of PASOK addressed both to the people and abroad."

In answer to the PASOK chairman's address at the Alexandroupolis dinner, a government spokesman made the following statement:

"The PASOK chairman must have dreamed in his sleep about the nonexistent national concessions made by the government. He must also have dreamed that his recommendation to 'Sink the Hora' [Turkish marine survey ship] could serve nonexistent obligations and national expediencies. In reference to peace, he must understand that the governments of the past few years have preserved it without making any concessions at the expense of any national interests."

PAPER WARNS OF PASOK-KKE JOINT MARXIST FRONT

NC172216 Athens ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS in Greek 17 May 81 p 12

[Editorial: "The Popular Front Is Sweeping the Country"]

[Excerpts] PASOK and the KKE--the Marxist front which does exist and is also active--is agitating the entire country. From Langadhas to Khania and from Patrai to the Aegean islands they are "organizing the people's uprising against foreign bases and the nuclear weapons stored in them..."

Between 22 and 24 May and within the framework of "10-days of peace," the "Peace Congress" will be held in Athens.

On 24 May a "walk for peace" will take place. This will be 17 kilometers long "from Langadhas, where the U.S. nuclear base is, to Thessaloniki..."

According to the RIZOSPASTIS 13 May issue, "The struggling forays of the Athens freedom loving forces have already began, aiming at spreading the covering all Athens neighborhoods and working classes and organizing the peoples uprising...!

Who are organizing these demonstrations with loudspeakers, posters and leaflets throughout the country, in cities and villages, inside the universities and cultural centers, outside the armed forces units? PASOK and the KKE...the "Committee for International Detente and Peace."

First, the people ask: "Who pays for all this?", because this peace campaign costs a lot and it is derived from the "World Peace Council" and aims at undermining our country's defense organization. Second, where is the government? Does it not see or hear? As usual it leaves the ideological and political questions exclusively to the Marxist front.

The government, by remaining silent to the provocation, appears to be conceding that NATO does not protect us but exposes us to catastrophic dangers. It does not even dare to ask: Beyond our borders are there no foreign bases and nuclear weapons? Why are no "walks for peace" being held there to put an end to the Soviet bases and the Warsaw Pact atomic bombs? When a government does not reply to the provocations of the Marxist front and does not dare to support our national defense policy, it is as if it accepts its failure--its unsuitability to deal with the most important affairs of the country. The popular front is sweeping the country from end to end while "New Democracy" is completely unaware and is busy with other things....

PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION ENDS VISIT TO IRAQ

NC161650 Athens NEWS in English 16 May 81 p 4

[Text] A Greek parliamentary delegation, headed by the chairman of the parliament's Committee on Greek-Arab Relations, Mr Vardhinoyannis, returned yesterday from a visit to Iraq.

Talking to reporters at the airport, Mr Vardhinoyannis said the visit was one of friendship. He said the Iraqi people, although presently in a state of war, have not abandoned their peaceful work.

The atmosphere in Baghdad is so calm that one does not get the feeling that the country is at war, Vardhinoyannis said.

The delegation discussed with Iraqi officials the whole spectrum of Greek-Iraqi relations, and assured their hosts they support Iraqi efforts for an honorable peace in the Persian Gulf, Vardhinoyannis said.

TERCUMAN SEES ONLY 'POLITICAL SUPPORT' FOR RDF

NC190845 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 14 May 81 p 4

[Ozdemir Kalpakcioglu report]

[Text] Ankara (AKAJANS)--It has been learned that Turkey does not intend at the moment to meet any suggestion from the United States to its allies that they extend transit facilities, facilities for stockpiling supplies and provide bases for the Rapid Deployment Force, which the United States envisages for the protection of the oilfields in the Persian Gulf. Turkey will not go beyond extending political support for such activities. This Turkish viewpoint emerged after the speech delivered by U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger at the NATO Defense Ministers' meeting in Brussels.

Ankara's stand took shape after the speech by the U.S. defense secretary: "Turkey does not want to commit itself at this stage to any undertaking, beyond political support, in connection with U.S. activities regarding the dispatch of the Rapid Deployment Force to the Middle East and southwest Asia." It has been stressed once again that Turkey opposes any action by the United States without the desire and the prior knowledge of the Gulf countries. As a matter of fact, following the speech by U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger at the NATO defense ministers' meeting in Brussels, in which he urged the allies to provide the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force with transit facilities, facilities for stockpiling supplies, and bases, Turkish National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken made this categorical statement: "Before any intervention is undertaken in any region outside NATO boundaries, states in that area should be consulted."

According to reports from Brussels, at the meeting held between Weinberger and Rayulken, the U.S. demands on its allies regarding the Rapid Deployment Force were discussed without going into details. As is known, Turkey identifies itself with the decision that "the Gulf states are responsible for the defense of the Gulf."

On the other hand, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is in Strasbourg for the purpose of taking part in the meeting of the Ministerial Committee of the Council of Europe, said this in connection with U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger's speech on the Rapid Deployment Force: "I have not yet received the text of this speech. However, our stand in this matter is clear. It is out of the question for Turkey to undertake any mission outside the borders of NATO."

VOTCP PROTESTS AGAINST RDF ON TURKISH TERRITORY

TA141519 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 14 May 81

[Station commentary]

[Text] Dear listeners, the NATO defense ministers meeting has been held at NATO headquarters in Brussels. A decision to increase NATO expenditures by 3 percent this coming year was approved at the meeting, held under U.S. pressure and impositions. U.S. war minister Weinberger approved this Pentagon armament program under the facade of the so-called Soviet threat, which has long been proven false. The decisions to step up the arms race, tension and conflicts adopted at the NATO Rome meetings were also based on outcries of anti-Sovietism. The lie about the Soviet threat, which is another expression of the imperialist policy of conflict, is being used to justify the terrifying armament. The long-term armament programs of the Pentagon and the decision to deploy atomic missiles in Western Europe are being implemented under the guise of a Soviet threat.

Dear listeners, the defense minister of the junta has also approved the decision to increase NATO armament expenditures by 3 percent next year. Increasing armament expenditures by 3 percent for NATO interests is tantamount to economic destruction of Turkey.

Even an OECD report stated that the rate of inflation was 100 percent last year. Bearing this reality in mind, an increase of 3 percent in arms expenditures will mean one of 111 percent for Turkey. Will the junta increase arms expenditure by 111 percent to serve NATO interests? Dear listeners, this means that the bread on the table of the workers and the toilers will become smaller, unemployment will increase and our people will further be pushed into the current hellish existence. Politicians, adopting this decision (?is tantamount to) making our country more dependent on imperialism and NATO mechanism of aggression and to transforming our territory into an area of nonconfidence and threat in the region, because this decision will be followed by other decisions threatening our security and national independence. The first one is the decision to station Rapid Deployment Force, organized by the United States for a military attack in the Middle East, on our territory. As is known, both Luns and Rogers clearly stated that at the meetings held in Brussels and attended by force commanders they proposed that the Rapid Deployment Force be stationed on Turkish territory, that the proposal had been submitted to Ankara and that there had been no objections. In other words, there is an attempt to station the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force on our territory inside a NATO parcel. On the other hand, reports that brainwashing meetings will be held in Turkey are well in line with the decision adopted at the NATO headquarters to step up anti-Sovietism. The decisions of aggressive NATO will be made attractive to our people through the Atlantic Assembly Association. All those who support the NATO decisions that threaten our national security [words indistinct]. Our people do not want to bow to the NATO decisions. Our people say no to NATO and to the Rapid Deployment Force.

[Text] The conference on sanctions against South Africa organized by the United Nations will be held in Paris between 20 and 27 May. The conference aims at keeping world opinion vigilant on the measures envisaged to be taken against the Republic of South Africa because of its apartheid policy. High-level delegations from all UN member countries will participate in the conference.

According to a statement issued by the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate, a delegation headed by Minister of State Ilhan Oztrak will be representing Turkey at the conference. The permanent Turkish representative at the United Nations, Coskun Kirca, will be a member of the Turkish delegation. The statement adds that Turkey is against all kinds of racism and denounces the South African Republic for its apartheid policy. The statement notes that Turkey has no relations with South Africa and adds: Our country, which effectively supports all UN efforts aimed at eradicating all kinds of colonialism and racism, has always cast its vote in favor of such resolutions.

VOTCP: TCP URGES CONTINUED STRUGGLE AGAINST NAP

TA141407 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 14 May 81

[Turkish Communist Party Central Committee statement; dated 12 May 1981]

[Text] The trial of the fascist NAP has finally started. The fact that the fascist movement is being tried by the military dictatorship shows, above all, that this trial is a gain of the harsh struggles waged for years by the working class, our people, all the progressive forces and the patriotic officers. This trial also reflects the conflict between those in favor of fascism and those opposed to it within the military administration. However, without the constant struggle waged by our people against the fascist NAP at the expense of numerous martyrs, no power could have brought these national enemies to trial.

The most reactionary circles have begun to take steps to protect the NAP and direct the attack more intensely against the working class and the progressive forces. The trial of the fascist NAP, which was nurtured and unleashed by the most aggressive imperialist circles and the collaborationist monopolies, has raised the desire for revenge against the democratic forces by the most reactionary, militaristic and collaborationist sector of the junta administration, the fierce enemies of the people within the National Intelligence Organization [MIT] and the police and by the JP administrators. Now, these forces want to avert the blow they received through the suit filed against the fascist NAP. They engage in an attack against the progressive force with the obscure banner of anti-communism in a bid to save this blood-stained murder gang. They draw strength from the trials opened against the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK], the Union of Cooperatives of Village Development and Other Agricultural Goals [KOY-KOOP] and the Turkish Teachers' Unity and Solidarity Association [TOB-DER]. They are planning provocations against the communists and all the progressive forces.

The mass trials of the fascists are thus being conducted simultaneously with the firm struggle between progressive forces and reactionary forces in our country, between patriots and collaborationists and between the people and the enemies of the people. The future of this trial remains dependent on this struggle.

By endorsing the anticommunist attacks against progressive forces, those within the military administration who are opposed to the fascist NAP weaken the forces against fascism and terrorism. They are thus undermining the NAP trial and bowing down to the most reactionary forces that support the NAP. Attacking the victims of fascist terrorism contradict the statements about eradicating the source of terrorism.

The intensification of the pressure on the progressive and patriotic forces at a time when the U.S. administration and the ruling circles of NATO have increased their pressure on Turkey benefit those who wish to use our country as a tool in imperialist adventures and strengthen them. Those who believe that the fascist ringleaders will automatically receive the punishment they deserve at the end of the NAP trial are mistaken. Those who believe that all the murders committed by the fascists, their plans against the people and the ties of the NAP with imperialist centers, collaborationist monopolies and the reactionary JP circles will automatically be exposed are also deceived. They forget the increasing resistance to this tendency by neofascist forces connected with international imperialist centers and by the most reactionary forces within and outside the army. They ignore the fact that every blow dealt on the fascist movement and reactionism is followed by intense attacks against progressive forces.

While our toiling people, who are being deprived of their democratic rights and freedoms, are being silenced, the reactionary press is arrogantly defending the bloody murder gangs. Fascist and Maoist publications are being published freely. Under these circumstances, the facts revealed by the military prosecution can only be made known to our people through the effective efforts by progressive forces. The NAP trial can be transformed into a national antifascist struggle involving the active participation of the people only through the unity of action of all democratic forces within and outside the army. The trial against the fascist NAP cannot be successfully concluded without opposing the attacks against the progressive forces, defending democratic rights and freedoms or creating a massive movement of solidarity with the leaders and members of DISK, KOY-KOOP and TOB-DER.

The indictment of the military prosecution displays how the fascists killed thousands of persons under the banner of struggle against communism. A consistent antifascist struggle cannot be waged without opposing anticommunism and antisovietism. Enmity toward the best children of our people and the communists only serves the interests of the fascists and the most reactionary forces.

The struggle for solidarity among the communists and all the antifascist, democratic and patriotic forces should be further enhanced. This is an urgent task. Let us not allow the NAP trial to simmer down. Let us expose the NAP's ties with imperialist centers, collaborationist monopolies, the counterguerrillas and the JP administration. Let us exhibit the fascists' bloody murders, which have remained secret, their antipeople aims and their opposition to democracy. Let us inform the masses about the true nature of this fierce anticommunism, whom it benefits and on its bitter consequences for our people. Let us further enhance the solidarity with all the democratic forces who are being investigated, arrested and pressured.

CHANCELLOR KREISKY RETURNS FROM BULGARIA VISIT

AU181026 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 16 May 81 pp 1-2

[Summary] Chancellor Bruno Kreisky yesterday afternoon returned to Vienna from his 3-day official visit to Bulgaria. At Vienna-Schwechat airport, he was welcomed by Vice Chancellor Sinowatz, Interior Minister Lanc and high-ranking civil servants.

His talks with the Bulgarian leadership focused on the search for new forms of economic cooperation in addition to promoting bilateral trade relations. "Kreisky told journalists that the most important economic results of his official visit were the 5-year cooperation agreement concluded by the Voest-Alpine Corporation, providing for a goods exchange volume of 4 billion schillings on each side, as well as the granting of a $300-million-schilling annual basic loan to Bulgaria for buying products of the Austrian Vereinigte Edelstahl-Werke [VEW--high-grade steel works]." The chancellor added, however, that it was still necessary to discuss prices, as the VEW's main problem is not getting orders but adequate prices.

According to Kreisky, the question of a participation of Austrian construction firms in tourist projects in Bulgaria was discussed on the periphery of the talks and the Austrian Steyr Company was able to hold good talks in Sofia on a number of products such as trucks and tractors. "The Bulgarian side is making great endeavors to ensure that the country's credit policy is different from that of other East bloc countries," Kreisky said. "Bulgaria is extremely cautious and accepts credits only hesitantly because, in Sofia, the very generous use of loans by Poland is seen as one possible cause of the current economic crisis there."

"Regarding the situation in Poland, President Todor Zhivkov adopted a very personal, differentiated and matter-of-fact position, free from any cliches," Kreisky said, adding that "he had the impression that Bulgaria is primarily trying to understand the development in Poland."

At a press conference attended by numerous representatives of the Bulgarian news media, Kreisky stressed the two countries' close cultural relations and their common interest in preserving peace in Europe and paid tribute to the Bulgarian leadership's role in maintaining a calm atmosphere in the Balkans.

ARMY 'SECRETLY' SELLS HELICOPTERS TO ISRAEL

AU151453 Vienna KURIER in German 15 May 81 p 16

[Martin Wimmer report]

[Summary] On Thursday morning, two heavy, four-engined Israeli Hercules transport planes landed at the Linz-Hoersching military airfield in the utmost secrecy. They are to pick up spare parts for the two large Sikorsky S 65 OE helicopters which the Austrian Army has furtively sold to Israel. The helicopters themselves will not be shipped, but will fly under their own power.

According to a Defense Ministry source, the official reason for selling the helicopters, which can carry 70 men each, was their being "slightly outdated and uneconomic." The army has sold the two helicopters for 50-million schillings. It had paid 95-million schillings for them when it bought them 10 years ago.

Col Franz Gutjahr, commander of the 3d aircraft regiment, to which the two giant choppers nicknamed "holy cows" had been assigned, furiously denied that they were outdated and claimed that they were exceedingly important for emergency operations in connection with natural disasters. In such cases, he said, we will have to charter helicopters from abroad from now on.

The roundabout way in which the deal was carried out was presumably necessary for political reasons. "The aircraft were not sold directly to the Israeli Air Force but to an Austrian airplane dealer, the consul general for Bolivia, Drescher.

"And to avoid any exposure to criticism, the Israeli planes, although they could keep their camouflage coating, were allowed to enter Austrian airspace only with civilian aircraft markings."

GREENS HOLD FIRST PARTY CONGRESS IN VIENNA

AU191156 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 19 May 81 p 2

[Text] On Saturday, the first party congress of the party of the Greens [die Gruenen] took place in Vienna. The 20 delegates unanimously adopted a 10-point program, which, among other things, calls for the constitutional guarantee of the right to a livable environment, for avoiding any further spending in excess of the government budget, for an upper tax limit of 50 percent and for politicians' liability in the event of gross negligence. On the coming weekend, the Vorarlberg provincial organization of the Greens is to be founded in Lustenau.

BRIEFS

TRADE WITH PRC--According to a report of the Austrian Institute for Economic Research, Austrian exports to the PRC substantially expanded in 1977-1979, but the share of these exports in total exports did not increase. It amounted in 1980 to 0.5 percent, but could be raised to 0.7 percent by the mid-1980's. Austrian exports to the PRC presently consist mainly of steel, fertilizers, artificial fibers and machinery. Machinery exports to the PRC are especially low and could be expanded, the institute says, recommending participation in joint ventures as well as the training of Chinese skilled workers in Austria. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 9 May 81 p 7 AU]

GAS TALKS WITH USSR--The Soviet delegation currently negotiating in Vienna on deliveries of Soviet natural gas, in exchange for Austrian pipeline equipment deliveries, wants to come to terms with the Austrian side by Tuesday evening, on the following "package" of agreements: an agreement on Soviet gas supplies to the Austrian oil administration, another one on pipeline equipment (mostly Voest sheet metal) deliveries by Austrian firms, and one with the Austrian Kontroll Bank on financing the project. To date, the sides have still failed to agree on gas prices and credit conditions. Under the envisaged agreements, Austria would get 4 billion cubic meters of Soviet natural gas as of 1985, and would deliver sheet metal for pipes, compressors and fittings for the pipeline project. These Austrian deliveries, to be effected over a period of 4 years, would have to be prefinanced by a 15-billion-schilling loan. [Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 11 May 81 p 7 AU]

RESEARCH WITH HUNGARY--At the invitation of Austrian Science and Research Minister Herta Firnberg, Gyula Szeker, chairman of the Hungarian National Technological Development Committee, visited Austria from 10 to 13 May, accompanied by a delegation. In their talks, the sides noted the successes of cooperation projects in such fields as geothermics and the joint utilization of brown coal and agreed to intensify cooperation in various other fields of research, including recycling, efficient use of energy and development of alternative sources of energy. Minister Firnberg was invited to pay a return visit to Hungary. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 14 May 81 p 2 AU]

GOVERNMENT AGREES 'IN PRINCIPLE' TO AWACS PROGRAM

LD150939 Brussels LE SOIR in French 8 May 81 p 3

["C.-G. S." report]

[Excerpt] On Wednesday, the Belgian Government reacted to a dispatch issued the previous day by the West German DPA press agency which announced that Brussels had informed NATO of its decision to take part in the AWACS program. Belgium was the only alliance country not to have taken a final stance on this matter.

The prime minister's department confirms that the general policy cabinet agrees in principle to the AWACS program provided the economic compensations are clearly established and that it receives "full assurances that the AWACS program will be implemented in the framework of the 10-year national defense budget and of the series of budgetary decisions taken on 22 March 1981." This implies in particular to the "reduction or postponement of other military programs adopted to a value not exceeding the cost of the AWACS program, in other words 2.5 billion francs," Mr Eyskens' department explained.

LE SOIR VIEWS 'FRAGILITY' OF EYSKENS GOVERNMENT

LD181035 Brussels LE SOIR in French 15 May 81 pp 1, 2

[Guy Depas report: "Eyskens: A Few Hours in Which to Extricate Himself"]

[Excerpt] There is no agreement on anything unless there is full agreement. This Thursday morning, before the important Christian People's Party [CVP] meetings, discussions are going on within the ministerial general policy committee to try to reconcile the viewpoints of the Flemish Social Christians and their government partners on the problem of reducing production costs in enterprises.

The reorganization of the Walloon iron and steel industry is no longer a problem per se. Despite the delaying tactics used most of yesterday by Gaston Geens, chairman of the Flemish regional executive, the plan for the Cockerill-Sambre merger, defended by Willy Claes, might produce a consensus at the cost of a few stylistic changes.

However, unless there is agreement on the other major section of the political discussions, the obstacles to the plan to save the steel industry will not be lifted. The point which is at stake once again is, therefore, the modification of the automatic wage indexing system which the CVP is demanding together with a reduction in social charges paid by enterprises (40 million) compensated for by an increase in VAT.

It must be remembered that the socialists categorically reject a modification of the wage indexing system.

In these circumstances, the Eyskens government's existence seems more fragile than ever, with the risks of a social explosion inherent in its possible collapse. The prime minister has only a few hours in which to extricate himself. All observers agree that this Thursday is crucial in view of the cabinet meeting still scheduled for Friday. The general appeasement which would enable Mark Eyskens to prolong his government's existence until after the vacation period depends essentially on the attitude adopted by the CVP, his own party, at the important meetings it has called for noon this Thursday: first a parliamentary groups' meeting and then an extraordinary bureau meeting. Since the intention of Eric van Rompuy, semiofficial spokesman--at least he is considered as such--of Leo Tindemans and fiery CVP youth chairman, is to demand that the leadership committee make a new evaluation of government policy before any decision is made. The problem could remain unsolved.

CHANCELLOR LEAVES FOR 3-DAY VISIT TO UNITED STATES

[Excerpt] Bonn, 20 May (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt left this morning for 3 days of talks with U.S. President Ronald Reagan and his administration in Washington. Everything points to the fact that Schmidt can expect a friendly reception at the White House. According to U.S. Government circles, President Reagan intends to use this opportunity to deepen his acquaintance with the federal chancellor and to lay the foundations for personal relations of trust.

The main topics of the chancellor's talks will be the security policy of the West with special emphasis on the planned U.S.-Soviet negotiations on the limitation of medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe, as well as economic policy. Schmidt is in favor of the earliest possible (?preparation) for the opening of negotiations with Moscow, planned to start before the end of the year. On economic matters, the chancellor intends to raise the unfavorable effects of the U.S. high interest rates on the economy of the Federal Republic and other West European states.

Brandt Comments on Trip

DW200757 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1815 GMT 19 May 81

[Reporter Thomas interview with SPD Chairman Willy Brandt; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Can the federal chancellor feel strengthened in going to Washington after the recent discussions?

[Answer] This question can be fully answered with yes. We had very factual discussions, serious factual discussions, with a very strong demonstration of confidence for the federal chancellor.

[Question] Was it helpful, after all, that the chancellor linked his own fate with the success of disarmament negotiations?

[Answer] It may have played a role. It was significant for the overall course of our debate that all the reservations existing on such an occasion have been expressed in many places, so that one can put everything together now and incorporate it a bit in our overall policy aimed at safeguarding peace.

REPORTAGE ON BRAZILIAN PRESIDENT'S 3-DAY VISIT

Schmidt Talks; Neto Statement

PY192101 Buenos Aires LATIN in Spanish 2047 GMT 18 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 18 May (LATIN-REUTER)--Brazilian President Joao Baptista Figueiredo met FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today to talk about the situation in the Middle East and in Poland.

General Figueiredo, who will hold another series of talks with Schmidt tomorrow during the last day of his 3-day visit to Bonn, concentrated his attention on world affairs rather than bilateral matters, said Brazilian Embassy officials. They said that the agenda also included relations among underdeveloped and industrialized countries, as well as the North-South summit conference scheduled to take place in Mexico this year.

A presidential spokesman in Bonn said that the Brazilian chief of state also met with President Karl Carstens and that their talks included problems in Central and South America. General Figueiredo is accompanied by the foreign affairs and planning minsters, Ramiro Saraiva Guerreiro and Antonio Delfim Neto.

Delfim Neto told journalists that the talks did not include a controversial nuclear agreement signed in 1975 by Brazil and the FRG, agreeing to provide Brasilia with the elements for building eight atomic powerplants. That agreement has been criticized by some Brazilian experts as being too expensive.

Brazil is the FRG's largest commercial partner in Latin America and economic cooperation is an important goal of the Brazilian delegation's visit. Delfim Neto said that Brazil is trying to obtain nearly $1 billion in FRG credits for various projects, including a harbor and a railway program. A $700-million statement of intentions was submitted for agreement with the German firm Vereinigte Aluminium Werke, Brazilian officials said. They also said that no project details were discussed. They added that other plans include a $60-million negotiation to build a harbor in Tubarao and a $230-million deal for a railway project in Recife.

During talks to be held tomorrow, President Figueiredo will also meet with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

Carstens Lunch

PY191628 Brasilia Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 18 May 81

[Excerpts] We look with interest at how tolerantly Brazil receives people from different countries and peoples, mixing them into a Brazilian nation. FRG President Karl Carstens made this statement today in Bonn at a lunch for Brazilian President Figueiredo. Recalling that Brazil, as other countries, has not been saved from economic difficulties, the FRG president stated that he is certain that President Figueiredo will know how to conduct his country through those difficulties. He added that he is following attentively and with admiration the manner in which the Brazilian president is firmly maintaining his policy of democratic opening.

Regarding economic relations, Carstens feels that the two countries are walking on increasingly more solid paths of common industrial projects such as cooperation on the peaceful use of nuclear energy. In the political field, the FRG president stated that both countries defend new relations among developed and developing countries. He did not hesitate to say that Brazil is now one of the most important countries in the world.

In response to the statement made by FRG President Karl Carstens, Brazilian President Joao Figueiredo said: Brazil is proud of its increasing cooperation with the FRG. We respect the FRG's diplomatic policy since it is--like ours--devoted to achieving peaceful coexistence and seeking proper paths leading to a better understanding between peoples. He noted that all political and economic aid mechanisms will lead to the strengthening of world peace. He added: As a country that is simultaneously a Third World country and a member of the Western World, Brazil is particularly aware that it is not through false concepts or restrictions, or through futile confrontations but through the acceptance of the different political trends that we will be able to achieve the much sought national well-being. The Brazilian president also said: We want to establish a renewed system, a true democratic system that will lead to and produce those changes needed to achieve development.

After the lunch with President Karl Carstens, President Figueiredo, accompanied by Ministers Danilo Venturini and Ramiro Saraiva Guerreiro, met with FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and with FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. After the respective introductions, President Figueiredo and Chancellor Schmidt went to the 2d floor of the FRG Chancery where they held their first working meeting, lasting approximately 1 hour. After the meeting, Chancellor Schmidt said that they discussed issues pertaining to Europe, Africa and the Caribbean. He noted, however, that he will be able to discuss what was said about the North-South dialogue only after President Figueiredo leaves the FRG.

Speaking to Brazilian journalists, President Joao Figueiredo said that he had very fruitful meetings with both FRG President Karl Carstens and with FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

Brazilian Sentences Criticized

PY191359 Paris AFP in Spanish 2058 GMT 18 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 18 May (AFP)--The FRG-Brazilian cooperation, the North-South dialogue and a talk on the international conflicts marked the first political interviews which Brazilian President Joao Baptista Figueiredo held with the FRG leaders in Bonn today.

In the morning, Figueiredo and his wife were received by FRG President Karl Carstens, who assured his guest during a luncheon in his honor that the FRG follows with attention and sympathy the way in which the Brazilian chief of state is carrying out a democratic policy in his country. Carstens made emphasis in referring to the strong economic relations which exist between the two countries and also referred to the nuclear agreement signed between the two countries in 1975.

According to this agreement the FRG will supply Brazil with eight nuclear plants by 1990 as well as the transference of technology which will allow Brazil to control the full nuclear cycle.

The FRG president stated that the good relations between the two countries is an example of cooperation between an industrialized country and a country which seeks to develop its various natural resources.

However, FRG labor unions and the Christian Democratic Party, of the FRG opposition, harshly criticized the severe imprisonment sentences against 11 Brazilian union leaders passed by the military court.

Eugen Loderer, president of the Metalworkers' Union of the IG Metall Company, in a letter to FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher requested him to warn the Brazilian president, during the meeting they will hold in Bonn tomorrow--Tuesday--that the FRG union leaders are in complete disagreement with those sentences. He pointed out that those sentences seek to weaken the Brazilian union movement. Deputy Norbert Lammert of the Christian Democratic Party, in particular, protested against union leader Luis Inacio da Silva, alias Lula.

This afternoon the Brazilian president and his retinue, mainly comprising Planning Minister Antonio Delfim Neto, were received by a group of 150 representatives of the Brazilian economy in the FRG who are working with a great number of FRG businessmen.

Among other issues Figueiredo stated that the economic relations between the two countries could not be better but that Brazil, which is in the midst of an economic crisis, needs to continue counting on the FRG's support.

The economists have studied the possibilities of broadening industrial cooperation and trade exchange as well as the means to increase German investment in various sectors of the Brazilian economy.

The German party has pointed out that its investments which amount to DM5,400 million (some $2,700 million) could be doubled by 1986. German investors in Brazil represent 15.4 percent of the total of foreign investors in that ocuntry and after the U.S. investors they are the most important ones it was recalled here.

The FRG newspapers in today's issues carried lengthy reports on Figueiredo's visit and some newspapers even published extra issues with several pages about Brazil which is 30 times larger than the FRG.

Figueiredo TV Interview

PY192121 Paris AFP in Spanish 1149 GMT 19 May 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 19 May (AFP)--A nuclear agreement signed in 1975 between Brazil and the FRG, which was the target of severe criticism at that time, was recalled here today during the meetings Brazilian President Joao Baptista Figueiredo held with Bonn authorities.

However, Brazilian sources in Bonn stated that that agreement on the peaceful use of nuclear energy signed by the two countries on 25 June 1975 was not the main subject of President Figueiredo's talks in Bonn.

During an interview granted to the German ARD television network last night, President Figueiredo pointed out that his country will try to fully carry out the nuclear agreement despite the serious economic difficulties this agreement is faced with and the 120 percent annual inflation in his country. He added that that agreement is very important to Brazil because its industrial development requires an important energy supply.

A Bonn government spokesman stated that the FRG has taken all the necessary measures regarding the concern and criticism of ecologists and those sectors opposed to nuclear energy--the latter believe that this agreement will allow Brazil to manufacture its own atomic bomb. In this regard, the FRG has provided for an oversight system at the nuclear plants within Brazil territory.

Schmidt Dinner Speech

[Text] Bonn, 19 May (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today noted with "deep satisfaction" the great extent of agreement in the exchange of views with Brazilian President Joao Figueiredo. At a dinner in the Godesberger Redoute in honor of the Brazilian president, Schmidt praised Brazil's readiness to bear world political responsibility.

The chancellor stressed that the mutual exchange of information and the similarity of interests in North-South policy is of even greater importance than the individual topics discussed, including "close cooperation in the diversification of energy supplies" which is a "central political task" for both countries.

The chancellor noted that in the North-South dialogue, too, progress could only be made if peace is maintained. In the coming and even more difficult 1980's, this also includes the preservation of the military balance between East and West. Schmidt also went into detail about possible political assistance Brazil could provide in the solution of the Namibia problem through its special relations with the Portuguese-speaking countries in southern Africa. "I am following with the greatest interest your efforts toward the creation of relations of trust with all Latin American states," Schmidt said, pointing to the economically decisive role which regional cooperation also plays.

Figueiredo Speech

PY200125 Brasilia Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 19 May 81

[Excerpt] At a speech delivered today at a dinner given in his honor by FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Brazilian President Joao Figueiredo stated that in October 1981 they will see each other again in Mexico at the conference of presidents of North-South Cone countries. He also said that in the [word indistinct] and financial sectors, the FRG is our main partner in the European Economic Community and our second biggest partner in the world.

Last year, our trade amounted to $3 billion. Our countries count on a number of agreements and mechanisms to stimulate bilateral relations.

The work of the joint commissions for economic, scientific and technological cooperation are valuable and they are meeting regularly. The agreement for peaceful use of nuclear energy signed between our two countries is an example of what we have done and what we can do. The Brazilian Government has kept and will fully keep its commitments, with the assurance that these agreements meet the interests of our two countries.

Final Communique

[Excerpts] Bonn, 19 May (DPA)--Brazilian President Joao Baptista Figueiredo this evening ended his official visit with a talk lasting several hours with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

In the final communique the "constructive and cordial atmosphere" of the talks was stressed. Both governments expressed their will to continue to fulfill the agreements between them on the peaceful use of nuclear energy. After emphasizing the good mutual relations, Schmidt and Figueiredo expressed regret at the delay in global negotiations within the framework of the United Nations and stressed their support for the resumption of the North-South dialogue.

In an interview on German television last night, Figueiredo stated that, in view of the energy problems, Brazil regards the fulfillment of the German-Brazilian nuclear energy agreement as particularly important. The communique also stresses the fulfillment of the agreement, which provides for the supply of eight reactors plus ancillary equipment, only half of which has been fulfilled so far.

Figueiredo's invitations to Federal President Karl Carstens and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt were accepted with pleasure by the two German politicians, with the reservation that the dates will be agreed later.

Trade Balance Figures

PY192042 Paris AFP in Spanish 1529 GMT 19 May

[Text] Bonn, 19 May (AFP)--The balance of trade between Brazil and the FRG showed a $105-million deficit during the first quarter of 1981, unfavorable to the FRG, it was reported here today.

FRG's Statistics Office reported that German exports to Brazil reached $278 million while imports reached $383 million. This is 13 percent more than figures for the first 4 months in 1980.

According to the Statistics Office, the deficit was produced by Brazilian protectionist measures adopted to counter Brazil's soaring inflation rate that has reached 120 percent per year.

On the other hand, the FRG receives income from its Brazilian automobile industry branches. Gearboxes for certain models are fully manufactured at the Volkswagen factory near Sao Paulo.

Finally, Brazil is the FRG's largest iron supplier, covering 25 percent of the FRG's needs in that area.

Figueiredo Departure

PY192338 Paris AFP in Spanish 2319 GMT 19 May 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 20 May (AFP)--Brazilian President Joao Figueiredo left at midnight today (2200 GMT) for his country, thus ending a 3-day work visit to the FRG.

LEADERS COMMENT ON SCHMIDT THREAT, NATO-SPD ISSUE

Chancellor Schmidt

DW191051 Hamburg Domestic Television Network in German 1800 GMT 18 May 81

[Reporter Ernst-Dieter Lueg interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, your threat to resign uttered this weekend, was it a part of a strategy of the Munich party congress, aimed at safeguarding SPD majorities for the dual NATO decision?

[Answer] It's no strategy--I don't like the word strategy in politics, it is a military term--but I believe that, since the Berlin federal party congress, there were never any doubts in my party that I consider the dual decision and the implementation of both of its parts as absolutely necessary and that I link my political existence with it. That is nothing basically new.

[Question] Does the federal chancellor consider compromises possible with a view to the second decision in Munich?

[Answer] Forming of the contents of the dual decision depends very much on the development of negotiations between the Americans and the Russians. It isn't enough, for me, to just enter negotiations. I must demand that they be conducted with the aim of achieving serious successes, in that, they must be conducted with great energy. We at least will stress that.

Foreign Minister

DW191053 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1700 GMT 18 May 81

[Hans-Joachim Reiche interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Bonn--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] Considering yesterday's utterance by the chancellor, Mr Genscher, would you leave the government if the NATO dual decision failed because of the objection of the SPD?

[Answer] Mr Reiche, in view of the threat to West Europe and thus also to the Federal Republic of Germany by Soviet medium-range missiles, we decided to counterarm--a decision which surely was not easy for us to take--but we demanded at the same time that negotiations be conducted with the East on the limitation of these arms lest another arms race begin. This is Federal Government policy which is supported by the FDP and the Social Democrats. This policy was reaffirmed by the German Bundestag in 1979, and the chancellor expressly underscored this once again in his government statement last year, marking the inauguration of the new Federal Government. And I think that it is justified to see the foreign policy relevance of this position adopted by the Federal Government. We must remain a credible partner of the West, we must be a predictable interlocuter for the East. And we must look after the security interests of our country.

This is why the chancellor justly drew the attention of his party to the potential consequences that might ensue if and when the SPD intends to deviate from this joint government position and joint alliance position.

This means that it would not be the Free Democratic Party--which sticks to the policy of the Federal Government--which would leave the government, but the SPD would be departing from the government if it proposes to deviate from the policy of the government.

[Question] But won't this simultaneously spell an endurance test for the FDP?

[Answer] No, we will discuss the issue once again at our party congress. But Free Democrats stick to what they have told their voters. And at the federal level party congress in 1980, prior to the elections, we had decided for this security policy and for this dual decision. This was part of the election decision of 5 October 1980, in which the FDP has been impressively reaffirmed by the voter.

[Excerpts from reporter Thomas interview with Egon Bahr, SPD Bundestag member and chairman of the Bundestag Subcommittee for Disarmament and Arms Control; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Were you, were the members of the Executive Board impressed by the strong words of the chancellor uttered at party congresses this weekend?

[Answer] No. I haven't heard one word of criticism in the many hours of discussions tonight and this afternoon, criticism of the fact that the chancellor repeated what he had said in Berlin. I think that there are two reasons for it. First, because it is absolutely clear for us that the word of the German Federal Government is valid and thus also the word of the chancellor. If it were not valid any more, he must resign.

Second, it isn't acceptable that only the coalition partner makes use of that. It must also be valid for the chancellor. I believe that in doing this, the chancellor has made some preparation for his visit to America.

[Question] Was there nobody who considered the chancellor's threat to resign as exaggerated?

[Answer] No. As I said, there wasn't a word of criticism.

[Question] In what form can the chancellor's philippic be helpful for the basis of the party? An argumentation document is supposed to be worked out. Can one convince people who have a different opinion in that way?

[Answer] We have two argumentation documents here. One is of a more basic character and the other is a more argumentative paper. I think we will introduce both--after a few changes--in the discussion of the party. The discussion of many hours demonstrated that the party takes seriously the concern and the fact that the situation will become more serious in case of stationing, and that it, therefore, presses with better argumentation for serious negotiations.

[Question] Isn't there dissent anyway between the chancellor and Party Chairman Brandt?

[Answer] No, where would it be?

[Question] Mr Brandt responds much more to the basis and the trends of the basis, which the chancellor has strictly rejected with his words.

[Answer] No, I fail to see that. The chancellor and the party chairman are in agreement with regard to the worries they expressed in different ways. We can implement the detente process in the military field only through serious negotiations.

Brandt, Wehner

[Excerpt] Bonn, 19 May (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt and Parliamentary Group leader Herbert Wehner called on Social Democrats to continue to uphold the Berlin party congress decision to support NATO's decision on deplying medium-range missiles while at the same time offering to hold talks with the East. Addressing leading SPD bodies--the party Council, Executive and Control Commission--Brandt said in Bonn today that he is giving this advice even though the prerequisites for the desired agreements on arms limitation had not improved since the December 1979 congress decision. Brandt admitted that those who thought that he was troubled during the past weeks and months by anxieties, doubts and criticial questions were right. For this very reason, however, it is important to him "that we all give the federal chancellor good wishes when he flies to the United States tomorrow." A lot depends on this trip because there is no reasonable alternative to negotiations. Results cannot be expected, however, within just a few months, Brandt said.

Wehner stated that the NATO twin decision obliged both superpowers to hold serious negotiations. It would weaken the goal of securing peace, if one now said "that's over anyway." The Social Democrats insist "to the limit of our abilities" on a resumption and continuation of the talks between the United States and the USSR. Wehner underlined that the Social Democrats want the two parts of the twin decision to be upheld in order to "take advantage of a grace period and prevent what would otherwise happen."

SPD federal business manager Peter Glotz said that there would be intense and open discussion in the party to make the SPD's role clear as the strongest peace movement in Germany and on its security policy goals. Before the summer recess, the SPD will start discussions which will continue throughout the regions, with an "SPD peace forum" in Bonn.

SPD Manager

DW191131 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1700 GMT 18 May 81

[Peter Ellgaard interview with SPD federal manager Peter Glotz in Bonn—live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Glotz, at week's end, the chancellor talked turkey. Can he rely on the SPD now?

[Answer] Just as in society as a whole, there is a controversial discussion going on in the SPD. But I believe that the majority of the SPD unequivocally supports the chancellor's position. It is necessary to keep in mind, above all, that he has pledged his word that negotiations will indeed take place, something that is very, very good and very, very important for the SPD. This means that he has thrown his whole weight onto the scales clearly for both parts of the so-called dual decision of NATO.

[Question] Just now a nonpublic meeting of the party Executive Board is dealing with this point, with security policy. How does the party leadership propose to work the trick of backing the chancellor on the one hand and desisting from strangling the internal party discussion on the other?

[Answer] By waging an honest debate. This means that it will not withhold anything and also can listen, that it will not always promulgate only its own wisdom but will wage an open debate with all those who have something to say on the point at issue and that, in so doing, it will contribute its own experiences. And these experiences are: Preventing war is impossible by means of pure thesis--we throw our arms away. Introducing this offensively, but also honestly, and listening at the same time--this is our program.

[Question] Will the FDP, the coalition partner, be able to rely on the SPD as well?

[Answer] We assume that we can rely on each other. That is to say; we proceed from the same basic views and we don't try any such tricks as passing the buck. I believe that we will be waging this discussion jointly in the respective field for which we are responsible and with the respective voters who elected us.

BADEN-WUERTTEMBERG SPD OPPOSES NATO DECISION

DW181426 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 15 May 81 p 10

[Decision taken by the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD land organization at its 2-3 May 1981 congress in Aalen against NATO's dual decision of December 1979]

[Text] The indispensable bases of social democratic peace and security policy are:

1. The unwavering endeavor toward safeguarding and further developing the results achieved up to now in the policy of detente in Europe, as it had been advanced since 1969 under Federal Chancellors Willy Brandt and Helmut Schmidt and as it is substantiated in the treaties with the Soviet Union and Poland, in the basic treaty with the GDR and in the quadripartite agreement on Berlin as well as in the human, cultural and economic relations based on them. The successes of the policy of detente must be continued and consolidated in the coming years through a consistent policy of cooperative arms control, arms limitation and disarmament on an as low as possible level.

2. The Federal Republic of Germany's membership in the NATO defense community with the equality of the alliance partners. In this, an extension of NATO's scope of duties and its sphere of influence is out of the question.

3. The promotion and deepening of the political, economic and cultural cooperation and integration of West European democracies.

4. The overcoming of hunger and poverty in the developing countries, a fair balancing of interests between North and South, increased assistance of the Federal Republic of Germany and the other industrial countries for peaceful economic, social, democratic and national independent development in the Third and Fourth World. This includes an early worldwide reshifting from armament to development spending, which was recommended unanimously by the UN special conference for disarmament in 1978, demanded by the NATO council likewise in 1978 upon the Federal Government's initiative and declared as urgent in the North-South commission's report entitled "Safeguarding Survival." In view of the current problems of the endangered detente policy in Europe and the threat of a new arms race between East and West, the party congress of the land organization stresses these tasks:

I--NATO Dual Decision on Medium-Range Missiles

Proceeding from the decision of the Berlin party congress, the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD assesses:

1. It is of an existential interest for all European states that on the road toward arms control negotiations a result is achieved to the effect that the planned counterarming will be renounced if there is a corresponding reduction in the already installed SS-20 missiles. This is the only way in which the threat of atomic war confined to Europe can be diminished decisively.

2. Events of the past 18 months have complicated rather than facilitated the accomplishment of these goals. A policy striving for military superiority or deteriorating the East-West relationship through other steps will meet with our determined opposition.

3. Required is that the two superpower's readiness for negotiations on principle results in the immediate starting of concrete negotiations without any preconditions: A temporally limited moratorium with regard to the stationing of Eurostrategic weapons could constitute a sensible part of these negotiations.

4. We expect the negotiations to be held in a constructive way aimed at mutual renunciation of Eurostrategic armament. Questioning one part of the dual decision is also questioning the other. We will not participate in a policy which is aimed at superior military strength. We also will not agree to providing German territory for the stationing of new Eurostrategic weapons. This is why, at the ordinary party congress in Munich, we will urge the examination of whether the underlying basis of the decision of the Berlin party congress is inapplicable and if a revision of the decision is required.

II--Further Initiatives for Arms Control and Arms Limitation

We demand:

--Now as before ratification of the second treaty on the limitation of strategic armaments (SALT II) by the U.S. Senate as well as the continuation of the SALT process;

--The enhancement of preventive cooperative arms control so as to include into arms limitation agreements, in time, not only already existing weapons and defense systems but also those still being developed. This applies in particular to tactical nuclear weapons. In this connection, we reject the introduction of neutron weapons and demand in addition the signing of an international agreement banning them;

--The convocation and holding of a European disarmament conference at the earliest possible time;

--The enhancement of confidence-building measures (CSCE). The starting points for these measures, like in the case of troop reduction negotiations (MBFR), should be those weapons systems and units of both sides which the respective other side considers particularly threatening and offensive;

--The continuation of the Geneva talks providing for an international ban on C-weapons [chemical weapons]. But, it is also irrespective of such agreements that we reject the stockpiling and deployment of C-weapons on the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany.

III--Armament Export

The party congress of the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD land organization comes out determinedly against all efforts at loosening the restrictions for armament exports from the Federal Republic. It shares the view that a mere confinement to so-called areas of tension time and again will lead to harmful and avoidable internal and external conflicts. It calls upon the Federal Government to permit armament exports in the future only to member states of the Atlantic alliance or to those states on a par with them (OECD member states) whose governments are democratically legitimated and adhere to the principles stipulated in the general declaration on human rights. Any such permissions must be fixed with a strict control on their final recipient. At the same time, it demands that this self-restriction comprise the export of armament-industrial production installations and armament-technological know-how.

In addition, it must be secured that this self-restriction is not being undermined this way in cases of arms-economic cooperation within the alliance.

The SPD Bundestag faction is called upon to see to it energetically that parliamentary control of arms deals is being expanded through legal provisions. There must be a long range urge that a treaty of all European NATO countries be achieved which entails restrictions in armament exports outside NATO states.

The SPD Bundestag faction is called upon to immediately initiate a law on the export of war weapons--if need be complementary to the war weapons control law--which complies with the aforementioned principles. With reference to such legal initiative requests for armament exports already underway, which, however, do not fit this framework, they are to be responded to in the negative. In the current situation, the SPD land convention demands the cancellation of submarine supplies to the regime in Chile and the nondelivery of weapons to Saudi Arabia.

Jobs, Armament, Conversion Facilities

It is above all in a period of increasing job and employment problems that the SPD is being confronted with the demand to resort to armament programs so as to secure jobs or create new ones. This becomes manifest, above all, by the dispute over the submarine deliveries to the regime in Chile and the vehement discussion on tank deliveries to Saudi Arabia.

The rapid development in the armament sector shows that armament is one of the most unsuitable means to create a large number of additional jobs or to secure jobs.

In this connection, the decision taken by the Berlin party congress of 1978 may be recalled which demanded: "The SPD Bundestag faction is requested to set up a factfinding committee which is to examine the significance of the armament sector in the Federal Republic of Germany and to inquire into all eventual consequences on the labor market which a conversion from armament capacities into civilian production and research capacities might entail."

In conformity with the positions of the Metal Workers' Industrial Union (IG Metall) which provide for a long term balancing of capacities for research, development and production; state impositions for the maintenance and enhancement of the civilian producition share; gradual conversion from military to civilian production in the wake of detente policy on the basis of existing sophisticated technologies, the SPD land convention expects a policy based on legal provisions, with the objective: that enterprises do not let their share in armament production surpass a certain percentage of the total output, that a gradual decrease in the armament-production share is being achieved in highly armament-intensive enterprises and that armament orders are attached to the quantifiable condition that the production enterprise at the same time maps out and submits plans for investment, production and personnel, with the help of which planning for conversion to civilian production can be carried out.

At the same time, it is necessary to map out economic and above all regional-political alternative concepts through the federal and land ministers of economics which take into account guaranteed jobs and enable a conversion in armament producing enterprises. But all this presupposes the creation of opportunities for having a say and for further enhancing the codetermination right precisely in the question related to production and investment decisions of the employees concerned and their trade unions.

The Federal Government is called upon to continue its efforts within the UN framework so that a central international control office for armament exports will be set up and that the UN efforts for armament-export limitations are being supported and stepped up.

IV--Baden-Wuerttemberg Peace Initiative

The land executive committee is asked to organize as early as this year a supraparty Baden-Wuerttemberg initiative for "peace and international balance."

This initiative is to have the tasks of: campaigning for the goal of safeguarding peace, mustering more support to the political ideas and steps which contribute to international balance and to the strengthening of peace as well as to the creation of durable and stable peace conditions. Creating a common platform for those political and social organizations and interested citizens advocating the expansion of detente policy, a worldwide lowering in armament spending, international arms control and disarmament.

In its capacity as initiator of the initiative, the SPD land organization will try to win over for cooperation additional political and social organizations as well as individuals.

Baden-Wuerttemberg Social Democrats finally demand that Germany policy remain aware of the particular role played by Germany in World War II and that it be guaranteed that not only never again war will be emanating from German soil but also that the Federal Republic of Germany will not take any steps whatsoever which might place others in a position of using force, above all bellicose force.

V--The Party Executive Board is called upon to enter talks on the securing of peace with Socialist sister parties.

BRANDT INTERVIEWED ON SPD, VOTER'S FEELINGS

DW190918 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 18 May 81 pp 112-119

[Klaus Wirtgen and Dirk Koch interview with SPD Chairman Willy Brandt at Bonn's SPD headquarter; date not given]

[Excerpts] SPEIGEL: The SPD throughout the Federal Republic has succeeded in covering up through leadership personalities the contradictions inherent in the content of your policy. This worked for as long as you or Helmut Schmidt had been uncontested. Along with the dwindling prestige of the top politicians, it becomes increasingly difficult for the SPD to maintain such contradictory positions.

Brandt: If a story ages for a while, it appears to be radiant. Specifically this means that in the last round, around 1968 when we had to deal with difficult young people, the SPD didn't open its arms wide and say: Now come here, all of you, and embark on your march through the institutions. It was entirely different. At the time, it was very hard for me to take all that they came up with. And I didn't chime in with them. Yet, I tried to give as many of them as possible the option to cooperate if they wanted to. And by now, many of them are quite respectable Bundestag deputies.

SPIEGEL: The cause of the loss of confidence of the SPD--and not just in Berlin--includes lame formula compromises in difficult problems such as arms policy.

Brandt: I admit that that what is called a formula compromise does occur in politics time and again. But this isn't the point. The point rather is--can you visualize a great party today which will not make any compromise within itself in the case of important and particularly new and difficult problems? You will attain the pure line with a sect but not with an organization that proposes to be a people's party.

SPIEGEL: This will work as long as the party is really open and desists from using the lame compromises for merely camouflaging the decision which, in truth, already has been taken by the leadership. The cue: For and against nuclear energy, for and against nuclear armament.

Brandt: Generally speaking, you are right. But if you mentioned energy, for instance, I deny that our decisions on the issue were mere formula compromises. They made energy austerity the number one issue--with some success, but much more can be done there.

What we said was "priority on coal." This didn't always go all the way down to the managerial boards of power-generating companies, in which social Democrats were sitting as well. Or it was attributable to court decisions. We said: Promotion of alternative energy, and finally, as much nuclear energy as is necessary for a difficult transition period. What is really interesting in what I said last is that what once was nearly a religious strife is that no longer today, if we look at it from this angle for a change.

SPIEGEL: The SPD voters who trusted that the party would in fact keep the option of an extrication from nuclear energy open have been led on a wild goose chase.

Brandt: This is wrong. Surely, the SPD will be unable to help the one who says that this is the devil's work anyway. Just as the SPD cannot satisfy the honorable citizens who say that we will not hear of arms, preferring that my state has nothing to do with arms, this is an honorable position. Anyone advocating this view can very well cooperate in the SPD, though it isn't SPD policy.

SPIEGEL: NATO's counterarming also contributes to the distrust of many Social Democrats for formula compromises. Granted, the dual decision accepted by the Berlin party congress concretely contains the offer of disarmament negotiations to the Soviets, but now, justified doubts exist that the United States seriously wants such negotiations. Reportedly, U.S. military people are demanding far more medium-range missiles for West Europe than the 572 new missiles hitherto envisaged.

Brandt: Well, it is true, to be sure, that many people react not only pensively but adversely if they are made aware of American thinking or, sometimes, even merely assumed American ideas. Or some of them even say: We believe that we are cheated, that the offer of negotiations was but a slight decoration.

I believe that this is unjust toward all American partners. But we in the Western world have not yet reached a point where we have equal rights, where we share in the election of the U.S. President. However, we have a government which looks after our interests within the alliance, to begin with, and then outside of it, wherever this is possible without biting off more than we can chew.

SPIEGEL: The relationship with the United States certainly will occupy the next SPD party congress in Munich in the spring of 1982. The debate on a revision of the SPD attitude toward counterarming will be inevitable.

Brandt: Why a revision?

SPIEGEL: Regional party conventions have demanded the review of the Berlin party congress decision on NATO counterarming.

Brandt: The decision of Baden-Wuerttemberg didn't take me by surprise because it pronounces on this point one of the most natural things in German reality. If the SPD holds a party congress every other year, then it defines its attitude toward the changes in the situation that have occurred since the preceding party congress. But, gentlemen, it may be that the assessment in between will not at all be dominant. It may well be that by that time negotiations of the great powers on arms control will be in progress.

SPIEGEL: Foreign Minister Genscher has made the implementation of the NATO dual decision a question concerning the continued existence of the Bonn social-liberal coalition. Are you being asked by your colleagues in the country more and more how long this government can exist?

Brandt: This hasn't been broached to me that way, and the anxieties of my clientele in the SPD understandably are more strongly directed toward economic policy, employment policy and concomitant issues.

SPIEGEL: Helmut Schmidt isn't getting any younger. Some time ago, you were given the chancellor's promise that he would be on call once more in 1984--provided he will not leave in 1982--so that his successor will have ample time to make a name for himself before the next elections. Does this agreement still stand?

Brandt: To begin with, I cannot confirm the presupposition of this question that way, nor do I believe that you were there. It is the most natural thing in the world that two men who have known each other for so long and who, in this particular case, also have jobs which in some way are interlinked, sometimes will also discuss personnel matters for the next few years.

But you may proceed from the premise that what the chancellor has publicly stated stands: He proposes to go through with this legislative period. And the automatic results of this would be that he will be leading the SPD into the next Bundestag election campaign as well.

SPIEGEL: Is the prognosis that there will be a third social-democratic chancellor after Brandt and Schmidt at all realistic?

Brandt: Oh well, I don't see any sure path leading this direction. Yet, in all my life, I have seen not only unpleasant surprises but some pleasant ones as well.

SPIEGEL: Mr Brandt, thank you for this interview.

ECONOMICS MINISTER DISCUSSES PRAGUE VISIT

DW180857 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1700 GMT 15 May 81

[Reporter Schulz-Vobach interview with Minister of Economics Dr Otto Graf Lambsdorff in Prague; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Lambsdorff] We also discussed Poland. We discussed many political issues, ranging from counterarmament to economic and trade relations, which can be developed indeed. We believe--including the members of the German economic commission--that this is the case. We will work on overcoming a certain stagnation which set in last year and the year before last.

[Question] What are the concrete results of your visit to Prague?

[Answer] The concrete results are that the commissions will continue to work, that we will try to bring about some liberalization with regard to certain groups of goods and that preparedness exists on both sides to achieve some progress in trade, cooperation with German firms and cooperation with third countries--which works rather well, by the way.

GISCARD GIVES FAREWELL SPEECH TO NATION

LD192038 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 19 May 81

[Farewell address to the nation delivered by Valery Giscard d'Estaing at the Elysee Palace on 19 May; recorded]

[Text] Men and women of France, 7 years ago the French people entrusted me with the responsibility for our country. It has been a great honor for me to lead it in a difficult, dangerous world at grips with an economic and also a moral crisis unprecedented in the past 50 years.

You handed me for safekeeping the most precious goods of the French people: Peace, freedom and our institutions. I have been their guardian and, as I leave office, they are handed back to you intact.

Today, the will of the greatest number has chosen a new president.

I wanted the transition to take place according to the rules of republican continuity. This is why I will personally welcome Mr Francois Mitterrand to the Elysee. This will prove the respect of the democratic principles and regular functioning of our institutions.

The day after tomorrow, I will leave the Elysee. I have come tonight to tell you, very simply, goodby.

I am leaving office confident that I have given all my care and all my efforts to what I judged to be essential. I call on you to remember this.

For 7 years, I had a dream--that France should become a strong and peaceful nation, brotherly for all its own and negotiating as an equal with the great leaders of the world.

For 7 years, France has lived in peace, without suffering any serious domestic shocks from either politics or labor. All elections were held according to schedule.

France has remained the country of all freedoms. The way the presidential election proceeded has just proved that. The country is part of what is now no more than an islet of freedom in an ocean of constraint.

Each time our forces have had to intervene abroad, they have done so successfully. My honor remains tied to having made those decisions. Even if our country has not had all the prosperity I wanted for it, for 7 years we have maintained the solidity of the franc, limited the budget deficit, reestablished the social security balance and thereby saved our social welfare programs.

I also wanted the French to be proud of France. I went to a lot of effort for that by representing you abroad. Each of you, when crossing our boundaries, could be proud of being French.

We have launched some major projects. Our program for energy independence, unflinchingly pursued, was admired throughout the world. I developed French-West German understanding in order to consolidate Europe. I kept open the dialogue for peace.

I warmly thank all those among you who voted for me, a total of 14.6 million. Votes from the people--brave, modest votes which recognized the effort made and sought the good of France.

Thanks to all of you, from Valenciennes to Thionville, from Alsace to Britanny, from the Antilles to the island of Reunion, from Manche to Lozere, from Haute-Savoie to Var and Corsica, who helped me in my task and brought me your enthusiasm and devotion. France will continue to need you. Each time it is necessary, I will know I can count on you.

On this day which, for many, marks the end of great hopes, I know that a lot of you share my emotion. Be aware that a political event is only a link in the chain of our long history.

To all those who followed me to the end, I ask that you forget the wounds of political combat, retaining only the attachment to great ideals which remain our own, and the will to tighten the union each time this is a condition of success.

As for myself, I will remain attentive to all that concerns the interest of France. Turned toward the future and strengthened by experience acquired, I will act to remain on call to my country to defend the principles and the ideas which have guided my life and inspired my acts for 7 years.

Before leaving you, I wish good luck to each and every one of you. Yes, good luck from the bottom of my heart, without bitterness toward anyone and with warm appreciation for some.

My wishes also go out to the man whom the French have chosen to be their number one. And in these difficult times, where evil lurks and strikes in the world, I wish that providence may watch over France, for its happiness, for its good and for its grandeur.

Goodbye.

POLL QUESTIONS FRENCH ON PARTY ALLIANCES

LD181357 Paris LE MONDE in French 17-18 May 81 p 4

[Excerpts] An opinion poll was carried out by IFOP on 12 and 13 May on a sample of 1,595 people aged 18 years and over. It was published by LE POINT on 18 May.

Questioned on party alliances for the parliamentary elections, 48 percent of the people interviewed think that a PS-PCF rapprochement is probable (PS-UDF, 6 percent; PS-RPR, 11 percent; RPR-UDF, 18 percent) and 33 percent think that rapprochement is desirable (PS-UDF, 12 percent, PS-RPR, 16 percent, RPR-UDF, 21 percent). Some 34 percent want a PS-PCF majority, 32 percent "a new alliance between the PS and a party from the old majority" and 20 percent want the present parliamentary majority to be returned.

FORLANI, COLOMBO MEET WITH CANADA'S TRUDEAU

[Excerpt] Rome, 19 May (ANSA)--Italy and Canada agreed here today that summit meetings between the leaders of the West's seven most industrialized nations should deal with international politics as well as economics. Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau conferred in Rome today with Italian Premier Arnaldo Forlani and Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo as part of preparations for the July 19 and 20 round of summit talks scheduled to take place near Ottawa.

The two sides agreed that current events on the world scene should become a bone fide topic of debate at the summits, originally summoned for talks on economic policy matters. They also agreed that the "big seven" should continue holding annual consultations even after the round in Montebello Castle, near Ottawa, in 2 months.

BULLETIN REPORTS POPE 'GRADUALLY RECOVERING'

AU191543 Rome ANSA in English 1535 GMT 19 May 81

[Text] Rome, 19 May (ANSA)--Pope John Paul II today received nourishment by mouth for the first time since he underwent surgery last Wednesday after he was shot in St. Peter's Square.

Doctors at Rome's Policlino Gemelli hospital issued a medical bulletin this morning disclosing that the pontiff is gradually recovering and that he spoke at length today with Vatican Secretary of State Cardinal Agostino Casaroli. The bulletin also disclosed that the pope's temperature is still above normal but has dropped from yesterday's 38 degrees centigrade to 37 degrees. Pope John Paul, who has been receiving all his nourishment since the operation by vein in the form of fluids and chemicals, today drank a glass of sugared water.

Meanwhile, the five medical experts from other countries have arrived in Rome. Doctors at the Gemelli hospital announced 2 days ago that they were allowing consultants to see the pope because they had been swamped by offers of free consultations by doctors throughout the world. United States Doctors Claude Weich and Kevin Cahil, West Germany's Herman Bunte, Spain's Villar Del Vinas and France's Jean Paul Loygue arrived in Rome today.

Despite the pope's transfer yesterday from the intensive care unit to a private room in the same hospital, the pope's doctors said a prognosis will not be made until 8-12 days after the operation and that hospitalization will last at least another 30 days. The doctors also disclosed that the pope may have to undergo surgery again 30-40 days after the first operation.

This morning, Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, who is on a 2-day work visit to Rome, went to the Gemelli hospital to get first hand information on the pope's condition. Trudeau did not see John Paul, but asked Msgr Giovanni Coppa, Holy See delegate for diplomatic liaison, to express his best wishes for the pope's speedy recovery. Later, the archbishop of Krakow, Franciszek Macharsky, arrived at the hospital to visit to the Polish-born pontiff.

Investigators continued questioning the man charged with shooting the pope, Turkish neo-nazi Mehmet Ali Agca, while police are still trying to track down two men suspected of having perhaps been accomplices in the murder attempt. Reports in the Italian press today alleged that Agca revealed to investigators that he had also planned to murder England's Queen Elizabeth. Other press reports revealed that investigators are focussing on the possibility that the rightwing organization to which Agca belongs finances itself through international drug traffic.

IRANIAN STUDENTS OCCUPY CONSULATE IN MILAN

The students, all members of the Federation of Iranian Students Unions in Italy, distributed a leaflet which said that similar protest actions were carried out today on the Iranian embassies in Bonn, Stockholm and Ankara.

The students are also demanding that Iranian universities be re-opened, that political prisoners be freed, abolition of "cruel laws" (cutting off hands and blinding) and abolition of torture of political prisoners.

Protest Ends

[Text] Milan, 19 May (ANSA)--Iranian student protesters voluntarily walked off the premises of the Iranian Consulate today after a 24 hour occupation.

The group of about 30 students, all members of the Federation of Iranian Student Unions in Italy (FUSII), took over the consulate yesterday with demands for the reopening of Iranian universities, the release of political prisoners, press freedoms and teaching rights for progressive teachers. It also called for the repeal of Islamic laws which entail cruel sentences like hand-amputations and blindings.

The students left the premises today after they were surrounded by rival groups belonging to the Islamic Association of Iranian Students in Italy (ATAI), which supports the current laws in its homeland.

After long bargaining, the occupants agreed to leave the consulate with assurances from Italian police that they would be protected from assaults from their political rivals. They gave their identification at the police station and were immediately released.

ATAI students held a press conference at the consulate shortly thereafter, branding the previous occupants "pro-Chinese" and "enemies of the Iranian revolution..."

BALSEMAO RETURNS FROM MEETINGS, STOPS IN PARIS

LD182050 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 18 May 81

[Text] Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao returned home today after taking part in the (Duberg) discussion meetings in Switzerland. On his return he told journalists that he had found there great interest in Portugal. He observed that the U.S. currency exchange policy with its increasing valuation of the dollar not only affects Portugal but the European economy as a whole.

During a brief stopover in Paris, the prime minister contacted personalities close to the new French president, Francois Mitterrand. During the contacts, which centered on Portugal's bid to join the Common Market, they reassured him that France is keen to see Portugal become a member of the Community. The prime minister said that in his opinion there is neither panic nor condemnation in Europe over Francois Mitterrand's election victory, only a great sense of expectation.

ETHIOPIAN PARTY DELEGATION ENDS TALKS WITH PCP

LD191227 Lisbon AVANTE ! in Portuguese 14 May 81 p 8

[Joint communique released by PCP and Committee for Organizing the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia (COPWE): "Joint Communique; Invitation Accepted for PCP Delegation To Visit Ethiopia"]

[Text] At the invitation of the PCP Central Committee a COPWE delegation visited Portugal from 6 through 9 May. The delegation was composed of Berhanu Bayih, member of the Standing Committee of the Provisional Military Administrative Council of Socialist Ethiopia, COPWE Executive Committee member and foreign relations chief; Tefera Shawel, deputy chief editor of the central newspaper SERTO ADER; Haile Giorgis Tassew, Ethiopian Ambassador to France; Work Wondimu, COPWE Central Committee Foreign Relations Department sector chief; and Assefa Habtu, temporary sector chief of the COPWE Central Committee Cooperatives Department.

The delegation from Socialist Ethiopia had talks with a PCP delegation composed of PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal, Political Commission and Secretariat member Sergo Vilarigues and Central Committee members Rogerio de Carvalho and Albano Nunes.

The visiting delegation was also received at the headquarters of the Lisbon regional organization and visited PCP offices at villa Franca de Xira and Alhandra and the local administrative offices at Alfama, where it made contact with the respective organizations. It also visited "Mague" in Alverca do Ribateuo, where it was received by the workers commission and the intersindical commission. It visited the commemorative exhibition for the PCP's 60th anniversary.

On 8 May a PCP-Socialist Ethiopia friendship meeting was held at the cinema in Alverca do Ribatejo, at which comrades Berhanu Bayih and Alvaro Cunhal spoke.

During the conversations, which took place in a fraternal and comradely atmosphere, the two delegations carried out an exchange of information and experience on the activity of their organizations and the situation in the respective countries, and discussed the principal topics of the international situation and of the world communist and revolutionary movement.

The PCP delegation expressed the Portuguese Communists' great pleasure at this visit to Portugal by the delegation from Socialist Ethiopia and expressed the PCP's full solidarity with the Ethiopian comrades and with the working class, peasants and working people of Ethiopia in their struggle in defense of national sovereignty and for the extension of the revolutionary changes already achieved on the road to building a socialist society.

The COPWE delegation thanked the PCP for the warm and fraternal hospitality with which the delegation was received and expressed its great esteem for the PCP's lengthy and arduous antifascist struggle, the great sacrifices made in the struggle by the Portuguese Communists and the victories thus achieved by the Portuguese working people.

The COPWE delegation saluted the PCP's steadfast patriotic, internationalist and principled policy and gave assurances of the Ethiopian revolutionaries' and working people's unshakable solidarity with the PCP and the fraternal working people of Portugal in their struggle for political, economic and social progress.

Proceeding from an examination of their own experience and of other revolutionary experiences, the two delegations stressed the existence of a great variety and wealth of paths within the revolutionary process and emphasized that Marxism-Leninism is a sure and decisive guide and tool in resolving the new and complex problems of revolution.

They also stressed that true national independence and social progress can only be guaranteed through thorough economic and social changes on the road to socialism, with the working masses' enthusiastic and creative involvement in the transformation process, with friendship and cooperation with the countries of the socialist community, with the workers movement and with the national liberation movement.

In this connection, emphasis was placed on the Ethiopian revolution's great influence and significance in the African and world peoples' struggle for national and social emancipation, and also the importance of active internationalist support for the Ethiopian revolution and other liberating revolutions aimed at socialism.

The two delegations examined the threats to peace, detente and peaceful coexistence stemming from the militarist policy of interference and imperialist military intervention in the peoples' internal affairs, of frenetic arms race and exacerbation of international tension.

The two delegations stressed as the dominant characteristics of the international situation the socialist countries' achievements, contrasting with the crisis with which the capitalist system is grappling, the intensification of the struggle by the capitalist countries' working class against the monopolies' policy, and the forceful advance of the revolutionary and national liberation movement of the African, Asian and Latin American peoples against imperialistm, colonialism, neocolonialism and for social progress and socialism.

At the same time they stressed the need to steadfastly and resolutely combat the militarist and expansionist counteroffensive of U.S. imperialism and of the most reactionary NATO circles, in their vain bid to halt the advance of the revolutionary process, to regain positions wrenched from them by the peoples' liberation struggle, to secure military supremacy and to impose their hegemony in world affairs.

With regard to Europe the two delegations denounced in particular the decision to deploy the new U.S. nuclear missiles and the policy aimed at strengthening NATO's entire military system, and appealed for an immediate start to negotiations, aimed at the limitation and reduction of nuclear weapons.

The two delegations denounced imperialist policy in the Middle East, the Horn of Africa and southern Africa, the Red Sea, the Gulf area and the Indian Ocean. The setting up of new military bases and the strengthening of existing bases, the formation and avowedly aggressive "rapid deployment force," the strengthening of naval forces, the intensification of support for reactionary regimes and the constant intrigues and provocations against Afghanistan, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia and other progressive regimes constitute a grave threat to the peace and security of the peoples of the region and of the world.

The two delegations stressed that in order to resist imperialism's aggressive plans successfully and ensure the advance of the revolutionary process, it is crucially important to strengthen the cohesion of the three great revolutionary forces of the current era: the socialist countries, the workers movement in the capitalist countries and the revolutionary and national liberation movements, with their progressive evolution.

The two delegations expressed their solidarity with all peoples struggling against imperialism, colonialism and racism, and in particular with the peoples of Palestine, El Salvador, Namibia and South Africa, currently the targets for the redoubled offensive by imperialism and international reaction.

The Portuguese revolution and the Ethiopian revolution, which liberated the two countries from cruel dictatorships, created conditions for the development and strengthening of the relations of friendship and cooperation between the Portuguese people and the Ethiopian people, which find their highest expression in the fraternal relations between the PCP and the COPWE.

To this end, the two delegations declare themselves firmly in favor of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries, as well as of the development of cultural, economic and other relations based on equality, noninterference, mutual advantage and respect for independence and national sovereignty. These relations serve the interests of the two peoples and countries and the universal cause of peace, cooperation and friendship among peoples.

The Ethiopian delegation conveyed an invitation for a PCP delegation to visit socialist Ethiopia--an invitation which was accepted with pleasure.

CUNHAL ATTACKS GOVERNMENT AGRARIAN REFORM

LD180518 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2230 GMT 17 May 81

[Excerpts] The Portuguese Communist Party today held a rally in Baleizac, in tribute to the memory of Catarina Eufemia, the heroine of the rural proletariat of Alentejo Province, as Alvaro Cunhal called her.

The leader of the Portuguese Communists addressed the rally in a speech of some 40 pages devoted exclusively to agrarian reform.

Alvaro Cunhal delivered what may arguably have been his fiercest public attack ever on the present government. The policy of the Democratic Alliance [AD], the Pinto Balsemao government on the question of agrarian reform, the PCP secretary general stated, is even more reactionary than that pursued under Salazar and Caetano.

And he went on immediately to say that, quote, the distribution of land and the transformation of the workers into farmers is a colossal lie aimed at slandering agrarian reform and concealing its destruction and restoration of the big estates.

Towards the end he spoke at some length of the socialist party [PSP] stating at one stage: It is regrettable, at a time when the AD is giving clear signs of being weakened, that Mario Soares should remain entrenched in his anticommunism and should again be seeking to drag the PSP into alliances with the right.

ETA CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR BOMBING ATTACK

NC182156 Paris AFP in English 2143 GMT 18 May 81

[Text] Bilbao, northern Spain, 18 May (AFP)--The Basque Separatist ETA-Military Organization today claimed responsibility for a bombing attack in Lemona last Thursday in which two civil guards were killed and one was seriously wounded. The ETA-Military, in a communique to the Bilboa press, called on the Basque people to organize "civil and armed resistance to make the democratic break in this region possible."

SECURITY SOURCES BLAME ALGERIA, USSR FOR TERRORISM

LD200759 [Editorial Report] Paris LE FIGARO magazine in French 16-22 May 1981 carries a Jean-Pax Mefret Madrid dispatch on his conversations with unnamed Spanish army and secret service officers following the recent terrorist attacks in Spain. He cites an army officer as saying that those really responsible for the terrorism in Spain are "in Algeria, in Cuba and in the USSR. It is there that you will find the driving force behind this urban guerrilla warfare which--on false autonomist pretexts--is merely trying to destabilize our country and prevent it from entering the European Community at any cost. Their aim is to exhaust the military's patience, to create an atmosphere of civil war and to turn the country into a Lebanon or a Northern Ireland." Mefret then describes the recent terrorist attacks on army generals which aroused fears of an army reaction and stresses the surprise created by Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo's failure to introduce any special measures to combat terrorism. He cites a senior officer in the antiterrorist police as saying: "He surprised everybody and disappointed many people. He will not be able to act in that way twice. Spain must have the means of struggling against terrorism. And if the government does not take the necessary measures in the coming weeks, some people will be tempted to take action without it." Mefret goes on to say that the Spanish secret service is convinced that the Basque Homeland and Liberty and the 1 October Armed Revoutionary Group terrorists are trained at the Lido camp around 20 km from Algiers. According to a Spanish secret service officer: "The killers Jose Etchari and Jose Astidia spent several training periods in Algiers. We have proof of that. We also know that the Soviet military intelligence services--the Main Intelligence Directorate--are closely following--when they are not advising--the terrorist actions of these Marxist groups."

PSOE AIDE URGES PUBLIC ROLE IN NATO DECISION

LD141325 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 7 May 81 p 18

[Article by Luis Yanez, Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] spokesman on Congress of Deputies Foreign Affairs Committee: "Popular Participation in NATO Issue"]

[Text] Since the beginning of the political transition, the issue of Spain's entry into NATO has been intermittently present, gaining and losing topicality in accordance with the government's short-term interests. Previously, in the days of Franco, the democratic European countries had prevented Spain's entry into NATO. However, according to what a former minister in Franco's last government told me a short while ago, the United States pressed for Spain to join NATO before the changes which it feared would occur after the dictator's death (the revolution in Portugal had already broken out). The cabinet, headed by Arias Navarro, rejected the option because it proved, following a financial study, too onerous for the Spanish treasury.

The various Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] governments have approached the issue more with an instrumental purpose than as a real contribution to our national security. Instrumental in domestic policy at critical moments for the UCD (Oreja's statements to EL PAIS following the motion of censure) or instrumental in foreign policy, using logrolling: "We enter NATO; you allow us to enter the EEC and return Gibraltar to us."

Everything seems to indicate that it is the Pentagon and the U.S. State Department which are most interested in making us a NATO member, more as a psychological factor of pressure on the communist bloc than as a real contribution to Western defense, which is already guaranteed by the bilateral treaty, and, of course, without taking into account at all our own interests or the scenarios of danger or threat in which Spain could find itself involved (note the rearming of Morocco set in motion by Reagan administration).

At the same time, Spanish and U.S. reaction would attempt to prevent, with our entry into NATO, the socialists' attainment of power in Spain. The words to which General Haig treated us at the Oxford meeting--"the United States would have the right and duty, as an allied country, to take steps to prevent any adventure of revolutionary process in a member country"--are an entire program, especially coming from the man who at the time was NATO commander in chief and is now his country's secretary of state.

It is clear that the issue is of sufficient importance not to be resolved by a mere parliamentary majority, and far less by surprise, as appears to follow from recent stances by the government which were also reflected at the UCD congress.

I mean that the government is planning to make over the next few months the decision to enter NATO, that it will submit the issue to parliament by the most rapid means, that it will guillotine the debate by using the standing orders restrictively and that we will be confronted with the fact that a small rightwing majority which did not represent the majority of the country in 1979 and which represents it far less today will have taken us headlong into NATO.

If we add to all these reasons the fact that, according to opinion polls, the majority of the Spanish population are opposed to the Atlantist adventure, we will see that there is only one constitutional means for averting this outrage; resorting to the consultative referendum envisaged by Article 92, paragraph 1, of the constitution for "Political Decisions of Special Importance." And nobody will deny the more than special importance of the matter at issue.

But a consultative referendum is called by the king "at the proposal of the prime minister, previously authorized by the congress of deputies" (Article 92, paragraph 2) and so we are confronted with the fact that that parliamentary, not social, majority holds the key to the proposal of a referendum which it fears it will lose.

So waht is to be done? In my opinion, it is only possible to exert the democratic and political pressure necessary for the government to find itself induced to call the referendum or to postpone the decision for a few years, because the popular initiative (a minimum of 500,000 signatures) envisaged in Article 87, paragraph 3, of the constitution rules out, among other things, matters "of an international nature," and although it is clear politically that inclusion in NATO greatly exceeds the strict international nature of a routine agreement or treaty, legally we fear that it could be ruled out. At all events, we will have to wait for the experts on constitutional and international law to rule on this.

In any event, irrespective of the legal interpretations, the massively expressed popular mobilization and participation (by collecting at least those 500,000 signatures) would have an undeniable political significance which would force the government to call the referendum or to shelve the issue pending better times.

The referendum would have the advantage of being a democratic and constitutional instrument of participation by the people in a political decision which gravely affects their collective security, and would also resolve a controversy which is dividing the political forces and public opinion. On the other hand, it would have the drawbacks of the possible radicalization and polarization of the country.

Postponement of the decision for 4 or 5 years would make possible better conditions of political stability and a reflection on and greater knowledge of the advantages and drawbacks of Spain's joining the Atlantic alliance.

PAPER SEES CHANGES FROM MITTERRAND VICTORY

LD140817 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 12 May 81 p 2

[Jan-Magnus Jansson editorial: "The Page Is Turned in France"]

[Text] So France voted for change. What happened in the second round of the presidential election on Sunday can be put as simply as that. Despite the fact that reliable estimates pointed more and more to a Mitterrand victory, no one dared to believe that the predictions would become fact. The situation was so uncertain, and it seemed so unlikely that the massive dominance of the Center-Right which has been a characteristic of the Fifth Republic in France would suddenly be shattered.

The French have an excellent tradition of extrapolating reports of voting patterns, and in the next few days we are bound to be treated to analyses of the shifts within the electorate which caused Giscard's defeat and Mitterrand's victory. Until then we must stick to more or less plausible assumptions.

We should note first that, back in 1974, in a different political and economic climate, Giscard's victory margin was so narrow--1.6 percent--that it would not have taken much for the victory to go to Mitterrand even then. However, this time the Socialist candidate's lead was so great--according to present reports, 3.5 percent--that something more far-reaching has obviously happened than that a few hundred thousand uncertain voters have gone over from Giscard to Mitterrand.

As far as the reasons for this swing are concerned, we are dealing with a wide spectrum of considerations, from Bokassa's disastrous diamonds to what are definitely more important factors such as the deterioration in the state of the French economy and dissatisfaction with environmental issues. To get a better grip on the questions, it is probably best to concentrate on which political groupings decided the outcome of the election this time by throwing their votes behind Mitterrand.

The first thing to note is that the number voting in the second round was considerably higher than in the first. This could mean that many of the Communists who stayed at home in the first round instead of voting for the not-very-credible candidacy of Georges Marchais nevertheless supported Mitterrand in the name of traditional leftwing cooperation. There must also have been many ordinary floating voters who now came forward and, as indicated above, voted for change, tired of the frozen political situation.

Of the other groups, the environmentalist vote, around 1 million in the first round, was thought from the beginning to be a relatively safe bet for Mitterrand. But the most interesting group is the Gaullists, with almost 18 percent of the votes on 26 April. It is known that the Gaullist Party was split "from top to toe" over the question of a president, and it is probable that some of its supporters gave their support to Mitterrand. It is true that the Gaullist movement is counted as part of the bourgeois section of the political arena, but its social and political composition is a motley one and Giscard was never popular within the party. it must nevertheless have required a great deal of resolve on the part of many Gaullist voters to vote for a representative of the classical left, and even more to vote for a man who was considered fairly recently to be one of the Socialist Party's more doctrinaire elements.

How are we to evaluate what has happened? An undeniably positive feature is that a change of power in the highest post in France can take place within the framework of the continuing constitution and with peaceful forms. We must remember that the parliamentary left represented by Mitterrand was very "out" when the Fifth Republic was set up in 1958. Now, 23 years later, the popular elections which De Gaulle introduced after a few years in power have nevertheless resulted in a leftwing president.

But is a real power changeover a fact? The present constitution does provide for a very strong presidency, but if the majority of members of the National Assembly are of a decidedly different political color from the president, then his wings are to a large extent clipped. This was the situation that was feared when there was the suspicion for a time that the 1978 parliamentary elections would result in a leftwing majority. Mitterrand has now quite rightly decided to dissolve the National Assembly and call new elections. But who is to guarantee that people will vote the same way in a parliamentary election as they do in a presidential election? There is much to indicate that it is not a clear leftwing majority which has swept Mitterrand to power.

Let us at least bet on the possibility that Mitterrand will not have to give up the game as lost if the June election does not give him a clear leftwing majority in the National Assembly. There could be nonsocialist elements--especially among the Gaullists--prepared to work with Mitterrand and his Socialists. If this happens, his policies will of course have to have a more decidedly moderate complexion, and perhaps part of his nationalization program, for example--which hardly seems to France is shocking as it does to Finland--will come to nothing.

A very clear leftwing majority could even in some respects be more a burden for the president, because he could then be forced to pay for the--albeit reluctant--support he received from the Communists. As is well known, Marchais has let it be known that he will use all the means at his disposal, including his power over the trade unions, to force Communist participation in the government. And here we should remember that the communism in the colors of the tricolor which Marchais was practicing a few years ago has now faded away, and that his party now appears to be a considerably more difficult government partner than either the Italian or Spanish Communist Parties.

At worst, Mitterrand's election could result in a rather chaotic time, reminiscent of Leon Blum's experiences during the Popular Front in the 1930's. If this happens, many of those who voted for Mitterrand will sigh for the days of supercilious but well-meaning authority and of a stability and order which ended with Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

But no matter what the circumstances, the change itself in the presidency will lead to considerable change in the political climate in France. Even if Giscard could be described as a moderate, he represented much more than De Gaulle, to say nothing of Pompidou, the classical French right. But with Mitterrand there comes a breath of the Fourth Republic, in which he himself served as minister eleven times--and of parliamentary life with its petit-bourgeois virtues and vices. How a man with his background will fit into the system built by and for De Gaulle is still an unanswered question.

MEETING AGREES ON INCREASED TRADE WITH GDR

[Text] Finland and the GDR will try to increase trade between them from 659 million markkaa last year to 1 billion markkaa before the end of 1983. This was agreed at the meeting on trade between the two countries held in Helsinki last week. The meeting was of the mixed commission for the reduction of obstacles to trade and the mixed commission for economic cooperation between Finland and the GDR.

During the meeting it was stated that trade between the two countries had developed positively in the years 1975-1980, that is, since the agreement to reduce the obstacles to trade was signed. During this time Finnish exports to the GDR increased by 210 percent at the same time as Finland's total exports grew by 155 percent.

Imports from the GDR also increased somewhat more than total national imports. Imports from the GDR increased by 126 percent, while total imports grew by 105 percent. Last year trade between Finland and the GDR was farily well balanced, while the previous year showed a surplus for Finland.

NORWAY

ARBEIDERBLADET WELCOMES MITTERRAND VICTORY

LD140811 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 12 May 81 p 4

[Editorial: "Pleasing Victory"]

[Text] We see the French people's election of Socialist Party leader Francois Mitterrand as president of the republic for the next 7 years as one of the most encouraging political events in a long time. And the electors made their choice with, by French standards, a large majority. Of the 31 million people who took part in the election, Mitterrand won 1 million votes more than his opponent. The rightwing parties' monopoly of the state apparatus for all of the 23 years since the establishment of the Fifth Republic, has finally been broken. It is encouraging to be given new proof that the much proclaimed rightwing resurgence is not an irresistible natural phenomenon which also applies to the electors' choice of party. It is encouraging to see that the voters have given their backing to a government with more active plans to shape its policy to bring jobs to millions of unemployed and to reduce the great economic and social differences in French society.

Not least encouraging is the fact that the French democratic Socialist Party's support has grown and it has become the country's largest party. At the same time, the Socialists have left the pro-Soviet Communist Party, which until a few years ago was the largest party of the French left, far behind. This is a situation with which the Communist Party has great difficulties in coming to terms, and for several years it has been expending some of its strength in a vain struggle to weaken Mitterrand's Socialists. This was also the case in the campaign prior to the first round of the presidential election 2 weeks ago.

There is good reason to believe that the Communist Party leaders are by no means happy with Mitterrand's victory, even though--in order not to discredit themselves completely--they could not do otherwise than call on their supporters to vote for him in the final showdown. Mitterrand could not win without these votes and the votes of the small "Left Socialist" parties. The rightwing parties also tried time after time to frighten the voters with the claim that a President Mitterrand would be the prisoner of the Communists. It is pleasing that a sufficient number of voters who see themselves neither as Socialists or Communists have rejected these scares and realized that Mitterrand is a man who can probably never be pressed by the Communists to put himself above the principles and rules of democracy. One of the reasons for Mitterrand's victory is probably rather that so many people have seen President Giscard d'Estaing exercise power--both in the mass media and in the judicial system--in a way which broke with the demands of democracy and who believe, as we do, that democracy will be safer in Mitterrand's hands.

France's popularly elected president has the opportunity to exercise real power under the terms of the current constitution. He has more power than any other democracy gives its president. He is commander in chief of the armed forces, he has great control over foreign policy, he chooses his own prime minister and is in reality the head of government. The president has the right to dissolve parliament and declare new elections whenever it pleases him. And this is the first thing that President Mitterrand will do when he assumes office at the end of the month, since he takes over a parliament with a rightwing majority.

For this reason, the election of Mitterrand as president is the signal for a new campaign for parliamentary elections in June, a new trial of strength which will be of decisive significance for what President Mitterrand will be able to achieve. He will never be able to have a parliament as amenable to the president as has hitherto been the case in the Fifth Republic. The influence of the French Parliament will be greater under Mitterrand--a fortunate development in itself. And the president's power is sufficiently limited to ensure that Mitterrand's possibilities of fulfilling the expectations which the majority of voters have of him will be drastically reduced if the center of gravity in the new parliament does not move significantly further to the left than today.

Only then would President Mitterrand be able to implement policies based on his social democratic program. Unless the majority of those who elected him president on Sunday also leave their mark on the new National Assembly, Mitterrand's situation will be difficult. Mitterrand and his party colleagues are now embarking on a new and difficult election campaign, and we can only hope that its outcome will be that French politics start on a course of greater social justice and democracy.

FALLDIN APPOINTED TO HEAD NEW COALITION GOVERNMENT

LD191450 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 19 May 81

[Text] The leader of the Swedish Center Party, Thorbjorn Falldin, will also head the next Swedish Government. The Swedish Riksdag today gave Falldin powers to form a new non-socialist minority government. The government will be formed by the Center Party and the Liberal Party. The Moderate Coalition Party promised the minority government support in the Riksdag.

The previous Swedish three-party nonsocialist government fell earlier this month because of disagreements over tax reform. Falldin is expected to publish his government selection on Thursday or Friday.

Riksdag Vote

NC191520 Paris AFP in English 1436 GMT 19 May 81

[Excerpts] Stockholm, 19 May (AFP)--The Swedish parliament today endorsed Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin to head a new government. Mr Falldin was endorsed by 102 votes in favour, 174 votes against, and 62 abstentions. According to the Swedish Constitution, a government is endorsed if a majority of parliament's 349 members does not vote against it.

The opposition left-wing bloc, which regroups 154 socialists and 20 communists, were one short of a majority to reject the nomination. Mr Falldin was backed by all 64 centrists and 38 liberals. Sixty-two conservatives abstained, and 11 more were absent from parliament.

STOCKHOLM PAPERS COMMENT ON MITTERRAND VICTORY

SVENSKA DAGBLADET

LD151443 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 12 May 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Mitterrand's Mandate"]

[Text] The second round of the French presidential election ended in a surprise, which will probably be the subject of much theorizing and many analyses for a long time to come. But perhaps it is not too bold even now to launch the thesis that the outcome of the election was more a defeat for Valery Giscard d'Estaing than a victory for Francois Mitterrand.

Many Frenchmen found the time ripe for change after almost a quarter century of rule by De Gaulle and his heirs. Many reacted against an economic policy which had pushed up French unemployment to record levels. Many had tired of Giscard's arrogant exercise of power. Too late the president descended from his Olympian heights during the election campaign. His crow of supporters had already thinned out irrevocably.

Of course, it is impossible to deny that the election result is a personal triumph for the tenacious veteran Mitterrand. However, it would be premature to claim that he has now been given a mandate for the radical reorientation of the French economy for which he has made himself a spokesman.

The French Constitution is tailor-made for De Gaulle's imposing figure and could cause Mitterrand various problems. According to the constitution, the present has extraordinary powers at his disposal, but in the long run he cannot rule the country in conflict with parliament.

In order--if possible--to break the parliament's current conservative majority, Mitterrand will call new elections, probably for the end of June. And this will give further actuality to the delicate relations between the new president's own party, the Socialists, and the Communist Party.

Mitterrand must be eager for Communist leader Marchais to mobilize his voters to ensure a leftwing majority in the new parliament. On the other hand, he runs the risk of alienating voters in the center if he courts the Communists too openly. Marchais probably intends to sell himself as dearly as possible. Even if his poor showing in the first round of the presidential election shows that his political position has been weakened, he nevertheless has a significant chance of exerting pressure on Mitterrand, for instance, by exploiting the Communist control over large parts of the trade union movement.

How radical will Mitterrand's political program be? This depends to a large extent on the degree of influence the Communists are able to win for themselves. For his own part the new president made the following pre-election declaration.

Nationalization of the remaining private banks and of 10 or so large industrial concerns; a large expansion of the public sector, which would initially create over 200,000 new jobs; a reduction of the working week from 40 to 35 hours; a substantial increase in minimum wages and--for the first time in French history--a property tax.

As far as the nationalizations are concerned complicated problems attach to them, and they will probably not take place in a hurry. Mitterrand's other points together form a program to stimulate the economy totally different from the tough line which the majority of other Western countries are following.

International observers have already warned that this program could set in motion a dangerous wave of inflation which would undermine the competitiveness of French industry and necessitate high new tariff walls. On Monday the stock exchange and the currency market delivered the gale warning.

The consequences of the change in presidents for foreign policy will probably be less dramatic than for domestic policy. The criticism of present foreign policy expressed by Mitterrand is of certain aspects rather than of the overall direction.

It should also be noted that Helmut Schmidt, the Social Democratic federal chancellor in Bonn, will probably regret the setback for Giscard, with whom he has worked extraordinarily well, while--according to reports from London--Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher welcomes Mitterrand's victory because Giscard has her most troublesome opponent within the EEC. This shows that personalities sometimes mean more than party labels. What Mitterrand as president represents--and amounts to--still remains to be seen.

DAGENS NYHETER

[Olof Santesson editorial: "France the Day After"]

A number of observers are now giving voice to the hope that there will now be a more relaxed media and cultural climate in France. Others are worried that the whole Western security structure could be undermined. They are afraid that for the first time in over 30 years, communists could find themselves in a responsible position of power in a major Western European country. "Red Threat Over France," as one very conservative Swedish newspaper put it.

A common feature of both these views, the extremely positive and the extremely negative, is that both assume that Mitterrand's victory will actually lead to major political changes.

But this is by no means certain as yet. It is true that the Constitution of the Fifth Republic gives the president enormous power, but he cannot ignore the relative strengths of the parties in the parliament, especially in the directly elected national assembly. There is no point in a French president's trying to govern the country and, as Mitterrand has promised, for example, to nationalize large companies with the help of a government which does not have a firm parliamentary base. The National Assembly could topple such a government through a no-confidence vote.

On the other hand, the President cannot exercise power with a majority government which represents another political viewpoint. For practically all important decisions made by the president must be countersigned by the prime minister or by the prime minister and a relevant government minister.

It is of course possible to envisage a less formal solution, through which a president and a majority in the National Assembly representing different political views would compromise and perhaps even allocate different areas of responsibility between them. But in the French debate there is no sign of such an opening. This is the background to the announcement by Sunday's victor. Francois Mitterrand, that he intends to dissolve the National Assembly with its center-right domination and call new elections for the end of June.

His calculation is that the leftwing wind will continue to blow so that the new president will win a majority in the National Assembly. Such a majority is difficult to imagine without the collaboration of the Communists. Communist leader Georges Marchais is already speaking of Mitterrand's election as "our" victory. Mitterrand could well do without such an embrace. Nor has he said how he intends to treat the Communists and their claims to a share of power.

After Giscard d'Estaing's defeat, Gaullist leader Jacques Chirac emerges as the leading name among Mitterrand's opponents. He has already called for "the defense of the principles of the Fifth Republic." A new election after the two rounds of the presidential election amount in all to three chances for the French people to make their voice heard. And of course the possibility cannot be excluded that a number of voters under pressure from the intense debate will begin to retreat from the path of change.

For the time being Mitterrand has only won a partial victory. It is easy to be carried away by the initial atmosphere of victory surrounding Mitterrand. It could be both beneficial and necessary for France to replace its political leaders. Half the nation has been excluded from power for far too long. But the transition has not yet been completed.

PROPOSALS FOR DEFENSE SPENDING CUTS OUTLINED

LD181914 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1830 GMT 18 May 81

[By defense correspondent Robert Hutchinson]

[Excerpts] A furious Mrs Thatcher tonight confronted her Defence Secretary Mr John Nott as the furore over Britain's defence spending raged on. The prime minister was expected to unleash some of her wrath--following Navy Minister Mr Keith Speed's "don't sink the fleet" plea--against Mr Nott at an informal Downing Street meeting of Cabinet ministers. Mrs Thatcher is angry at the timing of Mr Speed's Friday speech, in which he warned that cutting the navy's fleet of destroyers and frigates would scupper NATO and endanger every man, woman and child in Britain. Mr Nott is determined to push ahead with his fundamental review of Britain's Armed Forces, and it is understood that it has been left to him to consider Mr Speed's future at the Defence Ministry.

The army are concerned that reaction to orchestrated pleas not to "sink" the navy will shift the main burden of the measures on to them. They regard navy threats to disband the Royal Marines as merely a bluff in the intricate chess game of protecting individual service interests. The proposals are:

Navy: A cut in the number of operations surface warships by reducing building programmes and putting destroyers and frigates into mothballs early. More emphasis would be given to building 155 million-pound-apiece nuclear hunter killer submarines, as the best hope of destroying Soviet submarines, and to RAF maritime patrol aircraft.

Army: "Several thousand" jobs would be cut because the force cannot continue to pay, feed and clothe its present 143,000 troops. Some jobs will disappear through natural waste, other through redundancy. These cuts are on top of lower recruiting targets. There would be a cut of 2,000-3,000 men from the 57,000 strong British Army of the Rhine--through recalling an armoured division, weeding out administrative jobs and possibly bringing several fighting units back to Britain. More wartime tasks would be given to the part-time territorial army.

RAF: Slight changes in emphasis are proposed, with more attention to Britain's depleted air defence. The Air Staff want at least 50 more interceptors, but plans are hamstrung by a shortage of trained air crew.

Navy Minister Dismissed

LD191237 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 19 May 81 pp 1, 30

[James Wightman report]

[Excerpts] The prime minister last night dismissed Mr Keith Speed, navy minister from the government, over his part in the row over the Ministry of Defence plans to make drastic cuts in the Royal Navy's surface fleet and disband the Royal Marines. Mrs Thatcher asked Mr Speed for his resignation in a meeting at 10 Downing Street at about 10 p.m. last night and he immediately gave it. Earlier he had declined to resign after a request for him to do so was passed on to him from his superior, Mr Nott, defence secretary. His dismissal was the result of what the prime minister considered to be disloyalty by Mr Speed to Mr Nott on Friday when without informing the defence secretary, he made a speech warning the government against making cuts in the navy. The dismissal is a major embarrassment for the government on the eve of a two-day Commons debate opening this afternoon on the defence estimates.

Mr Speed's speech on Friday was a rallying call for Conservative MPs and party members to protest to the government about the navy or any other sections of the services being cut. Mr Speed's dismissal is expected to be the catalyst for renewed opposition to the proposed cuts from Conservative MPs who have been warning the government that they might rebel against the navy being reduced in the way that has been forecast.

Lord Trenchard, minister of state, defence, will take over Mr Speed's duties.

ARCHBISHOP KHRISOSTOMOS DISCUSSES CYPRIOT ISSUES

NC171142 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 17 May 81 p 5

[Exclusive interview with Archbishop of Cyprus Khrisostomos by K. Andonio; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] Question 1. Some parties and some quarters claim that your positions on the national question are completely different than the tactics and the line that the government have been following and that thus they make difficult and obstruct government activities. Some maintain that your positions are "utopian," while others go so far as to describe them as "warmongering." How do you view this criticism?

Anaswer 1. When the archbishop voices the views of the church on the national question, he does not do so in order to create a controversy with or to dissociate the church's position from those of the parties or of the government. Of course, it is natural that some of the church's views on the national question will differ from those of some parties and, probably, on some points from those of the government. However, the voicing of different views is not aimed either at rendering difficult or at opposing the government's actions. Just the opposite, it aims at stressing the dangers that might be entailed by the line or tactics being followed. In any case, the church believes that if the parties as well as all those whose opinion carries weight were to be more firm than the government in connection with the restoration of our people's rights, not only would the course of our national question not be harmed but, on the contrary, it would benefit because it would provide the government with the possibility to reject pressures and to maneuver more easily, whenever, of course, there would be need for such maneuvering. But, unfortunately, in our case it has been noted that some parties are more submissive than the government, and this undermines the government's authority when boldly projecting our question in the international field. Therefore, the government should not be annoyed by a firm militant line. It should be annoyed by the submissive stands of the other parties, unless it is the government that favors such submissive stands so that it can justify any possible concessions on its part.

As to whether the church's positions are "utopian" or constitute "warmongering," we think that the church has answered these allegations on several occasions.

In view of the correlation of powers, the church does not think that the people are so naive as to prefer a solution of our problem by means of a military showdown instead of peacefully. Definitely, if it is possible to restore our people's rights through talks, this would be the most sound and welcomed procedure. But is this procedure aided by our competing in submission, by the continuous concessions, by the absence of militancy, by indifference and by the spirit of defeatism that are being systematically cultivated? Are we so naive as to believe that by continuously bowing our heads the Turks will leave Cyprus or that they will agree to the restoration of justice and of state authority throughout the island; or by admitting inability to do anything; or by ceasing to talk about the Turkish invasion and by confining our question to a mere dispute between Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots; or by almost falling on our knees and begging--without the slightest bit of dignity--for the mercy and the compassion of the barbarous aggressor? This is precisely where our positions differ from those of our accusers. We believe it is useless to expect a fair solution of our problem as a result of such an attitude and such talks.

We frequently say that in order to be able to correctly define the present and the future, we must study and get to know history well. But history, primarily the history of our nation, teaches that the people's freedom and justice cannot be restored by begging and by imploring, but through struggles and sacrifices, many times painful sacrifices.

There is no other alternative, unless we are prepared to agree to capitulation, for the sake of a humiliating life, and finally to annihilation. Thus, if the people's decision to struggle in every way, when they are deprived of the possibility to regain or to defend their just rights through peaceful processes, is considered "utopian," then--and we cite an example from our own history--the decision of the Athenians to confront the Persians at Marathon must definitely have been "utopian."

Thus, we ask those who describe our attitude as "utopian" or as "warmongering": If the peaceful procedures fail, what should we do? Are we to fatalistically accept the fate of our country, the uprooting of our people, Turkey's presence in Cyprus? And then, if Turkey decided tomorrow to engulf all Cyprus--in view of the fact that the result of the addition and subtraction of forces is not in our favor--are we going to passively accept such a Turkish aggression and to abandon for ever our ancestors' land?

However, the church, which--despite the numerous dangers, massacres and devastations--has preserved intact inside our people's heart their national conscience, dignity and honor, cannot possibly agree today that these people be humiliated or disgraced in such a shameful way.

Question 2. The intercommunal talks are proceeding extremely slowly; in fact, they are deadlocked. What do you think should be done so that the Cyprus cause can be advanced and so that the dangers to Greek Cypriots can be faced?

Answer 2. Last August when I said at Khrysoroyiatissa monastery that it would be naive to expect a fair solution through the intercommunal talks--under the conditions that these talks were then being held--almost all the guided press accused us of undermining the intercommunal talks and, therefore, the solution of our problem. Eight months have passed since then and events have proved our predictions correct. We are not rejoicing at this misfortune. On the contrary, we feel sorry.

The intercommunal talks cannot provide a solution, even of the internal organization of the state, because of the continuing presence in Cyprus of the Turkish troops and of the thousands of settlers, unless Turkey gives the green light for a solution. However, it would be utopian--allow us to use this word--to expect Turkey to give the green light without being compelled to do so by outside or internal pressures.

The church is of the opinion that the continuation of the intercommunal talks, under the conditions that exist today and particularly at the slow pace of weekly or biweekly meetings, is irreparably damaging our entire cause. These endless talks are providing Turkey with the time and the excuse to consolidate its occupation and to prolong its presence. In addition, they are weakening, locally and internationally, our just struggle, because our people are getting used to the "hermaphrodite" [vague] situation that exists, while foreign nations are forming the impression, which Turkey is skillfully promoting, that the whole Cyprus problem is merely an intercommunal dispute. Thus, deinternationalization of our problem is completed, particularly since we have agreed to avoid its projection internationally allegedly in order not to harm the intercommunal talks!

We think that if fruitful talks are to be held, Turkey must be made to believe that there is no possibility for it to stay in Cyprus or to impose its will in the shaping of a solution to our problem. Only then will it see the talks as a means for finding a plausible way to withdraw its troops from Cyprus. In order to achieve this, much struggle and work is needed because one should take into consideration that the great powers--as well as every nation--define their policy according to their interests. Thus, a program for long-term action, for a crusade by the entire nation in the international arena is needed.

We must not be misled by false smiles or by the idea that we must appear to some foreigners or to "some" of our people as reasonable. All the powers of Hellenism must be organized and mobilized in this national crusade, which should be held on an international scale.

And we must struggle in order to be convincing in our attitude and in our unanimous demand for our rights that for us "reasonable" is justice and that we are seeking nothing less than justice, which can be achieved through the implementation of the UN resolutions. Moreover, we must be convincing that no talks can be successful if the aggressor power, Turkey, which is actually talking through the Turkish Cypriots, is not pressured. Only when we succeed in this crusade and only when measures are taken to make Turkey reasonable, only then will the talks be the proper venue for the solution of our question.

But along with this, internally we must not compete in submissiveness. We must appear--we must really be--united in our demand for our full rights. It has been proved that the continuous concessions--allegedly necessary because of our weakness--not only have failed to be useful but have also fanned and strengthened Turkish intransigence and, what is worse, made us appear ready to give in to pressure from foreigners for fresh concessions each time.

On the other hand, I believe that the creation of a well-armed and perfectly trained army, which would serve to discourage Turkish expansionism, along with the cultivation of a militant spirit, would be an important contribution to the development of suitable conditions for talks. Along with this, official Greece must view and must undertake the restoration of justice and freedom for Cyprus as the ultimate question of its national policy and must employ all its potentials in both its internallied and other international relations to this end.

Our problem must be kept alive in every possible way on the international stage by planning concrete, multifaceted activities. We must not merely treasure the various resolutions that we secure at the United Nations or at the nonaligned and commonwealth conferences, but we must also use them fully.

For example, who can claim that we have exhausted everything in connection with the UN resolutions? UN resolution 3212, which demands the withdrawal of the Turkish troops and the return of all the refugees to their houses, also calls on all the parties interested in the Cyprus problem to act for the implementation of the provisions of this resolution. Why don't we invite the UN secretary general to act--as it is his duty to do--in this direction, and why shouldn't we insist on this? On our suggestion and demand, it was decided during the UN General Assembly held before the one last year [in 1979] that if by March 1980 no solution was achieved through the intercommunal talks, the UN General Assembly president was to appoint a committee of UN member states which, in cooperation with the secretary general and the interested parties, would promote a solution.

Why did we fail to ask for the appointment of this committee whose very existence would be--in our opinion--the best guarantee for the continuous internationalization of our question? Unfortunately, we have put all our hopes on and we have been exhausting all our activities in the intercommunal talks. We repeat that we, out of our belief and as the church, do not favor force or war. We are more peaceful than anyone else. But we cannot agree that the peaceful procedure is solely that of the intercommunal talks, which, in our opinion, the way they are being held--if continued--will render useless all the other peaceful procedures at our disposal.

Question 3. The Cyprus Government was recently criticized for having made "dangerous concessions" both in order to achieve the resumption of the talks as well as during the course of the talks. Do you believe that such concessions, which jeopardize our national cause, have actually been made?

Answer 3. It had been agreed that the intercommunal talks were to be based on the well-known 10-point Kiprianou-Denktas agreement. But as we know Denktas reneged and set as a condition for the resumption of the talks--among other things--advance acceptance by us of bizonality. Why did he do this? Because he noted that we were competing among ourselves to submit and he wanted to exploit this competition and thus gain time.

Unfortunately, UN Secretary General Waldheim, probably seeing our submissive stand, instead of pressuring Denktas, turned to us and demanded that we accept some statements of his that indirectly let it be understood that we accepted the term "bizonality" in connection with the geographical aspect of the federation. In March 1980 we rejected Waldheim's effort. In August we accepted it with some minor amendments, and some reservations on our part were put forward on the day of the opening of the talks by Mr Ioannidhis, the Greek Cypriot interlocutor, and were included in a document addressed to Mr Waldheim by the president of the republic.

The church believes that acceptance on our part to pull out of the 19 May 1979 agreement constitutes a detrimental concession both from the point of view of content and of procedure; as for the content, because we have accepted even indirectly the term "bizonality" which, at least for the Turks who had set it as a prerequisite for the resumption of the talks, means separation and borders; as for the procedure, because acceptance of preliminary conditions that were not included in the 19 May 1979 agreement actually abolishes that agreement and encourages similar behavior in the future as well.

The church also thinks that the establishment of a relation between the liberation of Famagusta and the opening of Nicosia airport, which has been accepted by our side without the Turkish Cypriots accepting it, constitutes another detrimental concession with unpredictable effects on our existence as state. This is so because it actually opens the window--if not the door--to the legitimacy of the Turkish Cypriot administration and, therefore, to the legalization of faits accomplis. This is also so because the opening of the airport and its use by both the north and the south of our island would mean recognition of the Turkish Cypriot administration, and, moreover, opening the road toward the Turkish Cypriot ministate.

Besides, we are all aware of the concession to agree to the Turkish demand to withdraw our recourse to the United Nations and not to proceed with any other activities that would internationally expose the Turkish invasion and the injustice that is being committed against us and that would project and promote our demand and the need for restoration of justice and freedom in our country, through the withdrawal of the invasion troops, the return of displaced people to their ancestral homes, the tracing of missing people and so forth.

Question 4. You have repeatedly asked in public statements that Greece help Cypriot Hellenism in a more active and dynamic way. Don't you think that such an action would bring Greece and Turkey to the brink of war? And, more specifically, what are your comments on the policy that the Greek Government has been following on the national question?

Answer 4. We do not think that there is a Greek Cypriot who would not ask for more active and more dynamic support of Cypriot Hellenism from Greece, or who believes that Greece has absolutely fulfilled its duty toward Cyprus and that there is no other room for action for the restoration of freedom and justice in the island. We understand that those who appear to be fully pleased with official Greece's support of the struggle of Cypriot Hellenism have been doing so either for reasons of diplomatic courtesy or in order to receive a certificate of good conduct. In any case, allow us to say that they are not being frank or, the least than can be said, they are not voicing in this field the feelings of the Greeks of Cyprus.

The church has on many occasions had the chance to say that when we demand support from Greece, we are not referring to economic support because today such support is not very necessary. What is needed is the other support, the "national" support, which is conveyed by the readiness and willingness of Greece--the motherland--to utilize all the means at its disposal so that the aggressor will leave Cyprus, so as to restore the rights and secure--not for a few years but forever--the survival of Hellenism, which has been living in Cyprus for thousands of years. This is dictated by similarity of blood, language and religion, as well as by justice.

We do not think that a nationally dignified stand by Greece toward Cyprus--a stand also dictated by justice--would lead Greece, as you said, to the brink of war with Turkey. Many times it is retrogression that leads to war, because it emboldens the wrongdoer and aggressor. But even if the possibility of such a danger existed, we do not believe that there would be Greeks either here or in Greece who, having to choose between enslavement and war, would choose enslavement and annihilation.

Question 5. How do you understand the role of the church in the national question, in view of the fact that various quarters have been challenging the ethnarchic capacity of the church and have been demanding that its involvement in national and political affairs be terminated?

Answer 5. The church has had many opportunities to define its role and its responsibilities when the people--that is its congregation--are in spiritual, physical and national jeopardy, as is the case with Cyprus. It has also stressed that the interest of the church and its activities in connection with the national question is something completely different from our involvement in politics. Thus, we do not consider it strange that in a recent public opinion poll, when asked as to whether the church should involve itself in politics, the majority of the answers were against such involvement. But even if we ourselves were asked the same question, we would say: No, the church should not get involved in politics. But politics is one thing and national question is another.

The church definitely will not give in to the cries of expediency that want to immobilize it in order to make easier the acceptance by our people of a camouflaged partitionist solution that would definitely block the road for the return of the displaced people or at least the return of the majority of the displaced people to their ancestral homes, and that would also open another road, the road of totally uprooting Hellenism and Christianity from Cyprus.

Question 6. Various quarters have claimed that "you are behind" the president of the House of Representatives and his party and that you are backing, in various ways, Mr Alekos Mikhailidhis and his New Democratic Front. What is your response to these allegations?

Answer: The church has stated many times that it stands above and beyond parties. It neither identifies itself with nor serves the policy of any party. All Christian Greek Cypriots, regardless of their political affiliation, are members of our church. As to what is being said that "we are personally behind" the chairman of New Democratic Front, Mr Alekos Mikhailidhis, and his party, this is completely unfounded. We have been connected with Mr Mikhailidhis from the time of our gymnasium days.

Being the primate of the church, we love those who love us and those who hate us, and those who praise us and those who insult us, and we pray that they be enlightened and that they be saved. What the church is concerned about and has been working for is that sharp controversies and unacceptable means in the race for political success be avoided. We have been caring for and struggling for the predominance of a spirit of forbearance and mutual respect, and mainly for the cultivation, the predominance and the consolidation of unity among all the classes and the forces of our people, as well as among all the parties and the political leaders, for the sake of strengthening our national struggle and of restoring justice and freedom in our country.

Kiprianou Reaction

NC180450 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 17 May 81

[Excerpts] In the framework of his visits for the on-the-spot study of the problems that face the various communities, President Kiprianou visited Palaikhori this afternoon, where he presided over a regional meeting.

President Kiprianou referred to the statement of Archbishop Khrisostomos, published today, and expressed deep bitterness and disappointment over it. While, he said, the archbishop stated that the church remains above politics, he yet selected 1 week before the elections to express views and criticize the government's policy on the national issue.

Kiprianou added that nobody denies the church the right to be interested in the national issue; I am, he added, the first to recognize this. The fact, however, that 1 week before the elections the archbishop makes unfounded accusations against the government, in the way in which these were made, is tantamount, in essence, to involvement in politics.

Further Khrisostomos Comment

NC181227 Nicosia O KIRIKAS in Greek 18 May 81 p 8

[Text] In answer to our correspondent's question regarding his statement "on submission and continued concessions by the government" in the national issue and President Kiprianou's reply, Archbishop Khrisostomos made the following exclusive statement to O KIRIKAS this morning:

"In our position as archbishop, we do not deem it right to be led astray by counter-statements or to be in contest with anyone, let alone with the president of the republic. It is known that the spoken truth disturbs and embitters. However, we did not have the intention to hurt anyone nor did we think that the president of the republic and our beloved Mr Spiros Kiprianou would be embittered. For this reason, the only thing we have to say is: 'Although we admire Plato, we admire truth even more.'"

DENKTAS SAYS NO GREEK CYPRIOTS ALLOWED TO RETURN

NC190932 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 16 May 81 p 4

[Abdullah Azizoglu report]

[Text] Nicosia, (AKAJANS)--TFSC President Rauf Denktas has said: "We will not surrender our homeland to Maoist-Leninist groups." In an election speech at Morphou, Denktas, who will stand again for the presidency, also said: "Not a single Greek Cypriot will be allowed to cross the borders of the TFSC." When he said this, he was carried shoulder-high.

President Denkas, who is 57 years old and a National Unity Party candidate for the presidency, was met in Morphou with popular enthusiasm. In his speech Denktas asserted: "We will not surrender the administration of northern Cyprus to those who toe the Leninist-Maoist line. The path that the Turkish Cypriots follow is the path that leads to our fatherland, Ataturk and the mausoleum. I vehemently condemn those who say that Turkey should not interfere in our internal affairs and those leftists who describe the Turkish army as a force of occupation. In his election speech Denktas also replied to the assertions by the Greek Cypriot leaders that "all the refugees will return to their homes." He said " a population exchange was carried out and 65,000 Turkish Cypriots crossed into the north. After this, we will, by no means, accept the crossing of even one single Greek Cypriot into the Turkish Cypriot territory."

O AGON CRITICIZES STATE INVOLVEMENT IN POLITICS

NC191105 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 19 May 81 p 2

[From the "Our Positions" column: "Party Activities"]

[Text] We were seriously concerned over continued denunciations about the involvement of the state's apparatus and particularly of members of the police force, in party activities. These denunciations come from nearly all the parties, which also furnish specific evidence.

The fact that those in authority fail to answer these specific denunciations creates the impression among public opinion, if not the firm belief, that a party state does truly exist. Naturally this will lead to further denunciations in reference to the genuine character of the election and the true representative status of the results, thus undermining adherence to democratic processes. The government has a duty to stop such a development.

GOVERNMENT DENIES NONALIGNED CHANGE CYPRUS POLICY

NC190825 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 19 May 81 p 1

[Text] Referring to yesterday's press report in a weekly newspaper about an alleged change in the position of the nonaligned countries on the Cyprus issue, in contrast to the position of the Cyprus Government, the Foreign Ministry released the following observation:

1. As repeatedly stated in the past, the policy of the Cyprus Government on presenting the Cyprus issue internationally not only enjoys the full support of the Nonaligned Movement but it is also in complete accordance with the recommendations of the nonaligned contact group which were confirmed both during the recent ministerial council at New Delhi as well as during the bipartite contacts with governments of the Nonaligned Movement.

2. It is underlined that this report is not only unfounded when it presents the government as allegedly attempting to deinternationalize the Cyprus issue, but it also reaches arbitrary conclusions which, on the one hand, undermine the correct handling of the government and, on the other, damage the Cypriot cause during the difficult phase it is now passing through.

3. The Foreign Ministry observes with regret that such reports represent a systematic effort to deceive the people of Cyprus.

TRADE PROTOCOL SIGNED WITH ROMANIAN DELEGATION

NC191656 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 19 May 81

[Text] Today a protocol was signed at the Planning Bureau between Cyprus and the Socialist Republic of Romania aimed at further tightening the bonds of friendship between the two countries and further developing cooperation in the sectors of commerce, industry, tourism, agriculture and so forth.

On behalf of the Cypriot side, the protocol was signed by Director General of the Planning Bureau Aristidhou and on behalf of the Romanian side by the director for Planning and Promotion of Economic Exchanges of the Romanian Ministry for Foreign Trade and International Economic Cooperation Emil Fleseriu.

In a speech during the ceremony, Aristidhou expressed the conviction that the total commercial transactions between the two countries in the coming years will more than quadruple that of 1979, as had been envisaged in talks in Bucharest between Presidents Kiprianou and Ceausescu.

Fleseriu reiterated the Romanian Government's wish to maintain and strengthen the friendly relations between Cyprus and Romania. He also reaffirmed Romania's full support of Cyprus' independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and nonalignment.

COMMERCE MINISTER KITTIS RETURNS FROM MOSCOW

NC182016 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 18 May 81

[Text] Minister of Commerce Kittis this evening returned from the Soviet Union, where he had made a 7-day visit as leader of a Cypriot delegation at the invitation of the Soviet Government.

The joint communique on the visit mentions that during the talks in Moscow, Cyprus-Soviet commercial and economic relations were reviewed and the possibilities and prospects for their further development were discussed. The two sides expressed their satisfaction at the development of commerce between Cyprus and the Soviet Union in the last few years on the basis of the 5-year commercial agreement. Kittis also had talks with the State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations and with other ministries and organizations. He was welcomed at Larnaca airport by USSR Ambassador in Cyprus Astavin and departmental officials.

NEW ITALIAN AMBASSADOR PRESENTS CREDENTIALS

NC131808 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 13 May 81

[Text] President Kiprianou stated that achieving progress in the Cyprus issue depends on a radical change in the Turkish attitude. President Kiprianou called on the countries that can influence Turkey to force it to realize that in the 20th century no one can dictate its terms to the world and completely ignore UN resolutions.

In accepting the credentials of the new Italian ambassador in Cyprus, Ugo Toscano, Kiprianou said that we will continue the dialogue with good faith in an effort to find a just solution to the Cyprus issue based on the UN resolutions and the two agreements of the summit meetings. Unfortunately, he added, no progress was achieved to date; this is exclusively due to the Turkish side which has submitted no proposals whatsoever on the most important aspect of the problem, the territorial, not to mention its intransigent stand on other aspects that compose the Cyprus problem.

In presenting his credentials, the new Italian ambassador said that his country totally supports the Republic of Cyprus in its efforts to achieve peace through negotiations. Mr. Ugo Toscano said the understanding between the island's two communities constitutes the main factor in trying to find a just solution. He further said that Cyprus is not alone in this critical attempt because it has gained the attention of the United Nations and that of the Western European forces. We, Mr Ugo Toscano said, will continue to support the UN secretary general and we intend to play a role in all international fields in favor of Cyprus and its people.

The meeting was also attended by the advisers to the talks, Triandafillidhis and Mrs Souliotou.

EDEK CHAIRMAN RETURNS FROM YUGOSLAVIA VISIT

NC150902 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 15 May 81 p 1

[Text] EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis has had very important talks with the top Yugoslav leadership. The talks were held at a most crucial time in Cyprus' history. Mr Dolanc headed the Yugoslav side during Dr Lissaridhis' talks with the Presidium of the Socialist Alliance. The talks examined in detail the current phase of the Cypriot problem and the Nonaligned Movement.

In an atmosphere of warm cordiality, full identity of views was noted on all questions that were discussed. It was decided to exchange visits more frequently. The president of the presidium gave a dinner in Dr Lissaridhis' honor. The president of the Socialist Alliance and Mr Dolanc accepted an invitation to visit Cyprus.

Dr Lissaridhis returned to Nicosia at noon yesterday.

Those attending a ceremony in Thessaloniki to mark the centennial of Ataturk's birth included Greek Government officials.

Oztrak Speech

TA192054 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 19 May 81

[Text] The 100th anniversary of the birth of Ataturk was ceremoniously marked in the house where Ataturk was born in Thessaloniki today. The house, which was presented as a gift to Ataturk during his lifetime by the municipal council of Thessaloniki was opened to the public by State Minister Ilhan Oztrak this morning. Northern Greece Minister Martis also attended the cremony.

In a speech at the ceremony, Ozrrak said: I hope that the ceremony in this house will constitute the beginning of new phases in the development of good relations between our two countries. Pointing out that, as in various other fields, the Turkish and Greek nations share common aspects in the cultural field, Oztrak recalled that Ataturk believed in Turkish-Greek friendship and beyond that in close cooperation between the two countries. He said: As noted by the great Ataturk, there is no necessity more natural than friendship and cooperation for two nations whose primary interests in the sea and on land and whose geographic relations are so intertwined. We, Turks, accept--as in all fields--Ataturk's statement on Turkish-Greek friendship as a directive and sincerely believe in the necessity to extend this close friendship, which was realized by Ataturk and Venezilos, into the future as well. Oztrak concluded by wishing that the idea of "peace at home, peace in the world," which constitutes the main principle of Ataturk's foreign policy, would be valid in all countries.

Pilot's Threat

NC191910 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 19 May 81

[Text] Today the 100th anniversary of the birth of Kemal Ataturk was celebrated at the Turkish Consulate in Thessaloniki under UNESCO auspices. The celebrations were attended from the Turkish side by Minister of State Oztrak, Turkish Ambassador in Athens Alacam, the consuls general in Thessaloniki and Komotini and the ambassadors of Albania, Pakistan and Zaire among others. From the Greek side, the celebrations were attended by Northern Greece Minister Martis, Nomarch Tsakonas, Ambassador Serpos, Embassy Counselor Papasouliotis and representatives of producers classes. The Turkish minister of state and the Turkish ambassador spoke.

During the celebrations a single-seat plane belonging to the Thessaloniki Air Club piloted by Ilias Dhiamandopoulos, aged 40, a resident of Athens appeared overhead. Dhiamandopoulos notified the control tower over his radio that he was determined to crash his plane into the Turkish Consulate if the celebrations were not called off. The pilot claimed that he was carrying explosives. Shortly afterward following a contact between the control tower and the pilot, Dhiamandopoulos landed the plane, which he had hired from the Air Coub. Police took him to the (?National Security Service) for interrogation.

REAGAN, BREZHNEV GREET EVREN ON ATATURK CENTENNARY

TA181652 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 18 May 81

[Text] U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev have sent messages to head of state Gen Kenan Evren and expressed their good wishes on the occasion of Ataturk's 100th birthday.

According to information received from the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General, in his message, Reagan noted that, on behalf of the American people, he lauds Ataturk as a distinguished personality of the 20th century and said: On the occasion of the 100th birthday of this great person, I would like to express my personal congratulations and my best wishes for the Ataturk year.

In his message, Brezhnev said that the friendship and cooperation between the two countries, that was started in the era of Ataturk and Lenin, constitutes a sound basis for the development of Turkish-Soviet relations. Brezhnev lauded Ataturk's personality and expressed his confidence about the goodneighborly relations between Turkey and the Soviet Union.

GOVERNMENT CONCERNED OVER ISRAELI-SYRIAN TENSION

TA191513 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1500 GMT 19 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 19 May (AA)--"Turkey has been following the Syrian-Israel crisis which has gained such dimensions that it has become a potential threat to peace and security in the region," said Oktay Iscen, spokesman of the Turkish Foreign Ministry today, in reply to questions from the press. Turkey sincerely supported efforts aimed at the peaceful resolution of the issue, he stressed, adding: "A new armed clash in the region will adversely effect all countries in the region. In case Israel resorts to force against Syria, this may lead to grave consequences for our region."

SYRIAN FOREIGN MINISTER PLANS 7 JUNE VISIT

TA181027 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 18 May 81

[Text] Syrian Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister 'Abd al-Halim Khaddam will arrive in Turkey on 7 June as the official guest of Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen. According to a Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General statement, Khaddam's visit to Turkey will last 4 days.

YANKI EXAMINES AGREEMENT, RELATIONS WITH IRAN

NC151004 Ankara YANKI in Turkish 11-17 May 81 pp 17, 18

[Excerpts] Iran has been under the pressure of war with Iraq for the past 7 months. Therefore, special importance is being attached to the cooperation agreements Iran has signed with Turkish Trade Minister Canturk in the fields of industry, power and communications.

Certain foreign circles in Ankara used to argue that Iran viewed Turkey's close relations with the United States with suspicion. But the answer to them was that when the time came, Turkey would be able to help Iran establish good relations with these countries [as published]

After the 12 September military takeover in Turkey, Iran's relations with Turkey suffered a setback and certain radio broadcasts were against Turkey. But this did not last long. The agreement signed by Canturk in Tehran clearly shows how much the the atmosphere has changed for the better. Iran now wants to buy everything Turkey can offer, and Turkey is interested in oil. The oil promised to Turkey will continue to flow and certain payment facilities will be made. The two sides have raised their "special accounts" volume from $200 million to $400 million.

This means that the two countries won't have to make cash payments if their transactions do not exceed $400 million. Turkey must pay in cash the $123 million which exceeds the volume agreed upon. This payment will be effected between June 1981 and 1982.

Oil is the most important commodity for Turkey. As agreed earlier, Iran will provide Turkey this year with 3.5 million tons of crude oil and 300,000 tons of fuel oil. This agreement is operating smoothly. Iran is not, as thought, facing any difficulties in exporting crude oil. According to this agreement, Iran has agreed to make adjustments when necessary.

According to the agreement signed in Tehran, Turkey will extend every possible help to Iran. Foodstuffs head the list and comprise 250,000 tons of wheat, 100,000 tons of barley, 16,000 tons of fresh and frozen meat. The list includes an unspecified quantity of cement. The Turkish meat and fish organization will provide between 2,000 and 5,000 tons of chicken meat, while other organizations will provide 10,000 tons of caustic soda.

There are many opportunities for Turkish contractors in Iran. They can do a lot for Iran by installing power transmission lines, constructing sugar factories, railway lines and establishing paper and chemical industries. As most of the goods arrive in Iran via Turkey, Turkish railway services are very important to Iran. This system as well as our highways and harbor services can be expanded with Iran's help. The agreement signed with Iran envisages most of these projects. To facilitate matters, the customs point of Gurbulak between Turkey and Iran will be kept open for service on a 24-hour basis. The two countries have decidéd to establish a joint land transport partnership. Communications between Iran and Turkey will also be improved. This will ease also communications between Iran and Europe.

Only 1 day after the Turkish-Iranian agreement on all these projects was signed, Ankara has had to make representations to Tehran over uncontrolable demonstrations staged by the Armenians in Tehran. Although it was known that the situation in Iran has not yet stabilized fully, the Iranian authorities are nevertheless expected to be vigilant against the extensive Armenian activities against Turkey and to counter them.

The complete neutrality shown by Turkey in the Iran-Iraq conflict has yielded fruit. Turkey's relations with both Iran and Iraq are smoothly developing.

FINANCE MINISTER LEAVES FOR LIBREVILLE MEETINGS

TA171510 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1300 GMT 17 May 81

[Excerpts] A delegation headed by Finance Minister Kaya Erdem has left for Gabon to attend the meetings of the IMF and the World Bank. In a statement at Esenboga Airport before his departure, Kaya Erdem said that during the meetings in Libreville, Gabon's capital, the present state of the world economy, the current problems of the developing countries and the international monetary order would be discussed.

Erdem stressed that Turkey has made significant progress in its struggle against inflation. He added that the government wanted to reduce unemployment and ensure economic development without speeding up the rate of inflation. He also said Turkey could reach these goals more quickly if world economic conditions improve. The Central Bank director, Osman Siklar, is among the delegation members who went to Gabon with the Finance Minister.

WORLD BANK TO PROVIDE $722 MILLION CREDITS IN 1981

TA131142 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 14 May 81

[Text] Finance Minister Kaya Erdem has said that in fiscal 1981 Turkey received credits totalling $722 million from the World Bank thus becoming the third recepient of aid from this organization.

In a statement to Turkish Radio and Television, Erdem said that almost half of this amount would finance specific projects and the remaining constituted program credits.

Of the $722 million, $300 will be spent for buying fertilizers and industrial raw materials. A loan of $110 will pay for other requisites in the production of fertilizers. The remaining amount will be spent to finance certain projects such as the Bati Raman oil production project, oil research projects, produce export encouragement projects and so on. Kaya Erdem pointed out that of the $722, some $70 million was not yet approved but would be approved within 2 weeks.

TCP'S BILEN GREETS CPCZ ON 60TH ANNIVERSARY

TA150806 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 15 May 81

[Congratulatory message of Turkish Communist Party Secretary General Bilen to the Czechoslovakia Communist Party Central Committee on the occasion of the 60th anniversary of its founding--read by announcer]

[Text] To the Central Committee of the Czechoslovakia Communist Party [CPCZ]. Dear comrades: On behalf of the Central Committee of the Turkish Communist Party [TCP], all Turkish communists and the working class and toilers of our country, we heartily congratulate you on the 60th anniversary of the foundation of the CPCZ and extend to you our revolutionary struggle greetings.

Following the example of the Great October Socialist Revolution, the CPCZ was founded through a difficult and persistent struggle against opportunism. The newly founded Leninist party experienced violent class struggles with the support of wide masses of workers. Your party, which is the country's devoted, patriotic and internationalist force, became the real defender of the Czechoslovak Republic. It exposed to the wide workers' masses the betrayal of the bourgeoisie. It played the main role in organizing the national front against the Nazi aggressors. The CPCZ was active in the Slovak uprising of August 1944 and the Czech uprising of May 1945.

Since the victory of February 1948, the CPCZ has led the efforts to build socialism in Czechoslovakia, promote the economic and technical potential of the country, strengthen the socialist democratic system as well as provide for the steady growth of the people's standard of living. The CPCZ together with the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact countries, is pursuing a persistent Leninist foreign policy with the aim of safeguarding world peace. It is making significant contributions for the strengthening of the socialist countries' community.

Despite difficult circumstances, the TCP is continuing its struggle against imperialist oppression, dependence on NATO, the exploitation of monopolies and against the pressures of the military dictatorship on the progressive forces in a bid to safeguard peace, national independence, the democratic system, the rights of toilers and the unity of all the democratic and nationalist forces. The TCP supports the development of relations between Turkey and Czechoslovakia believing this is beneficial to the national interests of our country where imperialist pressures continue. The TCP and the CPCZ are linked with brotherly ties based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism.

We wish the 60th anniversary year of the CPCZ to be a year when the resolutions of the 16th party congress are successfully implemented and when new gains are realized on the path of peace and socialism. With our communist greetings.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen

SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED PRIOR TO DEPARTURE FOR U.S.

DW210923 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1100 GMT 20 May 81

[Friedrich Nowottny interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt prior to the latter's departure for the United States--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] Considering the, to some extent, vehement debates with your party on the counterarmament decision, have you become more predictable to your American contacts, have you become a more solid partner to them?

[Answer] We have always been solid, we have always been predictable ever since the struggle was waged over the issue. What I mean to say is that for more than 2 years both U.S. presidents, President Carter as well as President Reagan, had been and have been aware of the line of the Federal Republic of Germany. This will remain unchanged.

[Question] People have the impression that you propose to make the counterarmament decision the focal point of your talks in Washington.

[Answer] No, this is not the case. It will play a role, to be sure. But following the council of ministers meeting in Rome, we are very much agreed on where to go from here and at what pace. We on our part, that is, I on my part, will place great emphasis, not on having the pace accelerated, but on the seriousness and the vigor with which the goal of these negotiations is pursued. After all, what matters isn't that negotiations are held but that the negotiations are conducted successfully, yielding success in mutual arms reduction. In addition, we will discuss economic affairs, of course, for instance, interest rates.

[Question] Next Tuesday, after your return from the United States, the CDU will introduce in the Bundestag a joint declaration aimed at reaffirming the NATO dual decision. The SPD plans not to approve this declaration. Why not?

[Answer] Normally, it is the government and the government coalition which determines policies, including their formulation, that is, the phrasing of these policies. If the opposition agrees, then we really have no objection at all if it seconds a motion. But it just cannot be worked the other way round, namely, that the opposition prescribes the text while the government gives its blessing.

[Question] Does this mean that you could well imagine a joint resolution by all parties represented in the Bundestag?

[Answer] I will not rule this out. But the texts must come from us.

Spokesman on U.S. Talks

LD210956 Hamburg DPA in German 0141 GMT 21 May 81

[Excerpts] Washington, 21 May (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and President Ronald Reagan have agreed on a third talk on Friday in addition to their two scheduled meetings on Thursday. Bonn Government Spokesman Kurt Becker said on Wednesday night the reason is that the two heads of government want to have the most extensive exchange of views possible.

In contrast to the conclusions drawn from statements by the chancellor and the Federal Government immediately prior to Schmidt's visit to the United States, Schmidt will obviously exercise restraint in the talks with Reagan, in regard to both the U.S.-Soviet disarmament dialogue and Washington's high interest rates policy. According to Becker, the chancellor told the German delegation he would not demand of President Reagan that the start of negotiations on a limitation of European medium-range nuclear weapons be brought forward.

Schmidt wants to draw the attention of the U.S. leadership to the negative effects of the high interest rates policy on the efforts to revive West Europe's economy. Becker added that the chancellor doesn't seek to change this U.S. policy, however. Before the talks, it was said that Bonn wanted to suggest in Washington a better coordination of monetary policy between the United States and West Europe, because in the German view a decoupling of the currencies on the two sides might otherwise result.

Becker said Chancellor Schmidt intends to stress to the U.S. President that he "welcomes the U.S. general intention to assume greater leadership again." In the Washington talks, the Federal Government takes as its point of departure that there is agreement between Bonn and Washington in the assessment of international political, security policy and economic questions, Becker said. In addition, the chancellor will also take care to dispel doubts about Bonn's firm adherence to the alliance and acceptance of all obligations resulting from the alliance. Becker said the high degree of agreement also includes the fact that the United States has set some new directions in arms policy, such as U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union. Becker said that with regard to this last question the Federal Government believes the positive opinion it has of the United States has been confirmed, although opinions on this in Europe were not unanimous at first.

Other topics to be discussed by the chancellor and President Reagan are developments in the Persian Gulf and in Southeast Asia, Libya's role in north Africa and the repulsing of Communist infiltration in Central America. In this connection, the chancellor will suggest to the Americans a "Marshall plan" for the Caribbean with the support of Mexico and Venezuela. Schmidt envisages the strengthening of the economically weak states of this region who, in return, should undertake not to accept weapons from the Soviet Union or Cuba.

TEXT OF 19 MAY FRG-BRAZILIAN JOINT COMMUNIQUE

PY210258 Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 20 May 81 p 4

[Text of Brazilian-FRG joint communique issued in Bonn on 19 May on the occasion of President Figueiredo's visit]

[Text] The presidents of the Federative Republic of Brazil and of the Federal Republic of Germany have held talks. President Joao Baptista de Oliveira Figueiredo reiterated his invitation to visit Brazil to the FRG president who expressed his desire to honor the invitation at a date which has not yet been set.

In a constructive, cordial atmosphere that was in keeping with the friendship and good understanding prevailing in the relations between the two countries, the two chiefs of state reviewed a wide range of issues related to the international situation and to bilateral cooperation.

On the world's political situation, they expressed concern over the pockets of tension which are a threat to peace and security and expressed their resolve to continue to devote their best efforts to promoting discussions and confidence. They reaffirmed that the detente policy must be implemented and furthered worldwide. They reaffirmed their purpose of promoting specific initiatives for arms control and disarmament and for keeping those measures under effective international control. They reiterated their respect for the right to self-determination, independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, and for all the other principles of good coexistence stated in the UN charter, which must guide relations among all states. They condemned every form of interference of one country in the domestic affairs of others and reaffirmed the right of each country to participate in political and economic decisions of global impact, taking into account the legitimate interests and aspirations of all. They emphasized the significance of promoting democratic, pluralist, free formulas for the solution of the various international crises.

Commenting on the situation in Afghanistan, the two chiefs of state condemned the persistent military occupation of that country, called for the withdrawal of foreign troops and for the adoption of a political solution which would allow the Afghan people to decide their destiny free from foreign interference. Regarding the Middle East conflict, they reiterated the need for a comprehensive peace which would take into account the rights of all the peoples involved.

They expressed their concern over the protracted conflict between Iraq and Iran and their interest in its peaceful solution, free from any foreign interference. In examining the situation in Africa, they expressed their disapproval of apartheid and other lingering racial discriminatory practices and reaffirmed their confidence in the attainment of self-determination and independence by Namibia in the near future, in accordance with resolution 435 of the UN Security Council. They also manifested concern over the escalation of violence in the internal conflicts of Central American countries, as well as their support for political solutions to such conflicts without external interference. The two presidents expressed hopes that the Polish people may be able to solve their problems without outside pressure and interference.

In examining the world economic situation, they stressed the need for promoting cooperation to cope with the serious problems affecting all countries. They noted with apprehension the continuous imbalance between the prosperity of industrialized and that of developing countries and reiterated their determination to reactivate the North-South dialogue, particularly within the context of the United Nations. They deplored the delay in resuming worldwide negotiations and underscored their intention to support efforts by the president of the UN General Assembly, aimed at reaching a consensus to make it possible to enter into negotiations as soon as possible.

The two chiefs of state expressed satisfaction over the development of bilateral relations through increasing exchanges in the economic, commercial, financial and cultural fields. They stressed the role of the annual meetings of the joint FRG-Brazilian Commission for Economic Cooperation and noted their satisfaction with the development of scientific and technological cooperation, which was greatly promoted through the annual meetings of that commission. Regarding technical and financial cooperation, they were satisfied with the results achieved. In reviewing the cooperation in the field of nuclear energy for peaceful uses, they reaffirmed the determination of their governments to proceed with the implementation of the agreements signed between the two countries. The two chiefs of state also expressed their intention to intensify bilateral cooperation in all areas, even more to make it realize the potential offered by the two countries.

The Brazilian president expressed his thanks to the FRG chancellor for his warm reception and invited him to visit Brazil on a date to be established through diplomatic channels. The FRG chancellor gladly accepted the invitation.

BRAZILIAN PRESIDENT HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE

PY201142 Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 19 May 81 p 4

[Text of press conference held by Brazilian President Joao Figueiredo in Bonn in 18 May]

[Text] [Question] What is your impression of the talks held with President Karl Carstens and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt?

[Answer] Excellent. We share the same viewpoints on international politics. There are absolutely no disagreements. About our relations, I can say that they will be furthered--if one could say that they can still be furthered. Our relations couldn't be better than now. I have found a great response both in the president and in Chancellor Schmidt. I am going back to Brazil very satisfied with our talks.

[Question] You also have talked with businessmen. Are they also satisfied? Are they also happy?

[Answer] I did not have a chance to talk with them. I just heard news of a good meeting held with bankers. The meeting with the bankers was excellent. Yet I still don't have an overall view on this. To be honest, and although I am not supposed to say this, from what I could see here, I am inclined to believe that they are satisfied.

[Question] Was this a short but positive trip, Mr President?

[Answer] I think it was quite positive. It could not have been better.

[Question] What about inflation? Do you believe inflation is going to decline if Brazil follows the example of Germany?

[Answer] I didn't say that, the press did. I said that one could not draw any conclusions based on the April rates, when inflation dropped, because the May rate will be higher due to external factors. Now, if the April rates persist after May, then I would hope that inflation will be contained. This is what I said.

[Question] What lessons are you taking from Germany about the issues of inflation and unemployment?

[Answer] The fight against inflation in the FRG cannot be compared to the fight against inflation in Brazil. The FRG has mechanisms which we don't have, especially exports. A country like the FRG whose exports amount to billions of dollars cannot treat inflation as a country like Brazil whose exports barely amount to $20 billion.

[Question] You said in Colombia that whenever the developing countries obtain benefits from the developed countries, they only receive crumbs. Have you changed your opinion after your visit to the FRG?

[Answer] No. That wasn't a generalized statement. A statement of that nature cannot be generalized. For instance, now I already feel that there is a great response on the part of Canada, France, the FRG and Japan with regard to those interests. This is only because they are interested in maintaining good relations with Brazil. It is also in their best economic interests to defend our viewpoint.

[Question] What about the opening to the East? Minister Delfim Neto will go to Moscow and you will go to Romania, right?

[Answer] I don't know if we will go this year, but the decision to make the trip has been made.

[Question] How would the opening to the East come out of this?

[Answer] Fine. What is wrong with that?

[Question] What would Brazil actually seek again in its trade with the Iron Curtain?

[Answer] All that they need and what we have.

[Question] For instance?

[Answer] We need manufactured products and they need primary and semiprimary products. For instance, I know that Romania is interested in soybeans and soybean byproducts. Thus, the market is open for us.

[Question] You are scheduled to hold several talks with all German political sectors. What's your intention?

[Answer] I intend to state our viewpoints, our objectives and to listen to what they have to say. We will not discuss domestic policy because each country has its own. We instead will discuss each political party's thinking about Brazilian-FRG and international relations.

[Question] Mr President, what are the results of your meeting with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt?

[Answer] Conversations were very good, not only with the president, but with the chancellor also. From the standpoint of international policy and FRG-Brazilian relations, the conversations were excellent.

[Question] And about the North-South dialogue?

[Answer] I initiated the talks about the North-South dialogue today with Chancellor Schmidt and will continue tomorrow. I already touched the points I am concerned about to give him time to think them over and to give me an answer tomorrow. Tomorrow we will continue.

[Question] A primarily political trip also is yielding good commercial results for Brazil. A testimony of this is the meeting with businessmen, in which we are participating, isn't it?

[Answer] If the trip were essentially political, I would not have invited businessmen along.

[Question] How were your talks with the president and the chancellor?

[Answer] In my meeting today with the president and the chancellor, we talked in depth about areas of international tensions, Brazilian-FRG interests, interests of the West and the position of our countries regarding each area of tension. Fortunately, our positions are in agreement. I found no point of divergence on any international question. I was very satisfied on this point. I already had met Chancellor Schmidt because he had been in Brazil. I was very satisfied in meeting President Carstens whom I found to be a jovial, lucid, frank, extremely pleasant and intelligent person capable of dealing with any question with simplicity. He made me feel at home. After talking with him for 5 minutes, I was already at ease with him.

[Question] Mr President, in that meeting with businessmen, it seems that the FRG continues to be an important partner. It seems that they continue to feel enthusiastic about the economy...

[Answer] I would leave out the word "seems" and say that it is an important partner. The FRG is really an important partner for us. A country with the FRG's potential, with the friendship ties it has with Brazil, with the German community it has in Brazil and which has done so much for our progress and development, is indispensable for us. Moreover, the policy currently being developed by the FRG is in accordance with our viewpoints. It is a policy of relaxation of tensions, universal outlook, friendly relations with all nations regardless of their ideology. All we demand is that we be left alone to work out the course of our destiny, as we recognize the same right for the FRG.

[Question] In that regard, the FRG might have been the wellspring of a new North-South relation. The Brandt report was the start of it all. You will talk with him tomorrow. Regarding policy, what can you talk with him about.

[Answer] The Willy Brandt report has many points which deserve our praise. There is only one point in which the report puts us in difficulty and we don't agree on it, because it is dangerous for Brazil to be classified as a semideveloped country. Such classification leaves Brazil without the support it needs. I prefer the classical division into developed and developing countries. It is very difficult to draw a line separating one from the other, and injustices might be committed.

FRANCOIS MITTERRAND ASSUMES OFFICE OF PRESIDENT

LD211000 Paris Domestic Service in French 0836 GMT 21 May 81

[Speech by Francois Mitterrand at the Elysee Palace in Paris after assuming the office of president of France--live]

[Text] Mr President, ladies, young ladies, gentlemen: Today as I assume the highest office, I think of the millions upon millions of men and women, the leaven of our people, who for 2 centuries in peace and in war, through work and through blood, have been able to shape the history of France only through the brief and glorious outbursts of our society. It is first and foremost in their name that I speak, faithful to the teachings of Jaures, at a time when, in the third phase of a long advance, after the Popular Front and the liberation, the political majority of the French people, democratically expressing itself, has identified itself with the social majority.

It is in the nature of a great nation to conceive of great plans. In the world of today, what higher challenge can there be for our country than to realize the new alliance of socialism and liberty? What more beautiful ambition than to offer it to the world of tomorrow? In any case, that is the idea I have of it, and the will which carries me is certain that there can be no kind of security where injustice reigns or intolerance governs. What is important for me is to convince, not to conquer.

There was only one victor on 10 May 1981 and that is hope. Let it become the most shared thing in France. For that I will unceasingly advance on the road of pluralism, we will address our differences while respecting each other. As president of all the French, I want to bring them together for the great causes awaiting us and create in all circumstances the conditions for a true national community. I reiterate my personal wishes to Mr Valery Giscard d'Estaing. But it is not only from one man to another that this transfer of power is taking place. Our entire people should feel called upon to exercise the power which in fact rests with them.

Likewise, if we look outside our borders, there is no escaping the rivalries of interests and the risks that various confrontations represent to peace. France will have to say forcefully that there cannot be a genuine international community as long as two-thirds of the planet continues to trade men and goods for starvation and contempt. A fair France where solidarity reigns, a France which wants to live in peace with everybody, can light up the march of mankind. For this purpose, it must first of all count on itself. And here I call upon all those who have opted to serve the state; I rely on their intelligence, their experience and devotion.

To all the French men and women beyond this hall and this palace, I say: Let us have confidence and faith in the future. Long live the republic! Long live France!

MILITARY ADVISER VIEWS DETENTE, ARMS BALANCE

DW201104 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2050 GMT 19 May 81

[Correspondent Wickert interview with former French Admiral Antoine Sanguinetti, military adviser to newly elected French President Mitterrand, in French with German translation superimposed; date and place given]

[Text] [Question] Why are you holding the United States responsible for the decline of detente?

[Answer] The deterioration of detente began with the summit meeting of Guadelupe in 1979. At the time, Valery Giscard d'Estaing, Jimmy Carter, Helmut Schmidt and Callaghan decided to deploy a new strategic missile in Europe, and they did so even though SALT was being held, which the Soviets signed on 18 June. The SALT treaty could have revitalized detente, but the shields were immediately raised against the SALT decisions. Barely a week prior to the signing of the SALT treaty, the United States announced the construction of the new intercontinental missile MX. What it did, hence, was announce a new strategic weapon before the conclusion of an agreement on the reduction of strategic arms. Then followed the US refusal to ratify the SALT decisions, this again having been followed by the discussion on the Euromissiles, a discussion which is based on false statements: I reject the contention of the imbalance of armament. By far, the West has everything it needs for balancing out the Soviet SS-20 missiles. It was only after NATO adopted the counterarmament decision, it was only after all this, that the Soviets invaded Afghanistan.

[Question] And how do you justify this U.S. policy?

[Answer] I believe that the United States has digested the Vietnam defeat and now is being victimized by the error once also committed by all European nations such as France and Germany, namely, believing in the power complex. The United States, the world's greatest power, cannot bear it that somebody comes close to its might. Even after the SALT decisions, the United States has had a preponderance of several thousand nuclear bombs. The Soviets have made up only part of their backlog. And that is unbearable to the United States. The United States must remain the only nation dominating the world. This is why detente deteriorates. It does so because of an ambition which has led to many fraternal strifes in Europe.

[Question] You mean to say that you simply do not count the SS-20 missiles?

[Answer] I count them, but only for what they are--a few hundred small machines with three heads. But we are balancing this out by far with all that we have. All we need to do is take a look at a document titled military balance. And this document, by the way, does not come from the Soviet Union. The West balances the SS-20's with the British nuclear submarines which nobody counts, with the French nuclear submarines which nobody counts, with all the British, French, American airplanes which are all there but which nobody counts, as these arms are not subordinated airplanes which are all there but which nobody counts, as these arms are not subordinated to NATO, but to the respective heads of state of the Atlantic alliance. But they are part of the balance. There is some cheating in the game here.

[Question] Politicians and military people suggest that the new missiles be sea-based, that is to say, based on ships and submarines. Do you consider this idea an improvement?

[Answer] On surface ships, they could be easily spotted and thus would be vulnerable. If they are stuck into submarines, we will have the same state of affairs as now, namely, the 4 British Polaris submarines, 5 French submarines carrying the M-20 missiles and the U.S. submarines carrying 400 Poseidon missiles. This is how things stand today. So let us forget the idle talk about new missiles--they are there already.

JOSPIN DISCUSSES 'NEW MAJORITY,' POLICY OPTIONS

LD201353 Paris LE MONDE in French 19 May 81 p 10

[Report on an interview granted by PS First Secretary Lionel Jospin to Europe Radio 1 "Press Club" on 17 May]

[Text] After emphasizing the "demonstrations of hope, enthusiasm and desire to work anew", to which the 10 May election gave rise, Lionel Jospin recalled that the Socialists "will have discussions with the Left Radicals and with the Unified Socialist Party, possibly with a number of ecologists, leftwing Gaullists or independent Gaullists and finally with men and women who have been committed to this intellectual family during their lives and who supported Francois Mitterrand."

He added: "Of course, we will also have discussions with the PCF leadership. We will have discussions with all these forces with the intention of establishing dialogue and achieving a positive result, in other words, to extend the majority which has emerged in the presidential sphere to the parliamentary sphere to provide a government with the means of taking action and to implement our policy. That is our objective.

"We will probably have occasion to discuss the electoral system and a number of agreements with some of those parties and those people--that dimension will certainly exist. But basically, we want discussions to establish whether we can reach a political agreement with a number of the forces I have just mentioned.'

After indicating that the aim is to "reflect in practice the people's movement" which carried Mr Mitterrand to the presidency, the PS first secretary indicated that these meetings will start "immediately after Francois Mitterrand's installation as president of the republic, the appointment of a new government and the dissolution of the National Assembly."

Regarding relations between the PS and PCF, Jospin noted that "the fundamental problems have not vanished." He immediately explained that "there has certainly been a change of tone on the PCF leadership's part since the 10 May victory, and perhaps even since Francois Mitterrand's success in the first round of the presidential election.... I think that this must be taken into account, that it is a favorable and positive element. But we are addressing the French people, we want to constitute the country's majority, we don't want to be carried away by a few weeks of euphoria, illusions and enthusiasm. We know that suddenly when there are real problems a tone which was used before might possibly be used again. Consequently, we want to show that we are very serious and responsible."

Questioned on the "ambiguity" of the position of the Socialists who have benefited "from a unitary and an antiunitary current," Jospin stated: "It seems to me that ambiguity in politics may be a necessity in a complex society like French society.

Whenever you have a very great diversity of social categories, whenever there are not only social divisions and social differences but also political traditions and political currents which interfere, and moreover whenever, within former alliances--the leftwing alliance, which has experienced problems, and the former rightwing alliance which is trying to reconstitute itself and which has experienced more serious and more recent problems--[apparent line drop] you necessarily have a fairly complicated political scene, and it doesn't seem possible to avoid ambiguity completely, or rather it isn't self-evident that ambiguity isn't something normal and healthy in a democracy."

Referring to the situation of the outgoing parliamentary majority, he added: "When people who have quarreled so seriously, when people who have heard their former candidate, their former president pronounce the words 'premeditated betrayal', when people who have heard their former premier say 'a game of double or nothing has been played with France's fate' suddenly join forces in a 'union for our preservation' --UNM, union for our maintenance in power... [play on Union for a new Majority--UNM-- the title chosen for the United RPR-UDF candidates in the forthcoming parliamentary election], we have an ambiguous situation which, in addition, has a strange dimension.... Have the French people thought about the extraordinary sight of the president of the republic, who only a few days ago was invested with so much power and was so idolized, so greatly admired and surrounded by so many men, now suddenly pushed to one side so quickly and brutally by Mr Lecanuet and Mr Chinaud? You must understand that I am not taking pity on the politician or [apparent line drop]. We know that if we have been divided it is because [apparent line drop] the man. I am saying that for a young--well, relatively young, because I am aging as we all are--politician like me it is a political experience to see how Mr Giscard d'Estaing has been treated. When I look at those men I feel rather as if I am seeing the Atridae. I feel rather as if I am watching one of Sophocles' tragedies, except that this Sophocles tragedy has been rewritten by Feydeau [19th century French farcical dramatist]. We are seeing a Greek tragedy set on the boulevard. That is my impression of the UNM's formation."

Duties

Jospin then added: "We have always said that we did not want the left to be divided. It has drawbacks. Any political situation has advantages and disadvantages. The talent and desire for change shown by the French people and the workers have meant that they grasped a situation which seemed very difficult and have turned it into victory. When I see that, I admire my people. If the election results are analyzed, they show that Francois Mitterrand would have been elected, only just, of course, without the 800,000 or 900,00 votes given to him from a certain quarter. He was elected by a broader majority and that imposes duties on us, hence, our desire to rally forces and our approaches to some circles, especially Gaullist circles."

Turning to the internal situation in the PS, Jospin indicated: "The PS has always been a diversified party, especially since it was reconstituted in 1971 on the basis of a longstanding tradition. It comprises fairly strong personalities, who are also characterized by a tradition of discussion, and I think that that will continue within the PS. If we could now gradually move from distinct colors to more pastel shades, in other words, if we could move toward more subtle shades and possibly also more flexible forms, it would be an excellent thing. Moreover, I don't think that there are any Rocardians in the Party--in any case as party first secretary I don't want to address any party member or group in that personalized way.

"I personally think that my objective will be to unite this party as much as possible and, in the face of the inspiring, encouraging but probably difficult test of government, to ensure that all PS members, and especially the officers with whom I will meet every week, as in the past, feel at ease in this party which is going to grow--you can feel it. Thousands of men and women are coming to us now."

Regarding the organization of the forces, other than the PCF, which support the new president, the PS first secretary explained: "As for the formation of a center-left group, I have said and written that it would be beyond the PS to provide a structure for such a group. I simply meant that it is a reality which must take its place naturally. There are people who belong to the Left Radical Movement, there are a number of leftwing Gaullists and there are independent Gaullists--it seems to me that these men and women, who come from different backgrounds, must have discussions and reach agreement, and I don't think that it is up to the PS, which would appear to be the strongest force, to adopt a didactic tone and tell them what they must do. I simply think that if a man like Michel Jobert, for instance, could play a role in this process, it would please some of us a great deal and it could also please the president, although I am reluctant to speak for him."

Expressing a "purely personal" view on the possibility of single leftwing candidates in some constituencies to allow outgoing PCF deputies to keep their seats, Jospin indicated that "as a principle this attitude is fairly difficult to envisage." "I don't think it appropriate to fix situations at the outset," he said, "because we must know how representative the various groups are."

Basic Problems

Questioned on the content of the planned discussions with the PCF, he stated: "A number of basic problems must be discussed. For instance, the rate of the economic and social transformation in France is an extremely important question. Regarding the conditions in which we will carry out this gradual transformation, will we do it in an open climate, one which is open to the outside world, taking account of a number of international economic and financial facts. From our present positions? Or will we do it in a closed, more protectionist spirit, which is not the PS position, or at least is not the new president's line? That is a second question which strikes me as extremely important.

"There are questions relating to the problem of nationalizations, for instance. The president of the republic has pledged to carry out a limited number of nationalizations--a number which we don't intend to exceed. That is a question to which we attach importance and on which we, for our part, have pledges. There will be many other domestic economic and social questions, but there are also foreign policy problems, for instance, the Afghanistan problem. What attitude will be adopted on that question? Although it is a special situation, there is the problem of the Soviet SS-20 missiles and the U.S. Pershings; but the U.S. Pershings concern the NATO countries and we are not a NATO country. This is a second point which must be discussed. There are the problems relating to the Atlantic alliance. There were previous pledges, but they may have been forgotten or altered a little.

"That is a series of questions. I am not giving all the specific points, but I think that that is enough to give you an indication."

Finally, questioned on the PCF's "gifts" to the Socialists in 1967 (that year the PCF decided to withdraw its candidates in 13 constituencies to make it possible for Socialists to be elected) and asked whether the PS would agree to do the same for the PCF this time, Lionel Jospin replied: "I clearly remember that that was done."

"We Intend To Defend the Franc"

Questioned in addition on the franc's situation, Jospin indicated: "We intend to defend the franc. We want a franc which maintains its value. We have the means of implementing that policy. We have considerable reserves which are virtually untouched--around 10 percent--and we will use those means and some technical methods which exist to ensure the strength of the franc, and especially to ensure that the French currency remains within the European Monetary System. That is our intention and our desire. It seems to me that the franc's present difficulties--and I think they will be overcome--are the result of the positions adopted by certain international financial circles which--and this is the factor which should be stressed primarily--were surprised by the election result, which they had not foreseen, and took cover or chose a cautious attitude. Some movements stem from holders of capital or stocks and shares belonging to Arab circles. But another factor is at work too. Barre is boasting of the results of his policy, especially the franc's strength. But from that viewpoint, self-satisfaction is a little excessive. Barre defended the frac but he may not have created the structural conditions which would give our currenny real strength. Inadequate economic growth, a situation of economic regression, inadequate control of inflation and a considerable trade deficit constitute possible elements exerting pressure on the franc. Some circles seem to have seized the opportunity."

Addresses Namibia Problem

NC201102 Paris AFP in English 1058 GMT 20 May 81

[Text] Paris, 20 May (AFP)--France's Socialist Party will ask the next French Government to do all in its power to ensure that Namibia achieves independence in accordance with the United Nations settlement plan for the territory, Party General Secretary Lionel Jospin said here today.

Mr Jospin, addressing an international conference on sanctions against South Africa, added that he expected his party to play a key role in the formation of France's foreign policy once Socialist president-elect Francois Mitterrand takes office tomorrow.

Mr Jospin, who succeeded Mr Mitterrand as general secretary of the party before the presidential elections here, said that the party had repeatedly denounced apartheid and had always favoured the use of sanctions against Pretoria. He listed four measures backed by the party:

-A halt to all trade with Namibia, in particular uranium imports.

-A cut in French imports from South Africa.

-A halt to all French Government investment in South Africa and all aid to private investment there.

-A total embargo on arms exports to South Africa.

"Namibia is illegally occupied. It has a right to independence and Namibians (have the right) to liberty. In these circumstances, the Socialist Party has always shown its support for sanctions against South Africa," he said.

"These sanctions must go hand in hand with increased support for the (African) front-line states and we want a left-wing government to provide political and diplomatic support and humanitarian aid to refugees and militants from liberation movements in South Africa and Namibia," he added.

"We have asked the countries in the Western contact group (France, the United States, Britain, Canada and West Germany) to act in such a way that the Pretoria government accepts the consequences of its (earlier) acceptance in principle of the settlement plan adopted by the (U.N.) Security Council," he said.

The Western contact group drafted the U.N. plan, which calls for a ceasefire and then United Nations sponsored independence elections in Namibia. South Africa has administered the mineral-rich former German colony since 1920 but in 1966 the U.N. terminated its mandate. In 1967, the U.N. set up its own council for Namibia to run the territory.

L'HUMANITE CRITICIZES 'COMMUNIST ENCOUNTERS' GROUP

LD201403 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 14 May 81 p 3

[Text] At the Hotel Novotel de Bagnolet yesterday, Henri Fiszbin and Francois Hincker announced the formation of a "initiative center for reflection, research and debate," called "Communist Encounters." In the document with which they present this body, the 29 founder members, mostly belonging to the PCF Paris federation, level numerous criticisms against their party and its policy.

For instance, after taking no part--either in the first or the second round of the presidential elections--in the PCF's determined battle to defeat Giscard and to open the door to real change, while the entire party is now committed to the effort to complete the right's defeat and install the means of successfully introducing change, H. Fiszbin has stood up to launch a new attack on his own party. This petty and pointless quarrel can have no other aim but to try to hinder the party's efforts to ensure the success of the current people's battle.

With regard to reflection, research and debate the party--at all levels--is constantly calling for them. And it, isn't separating them, but on the contrary, using them to promote action.

LE MONDE ON EUROMISSILES TALKS, MITTERRAND ROLE

LD201337 Paris LE MONDE in French 19 May 81 p 1

[Editorial: "The Great Debate"]

[Excerpt] With the very marked exception of Italy and Britain--at least as long as the Conservatives are in power in London--the decision taken by NATO in December 1979 is raising increasing problems in European countries.

Indeed, these difficulties could be foreseen 18 months ago, as soon as NATO chose the so-called "dual approach" procedure--on the one hand the installation of new American missiles and on the other negotating with Moscow in the hope of achieving a reduction in such weapons. The Kremlin therefore saw new opportunities to use the carrot and stick method.

The carrot was the proposal for a moratorium put forward by Brezhnev in March. It has so far not had much success in winning over governments because the 250 or so Soviet SS20 missiles already deployed would not be countered on the Western side. But the Kremlin can be expected to try to make its proposals more attractive with the approach of the negotiations which Washington has promised to open before the end of the year. At the same time, the stick is being wielded by Zamyatin in particular, who is condemning the U.S. "confrontation policy" and warning the U.S. allies. These pressures could well lead one day to a new crisis in East-West relations.

In principle, France isn't concerned by a decision which only binds the countries integrated into the Atlantic military organization, but it will have its role to play in the big contest which is starting. Unlike his predecessor, Mitterrand has strongly condemned the threat which the Soviet SS20 missiles represent for Europe. At the same time he has advocated negotiations and we cannot ignore the fact that those negotiations will quickly be extended to the French deterrent force and will impede any possible progress toward the formation of a "European pillar" of the alliance. The new president will therefore have a difficult choice to make, but he will not be without influence on the even more difficult choices which the various European socialist parties will have to make.

LE MONDE EDITORIAL ON STABILIZATION OF FRANC

[Editorial: "The Currency Is Not Waiting"]

[Text] The franc, which has been subjected to very strong pressures on the exchange market since the beginning of the week, has fallen to its lowest level against the mark. To defend it, the Bank of France had to use some of its reserves--$1.5 billion according to the monetary authorities, $2-3 billion according to international finance circles.

At the same time, the issuing authority has very energetically wielded the interest rate weapon, increasing it in 3 days from 13.5 percent to 18 percent--a "wartime rate" which had never before been reached, not even in 1974 when inflation was over 15 percent. As a logical consequence, the banks have raised their prime rate to 14.75 percent--also an "historic" level. They did this in agreement with the monetary authorities who were anxious to increase the cost for enterprises to speculate against the franc by making premature purchases.

Although the pressures on the franc were considerably eased just before the weekend, many operations think that this is only a respite. Indeed, in their view, the change in political direction produced by the election result has come about in the most unfavorable international climate possible.

Before the presidential election, international financial circles already felt that the franc's parities within the European Monetary System, which have been stable since the slight readjustment in September 1979, could be reduced even if the outgoing president were reelected. The departure of Raymond Barre--an ardent defender of that stability--and the very strong probability of a moderate revival of activity was making them predict some weakening of the franc. Today, seen from abroad, where there has been great surprise, the political scene has changed completely and international financial circles feel, rightly or wrongly, that they are facing an unknown quantity. In these conditions, and in view of their usual way of reacting, they are tempted to "take precautions" with regard to the franc, or, at the very least, to show great vigilance.

Their attitude will be crucial in the coming days, weeks and months. Of course, we have considerable currency reserves--almost Fr130 billion--France can obtain very considerable support from its European partners. But a large part of those reserves was imprudently borrowed from other countries, especially from Arab countries--more than Fr30 billion apparently--and since the lenders are displeased with Mitterrand's Israeli policy, that capital might leave as it came and that would be bound to undermine the franc.

It is important therefore that the whole world should have a definite idea of the new government's intentions as soon as possible and must be able to assess the consequences of its economic and foreign policies. At present, however, the burden of defending the franc rests completely on the monetary authorities. This situation cannot last while the rising dollar and the increase in world interest rates are putting the European currencies to such a formidable test. Although the trade unions, for instance, can wait to find out what the increase in wages will be, the currency is not waiting.

LE FIGARO: HIGH STAKES IN PARLIAMENTARY ELECTION

LD181333 Paris LE FIGARO in French 16-17 May 81 p 1

[Charles Rebois commentary: "A Choice of Society"]

[Text] The pact binding the RPR and the UDF, which was sealed yesterday by Jacques Chirac and Jean Lecanuet, is an important event in our political life. People will say it smacks of electoral opportunism. Doubtless, without the 10 May defeat, it would not have been possible. But it must be seen not just as the expression of the need for survival but also of a new awareness--the awareness of how harmful the divisions in yesterday's presidential majority can be. Its wrangles made Francois Mitterrand's success possible. They belong to an era which it is hoped will never return. Reconciliation from necessity makes it possible to challenge the defeat. Though there is a change in executive, at least let the change--unprecedented in the Fifth Republic--not be "a break in modern history" as Francois Mitterrand wishes.

The French are democratic. Whether they voted for Francois Mitterrand, they bend to the wish of the majority. France will have a Socialist president for 7 years.

But did they realize that they were choosing a society? Or were they simply obeying a desire for change, refraining from setting any limits thanks to the parliamentary counterbalance?

The juggling with the institutions and the desire of the winner to transcend his success by deciding to dissolve the National Assembly provide them with the opportunity of reestablishing the balance of power and making sure the risk doesn't become a serious danger if tomorrow's assembly is dominated by a Socialist-Communist coalition.

So, it may be possible to save the essential elements, to preserve the gains of the last 7 years, repair its errors and offer a credible alternative to the French people....

But beware! The left has its trumps. By bringing the deadline forward, it hopes to profit from the dynamic created by its success of 10 May. Socialism is trying to be a uniting force, knowing the attraction of power in the political morass. The Communists themselves, who have not recovered from Georges Marchais's failure and who fear an even more bitter defeat in the legislative elections, are a party to this.

In the face of the danger presented by the Socialist-Communist united front, the RPR and the UDF need really to form a "firm, solid and coherent union." When danger threatens, human ambition is no longer appropriate. What does it matter who will be the leader of the alliance! The Elysee is no longer for the taking.... It is a question of retaining the parliamentary majority. The institutions of the Fifth Republic give parliament the means of controlling government policy. It alone will be able to save the foundations of a society of freedom and responsibility.

This time, it will indeed be a question of a choice of society. If the left carries the day, the Socialists will be forced to share power with the Communists on the basis of a common program of government. Never before have the stakes been so high.

CUBAN DELEGATES ARRIVE FOR MEETING ON SOUTH AFRICA

FL192113 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2102 GMT 19 May 81

[Text] Jesus Montane Oropesa, alternate member of the party Politburo, has arrived in France at the head of Cuba's delegation that will participate in the international conference on sanctions against South Africa. The Cuban delegate will represent Commander in Chief Fidel Castro Ruz, president of the Council of State, at the meeting which opens tomorrow at UNESCO headquarters in Paris.

Montane, who also is a member of the party Secretariat and deputy to the People's Government National Assembly, was received at Orly Airport by Gregorio Ortega and Hermes Herrera, ambassador to France and UNESCO, respectively. The Cuban delegation that will participate in the international conference on sanctions against South Africa includes Ambassadors Raul Roa Kouri, Gregorio Ortega and Hermes Herrera, among others.

SALVADORAN TRADE UNIONISTS HOLD MEETINGS

LD201503 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 14 May 81 p 7

[Text] At the invitation of the CGT, a delegation of the Salvadoran Trade Union Unity Committee, including Jorge Mendoza and Alfonso Martinez, arrived in France on 13 May and was received by the CGT's international department. The delegation will be staying in France for several days for meetings with several trade union, political, democratic and humanitarian organizations. It will provide considerable information about the situation in El Salvador and the conduct of antidictatorial struggles for workers' demands, for freedoms and for the establishment of a democratic system. The Salvadoran delegation will examine with the various trade unions and other organizations how to increase the solidarity with the Salvadoran people's and workers' struggle.

GOVERNMENT NORMALIZES RELATIONS WITH CHILE

[Text] Diplomatic relations between Italy and Chile have been normalized at the level of charge d'affaires. Tomaso de Vergottini will head the Italian diplomatic mission in Santiago.

Foreign Ministry Note

AU201921 Rome ANSA in English 1915 GMT 20 May 81

[Excerpt] Rome, 20 May (ANSA)--A four-line note released today by the Italian Foreign Ministry represented official recognition of the status of Italian relations with Chile at the level of charge d'affaires.

Despite the acknowledgement of this de facto status which has prevailed for the past 8 years, Italy remains the only member of the European Economic Community which does not maintain diplomatic relations with Chile at the ambassadorial level.

The text of today's Foreign Ministry note, which followed an announcement released yesterday in Santiago on the latest developments in diplomatic relations between the two countries, reported: "That the two countries have confirmed as charge d'affaires Signor Tomaso de Vergottini, in Santiago, and Signor Mariano Fontecillas, in Rome".

For the time being therefore, Italy is sticking with the decision announced in the immediate wake of the September 1973 coup which brought to power in Chile the government headed by General Augusto Pinochet. At that time, Italy recalled its ambassador to Chile.

RED BRIGADES KIDNAP BUSINESSMAN IN VENICE

AU201547 Rome ANSA in English 1540 GMT 20 May 81

[Text] Venice, 20 May (ANSA)--Giuseppe Taliercio, managing director of the Montedison chemical plant at Porto Marghera near here, was kidnapped today by a commando of the Red Brigades urban guerrilla organization. The managing director of the largest chemical company in Italy was kidnapped in his home.

The commando tricked his way to get into Taliercio's home, tied up his relatives, grabbed Talierico and took him away. The Montedison executive's wife freed herself and called the police. The members of the commando told Taliercio and his relatives they belonged to the Red Brigades.

RED BRIGADES SAY SPEAKER'S TRIAL IN PROGRESS

NC170016 Paris AFP in English 0010 GMT 17 May 81

[Text] Naples, 17 May (AFP)--A communique from the Red Brigades terrorists published Saturday said that the "trial" of former Campania Regional Assembly Speaker Ciro Cirillo, kidnapped on April 27, was still going on.

Authorities found the document, the sixth since Mr Cirillo's abduction, following an anonymous telephone call.

It was accompanied by a photograph of Naples Town Councillor Rosario Giovine, a Christian Democrat who was wounded in the legs on Friday by a commando. "The action (taken) against Rosario Giovine is a warning," the document said.

RESULTS OF, REACTIONS TO 17-18 MAY REFERENDUM

AU191004 Rome ANSA in English 0840 GMT 19 May 81

[Text] Rome, 19 May (ANSA)--Almost complete results from balloting Sunday and Monday on five referendums showed that Italians voted "No" to repeal of laws that make abortion possible, uphold the right for private citizens to bear arms, give police special powers to combat terrorism and make life imprisonment the stiffest sentence that courts can inflict.

The most controversial issue was that of abortion. Two rival ballots concerned the 1978 abortion law which allows women over the age of 18 to have free abortion in state hospitals in the first ninety days of pregnancy. One referendum promoted by the Catholic Church backed right-to-life movement called for repeal of the law except to save the woman's life. The other, sponsored by the maverick Radical Party, would have allowed abortions in all clinics and permit under-eighteen years old to seek abortions without parental consent. The Radical Party also promoted the other three referendums which called for repeal of handgun permits, repeal of recent anti-terrorist legislation which gives police broad powers of detention, and repeal of life imprisonment sentences.

This is how the parties lined up on the five referendums:

1. Right-to-life referendum to repeal existing abortion law and make abortion virtually illegal in Italy. Those parties urging "Yes" for repeal were the Christian Democrats (DC) and the "MSI" neofascists. Those urging "No" to repeal were the Communists (PCI), the Socialists (PSI), the Social Democrats (PSDI), the Republicans (PRI), the Liberals (PLI), the Radicals (PR) and the Proletarian Democrats (PDUP).

2. Radical Party-sponsored referendum to liberalize abortion in Italy by repealing present law. Only the Radicals urged "Yes" to repeal. All the other parties, the DC, PCI, PSI, MSI, PSDI, PRI, PLI and PDUP, urged "No" to repeal.

3. Referendum to abolish right to bear arms. Those urging "Yes" to repeal (that is, abolishment of the right to bear arms) were the PR and PDUP. Those urging "No" (thereby upholding the right to bear arms) were the DC, PCI, PSI, MSI, PSDI, PRI and PLI.

4. Referendum to abolish life imprisonment. Those urging "Yes" to repeal (that is, abolishment of life imprisonment) were the PCI, PSI, PRI and PDUP. Those urging "No" (thereby upholding life sentences) were the DC, PSDI, PRI, and MSI.

5. Referendum to repeal the so-called "Cossiga" law granting police special powers to combat terrorism. Those urging "Yes" to repeal were the MSI, PR and PDUP. Those urging "No" to repeal were the DC, PCI, PSI, PSDI, PRI, and PLI. The victory of the "No" to repeal forces was seen here as strengthening the parliament.

The majority of Italians, observers noted, rejected any modification of the actual norms on abortion, life imprisonment, gun laws, and police powers. This confidence in current legislation was particularly telling on the abortion issue which called religious values as well as political ones into the referendum battle.

The complexity of the vote was seen as one of the reasons for the relatively low voter turnout (79.6 percent) and the presence of many blank or nullified ballots. The turnout on May 12, 1974 for the divorce referendum was 88.1 percent of the electorate. On that occasion 4,473,459 voters stayed away from the polls. The turnout on June 11, 1978 was 81.2 percent of the electorate called to vote on two referendums: one on public order and the other on public financing of parties. The results of the referendum votes ought to make life easier for the coalition government of DC-PSI-PRI-PSDI led by Christian Democrat Arnaldo Forlani. The cautious line followed by the four coalition partners during the referendum campaign proved to have been long-sighted.

A victory by the right-to-life forces (which would have virtually abolished abortion in Italy) might have seriously compromised cooperation among the coalition partners in the government. The DC's lay partners would have found it very hard, even for the sake of governability, to accept such a defeat. The DC has been fighting the 1978 abortion law in Parliament ever since it passed despite its opposition. A victory of anti-abortion forces now would have upset the government's balance.

The Christian Democratic party headquarters spoke last night of a clear reconfirmation of Parliament's choices.

PCI Secretary Enrico Berlinguer, referring to the double "No" to repeal of the present abortion law, spoke of a victory for women and the defeat of backward and obscurantist forces.

PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi agreed that a serious and dangerous conservative offensive had been rejected. For Craxi the vote confirming life imprisonment while expressing a need for defense did not cancel out the determination of those who want severity coupled with humanity.

"MSI" Secretary Giorgio Almirante saw the "No" vote as really a "No" to the practice of resorting to referendums.

"PSDI" Secretary Pietro Longo claimed that the "No" to all five referendums was proof of the maturity of the Italian people and a demand for firmness from the state in defense of public security.

PRI Secretary Giovanni Spadolini voiced satisfaction with the results, and said that the people had supported the battle for democratic security and against terrorism. The double "No" to repeal of the abortion law was a victory of a civil society, he added. The PLI claimed that the vote showed growing disaffection and rejection of the excessive use of referendums and said that this institution must be reformed. For PDUP, Lucio Magri voiced satisfaction for the weathering of current abortion legislation which he said was a victory for the women's movement.

Radical Party leader Marco Pannella claimed that the significance of the referendums proposed by his party had been buried under a savage campaign of disinformation, but that nevertheless, the results showed that the number of citizens who had rallied to the Radicals' appeals against "the established disorder" had tripled. Pannella also struck an ironic note when he noticed that voters did not heed PCI and PSI calls to abolish life imprisonment. Perhaps their electorate can be mobilized only for conservative battles, he said.

DC Deputy Carlo Sasini, a spokesman for the right-to-life movement said that Catholics would remain vigilant so as to block any attempt to make current abortion legislation even more permissive.

The PCI, unlike the other parties, had mobilized its entire organizational machine in favor of the current abortion law. Clearly, the Communists saw the voting on this issue as a great victory for their own party. However, the Communists, along with the Socialists, had campaigned for abolition of life sentences, but the electorate overwhelmingly voted to keep life imprisonment on the books. After the defeat of all four referendums they sponsored, the Radicals now risk seeing their electoral fortunes dwindle. In the last elections, both political and regional, the Radicals made big gains, going from almost nothing to over 3 percent, and thereby obtaining 18 deputies in a chamber of 630.

CORRECTION TO GOVERNMENT RESUMES TIES WITH PRC

The following corrections are made to the item entitled "Government Resumes Diplomatic Relations with PRC," published in the 20 May Western Europe DAILY REPORT on page L 1:

In the headline, substitute the word "Chile" for "PRC"; and in line one of the only paragraph, substitute "Chile" for "China."

DEFENSE MINISTER SEES REAGAN TEAM AS 'UNDERSTANDING'

LD201057 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 15 May 81 p 3

[Excerpt] "The Reagan administration is showing itself to be more understanding than the Carter administration with respect to the Portuguese Armed Forces' reequipment needs," Defense Minister Azevedo Coutinho said yesterday, speaking to journalists shortly after the departure of his U.S. counterpart, Caspar Weinberger. The Portuguese minister said that he detected this understanding in the contacts which he held with Weinberger during the U.S. defense secretary's 2-day visit to Lisbon. For his part, the latter regarded the talks as "important, useful and fruitful."

GOVERNMENT TO PROMOTE TRADE EXPANSION WITH ALGERIA

LD201503 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 16 May 81 p 3

[Text] Portuguese and Algerian Trade Ministers Vaz Pinto and Abdelaziz Khellef have expressed their governments' intention to intensify and extend the scope of bilateral economic relations. Vaz Pinto and Abdelaziz Khellef were speaking at the ceremony for the signing of a trade agreement negotiated during the first meeting of the Portuguese-Algerian joint committee which ended in Lisbon yesterday.

Both ministers stressed the insignificance of the trade hitherto carried out, despite the existing agreement dating back to 1976. In 1980, Vaz Pinto said, trade between the countries in both directions totalled 600,000 contos, an inconsequential amount, pointing out that Algeria imports no less than twice as much as Portugal. Spain now ranks fifth among the North African country's suppliers.

"From now on," the Portuguese trade and tourism minister said, "we will make up the lost ground in trade relations, which are far from matching our desires for cooperation."

Vaz Pinto disclosed that a Portuguese company recently signed a contract for erecting prefabricated housing in Algeria, worth 2.5 million contos, and that there are major opportunities for increasing trade in sectors such as the Portuguese chemical, mechanical and food industries and Algerian crude oil and gas.

The Algerian trade minister said that his country needs industry and that it is therefore interested in stepping up technological cooperation with Portugal.

"We are here to continue the action begun with the signing of the 1976 trade agreement," Khellef said, pointing out that the countries' geographical proximity must make it possible to "raise cooperation to a level consistent with the quality of political relations."

Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Leonardo Matias, who also attended the ceremony, said that the legal instruments signed at the end of the joint committee's meeting reflect the "Portuguese Government's political determination to encourage the rapprochement with the Arab people."

GOVERNMENT DENIES CALVO-SOTELO EXPRESSO INTERVIEW

LD201207 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 16 May 81 p 2

[Text] In connection with an item published in the last issue of EXPRESSO, the Spanish Secretaryship of State for Information has issued an official communique according to which "Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo has granted no interview to any Portuguese weekly. The Spanish prime minister's only contact with the news media during his recent visit to Portugal was the press conference which, accompanied by Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao, he held for a group of Spanish and Portuguese journalists at Lisbon airport."

Concerning this matter, and as in similar instances, EXPRESSO has no comment to make.

PCE ISSUES STATEMENT ON PERILS OF JOINING NATO

LD200909 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 1-7 May 81 p 5

[Text] Calvo-Sotelo's first sally abroad has been to the FRG. The central topic of his talks--apparently following instructions received from Mr Reagan--was Spain's NATO entry. The Germans are apparently not particularly enthusiastic about this entry since such a disruption of the balance established in Europe would jeopardize its "Ostpolitik" and exacerbate the situation in Poland and Yugoslavia by causing increased pressure on their governments. Calvo-Sotelo--who, as he himself said, "had already spoken with the Spanish military, which was in agreement"--must have sold them the idea of our entry "proceeding from 23 February." His idea must be that the Germans will not only support him but also exert pressure on the Spanish Socialists to at least tone down what has hitherto been their opposition stance.

In fact, the Socialists do not seem to have altered this opposition stance even though their executive criticized only the form in which Calvo-Sotelo approached the subject and asked that it be decided by a referendum or the coming general elections. For their part, the Spanish Communist Party [PCE] published the following communique at the end of their Standing Committee meeting:

"The PCE Executive Committee Standing Committee discussed at its session today the statements made by Mr Calvo-Sotelo during his visit to the FRG and on his return to Madrid on Spain's entry into NATO.

"The PCE reasserts its steadfast opposition to such an entry, which would mean considerably exacerbating the already tense international situation, since it would disrupt a balance established between the two blocs over the past quarter century. Such an entry would have disasterous consequences for Spain, especially the nuclearization of our territory.

"The PCE protests at the prime minister's manipulation of the army's alleged option on the subject. The decision obviously rests with the Spanish people through the constitutional channels. We also consider it wrong to have raised the subject with foreign governments before the announced consultations with the Spanish parliamentary parties. This reflects the aim to create de facto situations and thus to exert pressure on the Spanish public.

"The PCE considers it indispensable that such an important issue, which is causing a serious split among the Spanish people, be shelved at least until the coming elections and that, in any case, it must be made the subject of a referendum.

"The Standing Committee has decided to study the specific measures needed to inform the broadest masses of the consequences of entry into NATO and to ensure that the public express its opposition to entry into NATO on the largest possible scale."

LIBERAL, SDP LEADERS AGREE ON COMMON STRATEGY

LD201145 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 20 May 81 p 10

[Tony Conyers report]

[Excerpt] The Liberals and Social Democrats [SDP] had their first formal meeting yesterday and agreed as a priority to work out a common strategy in readiness for the next by-election.

Mr Steel, the Liberal leader, said after the meeting: "Clearly a by-election can arise at any time, and we could be overtaken by it. We have got to discuss how we are going to cope with it."

Mrs Shirley Williams agreed, and said the two parties had to get down to a detailed discussion. Neither side had any machinery for dealing with a by-election. She added: "This does not mean that we would be bound to fight any by-election which comes up. We must have procedures so we do not begin our alliance with a squabble."

Both sides have agreed they will continue their joint talks after the Whitsun recess in about a fortnight's time.

Mr Steel said they had decided to try to compile an analysis of what has gone wrong with the country's politics and see how they could proceed jointly to put matters right. He said that the Liberal Party had no objection to an alliance with the Social Democrats. The Liberal council meeting last week had given overwhelming support for negotiations.

Mrs Williams said the outcome of yesterday's meeting would go before her party's Steering Committee and would later have to be approved by the membership, though she did not see this as a problem. She thought an agreement could be arrived at before the Liberal Party assembly in September. Mr Steel agreed, and said there was no deadline for such an agreement although he was anxious that if there was something on the agenda it should be approved by the party's Agenda Committee. After an agreement on principal, the next step, said Mr Steel, would be to carry forward detailed discussions on policy.

Mrs Williams said they were talking about three things: a general declaration which would set out priorities for the country, discussions on such policy questions as electoral reform, discussions on the "necessities" which arise from a by-election. She denied that because of recent opinion poll findings, which showed a drop in recruiting figures for the SDP, her party would have to be prepared to play "second fiddle" to the Liberal Party. In the local elections, she said Social Democrats, without the support of the party, had gained 18 per cent of the vote. Mrs Williams was deliberately vague over whether there would eventually be an electoral pact between the two parties, saying it might not take the form which some imagined.

Mr Steel chaired yesterday's meeting. Next time Mrs Williams will be in the chair.

DAILY TELEGRAPH VIEWS ULSTER LOCAL ELECTION

LD201143 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 20 May 81 p 2

[Colin Brady dispatch]

[Text] Belfast--The government will be closely monitoring local council elections in Ulster today to gauge the extent of polarisation in the Protestant and Roman Catholic communities in the province. An analysis of voting patterns will show if it is worth while for Westminister to pursue its insistence on power-sharing as a proviso for Northern Ireland to have its local parliament restored.

Ulster elections, the first since 1977, are normally a mundane affair, but now they are an important indicator of public opinion. Voting will be particularly influenced by the current tension and violence, the provisional IRA hunger strike campaign, closer liaison between the British and Irish Governments, increased terrorism and dissillusionment with the unending disorder. The by-election victory of Robert Sands, the provisional IRA terrorist who starved himself to death, will also be a factor, particularly among unionists. These are the main points which will make these elections a more significant affair than those of four years ago.

A total of 1,020 candidates are fighting 526 seats on 26 district councils. An electorate of more than 1,190,000 is involved.

Apart from scores of "instant" groupings and independents the voting will centre on the four most influential parties: Official Unionists (256 candidates), their arch rivals, the Democratic Unionist Party (205), the Social Democratic and Labour Party [SDLP] (162) and Alliance (130).

The Official Unionists' main campaign is based on demands for the return of a local parliament, scrapped when direct rule was imposed in 1972.

The Democratic Unionists' campaign policy is based on even stronger counter-measures against the IRA and accusations of a political "sell-out" by London. It is the first time they are challenging the Official Unionists all over the province.

The SDLP, as overwhelmingly Roman Catholic as the unionist groupings are overwhelmingly Protestant, seeks more party partnerships in local administration and Anglo-Irish talks.

Alliance, hoping to maintain its balance in the centre, seeks the vote of those opposed to "tribalism." This optimism will be ill-rewarded in these elections, which have a strong flavour of further polarisation.

Politically, interest will focus on a battle for power between the Rev Ian Paisley's Democratic Unionists and the Official Unionists, with Mr Paisley seeking to justify his claim that he is a leader of Ulster's loyalists.

Currently the Official Unionists hold 178 seats and the Democratic Unionists 74, but Mr Paisley's followers are confident that they can wrest several more from their rivals. Mr Paisley shrewdly began his electoral campaign several weeks ago when he embarked on a series of rallies to whip up fears of a "betrayal" by Britain because of talks with the Irish Government.

In the Roman Catholic-nationalist camp the SDLP, with 113 seats, is being challenged by the Irish Independent Party, which is fielding 50 candidates. The Independent's motto is "Brits out" and they quite bluntly support the IRA hunger strike campaign for political status for prisoners. The emotional response to this could lose the Social Democrats some support.

The elections are based on proportional representation and it is expected that all the results will not be known until Saturday, when the Belfast count is finished.

TA NEA: SECURITY TIGHTENED AFTER THREATS TO GOBBI

NC210619 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 21 May 81 p 10

[Text] Special security measures have been taken at the headquarters of the UNFICYP [United Nations Force in Cyprus]--in Nicosia and outside the residence of Mr Hugo Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special envoy in Cyprus, following threats against his life. According to information received by TA NEA, the threats against Mr Gobbi's life were included in a letter received at the UNFICYP headquarters. Meanwhile, yesterday Mr Gobbi called on President Kiprianou, but nothing has been learned about the subject of their discussion.

MIKHAILIDHIS PROPOSES 'IMMEDIATE ACTION PROGRAM'

NC210657 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 21 May 81 p 1

[Text] House President Mr Alekos Mikhailidhis, leader of the New Democratic Party, has proposed the setting up of a political planning bureau which would be able to lay down a planned strategy and tactics in the pursuit of a Cyprus settlement.

Mr Mikhailidhis, who was speaking at a press conference, said that the planning bureau which deals with economic problems has been able to provide excellent services in the economic field and there should be no reason why a political planning bureau should not prove equally useful. The Cyprus problem is bedevilled by the lack of planning and inactivity which allows others to take initiatives which very often prove to be at our expense, he said.

Mr Mikhailidhis gave more details of his nine-point "immediate action programme" about which he spoke at the public gathering at Elevtheria Square in Nicosia, on Monday last. These are:

A. The UN secretary-general to be asked to undertake his responsibilities and invite the Turks to comply with the terms of his inaugural statement at the intercommunal talks, according to which they would be meaningful and that concrete proposals would be presented.

B. After the elections the president should arrange for a joint meeting with the Cyprus party leaders, the Greek Government and Greek party leaders of an agreed national policy on Cyprus.

C. Cyprus should press for the occupation of the seats allocated to it in the assembly of the Council of Europe, and the banning of Turkey from the assembly now provides a unique opportunity.

D. Further mobilisation of the American Congress and especially to remind congressmen of the conditions for the lifting of the terms embargo, that is for Turkey to show that it acts in good will for a fair and peaceful settlement of the Cyprus problem.

E. A call for a parliamentary congress to which all European parliaments should be invited.

F. Mobilisation of Greek Americans.

G. Invitation to the nonaligned contact group to visit Cyprus to verify the negative attitude of the Turkish side in the talks, etc.

H. Invitation to the British Government to undertake its responsibility as a guarantor power.

I. Invitation to the ministerial committee of the Commonwealth, decided on in 1979, to consider the Cyprus situation and see what it could do.

Mr Mikhailidhis said he intended to present the plan when the new House emerged, and explained that the plan is not exhaustive and could be supplemented or amended if the other parties had their own ideas. What is needed, he said, is to stop being inactive and waiting for others to move.

Months have passed since the talks started and there has been no result and since the basic issue, territory has not been discussed, it amounts to saying that the talks have not yet started, he said.

Mr Mikhailidhis did not agree that because there might be a Turkish reaction no action should be taken. We must expect that the Turks would react to any action we take, he said and found unjustified the nondiscussion of the Cyprus case in the UN General Assembly last year on the grounds of not wanting to impair the climate of the talks.

KITTIS CITES PROSPECTS FOR INCREASING USSR TRADE

NC201120 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 20 May 81

[Text] Speaking at a press conference today, Commerce Minister Kittis said results of his recent contacts in Moscow were exceedingly good. He added: there are favorable prospects for increasing our exports to the Soviet Union. He also mentioned that the Soviet side expressed desire for promoting its exports to Cyprus, primarily in industrial and other mechanical equipment.

Kittis said the value of Cyprus exports to the Soviet Union last year amounted to close to 6.5 million Cypriot pounds, while imports from the Soviet Union amounted to 16 million pounds, of which 12 million represented the import of mazut [low quality fuel oil].

He also said the Soviet Union agreed to supply the Cyprus electrification authority with an additional quantity of 50,000 tons of mazut this year under the current conditions.

Contracts were also signed for the export to the Soviet Union of 2,000 tons of alcohol and 1,000 tons of black raisins.

Kittis said a Soviet delegation will visit Cyprus in the fall to renew the 5-year commercial agreement between the two countries, which expires in December.

Soviet experts are also due to visit Cyprus in September to study a Cypriot proposal for construction and financing by the Soviet Union of development projects in exchange for Cypriot agricultural and industrial projects.

Contacts will also continue on the prospects of utilizing Cyprus for the purpose of industrial production of Soviet products for export to Middle Eastern countries.

During his stay in Moscow Kittis briefed members of the Soviet cabinet on the latest developments of the Cyprus issue. The Soviet officials reiterated the firm and steady support of Cypriot positions by the Soviet Union.

BRIEFS

WORLD BANK LOAN--An agreement for a loan of $14 million has been signed between Cyprus and the World Bank to help finance a plan for an increase in productivity in the fields of horticulture and viniculture. The agreement was signed during a short ceremony at the World Bank. It was signed on behalf of Cyprus by Cyprus Ambassador to the United States Iakovidhis. ELEVTHEROTIPIA: TALKS ON U.S. BASES SHOULD BE HELD UP

NC191650 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 19 May 81 p 4

[From the "Views" column: "Agreements-Commitments"]

[Text] We have repeatedly stressed that the government is committing a serious improper action at the expense of the Greek people by negotiating an agreement on the U.S. bases a few months prior to the elections, and latest developments vindicate us.

The United States, seeing the government's haste to sign an agreement--by 25 May as the foreign minister has announced--and combining this haste with its well-known pro-Turkish feelings, has hardened its attitude and has been refusing to give anything to Greece, which is negotiating the utilization of its territory for the war purposes of the United States. The Americans also do not agree with the 7 to 10 ratio of military aid to Athens and Ankara, respectively, or to the supply of our forces with advanced defense systems, or to the granting of guarantees that the balance of power will not be upset, or even to the operation of the bases "within NATO goals"--they want this operation for additional purposes.

The coercive U.S. tactics are backed by parallel NATO activities--infuriating activities--one of them being, as reported but not categorically denied, the proposal for an "Aegean without borders" between Larisa and Izmir where the two NATO commands are stationed. This means that if the proposal were accepted, the Turkish Navy and Air Force would be free to go very deep inside the Greek state (always "within the alliance's framework"...) without any corresponding concession to the Greek Armed Forces, because for us the operational space would end at Izmir, that is, at the eastern coast of the Aegean. These are NATO's tricks against our country, and the tricks of our government itself which thought that its unconditional return to the "alliance" would avail it friendly treatment by the "allies"...

Under these conditions, the interruption of the talks on the bases is not merely more imperative than ever but is a national need. A government whose percentage of popular support is strongly challenged (the latest political gatherings speak for themselves) [reference to Papandreou's visits to regions in northern Greece] has no right to commit the country to long-term military agreements. Let this be borne in mind by those who are planning to sign documents that are unacceptable to a vast number of Greeks.

Government View

NC201457 Athens ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS in Greek 20 May 81 p 1

[Text] Asked about press reports on the negotiations for an agreement on the U.S. bases, the government spokesman said that the negotiations are progressing at a fast pace and only minor differences remain to be settled by the two sides.

The spokesman added that he is not in a position to define the date of termination of the negotiations and the signing of the pertinent Greek-U.S. agreement. The two delegations have had meetings daily, in the morning and in the afternoon.

In any case, the goal is to submit the agreement to the Chamber of Deputies in time prior to the Chamber recess.

U.S. DEFENSE OFFICIALS ARRIVE IN ANKARA FOR TALKS

TA201635 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 20 May 81

[Text] The U.S. deputy defense secretary, Francis West, and the chairman of the Defense Security Assistance Agency, Lt Gen Ernest Graves, arrived in Ankara today. In a statement at Ankara Esenboga Airport, West said that they would hold talks on the defense relations between the two countries and their common strategic interests. Pointing out that Turkey's power was important for NATO and for the entire Western world, West stated that Turkey had an important role in the region both from the viewpoint of its military power and from the viewpoint of the impression it created.

Replying to a question, Francis West said that before Turkey he visited Jordan, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Israel. He added that these countries shared the view that the Soviet threat in the region must be prevented jointly.

West and Graves were received in the afternoon by National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken. National Defense Ministry Under Secretary Gen Celal Bulutlar was also present. At the meeting, Bayulken said that they would hold technical discussions on the cooperation to be conducted between the two countries in the field of defense. Francis West said that they would discuss the common interests between Turkey and the United States.

The visiting delegation was then received by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen. Francis West and Gen Ernest Graves then called on deputy chief of the general staff Gen Necdet Oztorun and conferred with him for some time.

ARAYIS LOOKS FOR IMPROVED RELATIONS WITH FRANCE

NC210742 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 16 May 81 pp 9, 10

[Article: "Mitterrand's Victory and a Socialist Government in France"]

[Excerpt] It is not easy to predict how Mitterand's presidency and the Socialist government in France will affect Turkish-French relations.

To some degree, the Armenian lobby may continue to be effective during the Socialist regime. However, we can definitely say one thing and that is: Unlike Giscard d'Estaing, Mitterrand's approach to Turkey is not based on a negative sentimentality.

Giscard d'Estaing was known to be "unfriendly." His unfriendliness toward Turkey was carried too far. The sentimental warmth he felt for Greece and the close economic relations he developed between Erance and Greece played an important role in this. Mitterrand is known to be a more prudent and objective statesman.

If the new opportunities which both the socialist government and Mitterrand's personality will afford toward improving relations between Turkey and France are timely and wisely evaluated, some positive results may be obtained. Although it is not correct to cherish excessive illusions in this respect, it is obvious that compared with Giscard d'Estaing's term in office, Mitterrand's presidency will afford a better chance for improving our relations with France.

However, if these opportunities and possibilities are to be evaluated, a healthy dialogue, under favorable conditions, must be established with the French Socialist Government without delay.

UNION CLOSED DOWN FOR UNCONSTITUTIONAL STATUTE

TA201824 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 20 May 81

[Excerpt] The 3d Military Court of the Ankara Martial Law Command has closed down the Turkish State Highway Workers Union [Yol-Is] in Ankara, which is affiliated with the Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is]. The military prosecutor's office of the martial law command had previously filed suit about this union on the grounds that the articles of its statute, which was amended during the union congress held last year, were unconstitutional. The court agreed with the prosecution's demand and ruled that the Ankara Yol-Is union be closed down.

French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu, Libyan Chief of State Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi and Pakistani President Ziaul Haq sent messages to Evren.

ECEVIT ON INDIVIDUAL, INSTITUTIONAL FREEDOM

NC210801 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 16 May 81 pp 5, 6

[Editorial by Bulent Ecevit: "Freedom From the Point of View of Individuals and Institutions"]

[Excerpts] Those who use freedom arrogantly and extravagantly when it is cheap and abundant, go into hiding and become taciturn when it becomes restricted and expensive. This is the second time this has happened in our country; once on 12 March and again on 12 September.

Those who appreciate the value of freedom use it prudently and responsibly when it is abundant, and they try to broaden its borders when it is subjected to limitations. They do not spend freedom extravagantly when it is cheap and abundant, but neither do they give up using it when it becomes restricted and expensive. No matter how expensive it becomes, they pay the price and behave freely. If necessary, they are prepared to sacrifice their physical freedom as well as their freedom to exist for the sake of their freedom of thought.

Those who use freedom according to its degree of abundance or limitation in varying measures and forms are not free within themselves. For them, freedom is something that can be given or taken externally. The person who is free internally is free at all times and under all circumstances. He is free even when in prison. He never refrains from expressing his views or moving in the direction of his views even when faced with oppressive and restrictive conditions. However, unavoidably, external factors and physical obstructions may render difficult or completely hinder the dissemination of the thoughts he expresses. They may actually restrict the possibilities of behavior.

The person who does not feel free internally says to himself: Why should I expose myself to danger by expressing my thoughts since I won't find an audience for them or be able to disseminate them? It is "wiser" if I wait for the days when freedom becomes abundant.

Freedom for such people is not a value that is obtained as a product of human yearning and search or as a human right. They do not see it as a prerequisite for being a human being. According to them, freedom is a commodity that can be offered, withheld or limited by higher authorities. They do not appreciate its value because they do not generate it or contribute toward its attainment.

They also do not appreciate its value because they have not gone through a severe trial so as to learn to feel responsibility when it exists, and its absence when it does not. On the other hand, the person who feels free internally, and who feels the impulse of freedom in his heart, is responsible for his freedom himself. Even if he won't find an audience, he considers himself obligated to express his views freely so as to protect the consistency of his character and the honor of mankind.

The way persons behave regarding freedom depends on their personality. However, some institutions have no choice. Institutions whose existence and functions depend on the existence of freedom and democracy have to behave freely and to use the responsibility of their freedom under all conditions, so that they may be able to further their existence in a manner compatible with the reasons of existence.

For instance, autonomous universities exist only where freedom and democracy prevail. It is therefore the unavoidable duty of autonomous universities to freely express their views and to try and strengthen democracy and widen the freedom of the entire community, no matter how much freedom is restricted or tightened.

If they do not behave in this manner, they prove that they do not deserve to be autonomous. Consequently, they cannot achieve what they do not deserve, and even if they did, they cannot use it responsibly.

This rule is valid for the democratic trade union movement also. On the other hand, the judicial organs are directly responsible for the independence of the judiciary. If they do not act independently, just because conditions are not favorable--in other words, if they concede their independence--they cannot fulfill the requirements of justice. Once this happens, the reasons for existence will vanish.

Freedom and independence are unavoidable and defenite prerequisites for lawyers, too, who are the representatives of the right to defend. No matter how limited and expensive freedom becomes, the lawyers have got to risk paying the highest price so as to perform their duties freely. If they don't do so, they cannot meet the requirements of their profession.

If laws capable of damaging the state of law are enacted, or if such practices become widespread, if freedom is limited and the basic rights are restricted, or the constitutional basis of all this is rendered inadequate, then it is the duty of the bar associations and the union of bar associations to try and counter such attempts and tendencies.

The press too is responsible for its own freedom. The press that is not free ceases to be a press, it assumes the form of an official bulletin. In a country where freedom of thought and expression do not exist or are not based on constitutional safeguards, the press cannot function. Therefore, the press can fulfill its mission, act as a press in the true sense of the word, and protect and develop democracy, freedom and human rights only to the extent that it is prepared to face difficulties and dangers. Because of the freedom of thought, newspapers and magazines may think differently on various matters, but in matters concerning the legal and constitutional basis of freedom, they have to act in unity and solidarity, because freedom and democracy are as much a necessity for the press as water is for the fish and air for birds.

VOTCP CALLS FOR END TO FOREIGN AID LOANS

TA200826 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 20 May 81

[Commentary: "An Economic Calamity Revived"]

[Excerpts] In one of its past issues, the Istanbul daily MILLIYET carried the following (?wounding) statement by OECD Secretary General van Lennep: Both in our verbal advice and reports since 1978, the OECD Secretariat and I have pointed out the kind of economic policies Turkey should follow. The measures being implemented currently are in line with these policies. These constitute a part of a general plan aimed at improving the deficit in the balance of payment and at directing the Turkish economy toward fundamental changes.

Dear listeners, this statement is reminiscent of the period of the fall of the Ottoman Empire--portrayed as the sick man of Europe--prior to the national liberation war [in 1920]. During that period, international organizations similar to the present ones were directing the economies of the Ottoman Empire.

All this proves that military victories must be complemented by victories in the field of economic independence. If this is not accomplished, then such countries cannot claim to be independent. Our party, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP], is appealing to all the patriotic forces and proposing the following: Turkey must proclaim a unilateral moratorium and stop the payment of all of Turkey's past debts as well as their interests for a period compatible with its national interests. No so-called foreign aid loans granted with the condition of being used in advised fields should be accepted from the imperialist countries and the international finance organizations. An end must definitely be put to the intervention in the internal affairs of Turkey of neocolonialist and imperialist international organizations like OECD, EEC, IMF, the World Bank and others.

ICELAND

PRIME MINISTER GIVES VIEWS ON NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

LD130851 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 9 May 81 p 21

[Text] "Iceland out of NATO!" this was the demand made by a handful of Icelandic demonstrators distributing leaflets on Friday outside the Riksdag building in Stockholm where Icelandic Prime Minister Gunnar Thoroddsen was holding a press conference. The prime minister himself did not want to speak about Iceland's membership of the Western defense alliance.

The Icelandic attitude to a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries is that such a zone must also embrace the countries of the Warsaw Pact, since there are no nuclear arms in the Nordic countries, Thoroddsen said. The prime minister explained the fact that Iceland had not taken part in the NATO meetings at which important decisions had been made about the deployment of nuclear arms in Europe by saying that the country has no defenses of its own. Iceland's defenses are taken care of by the Americans from the military base outside Reykjavik.

On Friday the prime minister lunched with King Carl Gustaf of Sweden. On Saturday he will travel to Skaane where he will meet members of the Sweden-Iceland Foundation. In connection with his visit, the foundation has created a fund, the proceeds from which will be used to promote Swedish-Icelandic cooperation. Contributions have been made by a number of Swedish companies.

MALTA

GOVERNMENT FORMALLY DECLARES ISLAND'S NEUTRALITY

NC161231 Paris AFP in English 0926 GMT 16 May 81

[Text] Valletta, 16 May (AFP)--The Maltese Government has formally declared the Mediterranean island republic neutral in a declaration published in a special edition of the Government Gazette.

The declaration, approved at a recent cabinet meeting, declares Malta "a neutral state actively pursuing peace, security and social progress among all nations by adhering to the policy of nonalignement and refusing to participate in any military alliance."

The neutral status means that no foreign military base will be permitted on Maltese territory and no military facilities in Malta will be used by any foreign power except at the request of Malta for its own defence.

The declaration added that Maltese shipyards will be used for civil and commercial purposes, or for the repair of military vessels incapable of action. The yards will be denied to the military vessels of the two superpowers. The Maltese cabinet hoped that other Mediterranean countries would welcome the declaration and give the necessary undertakings, the Gazette said.

LE SOIR INTERVIEWS UK'S HOWE ON EC BUDGET REFORM

LD200925 Brussels LE SOIR in French 16 May 81 p 7

[Marc Rozen interview with British Chancellor of the Exchequer Geoffrey Howe in London: "The EEC Must Limit Its Spending, Sir Geoffrey Howe Tells LE SOIR"; date not given]

[Text] [Question] Reforming the EEC budget will be the main objective of the British chairmanship of the Community Council of Ministers which will begin on 1 July. On 30 May last year, after a great deal of fuss, Mrs Thatcher secured her partners' agreement on a substantial reduction in the British contribution to the Community funds. Is that not enough?
[Answer] The reform of budgetary mechanisms is not an exclusively British concern but concerns the entire EEC. Indeed, such a restructuring process has turned out to be a fundamental element in Europe's health. Of course Germany and Britain attach the most importance to this plan since they are the two biggest net contributors. But many European countries are insisting, as we are, that the ceiling of our own resources (LE SOIR editor's note: The money available for the European budget) must not be exceeded. They also want the share of receipts and spending among the member states to be the result of general Community decisions and no longer the result of ad hoc decisions taken separately on individual programs.
[Question] London is still linking discussions on the Community budget to the Common Agricultural Policy. Is that not an indirect way of demolishing this "green" Europe--the foundation of the European structure--of which you are hardly enamored?
[Answer] Budget reform is not synonymous with a reform of the Common Agricultural Policy. For our part, we think that while maintaining the fundamental principles of "green" Europe, it is appropriate to modify the way it functions by radical changes. Any reform of the Common Agricultural Policy will only be a contribution to the broader task of restructuring Community finances.
[Question] Your opposition to increased agricultural spending did not prevent you from accepting a 10 percent increase in agricultural prices in April for the 1981-1982 period--an increase well above the Commission's proposals. Does that not greatly undermine your reputation as a crusader for EEC finances?
[Answer] No, quite the reverse; that acceptance underlines our attachment to the smooth running of Community institutions. On that occasion we advocated a moderate increase in prices with a view to limiting the agricultural surpluses and ensuring that the Common Agricultural Policy runs more smoothly. But we were alone in defending that position. During the discussions, a consensus emerged and we accepted it. That was the fruit of a compromise. Our basic stance, however, remains unchanged.
[Question] Your partners regard the 30 May agreement as a general agreement which includes the launching of a common fisheries policy. In this sphere London is far from having honored its pledges, as Mrs Thatcher's veto shows....
[Answer] I do not think that is the case. There is no link between the contributions and fishing issues. I must point out that all states, and not just the United Kingdom, pledged to reach an agreement on fishing by 31 December last year. We have made great efforts to reach agreement. We have failed but will continue to try. An agreement on "blue" Europe is very emportant. Nonetheless we think that it is wise to examine each problem on merit. The common fisheries policy cannot dictate our position on other Community problems.
[Question] Does not the budget reform you are advocating constitute a serious danger for the little countries like Belgium which benefit from the existing system?
[Answer] We are not aiming at anybody in particular. We want to find a balanced solution for everybody, for the whole Community. When receipts are no longer increasing ad infinitium, the Community. Must act like a good manager and limit its spending. Therefore the financial redistribution among the Ten must be reviewed.

[Question] Does not the European Commission's delay in drafting the proposals which are to be conveyed to the Council by 30 June point up the lack of enthusiasm in Community circles for introducing a reform which is bound to produce serious tension among the Ten?
[Answer] Institutions are always hesitant to take dangerous paths. The agreement makes provision for those proposals to be handed to the Council by 30 June. Let's wait until then.
[Question] Mr Tugendhat [vice president of the European Commission] has proposed reducing financial solidarity among the Ten by transferring some responsibility for financing "green" Europe to the national governments. That suggestion must surely suit you?
[Answer] The idea of national participation in financing the Common Agricultural Policy cannot be ruled out, provided it is a real transfer. If the governments replace the EEC in financing surpluses directly or indirectly and if the Community will ultimately have to pay the bill, it would be better to forget the idea.
[Question] Mr Tugendhat is British. Lord Carrington, the next chairman of the Council, is British. Is the budget reform a "British show" from which the partners are excluded?
[Answer] No, no, not at all. That is what I have been trying to make you understand from the start. When we joined Europe in 1971 it was agreed that if an unacceptable situation were to arise over our share of the budget the whole Community would remedy it. That is what happened last May. The Community pledged to establish a mechanism which, I hope, will prevent such unacceptable situations arising again, whether it be for Germany, Britain or any other country. This does not just apply to the net payers like our country but also to those which are at present net beneficiaries of the system.
[Question] During the election campaign Francois Mitterrand said: "Giscard was not tough enough with the British." Is not his election to the French presidency likely to make your task more difficult?
[Answer] The Community has withstood the shock of many changes in government. I see no reason why we should not be capable of agreeing just as well with the new French Government as with the previous one.

REPORTAGE ON EEC MEETINGS CONCERNING TURKEY

Second Round of Talks Ends

TA151129 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 15 May 81

[Text] The second round of talks between Turkish and EEC officials has ended in Brussels. Discussions were held during the talks on the signing of a harmony agreement between Turkey and the EEC upon Greece's joining the Community as a full member. Technical work was carried out to determine once more the Turkish agriculture and industry export quotas. Measures to prevent any harm to Turkish agriculture exports as a result of changes to be brought in Turkish-EEC joint agricultural policies also were reviewed during the talks. Discussions were suspended to permit EEC representatives to consult with their country's officials.

The first round of talks for the signing of a harmony agreement between Turkey and the EEC were held in January 1981. Efforts are being made to conclude these talks before the EEC association council meeting scheduled for June 1981. Such agreements were signed between Turkey and the EEC after each time a new full member joined the European Community.

Financial Protocol Ratified

TA192056 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 19 May 81

[Excerpt] The Turkish-EEC fourth financial protocol has been ratified by the foreign minister of the 10 EEC countries. According the our correspondent in Brussels, in their meeting the EEC foreign ministers determined that the loan to be extended to Turkey within the framework of the fourth financial protocol--which was agreed upon in principle on 30 October--would be worth $672 million. The fourth financial protocol will go into effect on 1 November.

BELGIUM

GOVERNMENT SURVIVES AFTER 'STRAINED NEGOTIATING

LD211101 Brussels LE SOIR in French 17-18 May 81 pp 1-2

[Jean Lienardy report]

[Excerpt] The first team lead by Marc Eyskens has not yet fallen. And unless by accident--Belgian political life sometimes has these reversals--the voters will not be called to the polls before the summer vacation.

This is how we can briefly sum up the results of the particularly strained debates, which for several days now and through numerous daily ministerial meetings, have been destined to bring the government out of a blind alley which was, to say the least, dangerous.

The topics in question are no less than the whole problem of Wallonian iron and steel and a possible modification of the wage indexing system. And the prospect of an early election presupposed that the next Parliament would comprise constituent chambers, if it was hoped, at least, to continue the regionalization begun under Martens' leadership in August 1980, which hasn't yet been brought to a conclusion.

"When this government took office, I fixed the first date for producing results, as 15 May. Well, the government has kept its word. I would like to point out to you that it is one minute to midnight!" Prime Minister Marc Eyskens, obviously pleased with himself, introduced with these words the decisions taken on Friday night and Saturday morning, first by the restricted ministerial committee on general policy and then by the cabinet council.

CABINET EXTENDS CREDIT GUARANTEES FOR POLAND

LD131133 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 9 May 81 p 13

["Own correspondent" report]

[Text] The Hague, 9 May--The government is continuing its financial aid to Poland. Poland has asked for a continuation of the support given in the past and the cabinet has agreed to this. Transport and Waterways Minister Tuijnman, who yesterday chaired the Council of Ministers, announced the aid after the council meeting.

In the second half of this year, Poland can count on export credit guarantees worth 115 million guilders for the purchase of noncapital goods. This figure includes 30 million guilders for agricultural products. The guarantees will last for 2 years.

In January this year, Poland received export credit guarantees from the Netherlands worth 125 million guilders, intended for food supplies.

BRANDT RECEIVES CPSU LETTER ON DISARMAMENT

LD211545 Hamburg DPA in German 1420 GMT 21 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 21 May (DPA)--In a letter to SPD Chairman Willy Brandt and other social democratic parties in West Europe on the present political situation in Europe, the CPSU Central Committee has expressed the wish for early, constructive negotiations on disarmament. This was confirmed today in Bonn by SPD Executive spokesman Wolfgang Clement in response to an inquiry. According to Clement, like the other social democratic parties, the SPD will carefully examine and constructively reply to the paper, the content of which Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has been informed.

According to press reports, Moscow reaffirms in the letter that, in contrast to the opinion of the West, the Warsaw Pact does not have a preponderance in medium-range weapons. At the same time, Moscow urgently stresses the proposal for a moratorium on medium-range missiles, which could come into force with the start of the relevant negotiations and remain valid until a final agreement on the limitation or reduction of such nuclear weapons in Europe had been signed.

GENSCHER DISCUSSES SCHMIDT U.S. VISIT, ARMS ISSUE

DW211037 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0448 GMT 20 May 81

[Heribert Schwan interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] Chancellor Schmidt will be going to the United States today. His talks in Washington will focus on the NATO dual decision, that is, disarmament talks. The expectations placed on the chancellor's visit are high. Do you expect good, acceptable results on the difficult issues of arms control or security policy?

[Answer] To begin with, it is necessary to keep in mind that the chancellor will be conducting his talks in Washington on a solid domestic and foreign policy foundation. The solid domestic foundation is the support of all parties of the German Bundestag for the Federal Government's foreign and security policies, above all, as far as the attitude toward the NATO dual decision of December 1979 is concerned. Both government parties as well as the opposition fully support the position of the government in that respect. This is important, for if you take a look around Europe you will not find any government which can rely on such broad support in parliament.

The second point is that the result of my visit to Washington in March was--as proved by the joint statement to the press by Secretary of State Haig and myself--that contrary to all the chatter, a solid and common basis exists between the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States on the important issues of foreign and security policy. This also turned out to be so at the NATO foreign ministers conference in Rome. This is why the German Bundestag justly welcomed the results attained there.

This being the starting position, the talks in Washington will involve a deepened exchange of views between the chancellor and the president and other members of the administration about all questions of international policies, including economic policy.

No doubt the interest will primarily concentrate on the opening of negotiations on medium-range missiles, because this is important, lest time is wasted pending the envisaged deployment in 1983. In that respect, we have a clear schedule in mind. Agreement was reached in Rome that the U.S. secretary of state would open his contacts with the Soviet Government. This has been done. He has had an initial conference with Soviet Ambassador Dobrynin. In September, he will be meeting with Foreign Minister Gromyko in New York to come to terms on the start of the formal negotiations.

The Rome communique says, moreover, that these negotiations should begin before the end of the year which, by our conviction, intention and hope, must not mean that this be postponed to the last day of the year. The sooner the better, the nearer to September the better. And along with this, the preparations for the other part of the dual decision, the deployment of the missiles, must be consistently continued so as to underline the seriousness in both directions--counterarmament and negotiations.

[Question] If I understand you correctly, you want an early opening of the negotiations on the limitation of medium-range missiles, for exaple, for the late summer or the early fall?

[Anser] The Federal Government has never doubted that each day the opening of the negotiations can be advanced can only be an advantage. After all, it is our objective to attain by serious negotiations such negotiated results, if possible, which will achieve an arms limitation for this highly difficult field of medium-range missiles as well.

[Question] Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has linked his political future to success in the disarmament issue. You yourself visualize the doom of the social-liberal coalition in Bonn in the event Social Democrats deviate from the NATO duel decision. This, too, is a clearly audible warning. Does the danger really exist that the coalition may break apart over the NATO dual decision, especially after yesterday's small-scale SPO convention?

[Answer] The federal chancellor wanted to demonstrate through his personal statements this weekend that nobody in the government coalition can call into question a central piece of our security policy without endangering the government. It was more than just correct and necessary, because one simply must know that the basic philosophy of the dual decision consists in our saying that we are not prepared to accept Soviet superiority. Superiority of one side creates instability, thus violating the balance.

On the other hand, however, we don't want to have an arms race. In other words, we don't say that because you have an arms lead, we are counterarming and that is that. We say that we want to have a balance on as low an armament level as possible. We are, therefore, determined to counterarm if you have a lead in armament, but we make an offer to you, the Soviet Union, to negotiate with us on limitation in order to avoid an arms race.

Thus, the Soviet Union is now urged to enter serious negotiations without endangering these negotiations through new depoloyment of missiles, without complicating them because these missiles are all aimed at West Europe. This basic philosophy, namely, to do what is necessary for defense while seriously negotiationg in order not to throw the world into a new arms race, is at the core of the Federal Government's security policy. We have implemented this thoroughly in the alliance. Therefore, what the chancellor pointed out was necessary.

I have the firm impression that after the talks of the SPD leadership bodies early this week, all doubts have been eliminated with regard to the Social Democrats' backing this government. That is of domestic political significance, but it also carries foreign policy weight, not merely with a view to the federal chancellor's visit to Washington--which is most important, I have said that before--but also with a view to the Soviet Union. Only if the Soviet Union is convinced that we take both parts of the decision seriously, the negotiating part and the counterarmament part, will be prepared to enter serious negotiations. Therfore, all who want to call the counterarmament part into question must be told that they will achieve the opposite of their intention in doing this. They will endanger arms control negotiations.

[Question] Discord in the coalition is reported from Bonn. The security policy debate in the Bundestag next Tuesday is involved here. There will be two motions of the CDU/CSU opposition which actually fully support the security policy of the Schmidt-Genscher government. Will the FDP join the motions of the CDU/CSU?

[Answer] I haven't heard anything so far regarding discord on that problem. Naturally, a government coalition ought to welcome it if the opposition plans to support the government policy. Therefore, we have no problems about agreeing to that motion. I hope that we will achieve agreement with the Social Democrats. I believe matters are being blown out of proportion in this whole affair.

[Question] Will this point be a subject of discussions today with SPD Chairman Brandt?

[Answer] Yes.

[Question] Will you continue to advise the SPD to vote for the motions of the opposition?

[Answer] We will discuss this problem as we have always done over many years, having the will to create a common basis, which ought to be the easier because a common effort is involved to support the government policy.

CHANCELLOR CONGRATULATES NEW FRENCH LEADERSHIP

Telegram to Mitterrand

LD211251 Hamburg DPA in German 1140 GMT 21 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 21 May (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt believes that the close relations between the Federal Republic and France can be further deepened under the new French president, Francois Mitterrand. In a telegram of congratulations on Mitterrand's assumption of office, that was published by the Federal Press Office, Schmidt said today that he is looking forward to close cooperation with Mitterrand on the basis of the French-German treaty. "I am convinced that we will succeed jointly in further deepening the trusting and close relations that have developed between our countries and peoples for the benefit of our peoples, of cooperation in Europe and of peace and freedom in the world."

Message to Mauroy

LD220856 Hamburg DPA in German 0822 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 22 May (DPA)--Chancellor Schmidt has sent a telegram to new French Premier Pierre Mauroy, congratulating him on his appointment and expressing his confidence that cooperation between Bonn and Paris will continue to develop and deepen during the years ahead on the basis of mutual confidence. "From your many years of political activity, from your wide knowledge of our country, you and I know how strong the roots are which German-French cooperation have taken in our respective countries," Schmidt writes. Good cooperation between the two countries is of great importance for the policy of France, the Federal Republic and Europe.

GENSCHER HOLDS TALKS WITH NORWAY'S FRYDENLUND

[Excerpts] Bonn, 21 May (DPA)--Detailed discussions on European problems and the alliance policy were the subjects of a 2-and-1/2 hour exchange of views between Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his Norwegian counterpart Knut Frydenlund in Bonn today. Frydenlund was particularly interested in Genscher's proposals for promoting a European union. [Words indistinct] the FDP politician, among other things, the already available instruments for a greater coordination of [word indistinct] joint foreign policy.

According to the Foreign Ministry, Genscher and Frydenlund, who began his 2-day visit to Bonn today, were satisfied with the good relations between the FRG and Norway and once again paid tribute to the results of the NATO meeting in Rome. Here, they mainly discussed the prospects for arms limitation negotiations for medium-range missiles. The Madrid CSCE followup conference, prospects for a European disarmament conference and Third World questions were also on the agenda.

Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher stressed the "Federal Republic's full support for Norway's active Europe policy initiated by Frydenlund. At a dinner in honor of the Norwegian foreign minister at Godesburg, Genscher also pointed to the close links between the security of the two countries. "We are following with concern the massive strengthening of Soviet military power in northern Europe, which considerably changes the balance in the north," he said.

The foreign ministers reaffirmed the principle of noninterference in Poland's internal affairs, which is also expected of all other signatories of the Helsinki Final Act.

SPD'S VOIGT ON NATO DECISION, MEDIUM-RANGE ARMS

DW211451 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 20 May 81 p 14

[Article by Karsten Voigt, disarmament expert of the SPD Bundestag faction and member of the Bundestag Defense Committee]

[Text] It is usual in parliamentary debates and in the media to demonstrate the military imbalance between the East and the West in individual fields by a comparison of figures. These comparisons of figures are too clear and simple to really do justice to the problem of a military balance. A balance doesn't mean the same stock of the same arms--there never has been such a thing anyway. It means the same ability to deter a military threat or a military attack with sufficient means. An imbalance would exist on the strategic level only if one side could eliminate the retaliation possibilities of the adversary--be it through a first strike, simultaneously destroying all his nuclear systems in the air, on the ground and under water, or by setting up a far-reaching defense network which would make a second nuclear strike by the one attacked ineffective.

This isn't the case, however, up to this date, and as long as this isn't the case, superiorities in this or that strategic arms category cannot be transformed into security policy advantages which would make waging war between East and West appear rewarding and bearing an acceptable calculable risk. Nothing is basically changed about this by the recently stressed danger of a selective use of nuclear arms. Even if the USSR and the United States were technologically in a position to destroy a part of the adversary's deterrent arms with a limited strike--and that isn't at all certain at present, despite all the tests--the consequences of such action could not be predicted. Particularly, it could not be ruled out from the very beginning that the conflict could escalate into a global nuclear war.

Western military planners' belief that the escalation of a war that has been started could be kept under control, that the possibility exists in the middle of the fighting to end, deescalate and control it is a belief and nothing more. This belief seems doubtful also because it is presupposed that the USSR would cooperate. But that is very uncertain, particularly since Soviet military doctrine has strongly rejected from the very beginning the idea of gradual escalation.

In other words, as long as it is faintly feasible that a threat with selective nuclear strikes could lead to the great nuclear war and thus to mutual annihilation, the threat itself is not credible according to rational standards. The same reservations can be made against the development of one's own additional selective options regarding the deterrence of the potential threat with selective nuclear strikes. This situation doesn't rule out the fact that imbalances exist below the strategic level, among nuclear systems with a medium or short range, and among conventional arms--imbalances which are being considered threatening. It has turned out that both superpowers use military power in local crisis areas--despite the risk of global nuclear confrontation--if they are superior in that region. Military experts derive from this the necessity to develop sufficiently strong, sufficiently flexible and selective deterrence potentials. These should be so strong that they could credibly deter a regionally limited threat. Simultaneously, they should be so weak that they could not be mistaken for means giving the ability to wage a regional war which have been detached from the global potential (detachment problem).

The most important military-strategic argument for the defense policy part of NATO's dual decision is derived from the striving to regain, through the development and stationing of new American medium-range arms, the ability for controlled nuclear escalation on a higher technological level of arms.

With the stationing of Pershing II and cruise missile medium-range arms, NATO wants to gain means for selective military action deep in the Warsaw Pact area, where it is important to show military limitation to the potential adversary through a small number of actions and as little undesired damage as possible in case of conflict. To achieve that, the new medium-range arms must have high safety in functioning, the ability to penetrate and accuracy in hitting the target.

The new qualitative characteristics and the military-strategic considerations, as well as political and military options that are involved, constitute the real problem of the planned American medium-range arms. But they are also the problem of the already stationed Soviet medium-range missiles. The overall numerical extent of these potentials does not play the most important role in this respect-- in the Warsaw Pact area [line apparently dropped] the method favored by official quarters, namely , a symmetric, quantitiative balance of forces.

For this reason, he who wants to deal rationally with the defense policy part of NATO's dual decision must also deal with NATO's "flexible response" doctrine. The most important military argument for the planned stationing of Pershing II and cruise missiles is derived from the necessity to further develop and modernize military abilities within the framework of the "flexible response" doctrine.

These new abilities are necessary for the sake of credible deterrence and the aim of avoiding war, once an approximate military balance exists in the field of intercontinental systems and once the USSR has stationed and is stationing in the form of the SS-20 a qualitatively new and numerically large nuclear potential with selective military abilities. So the Soviet Union develops and stations military potentials for limited nuclear options, although it sharply rejects the theory of possibly limiting nuclear wars. In the framework of its strategy to avoid wars, the Soviet Union develops military options the further development of which imputes to the West the intention of waging a selective war.

To me, the motives are understandable why the Soviet Union sharply criticized NATO's December decision. Corresponding Soviet understanding, however, isn't visible so far regarding the motives of the criticism of mainly West European NATO states with a view to Soviet medium-range arms. In political practice, however, absolute renunciation of stationing the new U.S. medium-range arms in Europe will be achieved only if the USSR also renounces its respective new military options. This is the ideal solution the SPD aims for, as before.

Its actual implementation is becoming more and more unlikely. It isn't even certain today whether a joint limitation of medium-range potential, agreed on between East and West, will be achieved. A prerequisite for every small and hopefully more extensive progress in arms limitation and reduction is our firm insistence on arms control policy initiatives. Even in the military categories of the deterrence doctrine, critical objections can be formulated against the further development of "flexible response" in the military form and extent intended by NATO's dual decision.

One of these objections prompted Von Weizsaecker to suggest the introduction of sea-based instead of land-baed new medium-range arms. If the result of arms control negotiations doen't render the stationing of new medium-range missiles superfluous, I would also prefer this solution to NATO's decision. It must be assumed, however, that without arms control policy compromises bv the Soviet Union, NATO would not call into question through new considerations the agreement that was so hard to achieve. Despite these reservations toward this NATO decision, the peace policy discussion which regrettably had completely set the problem of the medium-range weapons aside, today is too exclusively fixed on this, albeit important, individual aspect of the arms race between East and West. While at the same time, unnoticed by the public, new weapons technology developments are being introduced in the field of theater nuclear forces, short-range weapons, chemical weapons, the militarization of space, marine and submarine armament and the proliferation of nuclear weapons in Third World countries.

In my opinion, the advocates of the NATO decision overrate the extra credibility which the deterrence doctrine is to be given through the implementation of the defense policy part of the NATO decision, while its opponents overrate the risks linked with the introduction of this qualitatively new, selective nuclear option. What primarily constitutes the risks is that it becomes constantly harder to differentiate technologically between the weapons technology developments in East and West resultant from the further development of the deterrence doctrine, that is, a war-avoiding strategy and war-waging capabilities. This is why it is necessary to disseminate politically to an increasing extent in both East and West the defensive purpose of the further development of the deterrence capabilities. A suitable but also absolutely necessary means to that end is detente policy in general and arms control policy in particular. It would be preferable in any case if this new step in the arms race between East and West could be avoided as a result of arms control agreements.

In the meantime, the insistence on this decision has become so much a symbol of the political and military negotiating capability of NATO that amendments to this decision would be accepted within NATO, not only for military but also for political reasons, only if they were not perceived as being expressive of a political or military weakness of action on NATO's part. If alone for this reason, appropriate arms policy concessions by the Soviets are required if substantial influence is exerted on the defense policy part of the NATO dual decision.

With that, I would like to wind up my unsystematic observations and return to the central topic. What leeway of action does politics have in view of such a framework of conditions? Phrasing it more briefly: What can be done? Some suggestions in this respect:

First: Domestically--and this applies to all countries--the commitment exists not to let any hysteria arise, or any dulling of the senses either. The precondition for this is a sober presentation and assessment of the facts. This largely involves a task of disseminating information, which politics must likewise fulfill. In that respect, politics remain dependent on the media.

Second: Each government will have to ensure that domestic options for defusing hotbeds of conflict are exploited. I have already mentioned the need for saving oil in order not to be forced to wage war over oil. This also includes the finding that the West's leadership power by a policy for more arms and less social spending doesn't ensure peace, because the consequential effects of the decrease in the standard of living of the peoples to the advantage of armaments instead leads to instability.

Third, and this now fully applies to the foreign policy sector: It remains decisively important to keep communication going. Ensuring peace is possible only in dialogue, through negotiations. This is why we need a continuation of the arms control negotiations as soon as possible. Regardless of practical results, they, being the state for talks, retain decisive importance in their own right.

Hopefully, this option will now be opened following the NATO meeting in Rome; and hopefully the other side will not put up any new obstacles on its part. It is probably the only option for halting the balancing of a military power ratio imbalanced in some partial fields through renewed arms boosts.

As far as the measuring of balance and the potential balance of imbalances is concerned, I am aware of the problem of my expectations. I consider headway in arms control through the utilization of options for talking necessary also for the purpose of cutting the ground from under threadbare justifications for additional arms production.

By this, I also mean the so-called labor market policy argument. Surveys of this foundation have made it plausible by the example of the United States that structres exist in industrial countries which provoke such an argument. But we in the Federal Republic are not immune to this sort of argument. I state here in all clarity that I believe that arms demands with the ostensible or acutal objective of ensuring jobs are unbearable.

I am quite happy that the chancellor is adhering to a restrictive line on the question of arms exports. I don't overlook the difficulties which this brings, particularly in the case of Saudi Arabia.

So actually, I don't see any lack of leeway for action for politics which could be exploited along the lines of a limitation of the arms race. Yet, it is necessary to admit that the structures of armaments have developed dynamics of their own, which might provide alibis for simple arguments of objective compulsion. All the more courage, determination, but also patience and sensibility are required to utilize the remaining options.

It seems to me that at times this is the hitch to all of it. The extraordinary moral effort which Carl Friedrich von Weizsaecker has demanded for the maintenance of peace in the technological age must yet be made. It is also the task of peace research to draw attention to this, time and again. At the same time, it retains the role of urger and warner. Another task to be fulfilled by peace and conflict research is that of a seismograph. At the same time, it shares the inadequacies of that particular instrument; just as the seismograph cannot prevent earthquakes, peace research cannot prevent conflict. But an early warning system, also has its purpose. Early adaptation to a disaster can help reduce its consequences.

But perhaps on a long term basis, the hope is justified that it will be possible to derive from its work some aids for defusing conflicts, for avoiding their violent settlement. If we, at any rate, accept this as an option, then this is for peace and conflict research the legitimization which justifies every support.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG VIEWS BURNS APPOINTMENT

DW211141 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 21 May 81 p 4

[Commentary signed A.: "A Gesture by Reagan"]

[Text] The Washington government has taken quite some time in appointing an ambassador to the FRG. Since Walter J. Stoessel was recalled from Bonn to the State Department and appointed to the third highest position, months have passed before President Reagan filled the post on the Rhine.

A government change in Washington almost every time entails a change in the most important ambassadorial posts, which, according to American tradition, are filled in most cases not with professional diplomats but with political friends and advisers, and sometimes only with meritorious financiers of the new President. America's new ambassador to Bonn belongs to a category of diplomatic personnel which one can see more and more frequently today even in such traditional institutions as the French Foreign Service--financial and economic experts. Arthur F. Burns, a renowned 77-year-old national economist, was the president of the American Issuing Bank from 1970 to 1977, and already under Eisenhower he was an important adviser of the Washington government on economic issues. His name was linked for a long time with the strength and stability of the dollar. So a man will now move into the American Embassy on the Rhine who has hardly any experience in the diplomatic business, but in whom the Federal Government could find an understanding adviser regarding its economic problems.

Burns was been appointed just in time for the visit of the federal chancellor to Washington--a fine gesture by Ronald Reagan. The new situation in France and the critical relations with the Soviet Union complicate the president's selection of his ambassadors to some of the most important posts in Europe. The long vacancy in the Bonn position was probably a sign of appreciation.

PRESIDENT CARSTENS LAUDS TURKISH REFORMS

TA191606 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1535 GMT 19 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 19 May (AA)--Federal German President Karl Carstens sent a message to Turkish head of state Gen Kanan Evren on Ataturk's centennial, praising his reforms "through which a new form of state, that is, a republican national state (?was established) in the motherland, based on the principles of people's sovereignty, democracy and freedom of belief." It was thanks to Ataturk's farsightedness on the political plane that Turkey now is closely attached to neighboring European countries and is a respected member of the Council of Europe and NATO." Praising longstanding close and friendly relations between Turkey and Germany, Carstens said Turkish migrant workers are making a valuable contribution to Federal Germany's economic development. He expressed his conviction that modern Turkey created by Ataturk will be able to overcome the difficult problems it currently is facing.

SAUDIS HIKE INTEREST RATES FOR PROPOSED LOAN

DW180829 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 18 May 81 p 124

[Text] Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is plunged into growing difficulties with his project of obtaining for the German economy low interest funds in the amount of more than DM6 billion via the Frankfurt Credit Institute for Reconstruction. At the moment, the federal budget envisages for the next few years interest subsidies in the amount of DM645 million. But the Saudis, from whom the money is to be borrowed, are not prepared to grant the Germans the favorable conditions hitherto customary. Under the current market conditions, as much as DM300 million more than planned will be required for the reduction in credit costs. Bonn finance experts don't rule out the possibility that the chancellor might be compelled to drop out of the entire deal involving billions. An FDP deputy remarks "It will not work that way."

MITTERRAND SENDS LETTER TO PRESIDENT REAGAN

NC211845 Paris AFP in English 1836 GMT 21 May 81

[Text] Paris, 21 May (AFP)--Francois Mitterrand, the new French president, today expressed his "most sincere wishes for the French-American dialogue to develop usefully and contribute to reinforcing world peace" in a message to U.S. President Ronald Reagan.

Mr Mitterrand's message was in response to congratulations from Mr Reagan upon his inauguration. It reads:

"Mr President, I have been particularly appreciative of the warm message you sent me in your name and that of the American people upon my election to the presidency of the (French) Republic, and I am happy that you saw in that democratic election the result of a perseverance and a will that reminded you of your own experience.

"I share with you the objectives of peace, progress and freedom originating in our cultural roots. I wish that in years to come we succeed in the whole world to discard conflicts, promote economic and social development, further the cause of human rights and of the independence of nations. We will both have to shoulder our responsibilities in that respect.

"I express the most sincere wishes for the French-American dialogue to develop usefully and contribute to reinforcing world peace in the respect of undertakings freely subscribed to by our two countries. While thanking you in the name of the French people for your message of welcome, I look forward to meeting you personally and to working with you as of the forthcoming Ottawa summit."

MAUROY TAKES OFFICE, SIGNS MEASURES TO DEFEND FRANC

Statement on Assuming Office

LD211540 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 21 May 81

[Text] Only minutes ago, Pierre Mauroy took over as premier at the Matignon. He had a private meeting with Raymond Barre before seeing him off the Matignon premises. Pierre Mauroy then made his first statement as premier. Here is Dominique Souchier:

I will give you a resume of this statement [words indistinct]. Pierre Mauroy started by saying he is aware of the honor of being premier: I realize the weight and responsibility of it. The French people may rest assured of my conviction and determination. The government of the republic will be one of rigor and imagination. In these difficult times, nothing will be given to us without effort, nothing will be done without lasting quality and nothing will be possible unless social justice intervenes to legitimize the effort required from all. Pierre Mauroy concluded this long statement by saying: The new government calls on the French people to build together a new citizenship where initiative and sense of responsibility are the new dimensions of freedom. Thus, the government will remain faithful to the hopes of 10 May and to France's vocation.

Currency Measures Announced

NC211958 Paris AFP in English 1955 GMT 21 May 81

[Text] Paris, 21 May (AFP)--France today took stringent measures to defend the franc, currently under pressure on international exchange markets following the election of Socialist President Francois Mitterrand on May 10.

Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy, named today following the inauguration of President Mitterrand, announced however that France was not leaving the European Monetary System.

The measures, including currency impositions on importers, the return to France of foreign currency by exporters, and limits to foreign property purchases by French residents and on investments abroad, were aimed at "sheltering our currency from passing difficulties which are not justified by the...state of the economy nor the economic and financial policies of the new government," he said in a statement.

The measures were taken, the statement said, "in the strict respect of France's international obligations and in particular of those of the European Monetary System.

"They in no way hinder the total freedom for non-residents to work with the franc," the prime minister said.

In French banking circles the day to day market interest rates are now at 17.5 per cent, a record level.

There have been a number of rumours that the franc, currently at its floor level within the European Monetary System (EMS), would be devalued shortly within the EMS. The franc was quoted at a record high of 5.583 against the dollar on the exchange market here today.

PRESIDENT MITTERRAND DISSOLVES NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

NC221012 Paris AFP in English 1008 GMT 22 May 81

[Excerpt] Paris, 22 May (AFP)--President Francois Mitterrand today dissolved the French National Assembly in preparation for legislative elections.

The dissolution was one of the first acts of the new president, who is seeking a parliamentary majority in his favour in the National Assembly.

The first round of the general election for the 492 members is expected to be on June 14 with a final round a week later. Candidates need to win an overall majority to be elected in the first round, or first past the post in the second.

The outgoing assembly had 155 Gaullist members of the Rally for the Republic Party (RPR) of Jacques Chirac, 119 members or backers of the Union for French Democracy (UDF), supporters of former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, 117 Socialists, 86 Communists and 10 independents.

LE FIGARO COMMENTS ON LEGISLATIVE ELECTION

LD211111 Paris LE FIGARO in French 18 May 81 p 1

[Charles Rebois commentary: "Reasons for Haste"]

[Text] 1968-81. Thirteen years ago, the left tried to seize power in the streets. It was touch and go. That same year, on 23 and 30 June, the voters made it clear to the left with an imposing majority that France would remain a democracy.

Meanwhile, on the Champs Elysees, in answer to the Bastille parade, a huge demonstration of support for De Gaulle took place to shouts of "Mitterrand, you've failed."

Is it the Mitterrand of 30 May 1968 who is taking his revenge today?

The two situations are hardly comparable. Eight days ago, Francois Mitterrand was indisputably elected president of the republic by universal suffrage. And today, he swears his good intentions: He will be president of all French people--which remains to be seen, of course.

Regarding the legislative election of 1968, didn't the same man talk of a "holdup conceived, launched and implemented by specialists"? Though it isn't appropriate to reproach him for this verbal excess, which is excusable when one is languishing in opposition, one may still wonder what sentiments prompted the new president to decide to dissolve the National Assembly and to organize a legislative election in the wake of the presidential contest.

Francois Mitterrand is dismissing the deputies because he wants to have a left majority to keep his election promises. He still has to prove in effect that by voting for him the French people subscribed to his program.

This need creates another. Inspired as they are directly by the joint program, the Socialist projects stand a chance of being implemented only insofar as the Communists are participants. It is advisable to take immediate advantage of the apparent good disposition of the friends of Georges Marchais.

This conquerors' haste is inspired by other motives. Apparently, they doubt that the "state of grace" of which Francois Mitterrand spoke will grant them its benefits for long. So they want to derive benefit as soon as possible from the enthusiasm gained. The earlier the legislative election is held, the greater will be the effect of the dynamism of success.

The good state of our finances due to Raymond Barre's management will enable the Socialists to capitalize on the election immediately, whereas the economic difficulties which obviously await them will have the opposite effect. Along with these political reasons, there is another more innocent one: the need to take the vote before the vacations.

Under these conditions, the new team doesn't intend to bother with scruples about regulations. The 21-day period for the registration of candidates will be reduced as far as administrative constraints allow.

One wonders if, with such practices, democracy will triumph. In effect, what is the point of using circumstances to elect an assembly which will not be the reflection of lasting trends of opinion?

The country has everything to gain by giving itself a stable government. Electing a parliamentary majority which will form a counterbalance to the presidential prerogatives will ensure a balance of powers.

LECANUET DISCUSSES UDF MISSION, PACT WITH RPR

LD211149 Paris LE MONDE in French 16 May 81 p 10

[Text] At the end of the UDF National Council meeting, Jean Lecanuet read the statement: "France lives as a democracy. This is a privilege in the world today. It is a good fortune which we must preserve for the future.

"On 10 May, the French people chose a president of the republic. But it is not certain that they all realized that they were choosing a change of society.

"On 10 May, France took a great risk in view of the problems which remain: an international situation which carries in it the seeds of a risk of conflict likely to degenerate into real confrontation at any time; a grave world economic crisis which affects all industrialized countries and reinforces the poverty of the poorest countries and the need to pursue a policy of modernizing France--the only policy capable of facing up to the challenges of the end of this century and providing the new generations with ambition, work and hope.

"In the face of these questions, the French people expect us to mobilize ourselves in unity and with determination. The risk would become in fact a serious danger if tomorrow's assembly were dominated by a Socialist and Communist coalition majority.

"Our mission remains to alert the French people to the dangers of this possibility and to offer France a credible and determined alternative.

"Without disputing--in the spirit of the Fifth Republic--either the election or the powers of the new president, we consider it indispensable to constitute a dynamic counterbalance, while still taking account of some of the aspirations which were made evident during the presidential election, especially in the social sphere. This would allow harmful disruptions in economic restoration and a weakening of France's positions in Europe and in the world to be avoided.

"This sense of security for France depends on the size in the next assembly of the democratic current which we represent in national political life.

"The UDF and all those who are in the center constitute a bulwark against excesses. They must represent a force of calm, solidarity, conciliation and initiative. They will be a dam against an excess of extremes. They will represent France's good fortune and future.

"We have approved an agreement with the RPR. This agreement will be loyal and will ensure a very broad rallying of French people loyal to the institutions of the Fifth Republic, attached to freedom and the spirit of initiative and conscious of the need to maintain and develop the demands of solidarity and responsibility in French society."

Lecanuet then explained that the text of the agreement which the UDF and the RPR are to sign had undergone "very slight modifications" at the request of members of the UDF National Council, and that these modifications will be submitted to the RPR leadership. He believes that the signing might take place either "very shortly" or next week.

The UDF president went on to say: "Discussion on the subject of single and candidacies regarding primary elections has not taken place. Jacques Chirac and I, after reflecting on this, recognize that, as far as most constituencies are concerned, success can best be sought sometimes by a single candidacy and at other times by competition within the outgoing majority."

After observing, "If we are wiping out so many bad memories, it is because we believe that there is a serious danger...we don't want to repeat, but to forget certain errors," Lecanuet stressed that the UDF would not change its name and would "remain itself."

LE MONDE SEES POLITICAL 'GOOD INTENTIONS'

1447 Paris LE MONDE in French 12 May 81 pp 1, 3

[Andre Laurens article: "The Need for Change"]

[Excerpts] The French people have selected their new president of the republic without knowing it or saying it. They did not know it since they were not informed of the opinion polls on their voting intentions which, in the week proceeding the second round of the election when publication of opinion polls was prohibited, relentlessly announced Mitterrand's victory. It was not until the last minute, in the polling booths, that they expressed the formidable desire for change which was gnawing on them.

It will now be necessary to define the nature of the change and the means which will make it possible to implement it. In addition to the specific measures which Mitterrand announced during his campaign and which are now awaited, the leaders of the new presidential majority have begun to draw up a different method of government. One of the people who has been most specific in this respect is Jacques Delors, who has become one of Mitterrand's closest advisers after having been one of those who inspired Chaban-Delmas in his unfortunately unfruitful attempt to break the deadlock in French society. Delors clearly reflects the advance of all those who have realized that the desirable changes could only be brought about by a complete change of government.

His watchword is "dialogue." This dialogue will start with a general consultation of the employer, trade union, agricultural and family organizations and will continue in a constant, in-depth manner after the parliamentary elections. Delors, who is an expert in industrial relations, stresses the importance of the "trade union reality" but also points out that the state cannot solve all problems by waving a magic wand. He rules out the possibility of negotiations between the authorities, the employers and trade unions similar to those which followed the May 1968 events (the Grenelle agreements), and instead favors consultations on individual subjects.

This desire for dialogue and pragmatism is also found in Rocard, who proposes to encourage contractual agreements, advocates regional reform and calls on the left to reconcile "dream with reality," in other words, not to spoil its political victory by economic irresponsibility.

At the same time, the Socialist leaders are anxious to reassure those who are worried about the repercussions of this victory. Mitterrand is appealing to the national community and Mauroy asserts that "the Socialist man of unity" will be the guarantor of the French people's unity. Rocard is hinting that means of reassuring people must be found, and Defferre and Delors are saying the same when they reject any spirit of revenge or any idea of a witchhunt. These good intentions are matched only by those of the losers, who don't dispute a democratically won victory even if they stress its dangers for the future. The transitional period until the announcement of the results and the transfer of power should therefore, go smoothly.

Honeymoon

The means of bringing about change will rest initially--in the 4 weeks which separate the the new president's installation from the parliamentary elections--with the PS and those who supported its candidate.

The first government appointed by Mitterrand will not have to appear before the National Assembly, which will be quickly dissolved, and it will proceed by degree to take the short term measures relating to the lowest incomes and public investment to revive economic growth "reasonably." This will be the start of larger-scale action which will be taken after the parliamentary elections, if the new parliamentary majority so permits.

There is nothing in the attitude adopted by the PCF or the trade unions to suggest that Mitterrand will encounter major problems at this stage of his enterprise. While the Communist leaders continue to demand a share of responsibilities at all levels, they seem prepared to discuss the size of and conditions for that share during preparations for the parliamentary elections.

Seguy, for his part, has recalled the CGT's main demands for a minimum wage of Fr3,400, a reduction in the working week and employment, which it wants to see satisfied as soon as possible but not "overnight." The other trade unions are adopting a very moderate tone--even those which, like the French Democratic Confederation of Labor and the National Education Federation, pin great hopes on the change which has just come about. Could this be the "honeymoon" which Mitterrand expected to enjoy like any newly elected president?

Government Contract

The Communist leaders say that they are prepared to discuss a government contract with the PS now or between the two rounds of the parliamentary elections. The PCF Central Committee will hold a meeting this week to clarify its position, which still seems rather vague probably because it is very new. Only a few weeks ago, nobody really imagined that such negotiations could be envisaged so calmly!

Marchais and Fiterman could scarcely have imagined a return to the leftwing union, with joint action by the two parties to reach agreement on the nature of the change to be introduced. "We will do all we can to achieve a leftwing union majority." Fiterman said. If that is really the case, the Socialist leaders will find an echo to the main condition they are putting to the PCF, which is the desire for union.

For them, this means that the Communists would play their role in that union--rights and duties included of course--under PS domination. "The Communist voters are part of the presidential majority. If Francois Mitterrand's proposals are approved by the PCF leadership, we will quickly reach agreement," Jospin stated. "A government contract, including one with the PCF, is vital, but there cannot be several government policies," Mauroy pointed out. In Defferre's view, there will be no Veto if an agreement is reached and, although Chevenement readily concedes that the PCF did not reach its usual level on 26 April, he wants that party to assert its desire for union.

This means that the followup to the verbal rapprochement which emerged in the wake of the left's success depends mainly on the acceptance of a new balance of forces between the two parties--the balance which results from the presidential election and which could possibly be modified--but in what direction?--by the coming parliamentary elections. Each of the two parties will tread cautiously on the possibilities of a cooperation which the voters could continue to impose, while seeking to exploit the situation as much as possible. It is by no means certain that success lies in outdoing each other on the subject of change. If the PCF wants to board the train while it is moving, the cars must not be overloaded.

REPORTAGE ON FINANCIERS' ARRESTS, LODGE SCANDAL

Pertini, Forlani Hold Talks

AU211958 Rome ANSA in English 1942 GMT 21 May 81

[Text] Rome, 21 May (ANSA)--Italian head-of-state Sandro Pertini conferred with Prime Minister Arnaldo Forlani and called home Italian Socialist Party Secretary Bettino Craxi today as the shockwaves of the Propaganda-Two Masonic Lodge scandal continued rippling through the highest echelons of the Italian establishment.

The names of 953 presumed members of Licio Gelli's ultrasecret lodge were released early this morning. They included two ministers, some undersecretaries, state officials, spy-masters, leading financiers and businessmen, and bigwigs in the newspaper business.

The politicians were drawn from the whole spectrum of Italian politics, apart from the Communists and smaller leftwing groupings such as the Radicals and the Proletarian Unity Party. The government officials were drawn from the ranks of Forlani's own Christian Democrats, senior partners in the ruling four party coalition, the Socialists, Social Democrats, and Republicans.

No information was immediately available on Forlani's session with the head-of-state. A telephone call from Pertini reached Craxi at the Elysee presidential residence in Paris, where he was on hand for the inauguration of President Francois Mitterrand, a fellow Socialist, like Pertini. "Important things are going on in Italy" Craxi told reporters as he left the official luncheon at the Elysee. "I must get back to Rome this evening".

Meanwhile, Carabinieri police at Ventimiglia near the Italo-French frontier filed charges against Gelli for allegedly exporting about 100,000 dollars to Monte Carlo without due authorization. Police sources said they ran across Gelli's trafficking while investigating the slaying of 58-year-old French antique dealer Louis Nogueres, a friend of Gelli's who was killed in Monte Carlo on March 23.

The French police arrested an Italian, Carmelo Barbera, who told them Nogueres had given him checks to the value of 100 million lire (about 100,000 dollars) to change in Ventimiglia. According to his tale, the exchange agency he had been told to go to did not have enough cash on hand to carry out the operation and stored the checks in its safe, where they were found during a search. According to Barbera, the money was just part of a sum which Gelli agreed to pay Nogueres in return for decorating and fitting out one of the Freemason's villas.

Trials Set

AU220852 Rome ANSA in English 0810 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] Milan, 22 May (ANSA)--The seven leading financiers whose arrest here Wednesday sparked panic selling on the Milan stock exchange will be brought to trial within a week to face charges of illegally transfering funds out of the country. The two leading defendents, Carlo Bonomi, chairman of the Invest International Corporation and son of the "first woman" of Italian financial circles, Anno Bonomi Bolchini, and Roberto Calvi, chairman of the powerful Banco Ambrosiano, and the five others taken into custody allegedly sent abroad some 27 million dollars without the required authorization of the Bank of Italy. The seven are thought to have funneled these funds abroad through a complex triangle of operations with offices in Italy, Panama and Nassau, in the Bahamas, by dealing in securities at artificially high prices. The operations were allegedly organized by the Centrale Finanziaria, a company headed by banker Calvi.

The affairs of Calvi, a former associate of Sicilian-born financier Michele Sindona, is also under investigation in connection with Sindona, wanted in Italy to face charges of fraudulent bankruptcy and for alleged complicity in a range of other crimes, including homicide. Sindona is currently serving a 25-year sentence in an American federal penitentiary for the fraudulent bankruptcy of the Franklin National Bank in New York, the biggest bank failure in American history.

The other five notables in Milan's financial world picked up Wednesday are Giorgio Cappugi, former managing director of La Centrale; Antonio Tonello, chairman of the Toro Assicurazioni group and ex manager of La Centrale; Mario Valeri Manera, past member of the board of La Centrale; Giorgio Cigliana, managing director of Invest International; and Aladino Minciaroni, a leading contractor and member of Centrale's board. Bonomi, Cigliana and Cappugi, the first three to be questioned by magistrates Thursday, all denied any connection to the charge.

The round of arrests which rocked Italian financial circles closely coincided with another and apparently connected bombshell, the release last evening of the list of 950-plus high ranking Italians in government, the armed forces, politics, business and publishing said to be associated with the Propaganda-Two secret Masonic lodge. Both Calvi and P-Two Grandmaster Licio Gelli, whose lodge is under investigation by magistrates in connection with the collapse of the Sindona financial empire in Italy, were closely linked to the financier and are thought to have provided "cover" for his operations in the country. Sindona and Calvi were included on the list of names allegedly associated with the lodge.

Another link between the Milan banker in custody and the P-Two affair was forged by the appearance on the list of publishing magnate Angelo Rizzoli, the managing director of his empire; Bruno Tassan Din; and Franco di Bella, editor-in-chief of Rizzoli's flagship daily and Italy's leading newspaper, CORRIERE DELLA SERA.

Three weeks ago, Calvi's Centrale placed a bid for a block of shares in the major Italian publishing house and some sources spoke at the time of the mediation in the deal of Licio Gelli.

A meeting of all the staffers of the Rizzoli publications has been convened for today for an examination of the development. An editorial appearing in the Thursday edition of CORRIERE DELLA SERA expressed misgivings on the reasons behind the arrest of the seven financiers for events which allegedly occurred in 1975-76 but which "now involve persons committed to important and significant operations."

Two other names which turned up on the P-Two list were those of Roberto Ciuni, editor-in-chief of Rizzoli daily MATTINO, and Maurizio Costanzo, the head of Rizzoli's privately-owned television network.

Denials, Reactions

AU220858 Rome ANSA in English 0840 GMT 22 May 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 22 May (ANSA)--The twin bombshells which rocked the Italian political scene Wednesday with the arrest in Milan of seven leading financial figures and the release that night of the list of 950-plus names of prominent Italians allegedly associated with the Propaganda-Two secret Masonic lodge has led to speculation on an imminent government crisis.

As the tide of denials of association with the lodge issued by many of those whose names appeared on the list grew in strength yesterday, members of the Communist Party opposition in Parliament, of the neofascist MSI opposition and M.P.'s on the extreme left began trumpeting calls for an immediate clarification and the resignation of the government headed by Christian Democrat Prime Minister Arnaldo Forlani. Forlani's coalition is made up of his own Christian Democrats, the Socialist Party, the Social Democrats and the Republican Party.

The two cabinet minister on the list were Socialist Enrico Manca, foreign trade minister, and the Christian Democrat, Franco Foschi, labor minister. Also named were the chairman of the joint chiefs of the defense staff, Admiral Giovanni Torrisi, secret service chiefs general Giuseppe Santovito and Giulio Grassani, Social Democrat Party Secretary Pietro Longo and Angelo Rizzoli, the head of the nation's largest publishing house.

The politicians were the quickest off the mark with their denials of any association with the Masonic lodge. Longo, in his statement yesterday, mentioned "a plot mounted against the state".

The Socialist Party secretary, Bettino Craxi, was in Paris yesterday for the inauguration of the new French president, Socialist Francois Mitterrand, when he was advised by telephone by head of state Sandro Pertini to return to Italy. Immediately after his return, Craxi conferred with Forlani on the series of developments shaking the political world.

In the evening, the prime minister decided to call a meeting of the secretaries of the four coalition parties for Tuesday for an overview of the fast-breaking situation and to, as he said, "lend clarity" to developments and "not leave space for speculation". The meeting of the secretaries with Forlani was put on the calendar for after the conclusion of the Republican Party Congress, which gets underway today in Rome.

In a leadership meeting held yesterday, the Republicans issued a note calling for "intransigent firmness" for applying measures required to oppose the "secret and corrupting" activities of these centers of power.

The Socialists struck a similar stance in an editorial appearing in their party paper, AVANTI, which recommended the "quick shouldering of responsibility in political headquarters, in Parliament, in judiciary quarters and by magistrates".

The government party also moved to set up an ad hoc control commission to evaluate the positions of those Socialists whose names appeared on the P-Two list, the foreign trade minister and Fabrizio Cichitto, a spokesman for the party left. Flaminio Piccoli, the secretary of the Christian Democrat Party, said yesterday that he feels that membership in "dark and secret" organizations is incompatible with membership in the party.

The Cabinet meeting convened for today, for matters of ordinary administration, is virtually certain to have on the agenda the P-Two affair and could pave the way for a possible decision on Tuesday for a cabinet reshuffle.

ANGOLAN FOREIGN MINISTER PLANS 28-29 MAY VISIT

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTIES WANT NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

LD201227 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 17 May 81 p 10

[Excerpts] TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBRYAA--On Saturday the Nordic social democratic parties reached agreement on an attempt to create a nuclear-free zone embracing the Nordic countries. It is hoped that this move will gradually influence the superpowers and lead to a Europe totally free of nuclear arms. The decision was made by party and trade union leaders from Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Finland when the labor movement's Nordic Cooperation Committee met in Bommersvik outside Soedertaelje on Friday and Saturday. "We do not intend to content ourselves with a joint Nordic declaration but also hope to make a contribution to a totally nuclear-free Europe," Norwegian Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg said.

In Norway the Conservative Party is opposed to the idea of a nuclear-free zone. The idea has led to an intense debate in Norway, partly because the country is a NATO member. Denmark is also a NATO member. Danish Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen told TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRAA: "The majority of Danish rightwing parties give their passive support to the proposal. But Glistrup's Progress Party and sections of the Conservative Party are opposed to it."

During the 2-day meeting, the politicians also discussed the workers movement's policies for the 1980's and the international political situation.

DENMARK

PAPER PRAISES GOVERNMENT FOR QUESTIONING NATO GOAL

LD201345 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 14 May 81 p 2

[Editorial: "NATO's 3 percent"]

[Text] NATO's defense ministers have once again stated in a communique that the desired target is an annual 3 percent increase in member nations' defense budgets. At the same time, we have two statements of crucial significance for the evaluation of the NATO ministers' resolution. NATO General Secretary Joseph Luns has said: "The 3 percent formula is only a commitment with respect to a target and not a commitment with respect to a figure." And Danish Defense Minister Poul Sogaard said at the NATO meeting: "The Danish Government cannot make any commitment today to effect a definite percentage increase."

Despite a communique which only Denmark wanted to amend on the issue of the 3 percent rule, there are several countries which have not, will not and cannot meet the 3 percent target; but it is especially important for Denmark that it has made this clear--at the right time and place. The future debate in Denmark ought to accept this, so that the discussions in connection with a new defense settlement deal with real possibilities and not vague wishes which we are in no position to fulfill. This is the conclusion to be drawn from the NATO meeting in Brussels yesterday.

Defense Negotiations 'Crisis'

LD201223 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 15 May 81 p 25

[Text] Defense Minister Poul Sogaard is still optimistic about reaching a satisfactory result in the defence settlement negotiations before the Folketing summer recess.

However, the actual situation is such that things are now moving so sluggishly that the negotiations have reached a crisis. The Social Democrats and the Radical Liberals cannot agree with the other parties taking part in the negotiations, even though approaches were attempted at yesterday's talks. The nonsocialist parties are demanding a real increase of 5 percent in the defense budget.

MOSCOW SEEN PIQUED BY DEBATE ON FRIENDSHIP PACT

LD201245 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 16 May 81 p 10

[Harald Hamrin Helsinki dispatch]

[Text] Helsinki, 15 May--The Soviet Union wants to put an end to the debate which has been going on in Finland for a while on the 1948 Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance Pact between the two countries. In the last few days, the Soviet Union has expressed its dissatisfaction with the Finnish debate on the pact both publicly and through diplomatic channels. In the last 3 days, most recently on Friday, Soviet criticism has twice been voiced in public, although in well packaged terms. DAGENS NYHETER has also been told that criticism has also come through diplomatic channels.

"We understand from our talks with our eastern neighbor that it is not interested in a full-scale debate on the pact," a very centrally placed government source told DAGENS NYHETER Friday. The view is that it is not a debate which would help Soviet interests in relation to Finland.

The internal Finnish debate, which is proceeding in the press and among leading politicians, flared up after the Third Parliamentary Defense Committee had presented its final recommendations a couple of months ago. The recommendations drew up guidelines for the development of the Finnish defense forces in the next 5 years. They also included a section analyzing the Finnish-Soviet Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance Pact.

Certain revelations concerning the internal deliberations during the committee's work led quickly to a situation in which a public debate began on how a couple of the pact's central paragraphs are to be interpreted. The debate principally revolved round the question of in what situation and under what circumstances the Soviet Union could be expected to give military aid in the form of troops or arms to Finland.

Max Jokobson, former Finnish UN and Stockholm ambassador and a well-known debater on questions of security policy, said that the pact only provides for such military aid in a situation in which Finland has already been attacked by a foreign power. He criticized the Defense Committee for the fact that in its recommendations it had opened the door for the Soviet Union to give military "assistance" also in a crisis situation, when only the threat of an attack--but not an actual attack--was present. The recommendations' phrasing, Jakobson said, was a deviation from the so-called Paasikivi-Kekkonen line and amounted to a lowering of the threshold for assistance. And in the final analysis, Jakobson said, there was a risk that the rest of the world's faith in Finland's neutrality could be called into question.

Finnish Communists and leftwing socialists immediately returned fire. They found Jakobson's views were the expression of more or less suspect endeavors by "militarist and rightwing forces" in Finland. Even a "threat of an attack" could, they said, be sufficient justification for Soviet military assistance to Finland.

Judging by all acounts, it is precisely this debate which the Soviet Union wants to terminate.

On Thursday Soviet Deputy Prime Minister Ivan Arkhipov, on an official trade visit to Finland, stressed in unusually strong terms in a speech that "all articles" in the pact "have also fully retained their topicality in our time."

On Friday, the Finnish political weekly SUOMEN KUVALEHTI published an edition containing an interview with the Soviet ambassador in Helsinki, V.M. Sobolev, which also firmly stressed that the pact "has in all its aspects retained its topicality and its original meaning" for the two countries.

"The similar approach to the pact and the fact that there are no differences of opinion on the interpretation of its various points guarantee a sure and progressive development of relations between the Soviet Union and Finland," Sobolev said in the interview.

However, the point here is--as the Finnish debate shows--that there are just such "differences of opinion on the interpretation" of the pact. Diplomatic and political circles in Helsinki read Arkhipov's and Sobolev's statements, like the unofficial Soviet moves, as a not particularly dramatic but nevertheless definite indication of dissatisfaction in Moscow.

PARTY CHAIRMAN CALLS FOR EXTENSION OF USSR TREATY

LD200951 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedist 18 May 81 p 1

[Excerpt] The reelected National Coalition Party chairman, Ilkka Suominen, called for an extension of the Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance pact with the Soviet Union, "ideally before the reinforcement of the arms systems deployed in Europe," during the final day of the party congress yesterday. Suominen's long-awaited foreign policy demarche was also the talking point at the otherwise undramatic congress.

Suoinen denied that his demarche could be seen in the context of the 1984 presidential election. "Vital Finnish security interests lie behind the statement," Suominen said. Suominen was at first unwilling to answer the question of whether his initiative had been discussed with other bodies before being made public, but finally said that it was his own and the party's independent initiative.

The congress ended yesterday amidst great unity. Support for the Passikivi-Kekkonen line was also complete in foreign policy questions, where diverging viewpoints had been expected beforehand.

SWEDEN

MODERATES GIVE FALLDIN EXTRA 'YEAR OF TRIAL'

LD201013 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 16 May 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Falldin's endorsement"]

[Text] The Moderates decided to ignore their own narrow party considerations. Instead of bringing about a new election, which would undoubtedly have meant large electoral gains for them, they have elected to allow a Center government to enter office. If they had any desire to chastise the parties which let them down on the issue of tax reform and which maneuvered the Moderates out of the government, then they have held it in check.

Of course, the decision was not made out of kindness, simply to give a few people in the Center and Liberal parties an opportunity to continue to be government ministers and others to become such. There are political reasons behind the decision.

Sweden needs a strong government in the serious situation the country finds itself in. It is impossible to achieve such a government under the present circumstances. But the incoming government has now solemnly promised, with the exception of the tax reform agreement with the opposition, to pursue what the Moderates consider to be a sensible policy. The policies of the three-party government will be pursued. The economic policy contained in the financial plans signed by Gosta Bohman [Moderate Coalition Party leader] will remain. The parties of the center have also made binding commitments in a number of other areas. The significance of this is that the new government will follow nonsocialist, bourgeois policies. Any deviation from these would be tantamount to breaking promises.

Nevertheless, we must assume that the contacts between the nonsocialist parties are based on a desire to stand by promises made. The experience the Moderates could now point to is not encouraging--it is hardly possible to have stronger guarantees than the government's own agreement on 3 February, and this was not adhered to--but the Moderates are nevertheless still willing to give the Center and Liberal parties a new chance to show they are reliable. For the future of nonsocialist cooperation--the alternative to Socialist rule--this confidence in the parties of the center is of the greatest importance.

The responsibility for how things now go lies exclusively with the parties of the center. It ought to be conceded that they have already shown a certain amount of responsibility by making the necessary commitments. One of the leaders of the parties of the center ruled out the possibility of such a thing happening not more than a week ago.

Falldin's third government will be a weak one. But this does not mean that given the right circumstances it could not pursue a strong policy. For if it begins on the nonsocialist policy of reforms in accordance with the three-party government's program--with the toughening of certain points for which the deterioration in the situation calls--it will have a majority for this policy in the Riksdag.

Yesterday, Gosta Bohman stated that the Moderates are now an independent opposition party. The responsibility of government rests on the government parties. This is really the only reasonable way to approach matters. If one is outside the government then one is outside the government. What the Moderates are now doing is allowing the parties of the center to form a government. However, they have not assumed the role of a pliant supporting party. Their task will be instead to test from case to case in the work of the Riksdag whether the government's proposals deserve support.

There have been voices which have recommended that the Moderates call for a new election to make sure of winning votes and seats. Such considerations can be rejected as unworthy. But there have been other reasons for considering a new election. If it is not possible to form a government which has the Riskdag's support for the major part of its program, then the people should be allowed to have their say.

Through the promises made by Thorbjorn Falldin there is every possibility of a program based on a nonsocialist majority. It has proved possible to form a government; this means that new elections can be avoided. With Sweden's system of elections every 3 years, an extra election now would not be particularly desirable in itself.

It has also turned out that there are many practical difficulties which would prevent Sweden from acquiring a new government within a reasonable space of time through new elections.

And as it is, it is only a little over a year before the voters have a chance to have their say. The Moderates have given the parties of the center a year of trial before the moment of truth. The parties of the center asked for it. It is now up to them to show that they deserve the chance.

EDITORIAL PRAISES MODERATES' RESPONSIBLE STANCE

LD201301 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 16 May 81 p 2

[Svante Nycander editorial: "The Moderates Acted Correctly"]

[Text] The Moderate Coalition Party Riksdag group's decision on Friday probably means that the government crisis has been resolved and that the Center and Liberal parties will share power up to the elections in September 1982. In a trying situation, the Moderates have adopted a responsible stance. And it will also become apparent that they have acted wisely from their own point of view too.

New prespectives in Swedish politics are now opening up. Those who now have the responsibility for governing the country are faced with tasks which would be difficult to master even for a government with a reliable majority in the Riksdag. It is not difficult to understand those who warn against this new experiment with a parliamentary miniority, in particular in the light of the fact that it is the parties of the center which have had difficulties in maintaining their credibility. No matter how things end, there are positive lessons to be learnt from the political crisis whose end we are now approaching.

By accepting a Center government, the Moderates have made it clear that a Riksdag majority can carry the government only if the political center of gravity lies in the center. When a central issue is brought to a head, it will in the final analysis be the Center and Liberal parties' view which will decide the outcome.

This was not always obvious during the three-party government. In 1979, Thorbjorn Falldin accepted that the Moderates on the strength of their electoral gains should have more ministerial posts than in the first three-party government. It has been easy for the Social Democrats to portray the Center and Liberal parties as the Moderates' captives, imprisoned in the cell of conservatism. After the events of recent weeks, it is no longer possible to make such a description credible.

The Center and Liberal parties have shown that they do not give way even when the pressure is at its strongest. The moderates in their turn have confirmed that the most important thing for them is that government power remains in the hands of the nonsocialists.

Events are more convincing than arguments and declarations. After what has happened, it will now be easier, paradoxically enough, for the Center and Liberal parties to tackle the economic problems forcefully and take the responsibility for unpopular measures, since they cannot now be suspected of being steered by the Moderates. It could for the same reason turn out to be easier to reach agreement with the Moderates on a particular issue than was often the case in the three-party government. The nonsocialist majority could function with less tension, and freer from deadlocks involving prestige than in the past.

For the first time, the Center and Liberal parties appear in word and deed as a coherent joint alternative. The two parties have acted with full unity throughout the crisis. There has been no hint of a split.

Together, the parties of the center have political resources which they do not possess in isolation. If they had not been split over energy policy, they would have had an enormous chance of shaping political developments after 1976 in a way which the majority of citizens would have found positive. But in many situations they have instead blocked and worked against each other. As late as 1979, they disagreed about who ought to lead a new nonsocialist government, Falldin or Ullsten.

Two parties which have reached a mutual agreement can also achieve more credible cooperation with others. Thorbjorn Falldin's letter to Gosta Bohman yesterday made it even clearer that a center government will attempt to support itself on the nonsocialist majority in the Riksdag, apart from in the question of tax reform, and that the three parties' common economic policy will be followed through. The intention is not to go in for tight-rope politics. And if the Moderates also adhere to their commitments when in government, minority rule ought not to mean any weakening of political and economic leadership.

According to Olof Palme, the Center and Liberal parties are completely in the hands of the Moderates. They have been forced to pay a high price for the Moderates' abstention. Falldin's letter to Bohman is "a conservative document."

The actual situation is that the letter precisely expresses the policy which the Center and Liberal parties had already decided. To suddenly abandon these views now would be the same as saying that their policies up to now had been dictated by the Moderates. The parties of the center would thus confirm the Social Democrats' distortion.

There are no signs today that the Social Democrats would be prepared to take part in a broad settlement on crisis policy. They do not know where they stand themselves. The party and the trade union movement will be holding a number of important congresses over the summer, and these will have a great influence on future policy. The party leadership's prime objective is to win the 1982 Riksdag election. All this makes cooperation with the Center and Liberal parties more difficult, and besides, these parties do not enjoy very great respect with leading Social Democratic politicians as far as political firmness and capacity to act are concerned.

We would imagine that Falldin and Ullsten will have the Social Democrats tacit approval if they attempt to build their policies on the only workable majority in the Riksdag at present. If it is pursued, the tax reform will nevertheless be convincing proof that Center-Left cooperation is possible. What has happened in the last few weeks could turn out to be the first step toward settlements over the boundaries of the political blocs on the question of government formation.

ROLANDHIS RETURNS FROM EUROPE, U.S. VISIT

NC211811 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 21 May 81

[Excerpt] Foreign Minister Rolandhis returned this evening from his tour of various European countries and the United States. Rolandhis visited Athens, Strasbourg, Berne, Budapest, Washington and New York.

While returning from New York he again stopped in Athens, where this evening he had a meeting with Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis. At the meeting, a detailed review was made of developments in the Cyprus problem and the ministers briefed each other on the contacts they recently had with their counterparts of other countries. Rolandhis and Mitsotakis agreed to remain in contact and consultation for the purpose of achieving some intensification of attention on the Cyprus problem in the summer.

In Washington, Rolandhis was received by U.S. Vice President Bush and had talks with U.S. Secretary of State Haig. While in New York he met with UN Secretary General Waldheim.

KLIRIDHIS COMMENTS ON KIPRIANOU-AKEL POPULAR FRONT

NC220956 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 22 May 81 pp 1, 3

[Exclusive interview with Democratic Rally Chairman Glavkos Kliridhis; place and date not given]

[Excerpt] Question: Mr Chairman, can you tell us what the reason is for the new Kiprianou-AKEL popular front, and why the pertinent agreement was not made known to the Democratic Front [DIKO] cadres?

Answer: As a result of its repeatedly fatal mistakes, the AKEL leadership has caused a crisis within the ranks of the party and there already exists an issue for change in leadership. The AKEL policy has failed on all questions and there is a leakage of forces toward Mr Lissaridhis' EDEK party, and this is a fact; it is also a fact that young left-wing scientists have refused to serve the established AKEL leadership, which has been a failure. The new Kiprianou-AKEL popular front is a spasmodic solution and an act of despair. Kiprianou again believes--which is fatally wrong--that by identifying himself with AKEL he could give the people the impression that he enjoys the support of AKEL and in this way increase his political assets.

This front was formed because of the terrible weakeness of both parties and the indisputably great power acquired by the Democratic Rally. The basic cadres and the masses that support Mr Kiprianou are not aware of the front and, in any case, the story on the recent split inside DIKO will soon be repeated, but this time it will be on a much larger scale and its repercussions will be much more serious for the country.

GREECE, USSR SIGN AGREEMENT ON JUDICIAL RELATIONS

NC212032 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 21 May 81

[Text] An agreement for judicial assistance was signed today at the Foreign Ministry between Greece and the Soviet Union. With this agreement, which was signed by Ministers of Justice Stamatis and Terebilov, issues connected with extradition and recognition of court decisions have been settled, while at the same time, provision has been made for the national treatment of citizens from both countries in jurisdiction issues. The agreement will be valid for 5 years with the possibility of an automatic renewal.

Speaking after the signing of the agreement, Stamatis noted that today's agreement opens broad horizons for further cooperation between the two countries in the justice sector in a spirit of mutual trust and understanding. On our side, he added, we will exert every possible effort to faithfully implement and utilize the agreement and to broaden our relations. I am sure, he concluded, that the Soviets are possessed by the same spirit. And I want to believe that the Soviet side will decisively contribute to the consolidation of these feelings and the further development of cooperation.

Terebilov replied that the Soviet Union appreciates the fact that in the last few years relations between the two countries have developed progressively. With today's agreement, he said, these relations are being promoted to a new significant level. I wish to stress that our relations especially developed after the summit meeting between Karamanlis and Brezhnev. The agreement, he added, not only implements the two governments' wish for the development of their relations but also expresses the two countries' friendly feelings. I am sure that, if relations among all countries in the world were to develop to the same degree as Greek-Soviet relations, we would be able to maintain world peace.

MINISTRY PROTESTS TURKEY HARASSMENT AT SEA

NC211443 Athens NEWS in English 21 May 81 p 1

[Text] The following announcement was made yesterday by the Defense Ministry: "At about 1700 on May 19, a Turkish patrol boat entered Greek territorial waters, east of Chios Island, and harrassed a Greek trammel net fishing boat and a port authorities patrol boat which had arrived to help. Then the Turkish boat went again into the Turkish territorial waters.

Meanwhile, at about 1130 yesterday a Turkish patrol boat entered Greek territorial waters east of Chios Island and harrassed the "Vasiliki" Greek fishing boat, going away later. The Greek Government with a step [as published] towards Ankara yesterday protested over the violations and asked the Turkish Government to stop provocative activities, the continuation of which would damage the existing climate in the relations of the two countries and would create dangers.

BRIEFS

EGYPTIAN REPAIR CONTRACT--An agreement for the repair of C-130 Hercules transport planes has been signed by the Greek aircraft industry with the Egyptian Air Force. With this agreement-in-principle, the Greek aircraft industry undertakes the maintenance and general repair of C-130 planes and the furnishing of training and technical aid for their systems. The first of the Egyptian planes will land at Tanagra in about 20 days. It should be noted that competition for this contract was very sharp on an international level, since it opens the doors for much cooperation with the Egyptian Air Force. TURKMEN: INTEREST CONTINUES IN TALKS WITH GREECE

NC211544 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 21 May 81 p 1

[By MESIMVRINI correspondent Yiorgos Leonardhos]

[Excerpts] Ankara, 21 May--"It is not in our interest to create tension in the Aegean. On the contrary, it is in our interest to maintain tranquility and continue the dialogue that has begun between Greece and Turkey."

Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen made this categorical statement yesterday during an exclusive interview with MESIMVRINI in which he actually stressed: "We are very pleased because during the last meeting with my Greek counterpart Mitsotakis, we had the opportunity to reaffirm our intention that the dialogue between Greece and Turkey will continue. This is so," Turkmen added, "because we have the two countries' long-term interests in mind."

In reply to a question whether there had been any danger recently that the dialogue between Greece and Turkey might be suspended, Turkmen stated that "the issue has never arisen. Neither our side nor the Greek side ever contemplated the possibility of terminating the process of negotiations. In my statements to press representatives I made it clear from the outset that the dialogue will continue."

When Turkmen was asked whether any progress had been made in the dialogue, he stated that "indeed certain progress has been made, mainly on the issue of air control over the Aegean (FIR). In fact, we hope that soon we shall be able to announce certain joint measures decided upon between Greece and Turkey."

"On the other issues," the Turkish minister added, "we cannot say that great progress has been noted. However, I believe that what we have achieved through the dialogue is to improve the atmosphere of trust between our two governments. I also believe," Turkmen concluded, "that both Mitsotakis and I are doing everything we can to improve relations between the two countries."

When the discussion turned to the Cyprus issue, Turkmen avoided going into details. He confined himself to stressing that "Turkey's effort at the moment consists of encouraging the two parties to continue the intercommunal talks for a solution to their problems." In any case, he was guarded on whether it is possible to achieve this, and said: "Although we are encouraging both parties, I do not know whether a solution to the problem is possible. In any case," he concluded, "we hope that after the elections in Cyprus both sides will make a more substantive effort to solve the problem."

It is worth noting that, during the celebrations in Ankara the day before yesterday of Kemal Ataturk's 100th birthday anniversary, care was taken to avoid offending Greece in any way. The Turks were satisfied with the celebrations that were held in the Turkish consulate at Thessaloniki, and the press did not pay special attention to the "Kamikaze" pilot who threatened to crash into the consulate with his plane. The newspapers simply mentioned him as a "madman" who caused "an insignificant incident."

[Text] Commerce Minister Canturk, who concluded his visit to the PRC, has returned to Turkey. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport, Canturk said that a 2-year trade protocol was signed at the end of the Turkish-PRC talks. He added that the possibility of developing the economic relations between the two countries was discussed at the talks held in a positive atmosphere. He concluded by saying that a large celebration program is being prepared in Beijing on occasion of the 100th birth anniversary of Ataturk.

TALKS WITH SOVIETS ON STEEL PLANT BEGIN IN ANKARA

TA211130 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 21 May 81

[Text] Turkish and Soviet delegations began talks in Ankara today on the full capacity functioning of the Iskenderun iron and steel plant and its management problems. Although the plant has the capacity to produce 1.1 million tons of molten steel annually, it has been operating below capacity due to management problems. During their talks, the two delegations will also review the efforts being made to double the present capacity.

The Turkish delegation to the talks, which began at the Industry and Technology Ministry this morning, is headed by ministry Under Secretary Mehmet Golhan and the Soviet delegation by Litvinenko, the deputy chairman of the Soviet State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations.

After the talks in Ankara, the Soviet delegation will go to the Iskenderun iron and steel plant. It had been agreed earlier that the equipment to be used for expansion of the plant would be sent to Tutozy this year and paid for in the form of exports of various goods. The expansion of the plant is scheduled to be completed by mid-1983.

DOGANKENT POWER STATION--The Dogankent-II hydroelectric power station built over the Harsit stream near Giresun's Tirebolu district has begun to produce energy. The construction of the power station, which will generate some 168 million kilowatt-hours of energy annually, began in 1974. The station, 34 km from Tirebolu, cost 724 million liras. The Dogankent-I hydroelectric power station, which began production in 1971 at the same site, generates 227 million kilowatt-hours of electric energy annually. There are plans to build 15 units over the Harsit stream, thus generating some 3,075,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity annually. [Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 18 May 81 TA]

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT ASSESSES VISIT TO UNITED STATES

Interview in Washington

DW250833 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1110 GMT 23 May 81

[Excerpts from Juergen Kellermeier interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Washington--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] What is the most important results and the most important impression of this visit as far as you are concerned?

[Answer] Most important to me is that I have received confirmation through the extensive talks with the President that part of the European press has erroneously assessed him while Mr Genscher and I had assessed him correctly, namely, as a man who really means what he says, as a man who really says what he thinks. It is a pleasure to talk about political problems with the U.S. President. You quickly get the feeling of direct contact.

[Question] With respect to the problem of the medium-range missiles, you repeatedly emphasized that what matters isn't solely to open negotiations with the Soviet Union but that it is more important for the two world powers to conduct serious negotiations and not just mere alibi negotiations. How do you view these issues now, after your talks here in Washington?

[Answer] The foreign ministers already had reached a highly significant consensus on this point at the Rome ministers meeting. What we stated in a joint declaration in Rome at the time was that deterrence and defense together with arms control and disarmament are inalienable, integral components of the alliance's common policy. This has found renewed confirmation here and now in the talks with the U.S. President. Let me point out that we stated in a joint communique that I welcomed the fact that the U.S. secretary of state already has started preparatory talks with the Soviet Union on nuclear medium-range weapons. This is perhaps not being properly valued. These talks are in progress already. And negotiations are to be started before the end of the year beyond these talks, meaning formal negotiations. And we expressly state in the joint communique that they will not be conducted just to give us a chance to talk about being receptive to negotiations. They will be conducted quite expressly with the objective of concrete results in the limitation of nuclear medium-range weapons. No, I am perfectly satisfied. There is no doubt in my mind about the serious intention of the U.S. Government and the President.

[Question] Were you properly understood the other day when you said that you link your political destiny not only to the emergence of such negotiations but also to their success?

[Answer] No, that sounds a bit too far-reaching. What I meant to say is "not just with the achievement of the negotiations." I also intend to link my destiny with the requirement that the negotiations be conducted seriously with the objective, as I just said, of attaining concrete results.

[Question] Occasionally, the impression is disseminated in the Federal Republic that as far as the Reagan administration is concerned, military strength outranks arms limitation. Do you think that this impression has been refuted by the result of the talks here in Washington?

[Answer] If you look at the text of the Rome statement which we made jointly with the others, if you look at the text of the joint communique after my visit here in Washington, you will not find that it is just to imply that the U.S. administration accords priority to military strength and that disarmament may or may not come later, or negotiations on it may or may not follow.

It is absolutely clear that the U.S. Government on this point has made a considerable concession to us Europeans. We are very satisfied with these texts and we have no cause to doubt that the American side will adhere to them.

[Question] What effect do you expect this meeting to have on the public counterarmament debate in the Federal Republic?

[Answer] It will certainly not end the debate, but it will strengthen the credibility of the American statement.

[Question] You have pointed out problems and difficulties--also here in Washington--created by the high U.S. interest rate policy for the Europeans and particularly for the economy of the Federal Republic. How far does the understanding of your American discussion partners go in this respect and how far do your possibilities reach to initiate changes?

[Answer] Actually, I just want to answer the first part of this question on how far the understanding goes. I was interested in creating understanding, in making it clear to the American friends--making them aware of the problem, as one says in Germany--that a high interest rate may be inevitable here in America in view of the high inflation rates, I don't want to judge that, but that one must also pay attention to the effect it has on France, Germany and other European states. I assume that the talks we had in this respect--also with the U.S. treasury secretary, my colleague Matthoefer had talked to him last week in Frankfurt--I assume that they will cause considerable pondering in America. These talks will be resumed at the Ottawa conference--the so-called world economic summit--and they will play an important role there.

[Question] Do you see danger of the American economic policy creating an anti-American mood in Europe because of the entailed economic aggravation?

[Answer] If a further economic decrease should take place in Europe, one cannot rule out such possibilities from the very beginning. I am more interested in that the things we have stated in our talks with President Reagan will be really implemented, namely, mutual coordination of our economic policies and mutual consideration with regard to our economic actions. I place considerable hopes on the world economic summit in Ottawa.

[Question] The personal relations between government chiefs are certainly not without significance for relations between the states. How would you assess your talks here in Washington with President Reagan under this aspect?

[Answer] I would very highly assess this visit particularly regarding personal confidence. I will return most satisfied to Germany and I will report to the Bundestag next Tuesday accordingly. I have the feeling--at least I can say that for myself--that we have understood each other very well.

[Question] Before returning to Germany, you will make a stopover in Paris to talk to new French President Mitterrand. What do you expect to come from this talk and is it true that you will pass on a message from the American President?

[Answer] An oral message, that is correct. Since the last extensive talk took place some time ago, I expect that we will now have the first official talk since Francois Mitterrand has taken over. I will take the opportunity of telling the French top state echelon many of the things I have heard in Washington. And naturally, I will listen most attentively to the explanations the French state president will certainly want to make with regard to his future policy.

iefing of Journalists

LD240836 Hamburg DPA in German 0(GMT 24 May 81

[Text] Paris/Bonn, 24 May (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has once again said that he is "very satisfied" with the outcome of his 3 days of talks with U.S. President Ronald Reagan and his government. Late Saturday evening on the flight from Washington to Paris, the chancellor told journalists he is very pleased that he will be visiting new French President Francois Mitterrand immediately following his Washington talks. This is also in the interest of the U.S. Government. President Reagan welcomed the fact that Mitterrand would be given an immediate briefing on the Washington talks. The U.S. Government, just like the Federal Government, will also be briefing Paris on the talks in the American capital through diplomatic channels.

According to Schmidt, the change in the French presidency played a big part in his talks in Washington. The U.S. leadership asked him about members of the French Government. Washington is rather worried about Communist participation in the government in Paris. The chancellor said his meeting with Mitterrand had been arranged at the request of both sides.

Schmidt emphasized that one result of the Washington talks was that the U.S. Government, through Secretary of State Alexander Haig, stated publicly for the first time that talks with the Soviet Union on the start of negotiations to limit medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe are already underway. Starting negotiations earlier--the United States has held out the prospect of starting negotiations by the end of this year--was not brought up in the Washington talks, Schmidt said. The timing was fixed at the Rome NATO council meeting. Schmidt said that due to current American economic policy, it is to be expected that high interest rates in the United States will be sustained for some time. Problems arising from this for the European economy and the various currencies were pointed out to the Americans during the talks and will also be discussed at the world economic summit in Ottawa at the end of July.

Top politicians of the SPD/FDP coalition in Bonn will be discussing the coalition's resolution on the NATO twin decision, on which parliament is to vote on Tuesday, Schmidt said. According to Schmidt, the resolution must contain essential parts of the NATO council communique and of the joint statement by the chancellor and the U.S. President, as well as a clear endorsement of the NATO twin decision. Within the coalition, the SPD and FDP have worked out two draft resolutions which still have to be reduced to a common denominator.

Remarks in Hannover

LD251549 Hamburg DPA in German 1326 GMT 25 May 81

[Excerpts] Hannover, 25 May (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt (SPD) has rejected the opposition's doubts about the success of his U.S. trip. Schmidt said today in Hannover during a visit to the Lower Saxony SPD group that he had not gone to see President Reagan with the intention of bringing gifts back home, but "of deepening understanding of foreign, security and economic policy. This was successful to a remarkably large extent," the chancellor stressed.

The chancellor referred to the necessity for a top-level meeting with SED party chief Erich Honecker, but said that a date could better be discussed after the working visit by Soviet CPSU General Secretary Leonid Brezhnev. The date for that visit is still not fixed, but it is to take place this (?summer).

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES ARMS NEGOTIATIONS

DW251121 Frankfurt Hessischer Rundfunk Network in German 0930 GMT 24 May 81

[Interview by reporters Daenzer and Kaempfer with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in the program "Frankfurt Talk"--recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] The time schedule was confirmed once more in Washington on arms control talks and negotiations with the Soviet Union on medium-range arms as outlined at the NATO foreign ministers conference in Rome. Was the impression wrong that the federal chancellor originally intended to press in Washington for advancing the date of negotiations with the Soviet Union or was the U.S. Government reluctant to cope with such a German request?

[Answer] The communique issued by the federal chancellor and the American President at the end of the visit confirms once more the common positions contained in the common press statement issued by the U.S. secretary of state and myself, and they were right in pointing out that the Rome schedule on the medium-range issue has been confirmed. The confirmation of this time schedule, establishment of contacts between the United States and the Soviet Union now, agreement on taking up formal negotiations at the meeting between Secretary of State Haig and Foreign Minister Gromyko in September and the beginning of these formal negotiations this year are the results of close German-American talks--first during my visit to Washington, then during the secretary of state's visit here and particularly at the bilateral talks immediately prior to the NATO foreign minister conference in Rome. Since that time, the federal chancellor hasn't tried to change what we have stipulated together with the Americans. We consider that a realistic time schedule, and I hope that after the new confirmation of the will of the United States to enter preparatory talks, those critics who have doubts about the will of the Americans to negotiate will reconsider their standpoint.

[Question] Mr Genscher, could you say possibly something about the duration of such preparatory negotiations with the Soviet Union? I believe that the wrong impression is sometimes created that a round of talks and negotiations with the Soviet Union doesn't last long and that thereafter one could drop one part of NATO's dual decision, namely counterarmament.

[Answer] These are very difficult and complicated negotiations which are being rendered more difficult by two elements for which the Soviet Union is responsible.

First, the framework of negotiations is being extended because of the Soviet ideas. The Soviet Government wants to discuss the advanced systems, while NATO would prefer to discuss medium-range missiles only--because that is difficult enough--in order to soon achieve negotiation results. The Soviet Union is responsible for this extension of the subjects of negotiations.

Second, the negotiations are being complicated by the fact that the Soviet Union adds additional problems to the negotiations through its stepped-up armament, such as accelerated production and deployment of medium-range missiles aimed at West Europe. No doubts exist at all that every additionally deployed missile naturally complicates a negotiation result aimed at the achievement of a balance on as low an armament level as possible.

I would like to ask the Soviet Union once more urgently to eventually stop the production of medium-range missiles, to make an end eventually to the deployment of medium-range arms to thus make a contribution to constructive negotiations. This appeal to the Soviet Union cannot be uttered clearly enough, because the great unrest coming about in Europe is the result of the enormous threat to which West Europe is exposed due to these medium-range missiles.

NATO on its part has stipulated in the decision that the need for counterarmament can be examined on the basis of concrete negotiation results. It is now fully up to the Soviet Union to make such concrete negotiation results feasible.

[Question] There has been something like a signal from the Soviet Union timed exactly for the talks between President Reagan and the German chancellor. CPSU boss Brezhnev spoke in Tiflis, Georgia, and declared his country's and this government's receptiveness to negotiations on the limitation and reduction of medium-range weapons. How do you assess his statement at Tiflis?

[Answer] To begin with, I must say that the signal of Rome was a broadly designed signal for the opening not only of negotiations on medium-range weapons but also of consultations on confidence-building measures for the MBFR, that is to say, it was a clear signal for achieving arms control policy agreements wherever possible. And this has been stated once again by the chancellor and the U.S. President. I believe that the Soviet Union must prove its will for serious negotiations at the negotiating table and that it could well prove the seriousness of such will by immediately halting the medium-range missile production and deployment now.

[Question] Would you venture to say that the contacts between your U.S. counterpart Haig and Soviet Ambassador to Washington Dobrynin already constitute a sort of primary negotiations?

[Answer] These are preparatory talks. We needn't haggle over the choice of words. What is important is that the two great powers who are the negotiating parties on the weapons, which they alone possess, are on talking terms. We would have wished that it would have been possible to open these talks directly after the NATO decision in December 1979, but the Soviet Union hesitated with the start of these talks until the visit which the chancellor and I paid to the Soviet Union in July 1980. Hence, it is now all the more urgent that this job be tackled without delay lest even more time pass unused. For everybody knows that the deployment of the Western missiles has been envisaged for the second half of 1983.

[Question] You just now called on the Soviets to halt their armament with medium-range missiles as a token of good will. Couldn't this be interpreted as a precondition for negotiations?

[Answer] No, we very firmly believe, jointly with our allies and, hence, also with the United States, that the negotiations on medium-range missiles must be conducted without any preconditions from either side. This is why I purposely said that it would be a signal that might tend to promote the negotiations, that this would be a sign of good will. And I cannot but dutifully point out that any missile additionally deployed naturally will aggravate the accomplishment of the objective we have, namely, achieving arms control agreements on as low a level of armaments as possible, balance on as low a level of armaments as possible.

[Question] The German Bundestag extensively will debate all the questions you mentioned the day after tomorrow, on Tuesday. The opposition, the CDU/CSU Bundestag faction, already has mapped out a draft resolution on the issue and the government parties are pondering the matter as well. Can you imagine a sort of all-party coalition in this specific issue?

[Answer] An all-party attitude is desirable and appropriate. What is involved here is a central issue of our security policy. And being the foreign minister of the Federal Government, I can only welcome the support of the security policy of the Federal Government by the opposition, a security policy which the Federal Government pursues jointly with its allies. Consequently, such a common position should indeed be regarded as an advantage for our country and for our capability of action in foreign and security policy.

As you know, I discussed with the SPD chairman the options of a resolution submitted by the government parties, though not for the sake of a counterresolution to that of the CDU but, on the contrary, for the purpose of establishing what the opinion of the factions of the German Bundestag is, namely, that we stick by the dual decision without any restrictions and that we advocate the view that this dual decision must be implemented consistently and in due time. There cannot be the slightest doubt about that, and I believe that nobody should reject the support of the opposition for the government's policy for narrow-minded reasons of party tactics. What is at stake here is to make the common position in a central issue clearly visible for the public at home and abroad rather than to camouflage it. I hope that all sides of the German Bundestag will approach such a resolution with a constructive attitude.

EFFORTS FOR JOINT SECURITY POLICY STATEMENT FAIL

LD252110 Hamburg DPA in German 1651 GMT 25 May 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 25 May (DPA)--Efforts for a joint statement by all three party Parliamentary Groups on security policy, to follow Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's government statement in the Bundestag tomorrow, have failed. The CDU/CSU this evening rejected a draft resolution on which the top SPD and FDP politicians had agreed earlier. Thus, there are now two different draft resolutions in the security debate.

While the CDU/CSU demand a clear reaffirmation of the NATO twin decision on medium-range missiles and the dismantling of the Soviet SS-20 missiles, the SPD and the FDP, in their resolution, want, above all, recognition to be accorded to the latest talks held by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt with the American leaders in Washington and with French President Francois Mitterrand in Paris. The coalition wants to include the results of the last NATO meetings in Rome and Brussels alongside this. The resolution was unanimously approved by the FDP Parliamentary Group without debate.

Justifying the rejection of the SPD/FDP resolution, the parliamentary chairman of the CDU/CSU Parliamentary Group, Philipp Jenninger, said it wasn't parliament's business to make loyal addresses following trips abroad by the chancellor. Agreeing with the coalition's resolution would be like issuing a blank check.

Earlier, Schmidt strongly urged the SPD Parliamentary Group to approve the resolution. He said he was very keen to see the coalition's resolution adopted with the greatest amount of cohesion.

Further Report

LD260029 Hamburg DPA in German 1833 GMT 25 May 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 25 May (DPA)--Following Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's government statement tomorrow, the Bundestag will not be able to adopt a joint resolution on security policy.

The draft resolution of the SPD/FDP coalition reaffirms the NATO twin decision on the modernization of nuclear medium-range missiles with a simultaneous offer of negotiations to the Soviet Union and stresses that the West will examine NATO's need for medium-range missiles in the light of specific results of the negotiations.

In a debate by the SPD Parliamentary Group, the critics of the NATO decision primarily asked whether in the American-Soviet negotiations the "zero solution" which envisages a renunciation of the deployment of new nuclear missiles in response to a satisfactory result of the negotiations, was still attainable. On this, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said that he could not imagine the Soviet Union's readiness for disarmament going so far, but he did not want to be part of anything that made a "zero solution" impossible. SPD Chairman Willy Brandt was of the same opinion and did not exclude the possibility that deployment of the nuclear missiles at sea would be considered.

GENSCHER, NORWAY'S FRYDENLUND HOLD PRESS CONFERENCE

LD221022 Hamburg DPA in German 0857 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 22 May (DPA)--The Federal Republic and Norway share a joint position on essential questions of world affairs. This was stressed by Federal Foreign Minister Hans Dietrich Genscher and his Norwegian counterpart Knut Frydenlund at a press conference in Bonn today. According to Genscher, this applies not only to NATO, counterarming and East-West relations, but also to the assessment of the European situation, Norway's relations with the European Community and the Third World. Frydenlund emphasized that relations between Bonn and Olso are excellent and that no bilateral problems exist between the two countries.

Genscher said he has great understanding for Norway's desire to maintain close contact with the EEC. It would be a mistake to talk of Europe and mean by that only the Community. "Europe must not end at the borders of the Community," Genscher said. Frydenlund explained that since Norway is not a member of the EEC, it could not take part in the constantly improving European political cooperation, but it tries to make up for this by frequent contacts with EEC member states and visits to their capitals.

Replying to questions, Genscher said the American side left no doubt of its determination to stick to the schedule--until the end of the year--for negotiations with the Soviets on medium-range weapons. The USSR could give a sign of good will by at least stopping the deployment of its medium-range missiles aimed at West Europe. The Norwegian foreign minister said it is important that the NATO states should use the time to reach agreement among themselves about the aims of such negotiations.

Both Genscher and Frydenlund strongly urged that there should be no interference in Poland's internal affairs. As further elements of the West's attitude toward developments there, the federal foreign minister mentioned the desire and readiness to extend economic aid to Poland and to continue cooperation between West and East. Frydenlund paid tribute to the Federal Republic's foreign policy which is seen in Norway as a policy of peace and therefore given full support. He said he is very impressed that the Federal Republic has developed into a "bastion of democracy" in the world.

Genscher emphasized the German interest in energy supplies "from secure sources." This applies to Norway. The federal foreign minister apparently was referring to the oil drilling operations which Norway plans to carry out north of the 62d degree of latitude in the North Sea, in which the West German firm Deminex would like to take part. The matter is thought to have been raised during Frydenlund's talk with Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff.

GENSCHER STRESSES AGREEMENT WITH FRENCH GOVERNMENT

LD251455 Hamburg DPA in German 1343 GMT 25 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 25 May (DPA)--Speaking today to the FDP Presidium, Party Chairman and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher announced "close and friendly cooperation" with the new French Government. This was how the new foreign minister, Claude Cheysson, described prospects for the future during a telephone conversation with Genscher on Sunday. Genscher stressed that there is agreement with the new govenment on all important issues. This applies both to President Francois Mitterrand and to Foreign Minister Cheysson.

Genscher said that the federal chancellor's visit to Washington and the joint communique issued there show the (?will) of both governments to realize the policy agreed on "consistently and together."

REPORTS ON IRAQI DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT

Genscher Dinner Speech

LD252029 Hamburg DPA in German 1712 GMT 25 May 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 25 May (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher supported in Bonn today the extension of German-Iraqi cooperation, stressed the common stance of the two countries regarding respect for the independence of nonaligned states and reminded Iraq, as an important oil-producing country, of its "high shared responsibility for the world economy." At a dinner in honor of the first deputy prime minister of Iraq, Taha Yasin Ramadan, Genscher also expressed his hopes for an early peace between Iraq and Iran and pointed to the neutral stance of the Federal Government in this conflict.

Genscher pointed to the existing close economic ties--Iraq is the Federal Republic's largest trading partner in the Arab world--and assured the head of government that the Federal Republic would genuinely strive toward the cooperation agreement. He also urged that the Federal Republic and Iraq use their "influential position" in the European-Arab dialogue in order to make the ties between Europe and the Arab world even closer.

Genscher said that the Federal Government highly values Iraq's role in the Nonaligned Movement, in the Islamic Conference and in the Arab League. He welcomed the statements by Iraq and the other Islamic states against the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and stressed the need to strengthen the independence and autonomy of the nonaligned states against all efforts toward hegemony and outside interference.

On the Middle East peace efforts, Genscher was restrained, saying that a solution must be acceptable to all interested parties. An indispensable condition is the renunciation of force and the threat of force by all parties. There are great differences of opinion between Bonn and Baghdad on the Middle East question. Bagdad insists, among other things, on the cancelling of the Camp David agreements and the full recognition of the PLO as a negotiating partner.

Ramadan Statement

LD252334 Hamburg DPA in German 2110 GMT 25 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 25 May (DPA)--The Iraqi politician Taha Yasin Ramadan said this evening at a dinner given for him by federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher that his country is prepared to expand relations between the two countries. He invited Genscher to pay an official visit to Baghdad. Genscher was last in the Iraqi capital in 1979.

On the Middle East conflict, Yasin Ramadan said: "We stand at the side of the Arab Palestinian people." A just and lasting peace could only be achieved by the unconditional and full (Israeli) withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories and through the return of the legitimate homeland rights and self-determination rights of the Palestinian people.

Yasin Ramadan stressed that the continuing war with neighboring Iran and been forced upon Iraq by Tehran. Baghdad has striven for good-neighborly relations and announced its willingness to enter into negotiations. He emphasized that his country is prepared to enter into direct negotiations or to accept the mediation of a third party "in order to reach a just and honorable solution which guarantees our rights and sovereignty.

Carstens Meeting

LD261006 Hamburg DPA in German 0855 GMT 26 May 81

[Excerpt] Bonn (DPA)--Federal President Karl Carstens today received for a political talk Iraqi First Deputy Prime Minister Taha Yasin Ramadan who has been in Bonn since yesterday on an official visit. The main topic might have been the expansion of bilateral relations. Taha Yasin Ramadan earlier had a meeting with SPD Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski.

OFFICIALS TALK WITH SAUDI OIL MINISTER YAMANI

LD221310 Hamburg DPA in German 1240 GMT 22 May 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 22 May (DPA)—During his talks in Bonn today, Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Yamani once again affirmed his country's wish to freeze the price of oil for the current year and next year and to reestablish a uniform OPEC oil price.

In a talk with Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff, the Saudi minister intimated that at the conference of OPEC ministers scheduled for Geneva on Monday, Riyadh would try to persuade the other oil-producing countries to adopt this price policy.

Earlier, Yamani talked for 30-minutes with Federal President Carstens, during which the Saudi oil minister explained his government's attitude toward the Middle East problem and the proposed oil price policy.

FDP SPOKESMAN FAVORS RAISING NUCLEAR THRESHOLD

LD241446 Hamburg DPA in German 1426 GMT 24 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 24 May (DPA)--Juergen Moellemann, FDP defense spokesman, has spoken out in favor of raising the nuclear threshold and thus reducing the danger of nuclear conflict. In a statement published by the FDP in Bonn on Sunday, Moellemann suggested the redistribution of tasks within the nuclear strategy sector. Great Britain and France should renounce nuclear arms and increase their conventional fighting strength instead. All European allies ought to stand under NATO's nuclear shield.

In this connection, Moellemann referred to earlier remarks made by French President Francois Mitterrand who has promised to reexamine France's defense concepts. Great Britain's current policy of developing its own nuclear potential while at the same time reducing its conventional fighting strength will have to be discussed within the NATO bodies since such a policy would end in a lowering of the nuclear threshold.

BERLIN FDP ASKED TO RETHINK COOPERATION WITH SDP

LD251316 Hamburg DPA in German 1202 GMT 25 May 81

[Text] Bonn (DPA)--The FDP Presidium today unequivocally called on the Berlin FDP to withdraw its decisions against (?cooperating with) the CDU in the Senat.

A statement published in Bonn following a meeting of the Presidium led by party chief Hans-Dietrich Genscher says that the regional party should make its contribution to the forming of a senat "which takes account of the fact that the election result in Berlin only allows the formation of a senat consisting of the CDU." A "refusal coalition" with the SDP and alternatives will not meet the Free Democrats' responsibility for the fate of Berlin.

FDP spokesman Herbert Schmuelling stated that the Presidium intends holding discussions with the Berlin party leadership and the members of the new Parliamentary Group in the Berlin house of representatives immediately after the federal party congress which takes place in Cologne from Friday to Sunday.

VON DOHNANYI CITES SPD SUPPORT FOR SECURITY POLICY

LD221752 Hamburg DPA in German 1518 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] Mainz, 22 May (DPA)--In the opinion of Klaus von Dohnanyi, minister of state at the Foreign Ministry, the whole of the SPD stands behind the Federal Government's security policy. In an interview with ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG, Mainz [weekend edition], the politician said there are no significant forces within the SPD which stand against NATO, defense preparedness or against the policy of a nuclear deterrent. In the debate about the NATO twin decisions, there is merely "unnecessary confusion." It is correct that forces within the SPD "are still not sure. whether additional nuclear arms are necessary for defense capability and effective deterrence."

Dohnanyi emphasized that in the view of the Federal Government and all Western countries in which Social Democrats are in power or in a coalition, deterrence can only be effective if the Soviet Union reduces its SS-20 missiles to a strategic equlibrium. Should the U.S. negotiations on this issue show insufficient success, then rearmament, which has only been planned up to now, will have to be carried out.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC MAYOR OF HAMBURG RESIGNS

LD251322 Hamburg DPA in German 1140 GMT 25 May 81

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 25 May (DPA)--The mayor of Hamburg, Hans-Ulrich Klose (SPD), resigned today, Senat spokesman Manfred Bissinger stated.

Apart from his resignation statement to the president of the Hamburg city parliament, he sent a second letter to the Hamburg SPD Executive, in which he gives as the reason for his resignation the controversy surrounding Brokdorf [nuclear powerplant].

REPORTAGE ON MITTERRAND-SCHMIDT TALKS IN PARIS

Schmidt Arrival, TV Interview

LD232332 Hamburg DPA in German 2025 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] Paris, 23 May (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt arrived Saturday night in Paris on his return flight from the United States. On Sunday, he will be the first foreign head of state to meet new French President Francois Mitterrand in the Elysee Palace. And he will deliver a message from U.S. President Ronald Reagan. The federal chancellor expects that at the talks, beginning in the late morning, they will state their respective positions on the world situation and European questions.

In an interview on French television Channel 2, broadcast Saturday night, Schmidt said it is his dear wish to continue the very good cooperation with France. For him, understanding between France and Germany is the hard core of European unity, Schmidt said. Before his election, Mitterrand had spoken in favor of a further development of mutual relations, but against a special role of Bonn and Paris within the European Community.

In Reagan's message to Mitterrand, which the federal chancellor brought from his talks in Washington, Reagan expressed the hope to soon meet the first French Socialist head of state. This meeting is expected at the economic summit in Ottawa at the end of July.

Schmidt further said in the interview that he didn't expect serious talks about the high and unwelcome American interest rates before this summit. A European currency summit could mitigate the effects of the American interest rate policy but not those of the high European rates of interest.

In addition, the chancellor said that the new French Government is convinced of the positive effects of the European Monetary System. These showed themselves in the last few days when the franc was the object "shabby" speculation.

Schmidt also said he is "sure" that there will be American-Soviet negotiations on, but not confined to, medium-range missiles this year.

3-and-1/2-Hour Meeting

LD241328 Hamburg DPA in German 1313 GMT 24 May 81

[Text] Paris, 24 May (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and French President Francois Mitterrand have expressed confidence in the future of German-French cooperation. Schmidt is the first foreign head of government to be received by Mitterrand since his election.

After more than a 3-and-1/2-hour talk at the Elysee Palace in Paris, Schmidt and Mitterrand emphasized the atmosphere of trust in which the meeting had taken place. Schmidt stressed that many people in Germany and France have contributed to the development of the German-French friendship since the war. This friendship cannot be destroyed again.

The two politicians did not go into the details of their talks. However, they enumerated many current problems. Schmidt attached great importance to the fact that he was able to inform Mitterrand immediately about his talks in the United States.

Security, Economics Discussed

LD241530 Hamburg DPA in German 1349 GMT 24 May 81

[Excerpts] Paris, 24 May (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and new French head of state Francois Mitterrand in Paris today achieved a large measure of agreement on important political questions, in particular on the NATO dual decision.

It later was learned from the German delegation that there was also much agreement on international questions discussed. This was especially pronounced and important as far as alliance policy is concerned. The two sides agreed that the military balance between East and West must be maintained or reestablished and that negotiations with Moscow will have to take place from an equal position.

The German delegation said that topics of discussion were the Near and Middle East, the situations on the Gulf and in Africa, as well as questions relating to the world economy. The two politicians expressed their concern that European and American economic developments might diverge too much. There was concern about the American high interest rate policy, which will be discussed again at the next German-French summit in July prior to the Ottawa world economic summit.

Agreement on Euromissiles

[Text] Here are some details about the Schmidt-Mitterrand talks. According to the German chancellor's entourage, there was total and very clear agreement between the two men on the Euromissiles issue and on the need to create a balance of forces in Europe, while at the same time holding negotiations so that such a balance can be established at the lowest level.

Mitterrand Comments

NC241527 Paris AFP in English 1522 GMT 24 May 81

[Text] Paris, 24 May (AFP)--France's new president, Francois Mitterrand, today met with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and declared his intention to maintain close ties and mutual cooperation between Paris and Bonn.

"I reiterated to Chancellor Schmidt the importance I attach to relations of trust between our two countries and their leaders," Mr Mitterrand said after his first diplomatic meeting since his investiture on Thursday.

Sources said that one key result at the meeting was Mr Schmidt's pledge of support for France's efforts to maintain parity for the ailing franc in the European Monetary System. For his part, the sources said, Mr Mitterrand backed Bonn's acceptance of the deployment of new medium-range nuclear missiles in Western Europe, beginning in 1983, and its call for resumption of U.S.-Soviet talks on Eurostrategic weapons.

During the recent French presidential campaign, Mr Mitterrand said he was against the special "Paris-Bonn axis" within the European Economic Community, saying each of the ten members was equal.

But in a brief speech outside the Elysee Palace where he held three hours of talks with Mr Schmidt today, Mr Mitterrand stressed his concern to "perpetuate" close Franco-German relations and continue mutual cooperation.

Mr Mitterrand said they had discussed common problems and made a broad study of relations between their two countries and with the United States within the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation. The talks also covered the world economic situation, each other's economic problems, disarmament, arms control and the questions raised by the siting of missiles in Europe, Mr Mitterrand added.

Following their meeting, Mr Schmidt left Paris aboard a West German Air Force plane to return to Bonn.

Before leaving, Mr Schmidt told newsmen that he had transmitted to Mr Mitterrand the greetings of U.S. President Ronald Reagan, who met the West German chancellor in Washington last week, and his wishes for closer cooperation with France and West Germany.

Mr Schmidt said he thought the future of Franco-German relations was as promising as at any time since World War II. "Above all I think that this friendship no longer depends on individuals"--he and Mr Giscard d'Estaing were personally close--"but is an incontrovertible fact," he added.

This friendship was very important for Europe and its role in the world and would help to overcome the clash between East and West, Mr Schmidt said.

After the meeting between the two leaders, West German Government sources said that close monetary cooperation with France would allow current speculation on the French franc to be deterred. The sources said that Bonn was determined to maintain present parity between the West German and French currencies. There has been a run on the franc since Mr Mitterrand took office but the sources indicated that speculators gambling on a devaluation would be wasting their money.

Speaks in Lille

LD241336 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 24 May 81

[Text] Premier Pierre Mauroy is this morning in Lille, the town of which he is the mayor. It is there that he insisted on making his first political speech which, in fact, is more of an economic speech to the extent that he is to define his government's main lines of action and perhaps announce the first social measures. The issue of support for the franc should not be forgotten. Pierre Mauroy began speaking a few minutes ago. Dominique Souchier is in Lille. What is the tone of this speech?

[Souchier] Well, it is in fact a speech with twin themes--economy and policy. You can imagine the atmosphere here. Rarely have so many tricolor flags and streamers been in Lille town hall.

Pierre Mauroy began his speech by referring to the victory of 10 May. On that day, he stressed once again. the French people displayed their determination to achieve a strong, proud, unified, willing and imaginative France. The task to be accomplished must be performed with realism and in solidarity. Then Pierre Mauroy outlined the government program for the next few weeks:

[Begin Mauroy recording] From the first weeks of the 7-year presidential term, we will take significant measures which will herald a change. This change will assume its full magnitude once the National Assembly has been renewed. That is why the pledges made by the president of the Republic and approved by the majority of the French people will be kept. Their implementation will naturally be adapted to the prospects of an economy which is in recession today and which we want with everyone's assistance to extricate from this difficult situation. [applause]

The government intends, in fact, to share this encouraging enterprise with all the French people. This is what is meant by this vast, concerted social action which will be the rule of my government. This concerted action will begin with the talks which the president of the republic himself is to hold as of this very week. These will be serious meetings on specific problems among the public authorities and trade union, employer and social organizations.

On one essential point, the reduction of the working week with, as its corollary, the creation of new jobs, which is the will of the government, we will urge the social partners, while of course respecting their autonomy, to discuss and negotiate much more on agreements adapted to the specific conditions of their branches and enterprises. Each will, in fact, understand the diverse nature of these situations. For my part, I will personally ensure this and each minister will assume responsibility for the problems that fall under his jurisdiction.

Henceforth, no one will be pushed aside, especially not those--and they were in the majority--to whom to date no one has ever listened, [applause] because it is primarily for them that life has to be changed. [end recording]

Changing life--you will see that in his first speech, Pierre Mauroy has repeated what for years has been the Socialist Party's slogan. The premier announced that the minimum wage is to be raised and also that the fiscal burden on small- and medium-sized enterprises will be relieved. Pierre Mauroy also said that the government will do its duty to defend the franc.

[Begin Mauroy recording] The 7-year term of Francois Mitterrand will be an opportunity for all the French people to build together a new citizenry of initiative and responsibility. Then the cry of hope of the workers of 1936, which still echoes in my memory, will acquire its full significance: Long live life! [end recording]

CHEYSSON ON MINISTRY NAME CHANGE, COMMITMENTS

Explanation for Renaming

LD231212 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 23 May 81

[Excerpt] The Pierre Mauroy government stands out for several innovations that have been made, such as the number of ministers of state--5; the total number of government members--an important factor; the creation of new departments such as the Leisure Time Department and the name changes--for example foreign relations for the Quai d'Orsay. Last night, the new minister of foreign relations, Claude Cheysson, explained the latter change for the first time in an interview granted to Jean-Claude (Detente) of France-Inter:

[Begin recording] Following a proposal that the premier and I made, the president of the French Republic kindly agreed to rename the Ministry of Foreign Affairs "the Ministry of Foreign Relations." Our feeling was that there should be no more foreign affairs. The relations of France, of all the French people, are in all forms--finances, universities, industry, the French people with people outside France. That is what the change of words, from foreign affairs to foreign relations means. (?I make this general) remark because, since the end of the French revolution, I am the only one so far to have the honor of bearing the title of minister of foreign relations instead of that of minister of foreign affairs. What I have just been saying applies equally to relations between France and Africa and to relations between France and the rest of the world. [end recording]

Statement on Contracts

NC260903 Paris AFP in English 0852 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Paris, 26 May (AFP)--All France's political and trade commitments, including arms contracts, will be "fully honored" by the new Socialist government, Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson said today in a radio interview. There have been "widespread lies" on whether France's international commitments would be respected, he said, "I want to deny them flatly."

His statements followed similar reassurances on television last night from Economy and Finance Minister Jacques Delors.

MITTERRAND MEETS WITH MARCHAIS, CHIRAC, LECANUET

LD251230 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 25 May 81

[Excerpts] The first person on the president's list of visitors this morning was Georges Marchais, who spoke in a ponderous tone of the unchanging wish for real Communist participation in the affairs of the state:

[Begin Marchais recording] I met the president of the republic and we exchanged views. As far as I am concerned, I have reiterated to the president of the republic our party's stand, that is, that since the defeat of Giscard d'Estaing--to which we contributed--the PCF has done and will continue to do its utmost to confirm this success within the parliamentary elections. We are ready to assume all responsibilities, within the government and at all levels, to implement the new policy which the French men and women are expecting. [end recording]

The second guest was Jacques Chirac. When leaving, he remained uncommunicative. In any case, he did not meet Georges Marchais on his way in. He was followed in the reception room by Jean Lecanuet, who had a 50-minute meeting [with Mitterrand]. He said about the meeting:

[Begin recording] The meeting dealt essentially with international problems which were clarified following Chancellor Schmidt's visit. Of course, we discussed internal policy matter and here, you will not be surprised to hear, differences did occur. I don't believe that the solutions proposed in the Socialist program are likely to ensure the development of the economy and of employment and that is why I didn't conceal the fact that I would like the National Assembly, which will be elected shortly, to have a very strong center tendency attached to an economy of freedom and initiative to allow the appearance of some sort of dynamic counterweight within the framework of our own institutions. [end recording]

In addition, Jean Lecanuet said he had discussed with President Mitterrand what would happen if the parliamentary majority failed to coincide with the presidential majority. However, he gave no further details. The president will receive Lionel Jospin this afternoon.

JOSPIN LISTS CONDITIONS FOR ELECTORAL AGREEMENT

LD241548 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 24 May 81

[Text] At the national convention of the Socialist Party in Paris, there was one central theme in the report presented by First Secretary Lionel Jospin--that of giving Francois Mitterrand the means to carry out his action and his policy. Jospin pointed out that the president of the republic doesn't intend to intervene in the campaign, but that he will indicate what he is hoping for.

The essential part of the Socialist Party first secretary's speech was, of course, devoted to defining the conditions for a political and electoral agreement with the other groupings of the left. Talks will start at the beginning of next week.

He specified three principal conditions for an agreement: The Socialist Party will not give up any of its basic positions either on domestic policy, that is, freedom, economic program, rate of change, or foreign policy, that is, Afghanistan and Poland; the Socialists will have to obtain a clear commitment from the Communist Party on solidarity with regard to government action; finally, they will demand of their former and perhaps future Communist allies the return to a dignified atmosphere, that is, Jospin said, a renunciation of the political campaign against the Socialist Party, even if the right of criticism is accepted on one point or another.

If these conditions are met, the first secretary said that the president of the republic and the premier will have to draw the consequences of this at the level of government action. If not, the Communist-Socialist agreement will be limted to an agreement on standing down in favor of the best-placed candidate. As far as the designation of candidates is concerned, the Socialist Party is reserving 20-30 constituencies for its partners in the new presidential majority.

COMMUNIST PARLIAMENTARIANS ON PCF PARTICIPATION

LD221017 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 19 May 81 p 3

[Report on press conference given by PCF deputies on 18 May]

[Excerpt] PCF deputies and senators held a meeting with G. Marchais at the National Assembly yesterday. At the end of the debate--opened by PCF Assembly Group Chairman Andre Lajoine--the deputies adopted a statement which was presented at a press conference in the afternoon.

"We are positively and wholly part of the new majority." This remark by Andre Lajoine could have served as a background to the speeches by the Communist parliamentarians, in which they discussed both the political situation following the second round of the presidential election and the prospects for the campaign for the forthcoming parliamentary elections. The Communist representatives welcomed Francois Mitterrand's election and stressed that their party is prepared as of now to assume all its responsibilities within a union government comprising all the leftwing forces which contributed to the victory over Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

The right has emerged defeated from the presidential elections. To go further and create the conditions for real change not only must the outgoing leftwing deputies be reelected but as many seats as possible must be wrenched from the right in the constituencies in which it triumphed in 1978.

This approach was the focal point of the afternoon's press conference. It was organized by the National Assembly Communist Group Bureau and was chaired by Andre Lajoine. Also taking part were Charles Fiterman (PCF Central Committee secretary and deputy for Val-de-Marne), Helene Constans (deputy for Haute-Vienne), Guy Ducolone (deputy for Hauts-de-Seine) and Marcel Rigour (deputy for Haute-Vienne). Among the many questions asked by the journalists, one came up repeatedly in various forms and it can be summed up: "There is some talk of united leftwing candidates in the first round. Do you advocate that?"

"This idea of presenting a single candidate in constituencies where the outgoing candidate is a leftwing candidate of course is being widely discussed," Charles Fiterman stated. "Voters and journalists are discussing it. They are speaking out of a desire to confirm what happened on 10 May. Basically, they want to see the left rally its forces and to see the parliamentary election result exceed the presidential election result--which I have no doubt will happen."

"The communists are open to any suggestion and to any discussion," he added. This reflects a single intention--"to provide all the means of meeting the country's expectations."

This requires two indivisible things--the election of a new majority to the National Assembly and full and complete participation by the Communists in the government. Returning to the question of single candidates where the outgoing deputy is a Communist or Socialist, Charles Fiterman said: "We are prepared to discuss this."

With regard to the formation of a union government, "discussion before or after the first round?" as one journalist put it, Charles Fiterman replied: "We must face facts. There has been a presidential election. Power is going to be handed over. The new president of the republic is going to be installed and he will have to form the government. At the same time, the National Assembly will be dissolved. This whole process is laid down in the Constitution." Since the president and premier in that government will be Socialist, "it is up to the PS to take the necessary initiatives in this period. As far as we are concerned, we are prepared to have discussions at any time, prepared for any contact making it possible to install a union government."

FORLANI GOVERNMENT RESIGNS OVER MINISTERS' SCANDAL

NC260930 Paris AFP in English 0918 GMT 26 May 81

[Excerpt] Rome, 26 May (AFP)--Italian Prime Minister Arnaldo Forlani today presented his government's resignation to President Alessandro Pertini. The government fell after revelations that three cabinent ministers where members of a Masonic lodge involved in Italy's latest scandal.

The resignation was widely expected after the names of government ministers and other senior politicians were discovered among the 963 alleged members of the Propaganda Two (P-2) Masonic Lodge, which operated as a form of mutual self-help society. The lodge's grand master (Licio Gelli) is wanted by police.

Mr Forlani went to the president after this morning's cabinet meeting. He was expected to be asked to stay on as caretaker to dispose of current business.

EFFORTS WITHIN GOVERNMENT TO DEAL WITH CRISIS

Justice Minister Resigns

NC231244 Paris AFP in English 1232 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] Rome, 23 May (AFP)--Italian Justice Minister Adolfo Sarti offered his resignation to Prime Minister Arnaldo Forlani today, informed sources said. Mr Sarti was named as a member of the Propaganda Two Freemason lodge, which is at the centre of one of the biggest scandals ever to rock Italy.

Two other ministers, Franco Foschi (Labour) and Enrico Manca, the Socialist foreign trade minister, were listed as candidates for membership of the lodge which was said to have grown into an occult power centre masterminding dubious financial and political operations. The names were found on documents seized from the lodge's leader Licio Gelli, who is wanted by Italian police.

New Minister Appointed

AU232021 Rome ANSA in English 1955 GMT 23 May 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 23 May (ANSA)--Christian Democrat Clelio Darida was named justice minister ad interim this evening. The decree appointing him was signed by head of state Sandro Pertini immediately after acceptance of the resignation of incumbent Justice Minister Adolfo Sarti (also a Christian Democrat). Forlani said he would discuss the possibility of a government reshuffle Monday with the leaders of the parties in his ruling coalition. The position of five other government members alleged to belong to the lodge will also be discussed.

Forlani Seeks Parties Summit

LD232036 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1900 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] Prime Minister Forlani has summoned a summit meeting of the secretaries of the majority parties for Monday afternoon. The meeting has become necessary in view of the P-2 lodge affairs which already led today to the resignation of Sarti, minister of justice. Other possible resignations by members of the executive are probable after the Christian Democrats and Republicans take stock. There have been many consultations today between Forlani, the Socialist secretary, Craxi, the Social Democrat secretary, Longo, and Rognoni, minister of home affairs, President of the Senate Fanfani and Christian Democrat Secretary Piccoli.

Speaking for the Communists, Macaluso said that a government reshuffle was not enough. What was needed was a change in the country. Finally, denials by personalities from various quarters about their membership of the P-2 lodge continue to come in.

Craxi Refuses Meeting

LD252054 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2030 GMT 25 May 81

[Excerpt] The government will resign tomorrow. The Council of Ministers has been summoned to meet at 0930. The decision to open the crisis was reached after the refusal by Socialist Secretary Craxi to take part in the prime minister's summit with the secretaries of the majority parties scheduled to be held today--a summit meeting which should have led to a government reshuffle.

It seems, however, that there is going to be a crisis. But according to the intentions expressed by some political leaders, it should end up in a confirmation of the existing majority and also of the existing program and, therefore, be limited to changing some heads of ministries.

LIBYAN ENVOY CALLS FOR WORLD TERRORISM CONFERENCE

AU221010 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] Rome, 22 May (ANSA)--A recommendation for an international conference on terrorism to be held under the auspices of the United Nations was delivered in Rome by a personal envoy of Libyan Leader Colonel Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, Information Minister Ibrahim Bishari.

Speaking to a press conference here Thursday, the cabinet minister said that Libyan Jamahiriyah condemned the attempt on the life of Pope John Paul II on May 13 and urged representatives from all the nations of the world to meet for an examination of the problem of terrorism, its causes, implications and possible solutions. The international conference on terrorism proposed by Libyan Jamahiriyah, to be organized by the UN, should, the envoy said, clearly establish "the difference between terrorism and the struggle of oppressed peoples".

Al-Qadhdhafi's representative again underscored the point that his country identified the attack on the pope as an enormous crime and is opposed to any form of terrorism. He went on to list under the heading air piracy, kidnapping, the occupation of territory by a foreign state and the installation of military bases on foreign territory.

After again affirming the need for the international community to unite in a fight against the causes of terrorism, the minister spoke of Italy's Red Brigades, the most notorious terrorist organization at work in the country, as an "organization of terrorists without any ideals whatsoever," whose members and sympathizers are, however, "products of the social context in which they live".

Moving on to another issue, the Libyan information minister said he regretted that political relations between Italy and his country were not at the same pitch as economic ties, which are well developed. Bishari recommended that, "the decisions of Italy as regards Libya must be made without consideration for pressures from the United States."

In more pointed remarks, the minister said that Italy must decide to recognize "the right of the Libyan people to the principle of indemnity for damages of the Second World War". He also declared, "we want our relations with Italy to develop across the boards. Now it's up to Italy to make a decision". Referring to the Washington move to expell all Libyan diplomatic personnel from the United States, the envoy said that the American president, Ronald Reagan, "must remember that we are not isolated. We have friends as powerful as the United States and in the not distant future we might become the strongest nation in the Arab world".

GUNMEN SEIZE HOSTAGES, HOLD BARCELONA BANK

Interior Ministry Statement

LD231124 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 23 May 81

[Summary] According to official sources at the Interior Ministry, 20-25 people took part in an attack on the Banco Central in Barcelona this morning and more than 200 hostages are being held inside the bank. The same Interior Ministry sources say that a youth was shot in the leg by one of the attackers. The wounded man was a bank employee, and has been taken to a Barcelona hospital. Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson has personally taken charge of the operation in connection with the attack on the Banco Central in Barcelona. A permanent telephone line has been set up with the civil government of Barcelona and the minister is being kept constantly informed.

Interior Ministry sources questioned by our newsdesk have said that they did not know whether negotiations would be opened with the hostage-takers, and would not give a reply when pressed for further details. Interior Ministry sources also said that the minister had informed the prime minister directly of the incident.

[Statement by Civil Governor of Barcelona--live]

[Text] This morning a group of about 20 people entered the Banco Central in Barcelona's Plaza de Cataluna. They produced firearms and proceeded to take hostage a number of employees and customers in the building. Later they issued a communique via the news media stipulating a number of conditions for the release of the hostages. As soon as the incident was known of, security forces were deployed to deal with this serious situation. The Plaza de Cataluna and surrounding streets have been closed to traffic. The affiliation of the attackers is not yet known. They are holding around 200 people inside the bank. The civil government appeals to the sense of responsibility of the Barcelona media and once again appeals fot the collaboration of the population with the state security forces to enable an end to this situation to be found as soon as possible without risk to the lives of the people being held by force inside the bank.

Civil Guards Involvement Denied

[Text] We have received a note from the Interior Ministry saying that there are no Civil Guards among the attackers of the Banco Central in Barcelona, as was earlier reported by Interior Ministry sources. The same sources say that the Interior Ministry has no information that could lead to the conclusion that some of the attackers are Civil Guards. Meanwhile, the chief of the Civil Guard Staff has said that there is no evidence that they are Civil Guards. Everyone is at their posts. It is possible, he said that some of the 60,000 men in the force may be unaccounted for; however, the personnel in the region are at their posts.

Communique Released

LD241552 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 24 May 81

[Communique of the civil government read by Catalonian Government Delegate Juan Rovira Tarazona at the Banco de Bilbao command post on 24 May]

[Text] Around 1330 the government delegate general in Catalonia, Juan Rovira Tarazona and the director general of police, Jose Luis Fernadez Dopico, after reaching agreement by telephone, entered the Banco Central, and spoke for about half an hour with the leader of the group which yesterday morning assaulted the bank.

During the visit we were able to see, and one of the hostages supported it personally, that the members of the groups which entered the bank by force wish to see an orderly solution. During the meeting the government repeated its position that it would accept no solution other than the surrender of the occupiers. A plan for evacuating the bank was put forward with maximum guarantees for the hostages as well as for the attackers. It is expected that details of the evacuation will be formalized in the next few hours. This entails the return of the hostages to their homes and the surrender of the group to the authorities. Meanwhile, maximum assistance will be provided for the hostages who are sick, in the form of supplies of necessry medicines, food and tobacco. Meanwhile it is hoped that the hostages will be released. Forty-three have just been released above those who were released earlier. Over the next few hours telephone contact will be maintained in order to outline the final details of the operation. We hope to avoid, in the close of this regrettable incident, any mistakes which could affect a final solution. We all appeal for the greatest calm and spirit of collaboration.

Gunmen Surrender in Bank

NC242030 Paris AFP in English 2027 GMT 24 May 81

[Text] Barcelona, Spain, 24 May (AFP)--The rightist terrorists who seized the Central Bank here yesterday surrendered at 10:15 P.M. local (2015 GMT) today after police assaulted the building to free the 70 to 80 hostages held in the building.

Spanish Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson declared at 10:16 P.M. (2016 GMT) that the occupation of the bank "is over." He said members of the special intervention force who stormed the bank were in the process of "cleaning up the building and proceeding with the identification of the kidnappers." The minister said there were 11 terrorists involved in the bank seizure and not 24 as had been previously reported. He said no civil guardsman or ex-civil guardsman had participated in the operation. Mr Roson also said that the terrorists were not part of the extreme right, but could have been financed by a right-wing group.

Further Government Statement

LD250146 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0100 GMT 25 May 81

[Text] As he left the meeting he had been attending with the prime minister and five cabinet ministers, Ignacio Aguirre, secretary of state for information, said that the government's first conclusion is that the siege of Barcelona's Banco Central was carried out by the extreme right. There are evident connections with the extreme right, he said. He added that the meeting had made a political assessment of the incident in light of reports reaching the government following interrogation of those arrested in Barcelona. It has also been learned from statements made by two of those arrested that they had been offered 5 million pesetas in Perpignan [France] to take part in the operation. Ignacio Aguirre added that among weapons seized from the group were a submachinegun and 11 pistols. He denied that any members of the Civil Guard were among the group.

Additional Suspects Arrested

LD251028 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 25 May 81

[Excerpts] Police have arrested three people in Barcelona suspected of being involved in the attack on the Banco Central in Barcelona on Saturday, according to reliable sources. All three detainees, according to the same sources, are known members of the extreme right. According to some reports, one of the suspects was arrested in a Barcelona hotel.

Antigovernment Plot Suggested

NC251942 Paris AFP in English 1930 GMT 25 May 81

[Text] Madrid, 25 May (AFP)--A source close to the Spanish Government said today that the seizure of the Barcelona Central Bank by a band of terrorists during the weekend represented a new effort by extreme rightists to destablize the nation's democracy. Although officials are divided over the identity, number and political links of the terrorists, the source said that the government is more concerned to know who organized and financed the raid.

The source said the government was convinced that the attack on the bank and seizure of hostages was only the first of a series of actions that extreme rightists are planning to provoke a coup by Spain's military. According to the source, the Barcelona terrorists were hirelings and he said that, after their surrender to police late yesterday, they had provided the names of the extreme rightists who ordered the raid at a recent meeting in Perpignan in southwest France. The extremists are former top aides in the fascist government of Generalissimo Francisco Franco, according to the source, who added that some of them may still hold important administrative posts.

It was also reported that the people behind the Barcelona raid were also leading figures in the abortive military coup of February 23, when a Civil Guard detachment seized the Spanish parliament. Many military men have been charged in connection with the failed coup but only one civilian has been accused of participating in the plot. But it is generally believed that many civilians were involved. It is also believed that partisans of a rightist dictatorship are no longer seeking to recruit military men but are trying to enlist civilians in their plots.

The source insisted that there would be no military coup, arguing that Spanish society would not accept a dictatorship and that authoritarian rule would fail within a fortnight. The source admitted that terrorist attacks, regional autonomy movements and the current economic crisis were creating a climate "highly dangerous" for democracy. But he observed that Spanish democracy was showing that it was not weak but "extremely resistant."

Meanwhile, Spain's principal political parties, including the ruling Democratic Center Union, called on the government to give a full explanation of what happened in Barcelona during the weekend.

The Communists and Socialists, as well as the conservative Popular Alliance Party, described the attack on the bank as an assault on the country's democracy and demanded that Premier Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo give a report to the parliament tomorrow.

(In Perprignan, a French police source said that three members of the band that seized the Barcelona bank were wanted for six holdups in southwestern France. The source said that Jose Juan Martinez Gomez, 25, and two brothers, Jose and Christobal Valencuela-Barcos, 21 and 23, respectively, were being sought for armed robberies carried out late last year and early this year. According to the source, the three men obtained a total of 1.6 million francs (about 300,000 dollars) in loot in the hold-ups. The Perpignan court has issued warrants for the arrest of the three men, the source added.)

TURKS REPORTEDLY SELL LAND FOR LIBYAN RADIO, BASE

NC231139 [Editorial Report] Three Nicosia Greek-language newspapers on 23 May cite Turkish Cypriot press reports to the effect that the Denktas administration has sold land in Famagusta District to Libya, which intends to use the land for a radio station or a military training camp.

ELEVTHERI KIPROS, in a back-page report under the headline "Libyan Radio Station in the North" attributed to the Turkish Cypriot press, notes that "40 donums of land at Boghaz, Famagusta--which was granted to Bayrak for the installation of new radio and television transmitters--has been sold to Libya for $3 million for the installation of a radio station.

I SIMERINI also reports on its back page that "according to the Turkish Cypriot newspaper ONCU, 40 donums of land near the occupied Famagusta harbor have been sold to Libya for $3 million for the installation of a radio station." The paper adds that "other reports in the Turkish Cypriot press say that the land will be used for a Libyan military camp."

The afternoon daily O KIRIKAS also reports on this issue under the headline "In Famagusta, Denktas Has Sold Land to Libya for a Base and a Radio Station." The paper, which attributes its report to revelations made by Turkish Cypriot Deputy Ekrem Ural, says that "The Libyan Government has bought from the Denktas administration 40 donums of land in the area of Famagusta Bay for the purpose of building a radio station. Libya has paid $3 million for this land, Ural said.

"He also said that the Turkish Cypriot leadership has granted Libya another piece of land to be used as a military base."

DENKTAS SAYS REFUGEES CANNOT RETURN HOME

TA211705 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1300 GMT 21 May 81

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that the source of the term "bizonal" [last word in English] used regarding the solution of the Cyprus problem is the population exchange and the subsequent geographical separation of the two communities.

Asked about his views regarding a statement made by the former Greek Cypriot interlocutor, Kliridhis, to the effect that the return of the refugees to their homes was agreed upon at the Denktas-Makarios summit, Denktas said that (?he discussed) the population exchange issue with Kliridhis and that Makarios was in no position to reject the issue when Denktas met with Makarios 2 years later. Noting that a formula that envisages the return of Greek Cypriot refugees to their homes would be unacceptable because southern Turkish Cypriots would not cross over to the south, Denktas said: There are two separate (?sectors) in Cyprus and two ethnic peoples who live in these sectors. Each has an administration and government. These administrations are equal. For these two administrations to be able to meet under a federal system, these realities have to be accepted. So long as the Greek Cypriot leaders consider themselves the Government [of Cyprus] and so long as they reject these realities, we can not move toward a federation. Stressing that the population exchange issue is not negotiable, Denktas said: Had this been considered an issue for discussions it would have been included on the agenda. This problem was not put on the agenda on the meetings I held with Makarios and Kiprianou.

DENKTAS REJECTS OUTSIDE SOLUTIONS TO PROBLEMS

TA221356 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] President Denktas today held a meeting with the United Nations secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi. Mr Gobbi, who is leaving Cyprus for a short visit to New York, took leave of the president.

Asked after the meeting as to whether Mr Gobbi would be bringing a proposal on his return, President Denktas said a proposal from New York was not expected. He said there was no need for proposals from New York, Washington or Moscow. Mr Denktas stressed that the Cyprus problem was a question to be solved through negotiations held on equal terms between the two Cypriot communities. No formula from outside, he said, could be acceptable. Another suggestion which was not acceptable was the proposal from Moscow for the settlement of the Cyprus problem at an international conference.

KKE IMATHIA PROVINCIAL OFFICES DYNAMITED IN VEROIA

NC251620 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 25 May 81 p 1

[Dispatch by correspondents Yiannis Liapis and Kostas Laskarelias]

[Text] Veroia, 25 May--Shortly after midnight yesterday, unknown persons dynamited the KKE offices for the province of Imathia in the center of Veroia, only 30 meters from the gendarmery headquarters. The offices were damaged and window panes in houses and shops were broken within a radius of 20 meters. The residents of nearby apartments panicked and abandoned their apartments, but there were no casualties.

A spokesman for the Imathia KKE branch organization attributed the action to "dark circles of anomaly who are operating with the approval of the New Democracy government." The spokesman later added that, probably today, a statement will be released "denouncing to the people the attack by the parastate organizations of the rightwing."

The attack was launched a few hours after the "impressive" appearance of Dhespoina Papadhopoulou [wife of Yeoryios Papadhopoulos] at Alexandria, only 25 milometers from Veroia, and of Papadhopoulos' prime minister, Spiros Markezinis, who attended a public gathering at Edhessa.

TURKISH AIRCRAFT OVERFLY NAVY DESTROYERS 25 MAY

[Text] According to reports from a government source, two Turkish Phantom jets this morning flew at a low altitude over two Greek destroyers in the area of Samos Island. According to the same reports, the National Defense Ministry will issue a statement on this incident tomorrow. However, the Foreign Ministry is proceeding with the necessary representations.

AKROPOLIS URGES ACTION ON TURKISH VIOLATIONS

NC221626 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 22 May 81 p 2

[From the "Laconic" column: "The Turkish Provocations"]

[Text] It seems that the Turks are turning a deaf ear to the Greek Government's demarches over their provocations. This was shown by the new violation of our territorial waters near Khios the day before yesterday, and the day before that by a Turkish patrol boat which harassed Greek fishing boats and a patrol boat of the island's Greek harbor police. Perhaps our reactions should be manifested more tangibly so that the Turks do not dare such provocations. One may, however, claim that the prudent should think twice as well as on behalf of the imprudent, too. But, in everything, there is a limit. For this reason we hope the report is true that a unit of our navy may be sent to the area. Sometimes excessive toleration brings what one is afraid of.

AIRLINER WITH 112 PASSENGERS HIJACKED TO BULGARIA

Bulgaria's Cooperation Sought

TA240805 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0800 GMT 24 May 81

[Text] The Turkish Airlines passenger airliner, "Halic," was hijacked on its way from Istanbul to Ankara this morning. The airliner landed in Bulgaria's Burgas airport. "Halic," a DC-9, took off from Istanbul Yesilko Airport with 112 passengers, one of them a child, on board at 0700 this morning. At 0721, over Yalova, the plane changed its direction. During the last communications link established with the plane it was said that it would make a forced landing in Burgas in Bulgaria due to insufficient fuel. It landed at Burgas airport at 0804.

It is believed that there are four hijackers on board. They are believed to be between 25 and 20 years old. They released eight women, four children and three men. There is a crew of seven on board. The captain is Barlas Akigil, the copilot Metin Ikizoglu and the cabin chief if Asuman Yildirim. The remaining four crew members have not yet been identified. Following the news of the hijacking, Transportation Minister Necmi Ozgur cancelled his trip to Finland, where he would have attended the European transportation ministers conference. His flight was scheduled at 0930. Necmi Ozgur and other officials are now at Esilkoy Airport, following the latest developments.

The Foreign Ministry immediately contacted the Bulgarian Foreign Ministry through the embassy in Sofia. The necessary representations have been made for holding the plane in Burgas and for the return of the hijackers and all passengers to Turkey. The hijackers want to refuel in Burgas and go somewhere else. They asked to contact a Turkish official. Our chief consul in Burgas is at the airport.

Bulgarian Ambassador Consulted

TA241413 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1401 GMT 24 May 81

[Excerpt] Meanwhile Bulgarian Ambassador to Ankara Vladimir Gruncharov has said that his country was ready to cooperate in every way for the freeing of the hijacked airliner. Ambassador Gruncharov was summoned to the Foreign Ministry today at 1100 after the Turkish Airlines Plane, Halic, was hijacked on its way from Istanbul to Ankara and landed in Bulgaria's Burgas Airport.

Talks between Turkish Foreign Ministry General Secretary Ambassador Kamuran Gurun and Ambassador Gruncharov lasted 1 hour. The Bulgarian ambassador refused to answer questions by correspondents after the talks but only stated that his country was ready to cooperate on all fields for the freeing of the hijacked Turkish airplane, Halic.

Hijackers Captured

TA251411 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 25 May 81

[Turkish Prime Ministry Statement]

[Text] According to the news we received at 1545 from the Bulgarian Foreign Ministry via our embassy in Sofia, the four hijackers have been overpowered following a successful operation. They have been arrested. All the passengers are resting. A plane is being sent to Burgas to bring the passengers and the crew back to Turkey. It must be pointed out with appreciaiton that the Bulgarian Government showed close interest and effective cooperation from the beginning of the incident. In the wake of this incident, we extend our best wishes to our nation, the passengers, the crew and their families. A detailed announcement will be made later.

Prime Minister's Statement

TA251650 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1610 GMT 25 May 81

[Turkish Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu's statement on the hijacking--read by announcer]

[Text] Our government and nation is pleased about the successful conclusion of the incident in which terrorists hijacked the airliner Halic. General information has been communicated to the public on the developments of this incident. The conditions the terrorists put forward for the release of the hostages were not disclosed to our public immediately because we did not allow dissemination of propaganda, one of the aims of the terrorists. One of the conditions put forward by the terrorists was the announcement of their demands to the Turkish public. This behavior has given a new example of the tactics being used by terrorists.

Our government determined its attitude from the moment the plane was hijacked and did not change it until the end. Accepting the demands of the hijackers was not considered even for a moment. Our government acted with the understanding that terrorism can be fought only with determination. It was never ignored for a moment that the smallest weakness to be shown could have endangered the great success achieved against terrorism so far and that it could have negatively affected our nation's morale. We expressed these views most clearly to the Bulgarian Government. We sent a delegation headed by the Foreign Ministry secretary general to aid Bulgarian officals on the spot. In Sofia, our ambassador was in continuous contact with the Bulgarian Foreign Ministry.

We were pleased to see that the People's Republic of Bulgaria acted with the responsibility of a friendly and neighborly country. The Bulgarian Government showed close interest in our delegation and gave all possible assistance to the passengers on board and to those released. Furthermore, it used the alternatives at hand in the most effective way for the happy conclusion of the incident. Not only does this attitude of the Bulgarian Government constitute a constructive action which we greatly value from the viewpoint of Turkish-Bulgarian relations, but it also constitutes an important contribution to the struggle against the international disaster of terrorism.

As a result of this action, messages of thanks have been sent by our head of state to the chairman of the Bulgarian State Council, Todor Zhivkov, by me to the Bulgarian prime minister and by our foreign minister to the Bulgarian foreign minister.

The tenacity shown by our nation in the face of this despicable act of terrorism which violated international law and human conscience and which endangered the lives of innocent people is above and beyond any praise. During the incident, our nation shared the suffering of the plane passengers--the new victims of terrorism. I would like to commend the courage of our citizens and the foreigners aboard the Halic.

I would also like to express my commendation and thanks to our press for the cooperation it displayed from the beginning of the incident.

On the occasion of the happy ending of this incident, I congratulate all the passengers and the crew and I wish them health and happiness.

Evren Message to Zhivkov

TA252025 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2010 GMT 25 May 81

[Message by Turkish Head of State Gen Kenan Evren to Chairman of Bulgarian State Council Todor Zhivkov following hijacking incident--read by announcer]

[Text] Honorable chairman: I would like to convey to Your Excellency my sincere pleasure over the successful completion of the operation carried out by the Bulgarian authorities to save the passengers of the Turkish airliner, Halic, which was hijacked to Burgas on 24 May.

There is no doubt that the incident constitutes, before all else, a grave expression of international terrorism which has all the communities of the world as its target. The action of the Bulgarian Government is a successful example of our governments' determined stand in fighting terrorism. This result is extremely encouraging in that it shows that international cooperation, which must be carried out with a spirit of solidarity and togetherness, will develop in the positive direction. I believe that another point which must be stressed is the fact that this regretful incident was concluded in a way that will enable the further strengthening of the ties of friendship and cooperation existing between our two countries and nations. I would like to extend my sincere congratulations to the Bulgarian authorities who supported our determined stand, made praiseworthy efforts and ensured the successful results. On this occasion, I would like to express my sincere thanks for the support, assistance and understanding shown by the Bulgarian officials to the released passengers and to our delegation during the incident. Please accept my heartfelt respects.

Ulusu Thanks to Todorov

[Message from Turkish Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu to Bulgarian Premier Stanko Todorov following hijacking incident--read by announcer]

[Text] Honorable Prime Minister: I have learned with great pleasure that the passengers of the "Halic" plane which was hijacked to Burgas have been saved following a successful and bloodless operation on 25 May. There is no doubt that the successful conclusion of this regretful incident has, on the one hand, showed the determination of our governments to fight international terrorism and, on the other, will contribute to the development of the good relations existing between our countries. On behalf of myself and my government, I express my heartfelt thanks to the Bulgarian Government for organizing this flawless operation to save the lives of the innocent passengers who were in the plane. On this occasion, I would like to convey my congratulations to all Bulgarian personnel, because of their courage and success, who contributed to the carrying out of this operation. Please accept my heartfelt respects.

Turkmen Message to Mladenov

TA252131 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 25 May 81

[Message by Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen to Bulgarian Minister of Foreign Affairs Petur Mladenov following hijacking incident--read by announcer]

[Text] Honorable Minister: I am pleased to send you this message on the occasion of the happy ending of the incident in which the Turkish airliner, "Halic," was hijacked to Burgas. The understanding and cooperation displayed by the Bulgarian officials and the determined stand they adopted during the entire dramatic incident, which lasted close to 40 hours, have been received with appreciation and gratitude by the Turkish nation. We assess the action of the Bulgarian Government as one of the best examples of intergovernmental cooperation and solidarity which must be displayed in the fight against international terrorism. With your stand, you have proven that terrorism can be defeated in the face of a joint struggle.

I would like to stress my conviction that Turkish-Bulgarian relations, which progressed to a higher level with your visit to Ankara, will gain new momentum with this latest development. I extend my most sincere thanks to the Bulgarian Government and authorities and my best wishes to Your Excellency.

SCHMIDT DELIVERS GOVERNMENT STATEMENTS TO BUNDESTAG

DW260825 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0703 GMT 26 May 81

[Government statement delivered to the German Bundestag by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on his visit to Washington and Paris--live]

[Text] Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, in the government statement of 24 November last, I outlined the basic lines of the Federal Government's foreign policy, a policy of reliable partnership, a policy which is marked by continuity and is predictable to anyone.

Today, I would like to report on the development of our relations with some of our most important partners in the West, a development which, I would like to state in advance, all of us can acknowledge with great satisfaction and which strengthens the confidence in our friends and our courage for the future. During the past 2 days, I met with two statesmen who have headed our two most important partner states for a short period of time, U.S. President Ronald Reagan who has been in office since January and French President Francois Mitterrand who was inaugurated Thursday last week.

Even though I had met both gentlemen before, I was very much gratified by the opportunity to talk with them in detail in their new positions in Washington and Paris. Both hosts ensured a highly friendly climate during the visit and we were able to lay the foundation for a trustful cooperation.

Prior to these visits to Washington and Paris, I met with British Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher for the German-British consultations on 11 and 12 May. At Chequers, we conducted the talks in a very friendly and frank manner, especially in the awareness that we are and remain dependent on each other in Europe and in our actions in the world. The German-British consensus in world political issues was confirmed. Chequers was neither the place nor the proper time for coming to terms on questions concerning the EC. Yet, we expressed the expectation that the Brussels Commission will live up in due time to its instruction and that it will then be possible in the second half of the year to solve satisfactorily the questions at issue, especially those concerning the EC budget and, linked with it, the structure of the agricultural policy.

As for my visit to Washington, I would like to report, first of all, that the U.S. President, to my joy, has overcome in an amazingly short time the serious consequences of the assassination attempt. [applause] I had two intensive talks with the President. He also insisted on arranging for my entourage and myself a magnificent soiree at the White House. [commotion] It was very nice, Mr Kiep. [applause] And I can well understand your interjection since you have been waiting for a similar opportunity for so many years and decades. [laughter, applause]

Besides, I had an opportunity to talk with Vice President Bush, Secretary of State Haig, Secretary of Defense Weinberger, Treasury Secretary Regan, as well as with the President's leading economic adviser, Professor Weidenbaum. I also met with Senate majority leader Senator Baker and with the Senate and House Foreign Relations Committees. These were detailed talks.

As for meetings outside the administration and the legislature, I would like to mention that this time, too, I had one dialogue each with AFL-CIO President Kirkland and with representatives of U.S. Jewish citizens, namely, with representatives of the conference of presidents of major Jewish organizations.

I considered it a favorable overture to my talks with the new administration that just prior to my trip the appointment of Arthur Burns as ambassador to Bonn was announced.

As an eminent economist and financial expert, Burns enjoys highest prestige everywhere. We very much welcome the fact that the post of ambassador to Bonn, so important for a constant exchange of opinion between our governments, will soon be filled again. [applause]

The visit to Washington took place at the proper time. In view of critical developments in the relations between the East and the West, in view of the aggravation or continuation of various crises in the Third World, in view of the insecurity regarding the continuation of the world economy, consultations with the state or government chiefs of our partners are today more important than ever.

It turned out to be most advantageous for the talks with President Reagan that it was possible to enter into numerous German-American and European-American meetings which had already taken place with the new U.S. administration. Particularly, there were the coordinated statement on the talks between Federal Minister Genscher and Secretary of State Haig taking place in March, the important communiques after the NATO council session in May in Rome and the defense planning committee in Brussels in mid-May, which were the bases of our talks.

The American side, as well as we, was particularly interested in a high-ranking and intense exchange of opinion at this particular time because no final decision has been made on some important U.S. foreign policy issues.

It became clear in all talks that the new administration is taking very seriously what it termed from the very beginning as the core of its foreign policy, namely, effective consultations with its Atlantic partners. Such an exchange of opinion among friends needs a certain atmosphere. I can state with satisfaction that the talks with President Reagan were characterized by great preparedness for mutual understanding and confidence. I was impressed by the calmness, the straightforwardness and the high awareness of responsibility of the frequently most serious statements of the President.

This basic mood of our talks made it easy to achieve agreement on a wide field of common problems. This clearly is expressed in the common statement on my visit, which is available to you, ladies and gentlemen. The statement outlining the results of our talks stands under the sign of the alliance policy's continuity. It confirms the wide agreement already achieved by all alliance partners and it develops it further.

One of the main points of my Washington talks was the situation in West Europe. We talked about the economic and political importance of the European Community and the situation in individual states. I gave the President an assessment of what some papers call neutralism in an unpermissibly simplified way, and I believe that my explanations of the reasons, the contents and the volume of such trends have contributed to seeing the problem in the correct proportions.

All my Washington discussion partners have asked about further developments in France. President Reagan and I agreed in the will to most closely cooperate with President Mitterrand. It was therefore immediately most welcomed in Washington when it was learned that I would meet President Mitterrand at a Paris stopover on my way back.

Relations between the East and the West are a central foreign political issue for the German and the U.S. Governments.

Both governments share concern about the continuous arming of the Soviet Union and about its expansionist actions, such as in Afghanistan, in South Yemen and in Ethiopia.

Together, we have drawn the conclusion: To face this and other challenges by the Soviet Union and to safeguard peace, we want, on the one hand, to react with firmness, while on the other hand, simultaneously to maintain dialogue with the Soviet Union. Both elements are indispensable according to our common opinion. [applause]

In the framework of the dialogue policy with the Soviet Union, I welcomed President Reagan's establishing a personal contact with General Secretary Brezhnev and Secretary of State Haig's numerous talks with the Soviet Ambassador to Washington. I reported in this connection on our idea of a work visit to which I have invited General Secretary Brezhnev to come to Bonn in the second half of this year.

We agreed on the significance of a balanced result of the Madrid CSCE followup conference for the stabilization of East-West relations. On the other hand, however, it was also clear to both sides that most serious consequences would arise for the dialogue policy if developments took place in and around Poland, which no one desires.

I had an exchange of ideas on basic problems of our security with President Reagan, with the vice president, the secretary of state and the secretary of defense. We agreed that the alliance partners must do everything necessary to face the negative developments of the military balance initiated by the Soviet Union. I stressed the great and growing contribution of the United States to Western defense. This offered me an opportunity to explain the indispensable contribution made by the Federal Republic of Germany to the security of the West and to the peaceful development of our world through the first class quantity and quality of the Bundeswehr and, among other things, through our help for the alliance partners. I report with satisfaction that the U.S. President particularly was impressed by our contribution to defense. No criticism has been voiced. [applause]

The American side stressed again that it shares our opinion that arms control and disarmament, I quote, are integral parts of the alliance's security policy. [applause] This applies to the entire field of arms--to strategic arms, nuclear medium-range arms and conventional armament. The clear determination of the President to insist on negotiated arms limitation was expressed in serious words.

One of the discussed aspects of our common security was the growing threat of Soviet Eurostrategic nuclear arms or medium-range arms. The framework of this discussion was outlined by the communiques of this year's spring meetings of the foreign and defense ministers. We agreed that one must stick with both parts of the dual decision, namely, the counterarmament decision and the offer to negotiate.

The U.S. receptiveness to negotiations, called in question by some parties in Europe and also by the Soviet Union, has been confirmed once again over all these doubts. For example, the U.S. Government officially declares in the joint statement that Secretary of State Haig has, in fact, already begun the preparatory talks on nuclear medium-range weapons with the Soviet Union. [applause] For example, President Reagan in the joint statement makes it clear that what matters is not negotiations per se but that these negotiations must lead to concrete results. [applause]

I am aware that the United States is in the process of carefully preparing for these negotiations. We will be consulted in this respect, also during the subsequent process. I am convinced that the Americans intend to negotiate purposefully and without interruption. Let me add that anyone knowing the history of the arms control efforts and being familiar with the complicated problems of the nuclear medium-range weapons will realize that these negotiations will be difficult and protracted. It will be essential whether the Soviet Union, which has achieved such an unusually large lead of actual armament in this field, is also prepared to negotiate in a constructive way.

Concerning policy toward the Third World, what mattered to me was to find out the motives and the contents of U.S. policy and to harmonize or bring close together our views as much as possible. In this respect, too, the foreign ministers had done preparatory work, as you know, ladies and gentlemen.

The President and I agreed that genuine nonalignment of the states of the Third World is an important stability factor in international relations. [applause] What we intend to do is continue supporting the independence of the states of the Third World on the basis of equal partnership. In our common view, this also is the best strategy for counteracting the direct and indirect attempts of the Soviet Union to extend its power policy influence to these countries.

During the intensive exchange of opinions about areas of crisis in the Third World, we agreed that the Middle East conflict destablizes the entire region and offers the Soviet Union additional leverage points for exerting influence on this region. We agreed, therefore, that the efforts of the United States as well as of the European Community to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East must be expressly continued. The European and American efforts toward a solution of the Middle East conflict should complement each other in the future as well.

The Washington visit by South African Foreign Minister Botha was an important stage in the efforts toward a peaceful and internationally accepted Namibia solution. I gained the solid impression in Washington that the new administration seeks a Namibia solution with a great deal of energy and that it makes this plain to South Africa as well. The communique of the five foreign ministers, dated 4 April, and the corresponding UN resolutions will form and will have to form the basis of a negotiated solution. Jointly with our partners, these being the United States, Canada, France and England, we will determine what additional elements of confidence building can be created. This applies particularly to the basic features of a future constitutional system of an independent Namibia.

Fundamental conformity of views also was expressed in considerations of new starting points for an economic stabilization of the Central American-Caribbean region. We agreed that the improvement in the social and economic conditions in this region constitutes the precondition for political stabilization. Hence, I welcome the U.S. contemplations of a Caribbean-Central American development scheme which seeks cooperation in partnership with the states of this region for the promotion of the social and economic development of these countries. In our view, this plan should also include the oil producers, Mexico and Venezuela, which by lower-priced oil deliveries to their neighbor countries economically can help ensure the development scheme.

Such a cooperation would have the character of an example for the OPEC countries as a whole. The nonalignment of the countries of the Central American and Caribbean regions would be strengthened and communist subversion would be counteracted.

Questions concerning economic and energy policies commanded broad room. Both sides conducted this exchange of opinions also with a view to the summit meeting of the great industrial democracies scheduled to be held at Ottawa, Canada, in July. Both governments are determined to strengthen the liberal world trade system and to resist an expansion of protectionism. In this connection, I voiced my concern about the U.S.-Japanese agreements on the restriction of automobile exports to the United States.

I explained to my U.S. interlocutors that, and how, German energy policy is aimed at diversifying to the greatest extent possible our dependence with respect to both the individual energy raw materials and their geographic origin. In this connection, the joint declaration expressly states that worldwide cooperative efforts are required to cope with the urgent energy problems.

The broad explanation of the respective economic policy met with great interest on both sides. I drew attention to the significance of the U.S. economic, finance, and monetary policies for the rest of the national economies and for the world economy. We were able to feel in Washington that the U.S. economy is staking great hopes on the policy of the new administration, and we have every reason to wish that the desired upward surge will soon occur in the United States, from which new, positive impulses would then emanate on the world economy.

But I also voiced our concern about the effects of the high interest level on the European economy. [applause] We agreed that economic policy as a whole must be closely coordinated among the industrial countries, and this will be one of the main topics for the Ottawa meeting.

I believe, ladies and gentlemen, that President Reagan and I have fully attained the goals of the meeting that had been envisaged. We have deepened our acquaintance and established a personal, cordial affiliation. This will benefit the bilateral relations just as it will benefit our cooperation in the multilateral, the international, sphere. We reaffirmed the core of our alliance policy and, in fields in which it is necessary to seek and try new ways, we defined problems and staked out ways of solution.

The terrain for close cooperation has been prepared, for a cooperation which is of particular mutual advantage in this early stage of a new administration, which is indispensable and irreplaceable in the critical world situation.

I returned from Washington with the deep impression of growing American self-confidence and new optimism regarding the possibilities of this great country. President Reagan is determined to safeguard the American leading role in the world.

My stopover in Paris offered an opportunity desired by both, French President Francois Mitterrand and myself, to have a first exchange of thoughts after his taking over. I welcomed it very much. The contents and the atmosphere of this meeting satisfied me very much. We agreed to further strengthen and develop German-French cooperation. [applause]

German-French cooperation is of vital importance for the continuity and predictability of Western policy, for the position of Europe in the world and for the future of both our people.

The president and I confirmed in the 3 and 1/2 hours of our discussion based on earlier talks the great German-French agreement on all important international problems. I conveyed the greetings of President Reagan to the president, naturally informing him carefully on my Washington talks.

Most important was full agreement on alliance policy and East-West relations. We are both convinced that military balance must be preserved or reestablished wherever it has been upset. France also backs the implementation of both parts of the dual decision, although it isn't directly involved in it. The French as well as we will continue the dialogue and the cooperation with the Soviet Union and the East on the basis of balance.

Regarding the policy vis-a-vis the Third World, which President Mitterrand particularly cares about, we both aim for partnership-like cooperation with developing countries. The partnership approach is based on the sovereignty and nonaligned state of the countries of the Third World, which are indispensable elements of world peace.

We discussed a number of topical world problems and we coordinated our judgments and approaches. This pertains to the problems of the Near and Middle East, particularly to the dangerous situation in Lebanon. It pertains to our cooperation with Saudi Arabia and the Gulf region states. It pertains to the problems in southern Africa. It pertains to the situation in Central America and the Caribbean.

Ladies and gentlemen, France is and remains our most important trade and economic partner. It was clear that we had to thoroughly discuss world economic problems, as well as bilateral economic relations between both our countries. I was impressed by the determination of the president and his government to defend the stability of the French franc. Both of us will do our part to keep the European currency system in order. An important stabilizing effect is emanating from it particularly in the current situation, also for the other European economies.

We shared our concern regarding the aftereffects the high interest rates in America have on the European partners. We both want to help avoid a negative economic development between the United States and Europe.

Regarding European policy, President Mitterrand doesn't want to suggest a postponement of the European Council's session slated for 29-30 June in Luxembourg, despite the French elections. He wants, like us, to initiate in a first talk of the government chiefs a thorough examination of the expected suggestions of the Commission regarding an adaptation of the financial structure and a reform of the agricultural policy. This should lead, according to our common ideas, to concrete decisions to be made by the session of the European Council in late November.

Ladies and gentlemen, all problems touched on by the French president and myself in this first exchange of thoughts must be further deepened now. We have both asked the members of our governments to resume contacts and close direct cooperation with each other, which has been usual for a long time in German-French relations. We agreed to have the next German-French consultations this July here in Bonn. President Mitterrand and I want to have some coordination prior to the Ottawa world economic summit scheduled to begin on 20 July.

I summarize this section: The meeting with President Mitterrand so shortly after his taking over was politically important. In addition, it was also pleasant. We are both convinced that German-French cooperation will stand its test also in the difficult years we are facing. [applause]

Finally, ladies and gentlemen, my visits to Washington and Paris demonstrated that changes of top echelons of governments and states, which is absolutely normal for democracies, haven't impaired our partnerships with the United States and France. [applause]

The common interests which have grown in decades, the common basic values which are decisive for our states and particularly the friendship and affection of the people are so strong that party policy or personnel changes in our states have hardly any effect on that. [applause, shouts]

I am happy about your agreement, Dr Kohl, [shouts] but I cannot share the hopes you link to it. [laughter, applause]

In the government statement of 24 November this year, when this Federal Government was established, I have said that we don't want our German role to be too great in the world, or to let others accord too great a role to us. That remains correct.

Ladies and gentlemen, I returned from both visits with the firm conviction that continuity and predictability of this Federal Government's foreign policy are indispensable, indispensable for our partners in the East, indispensable for the cohesion of the Western alliance, indispensable for peace in a more and more unsteady and insecure world. Cordial thanks. [long applause]

Kohl Reply

[Speech by CDU/CSU floorleader Helmut Kohl in response to the government statement delivered by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt--live]

[Excerpts] Mr President, esteemed ladies and gentlemen, in this government statement we heard a comprehensive travel report on many meetings. But, Mr Chancellor, we have heard little about the conclusions which you propose to draw from this experience in the United States, Paris and elsewhere for your policy in the Federal Republic of Germany, here in the first place. [applause]

Let me first say a word about your Paris visit, Mr Chancellor. We do welcome your trip and your meeting with President Mitterrand and we also welcome what you have said here about German-French friendship. German-French friendship, I repeat, as far as we are concerned isn't a question of friendship between governments. to us, it is the friendship between two peoples which try to learn from a painful history, a friendship which in the German-French youth agreement has given the young generation a roadsign for its journey. And we, the CDU/CSU, the classical party of German-French friendship, do appreciate all this. Robert Schuman, Konrad Adenauer, Charles de Gaulle, ladies and gentlemen, were the ones who founded German-French friendship. [applause]

And I can only voice agreement with you, Mr Chancellor, if you declare here and now that you propose to continue this course because the question concerning the friendship of our two peoples constitutes the core of any European policy.

What is striking about your government statement, Mr Chancellor, and thus we are directly in the middle of your topic, is that in decisive points it is essentially more meager than the joint statement you issued with the U.S. President in Washington. You told us about some subjects today, and besides, you insisted that everything is shipshape. Thus, you made your personal liking for President Reagan clear: I like this man, I feel extremely at home with him, I am deeply impressed. And in Washington, you said that you have been trying since November to correct the simple, childish cowboy image which some people in Europe have of Reagan. Why do you always say Europe, Mr Chancellor, if you really must mean Germany and your own party? This, after all, is what experience teaches. [applause]

All we can state is that, so far, your voice hasn't been heard in the Federal Republic in this context. And I must say on behalf of the CDU/CSU that we would be very happy if this would change now after your visit to Washington. And we can only hope, and this also belongs to the discussion after your trip, that your sympathy for President Reagan isn't based solely on the fact that he primarily listened, as the government spokesman stated in Washington. This, too, is an element of your political style.

In no way has this government statement eliminated our concern about the attitude of your party, and above all of its Bundestag faction, toward the U.S. Government and policy. You know yourself, Mr Wehner, that important members of your party purposefully and premeditatedly fan sentiments against our American alliance partners.

It is a fact, ladies and gentlemen, that the worldwide reality escapes all attempts at mollification and the serious turbulences in the SPD make it improbable that courage and leadership will yet come at a belated hour so as to cope with these dangers. The worldwide energy shortage has made the safeguarding of energy a question of wealth or poverty, a question of war or peace. The excessive armament purposefully pushed by the Soviet Union in both the conventional and nuclear fields has shifted the structures of strategic balance. The intention is to establish a situation in which peace can be had only on those conditions which Moscow dictates.

And the reluctance of the Western democracies to accept restrictions and even make sacrifices for the preservation of their way of life and their political culture only enhances the danger of losing our freedom, the freedom of thinking and the freedom of conscience. The illusion that freedom and material security can be had at no moral and political cost is bound to be deadly. Anyone not shrinking away from thinking about disaster is being denounced in this country as a killjoy. And yet, it is the realization of the existing danger alone which makes it possible to cope with this danger without capitulation.

Ladies and gentlemen, in the U.S.-FRG relations today, we note a number of topical difficulties of understanding about which our people expect to hear an answer. In back of it are common platforms of thinking and of political culture, whence you and your government, Mr Chancellor, must at long last derive leadership, connection and perspective. There is a credibility gap between structural conditions and topical problems. It is with growing concern about the weal and woe of our nation that we see a chancellor who is quite capable of making proper diagnoses and pursuing a foreign policy capable of mustering a majority. But behind him, we see his own party which is no longer interested in this diagnosis, rather being determined, above all, to prevent the therapies. And you, Mr Chancellor, lack the courage to change this. [applause]

Let me say a few words about the details of the talks in Washington. First, the NATO counterarming decision. We welcome the fact that the communique of the NATO spring meeting in Brussels and the joint statement of Washington unequivocally pointed out what jeopardizes world peace, detente and security in Europe: the Soviet armament, the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, the Soviet threat to Poland, the Soviet triggering and exploitation of crisis situations and instabilities of the Third World. We would have wished, Mr Chancellor, if you and the members of your government during the past 10 years had not only talked about detente but also conveyed more of these realities to your own party and to parts of the German public. [applause]

In this connection, I would like, indeed, to make a remark concerning the communique specifically. It is remarkable, Mr Chancellor, that this communique no longer contains the world detente. Ladies and gentlemen, had I, Franz Josef Strauss and others put it that way in July-August 1980, we would have been peace-raping elements of German politics. This is how the pictures change. And this highly remarkable change must be introduced into this debate, to be sure.

In keeping with the documents now available, Mr Chancellor, we will measure your policy by the criterion that you agree with the U.S. President not only in the assessment of the world political situation but also, and I always quote directly from the communique, in the consequences resultant therefrom for the Western alliance, that the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany form a community of destiny with common security interests and common concepts of values; that Western defense remains strengthened and that deterrence and defense as well as arms control and disarmament remain integral component parts of the alliance's security policy. Probably, it is the most essential element characterizing your government statement of today that these findings from the Washington joint statement don't recur that way in your government statement. What you talk about today again is only that arms control and disarmament are integral parts of security policy. The government statement doesn't say a single word about the fact that deterrence and defense likewise are part of it. [applause]

This elementary difference between your statement today and the Washington joint statement is of greatest significance. For it is this very point at which the fundamental difference in policy is to be found between you and us and between the U.S. Government and your government.

To tell the truth, we aren't convinced that you, Mr Chancellor, are still capable of taking the measures now which are necessary for the future because of your internal party situation. I repeat, you no longer have a majority for this policy, and your statement today is evidence of that. And this also holds true for the next point of the Washington joint statement which says in part that both elements of the NATO decision of December 1979 will be implemented and wield equal weight, that the modernization of the nuclear medium-range weapons is essential for the security of the alliance and as a basis for simultaneous negotiations.

We expressly welcome the realization of the government that it is prepared to react with firmness beyond the NATO boundaries, as it is put, to the expansionist policy of the Soviet Union and its arms efforts, to resist all direct or indirect attempts of the Soviet Union which undermine the independence and stability of the Third World countries and to counteract the destabilizing effects of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in the entire region. We likewise welcome the fact that it has been stipulated in the joint statement that the Middle East policy of the United States and of the Europeans must complement each other on the basis of what has been achieved. This wasn't at all the case in the past.

We, the CDU/CSU, ladies and gentlemen, expressly second these stipulations and we acknowledge with satisfaction that while in Washington, Mr Chancellor, you came around to realize that the demand raised on the United States prior to your visit, namely, that the negotiations be scheduled as far ahead as possible, should not be advanced to the President. Still, we are afraid that the agreement achieved in the question concerning the opening of the negotiations will remain a mere formula compromise because the U.S. Government justly considers negotiations to be sensible only if and when they bring substance and counterweight to the negotiating table, while you so far have urged the earliest possible negotiations.

At this stage of the game, ladies and gentlemen, this would mean that the negotiations would be conducted on more than 220 Soviet SS-20 missiles with more than 660 nuclear warheads, aimed at persuading the Soviet Union to accept a renunciation, to destroy its missiles which already have become a political factor by their mere existence. Anyone hoping for speedy results in these U.S.-Soviet negotiations or talks, or for the possibility of the modernization of the U.S. medium-range weapons in Europe becoming dispensable, misinterprets Soviet policy and disregards all experiences of the past decades. And I welcome the fact that in today's statement you rather urged patience, and experiences, indeed, are in keeping with that.

The troop reduction negotiations in Vienna and the disarmament negotiations in Geneva for the past 8 years have been failing because of the Soviet refusal to lay open the necessary military potentials and data. Anyone now desiring as speedy results of negotiations as possible actually abets the results of Moscow's peace-endangering policy because he arouses hopes and expectations which soon turn out to be illusions, but which are grist on the mill of those who want to paralyze the defense will of the free world. [applause]

Secondly, we support the stipulations of the two governments in the statement to pursue at the current CSCE followup conference in Madrid an accord on a balanced and substantial final document which, I quote, will include greater respect for human rights, more human contacts, freer flow of information and cooperation among and security for all participants. This also holds true for the stipulation that the mandate for a conference on disarmament in Europe must be precise and that--another quotation--the application of militarily significant, binding and verifiable confidence-building measures to the entire European continent from the Atlantic to the Ural Mountains must be thereby envisaged. But also in this case we hold: We do hear the words, but we want these words to be followed by the deeds of your policy as well.

Thirdly, the United States demands of its allies burden sharing, world political division of labor. What matters primarily is the Middle East, but not that alone. In the Middle East, the Federal Republic by its aid to Turkey has essentially contributed to a policy of stabilization. Everyone knows that this happened with the full support of the opposition in this house.

But I believe that this will not be enough. In the long run, ladies and gentlemen, it will turn out that the Americans are not prepared to bear the main burden of the military counterweight in the Gulf Region, while the Europeans and the Germans derive the principal advantage from this. In this point, constructive and precise answers will be required to enable action in future crises. In particular U.S. policy, which supports Israel but which also seeks to preserve Egypt and Saudi Arabia for the West, will demand increased and intensified division of labor from the Europeans. Division of labor, ladies and gentlemen, is also required in other spheres of the controversy with the Soviet Union and its helpers: Central America, the northern part of the NATO area, southern Africa, to list just the most important regions.

All this not only entails increased costs for which, as we know, the funds in this country have been spent long ago. It also requires the clear analysis and leadership capability which the Federal Government has been so obviously lacking to date.

The gas and tube deal with the Soviet Union is being described by the representatives of the Federal Government as a nearly unpolitical transaction intended to ensure jobs in this country and at the same time to improve our own energy supply and that of our neighbors. We are told that the Americans are satisfied with this short-term explanation. But does this also apply to the long-term consequences, ladies and gentlemen? We hope that German politics, all of us, will take it as a warning if the Washington statement says in part, and I quote: that the vulnerability of the West to a potential supply cutoff from any source must be reduced. It is absolutely clear that the steadfastness of the Federal Republic in the alliance would be bound to suffer further if more than 30 percent of our natural gas supply were dependent on Soviet benevolence, capable of being interrupted at any time under technical pretexts and also being extremely prone to breakdowns in view of a lack of technical competence.

What matters is securing translatlantic understanding against protectionism as an instrument of national economic policy, and against that attitude in international business which invokes the patron saint against the danger of fire by saying: spare my house and set fire to others. The West, we, are so deeply tied with our friends through relations of exchange that any policy of dumping one's difficulties at the doorstep of another is bound to entail dangerous consequences. The U.S.-Japanese self-restriction agreement on reduced automobile sales in the United States in truth means for the German producer nothing else but that exports to Germany will be given intensified attention in Japan.

It belongs to this debate that this beginning must not be imitated. We must stop these beginnings not merely in the Western alliance. We and our friends must begin with improving the economy at home.

The new U.S. President has made a courageous beginning, while you, Mr Federal Chancellor, and your government become more and more hopelessly entangled in your own economic-political inability and in the debts policy. [applause]

Concerning the approach to the Third World, which isn't a world, but which consists of many groupings whose contradicting interests are greater than the contradictions vis-a-vis the West, the Europeans call it the North-South dialogue, while the Americans see particularly the East-West conflict activities.

Ladies and gentlemen, this incompatibility of perspectives can create conflicts in the near future in Central America. It will turn out in the Near East that the Americans safeguard our oil with their action in the region and that we are urged to do more than utter moral condemnation and give half-hearted moral support. Where is the framework of a future distribution of burdens?

The CDU/CSU considers it urgently necessary to have a Western-supported concept for the Middle East to safeguard peace in the Gulf region. It ought to be a concept--and that must be also frankly said--where the Federal Government must take over international responsibility beyond the current standards. What this responsibility beyond the current standards, what this responsibility should be like, that will be and must be discussed and worked out with the allies and particularly with the United States. Lack of money and responsibility do not at all suffice as a counterargument in view of the world crises. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, the mentioned current problems can be properly assessed and turned into responsible action if one measures them by what the alliance of the free West means for 30 years to the free world and by what is at stake today for the Western nations including the FRG: our way of life, the dignity of our country and our freedom.

The main impression in Washington is that the United States is a country about to set out for new frontiers, to identity beyond Vietnam and Watergate. We must realize this new identity. It is helpful for us. It is mainly composed of two most different elements: the U.S. citizens' consideration of the great, sacrificing, puritanic virtues that have made the country great, the will to lead again in world politics, to face the Soviet challenge with a power policy balance, inner renovation and their own economic achievements.

The guiding idea of the new administration--I am happy that you have spoken so warmly about this administration, Mr Federal Chancellor--the guiding idea of the new Reagan government, leadership and innovation, set a standard for properly judging our own situation in the FRG. This situation is characterized by tiredness, quarrels, leadership weakness, dangerous ignorance and the preparedness of the leftist public to replace reality with wishful thinking.

While the Americans, thank God, thought of their foreign policy and the threat, hope dominates wide parts of our social democracy that one can ban the dangers through party resolutions and wishes. The American change toward leadership and world policy is unfortunately corresponded by the Germans' clinging to prosperity as the aim of the state and to detente as a substitute for religion. That, however, is a sure recipe for Soviet hegemony in Europe. [applause]

Let me add on this occasion a few ideas on our relations with the United States because the foolish anti-Americanism simply makes it necessary to recall our experience, the experience of our generation, and to pass it on to the young people.

Ladies and gentlemen, the current problems can be assessed correctly and turned into action only in the background of what has united the Germans and the Americans for more than 30 years. Only then will become evident what is at stake today and in the future. After 30 years of the European civil war, beginning in 1914 and ending in 1945, the courage and sacrifices of the Americans achieved for us Europeans a breathing spell in history, courage regarding containment of the Soviet Union, as George F. Kennan called it at that time, preparedness to make economic sacrifices for the war adversaries of yesterday with the care package action and for the later friends with the Marshall Plan--the greatest peace investment in the future. We must never forget these works of peace. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, after these terrible war times, Europe was given a chance again when its worldwide importance had come to an end and when there was a deadly threat from the East, a chance to live a life worth living. After decades of war and need, the older generation could eventually sigh with relief again, it could use its forces for itself and for a free community. The younger people were growing up in a world full of chances and hopes. Is all that forgotten? Shall it go down in dissatisfaction, shall it be sacrificed to childish lack of realism, to the wishful thinking of spoiled children who cannot understand that their happiness was wrought from history through courage and efforts. [laughter]

The fact that you laugh is exemplary evidence of this mood. [applause]

How was it in the years after the war? Our country was an expanse of ruins, the Red Army was prepared to bring in the rest of the harvest after the retreat of the U.S. troops. People lived in fear and terror. The fate of our fellow citizens in the other part of Germany taught many Germans in the Federal Republic to realize that they had a better fate.

There followed the bloody acts in Warsaw, Prague and Budapest in 1953, 1956, 1970, 1976--that is the line of Soviet acts of violence in the center of Europe, at our doorsteps. The crisis in Poland that erupted again last year hasn't come to an end at all yet.

You yourself, Mr Federal Chancellor, see the danger of an intervention in Poland basically changing the entire world political situation. The Soviet Union demonstrated in Afghanistan how it can act if there are thinned out power policy zones. The people, we, the citizens of the Federal Republic and our fellow citizens in West and central Europe, have been saved that fate, saved because there were men at the end of the war who had courage and vision, who knew how to lead: Harry S. Truman in the United States, Churchill in England, Monnet and Schuman in France, De Gasperi in Italy and Konrad Adenauer in the young FRG. They saved the deadly fatigued Europe from experiencing the fate of the East Europeans. To this end, they united the fate of the nations on both sides of the Atlantic in a great alliance combining military cooperation with economic and monetary cooperation and partnership. Irrespective of the diversity, the big differences and movements, irrespective of the crises of daily politics, nothing has tied this alliance more closely together than the awareness that it is only through the common interests of the Atlantic partners that peace can be preserved. It is these ethic bases, ladies and gentlemen, that today's West Europe and the United States share and that we will also share in the future, unless we give up ourselves, our freedom and our dignity. [applause]

The Atlantic alliance, the European Community have their problems and crises. Who will deny that! But only fools will judge what is earthly imperfect by what is heavenly perfect. American protection, ladies and gentlemen, has safeguarded for us West Europeans and us Germans in the FRG three decades of prosperity. It has provided security against the external threat and it has allowed us in the domestic field to create wealth and to set up a network of social services of which our fathers and grandfathers would not even have dreamed. Above all, the alliance with the Americans has allowed those who survived the European catastrophes to put freedom and human dignity into practice. All those who today take so much pleasure in propagating their uneasiness about our prosperity and freedom should honestly ask themselves whether anybody would listen to their lamentation if Europe after the war had not become the partner of the United States. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, it was the American umbrella which made the settlements of Austria and Finland possible. Those who today dream about neutralization and unilateral disarmament, those who dream about peace without weapons will also have to answer the question about the power policy abutment that every neutralization in Europe needs to have in order to be durable. The Federal Republic belongs and belonged to this abutment. In this way, it has made its contribution to peace in Europe. Without the abutment of this alliance, there would no longer be any neutrality anywhere. There would be no peace but the peace of the cemetery and there would be no quiet but the quiet of the gulag.

What our republic needs to do today is call to mind these bases and thus remember the foundations where the values are anchored, which constitute the bases of the FRG, those values which stem from our country's Christian tradition and the tradition of enlightenment.

Balance isn't only a mathematical quantity. Balance must also allow for moral and economic capabilities. Militarily, the Soviet Union has passed us. It threatens us and it wants to make us submissive. But our strength doesn't lie only and above all in the military sphere. It lies in the existence of man whom God gave natural rights and the ability to hope and to set himself goals and to make use of his resources. These are the bases of the free Western alliance which we have to renew with courage, with a realistic sense of proportion and through our work, so as to pass them on to the next generation. [applause]

Mr Federal Chancellor, as for German domestic policy, the conclusions to be drawn are obvious. Leadership is required. Clear statements in decisions which must strengthen our position within the alliance, the awareness of the intellectual and material foundations this Federal Republic is based on, the awakening in the United States and the growing weariness in our own country would perhaps be an interesting spectacle as a contrasting program. But as a prerequisite for our security, for a balance and for peace, this difference cannot last.

Behind the polished forms of alliance policy politeness which was relayed by West German television in its report on your visit, Washington doesn't conceal its deep concern over the fact that the functioning of the present government is paralyzed by the biggest government party through the demagogy of a unilateral renunciation of weapons, through tendencies toward a people's front and an emotional anti-Americanism. That the Germans lack the will to defend themselves and that it is the Americans alone who are urged to come to the front is a state of affairs that cannot remain so in the long run. It is just inconceivable for the U.S. Congress and the American people.

The American people, looking at the map, might realize some day that after all there is an ocean between them and the Soviet Union, while there is nothing between us and the Soviet Union but the thin line which separates war and peace, freedom and submission. This thin line has lasted thus far. Whether it will also last in the future depends on no one but ourselves, the Germans, on our courage, on our ability to pursue realpolitik and on our willingness to defend the bases of our free culture. Mr Federal Chancellor, we will judge the performance of your government by whether topical problems are solved in line with the reason of the alliance and whether you find the way back to a sense of reality and courage regarding the basic questions, courage for telling our nation and your own party that without sacrifices, without performance and without work the security of the FRG and the freedom of us all will be lost. [applause]

LE MONDE REPORTS ON MITTERRAND-SCHMIDT TALKS

LD261249 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 May 81 p 8

[Maurice Delarue report]

[Text] During a 3-and-1/2-hour meeting before and during lunch on Sunday, 24 May--their first meeting since the Socialist leader entered the Elysee--Mitterrand and Schmidt gave each other mutual help on the questions concerning them the most--the defense of the franc and the deployment of the Euromissiles.

The FRG chancellor assured the president of the republic that the German monetary authorities would support the franc. According to a reliable French source, the chancellor raised the subject himself at the beginning of the meeting. According to a German source, the two interlocutors expressed "equal" concern over the "very high" U.S. interest rates and feel it is necessary to pursue efforts to prevent divergence between the European and American economies and to harmonize economic and monetary policy within the Community.

The chancellor--according to the same source--said he is convinced that if the French Government shows the same firm attitude in the future as it has hitherto, the franc's troubles will disappear. "In this context," he said, "French-German cooperation will be continued." Schmidt, on the basis of his experience, apparently feels that speculators try to go as far as possible but give up when opposed. Before the meeting, a leading German figure, who wished to remain anonymous, stated: "The speculators are madmen who will soon regret withdrawing their capital from France."

Also according to a German source, there is "complete and very clear agreement" between Mitterrand and Schmidt on the Euromissiles. The French president and the chancellor apparently think that "the balance of forces" must be restored in Europe but that, at the same time, negotiations must be opened with the USSR to try and bring the forces down to the lowest possible level. This stance is very close to the one adopted at the last NATO council meeting in Rome.

After the meeting, Mitterrand stated that "the problems of armament, disarmament and arms control relating to the well-known questions raised by the deployment of missiles and Euromissiles" had been discussed. The French side has given no further details, pointing out however, that the joint stance indicated by German sources, is in keeping with what Mitterrand constantly said during the election campaign.

Although the French Government's position has not yet been publicly expressed, the mere fact that it has been admitted that the question was discussed marks a change in the French stance. Hitherto, while holding the view in private that the deployment of the U.S. Euromissiles in Europe is necessary to counter the Soviet SS-20 missiles, the French leaders had refused to discuss the matter officially on the pretext that it was not for France to take a stance since it doesn't belong to the integrated Atlantic system. The identity of views which the Germans are reporting should help the chancellor to combat neutralist tendencies in his own party which recently forced him to brandish the threat of resignation.

Other questions discussed during the Elysee meeting were:

French-German relations: "Of course," Mitterrand said, "we intend to perpetuate the ties uniting us and the agreements which govern these relations"--in other words the practice of biannual French-German summits in keeping with the 1963 cooperation treaty. "I reiterated," the president of the republic added, "the importance I attach to trusting relations between our two countries and their two leaders."

For many years, the FRG and France have maintained preferential relations which are not intended to isolate the countries from the European Common Market's general development, but which presuppose discussions on important individual problems and which partly determine the course of world politics. The FRG chancellor is welcome here. Those were my first words. They will continue to be our rule for the future.

Schmidt adopted the same tone. While recalling the roles played by Jean Monnet, Robert Schuman, Adenauer, De Gaulle, Pompidou, Giscard d'Estaing and Brandt in French-German rapprochement, he added: "Above all, I don't think that French-German friendship now depends on individuals. It has become an indestructible fact." Schmidt explained that the next regular French-German summit will take place at the beginning of July (it is due to take place in Dusseldorf on 8 July), in other words, before the summit of Western industrialized countries in Ottawa (21-22 July) and that "contacts" will shortly be established between the two countries' foreign, finance and defense ministers.

Relations with the United States: Schmidt, who had just arrived from Washington, stressed that President Reagan wants to have "far-reaching cooperation with his European allies--France and Germany."

European affairs: According to a German source, Mitterrand asked for a few months before tackling the restructuring of the Community budget and agricultural policy. The next European Council meeting (29 and 30 June) is to hear a commission report on this subject, but Paris and Bonn are apparently agreed on not rushing things. The two governments are, however, prepared to discuss the matter in detail at the London European Council meeting in November. This delay will probably not be appreciated by the British who want to speed up the process.

World problems: Mitterrand indicated that Near and Middle East and Third World problems were discussed. German sources added Central America to that list.

PS AIDE OUTLINES MITTERRAND FOREIGN POLICY

LD261527 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 16 May 81 p 10

[Mario Sampaio interview with French Socialist Party National Secretariat member responsible for international affairs Veronique Neiertz--date and place not given]

[Text] EXPRESSO: How will President Francois Mitterrand's foreign policy differ from President Giscard d'Estaing's?

Veronique Neiertz: Well, the major innovation with a Socialist president will be that France will at last have a foreign policy worthy of the name. Because that which has been portrayed as a foreign policy for the past 7 years has been no more than a series of stances having to do with "gifts, society news and patronage," never French foreign policy. A foreign policy cannot be directed on the basis of this or that special relationship with this or that head of state, for personal reasons, which in President Giscard d'Estaing's case became very personal.... A foreign policy must be directed in accordance with clear, simple and fundamental principles.

Francois Mitterrand's foreign policy will observe three basic principles. The first will be the peoples' right to self-determination and human rights. This might seem like a simple principle, not exactly original, but it does have the merit, if borne constantly in mind, of enabling the French Socialists, who are the only ones to do this in France, to condemn equally explicitly both the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and U.S. interference in El Salvador, both the attacks on trade union freedoms in Poland and the attacks on the same freedoms in Brazil.... And it enables it to state equally explicitly in Jerusalem that the Palestinians are entitled to a homeland and to the Arab countries that Israel is entitled to exist within secure and recognized borders.

The second principle on which Francois Mitterrand's foreign policy will rest is France's independence. This means that this independence must be guaranteed. The strategy adopted by General de Gaulle was a defensive one based on a nuclear deterrent force.

Also, it is on the basis of this defensive strategy that we protest against the manufacture of the neutron bomb, which would set us on the path to an offensive strategy. This doesn't alter the fact that France belongs to an alliance, NATO, and that we will remain loyal to this alliance. But Francois Mitterrand will not cease to demand the clear definition of the scope and substance of NATO because nowadays it is not very clear what commitments bind us. When one isn't very sure about the responsibilities of an alliance of which one is a member, it creates problems--I would even say contradictions with the existence of a strategy such as ours, namely, nuclear deterrence.

So the second principle is France's independence. This is because we also want to escape the rationale of the blocs created at Yalta, the two superpowers which divide the world between them. It is partly because we want to escape this rationale, together with the rest of Europe. We believe that such an approach would lead to the building of a political, social and economic Europe, which doesn't exist. This was one of the aims of the Treaty of Rome, but Europe today is no more than a broad free trade area, and that is all. So there must be a rebuilding of Europe in conjunction with our socialist friends who share our analysis of this aspect.

This leads us directly to the third basic principle of Francois Mitterrand's foreign policy, that is, the quest for a new international economic order, a North-South dialogue, which was Giscard d'Estaing's great idea, but which he abandoned completely. We consider it absolutely fundamental because the majority of conflicts and tensions that we are now witnessing in the world at large originate from the poor countries, which have become the playthings of the major powers which, in turn, tend to react in military terms. Now we say that the only way out of these conflicts and tensions is through economic solutions. This will require a total reform of international monetary mechanisms and it will be by helping poor countries accede to development that the prospects of world peace will be promoted.

So we have three principles, not original, that will form the real basis of a foreign policy: total observance of the peoples' right to self-determination and of human rights, France's independence and the building of Europe, which will make it possible, in conjunction with the other European countries, to facilitate the quest for a new international economic order.

EEC Memberships: "We Always Said It Would Be Difficult"

EXPRESSO: But if countries such as Portugal and Spain are to be forcedly called on to participate in this European building plan, why do there seem to have been two successive and contrasting attitudes on the part of the EEC--first encouragement and then hindrances and discouragement?

Veronique Neiertz: First, a historical reminder. When Greece, Portugal and Spain expressed their desire to join the Common Market once the political preliminaries were completed--since the three countries lived under dictatorships but were happily transformed into democracies--Giscard d'Estaing began by saying that he was in complete agreement, that there were no problems, repeatedly saying "yes," whereas Francois Mitterrand said: "Beware, it will cause problems that must first be considered and examined."

This stance was violently criticized by Giscard d'Estaing. Then he reversed his opinion, asserting that it (the expansion) would indeed create problems which would have to be discussed first. So Francois Mitterrand and the Socialist Party were always very clear in this connection: They said that, not wishing to evade the problems, it will be necessary first to resolve the basic economic problems before proceeding to political commitments.

EXPRESSO: With regard to European political cooperation, how do you explain the fact that Europe sometimes seems to be speaking with several voices at once?

Veronique Neiertz: This is our opinion too. Our present viewpoint leads us to say that Europe doesn't exist. It is simply a free trade area which is what the United States wants it to be. Europe was an obstacle to it and it did its utmost, by means of the necessary pressures, to ensure that Europe would not be formed, at least in the spirit of the Treaty of Rome. This Europe must be built. But this doesn't mean embracing every country on earth. We do indeed possess a strong international tradition and all workers must unite. Our aim in building Europe isn't to ruin the agriculture of the entire south of France. The objective of the Treaty of Rome wasn't to create difficulties for a number of countries or regions in Europe itself. Lengthy preliminary negotiations and fiscal, social and economic adjustments were needed before Europe could start existing in this or that sector. I am thinking about coal and agriculture, so it is natural that the entry of this or that additional country, with its own characteristics and specificity, will give rise to negotiations and adjustments. In fact, the problems facing countries such as Portugal and Spain concern agriculture or fishing. We have always said this. But there will also be industrial problems. I am thinking of textiles, for instance. Our social legislation is very different and we say that creating Europe implies these countries' accession to democracy and better living standards.

EXPRESSO: We believe it was Raymond Barre who coined the expression "variable geometry Europe" or "two-speed Europe." Do you believe Francois Mitterrand will support different forms of treatment within the same Europe, depending on each member country's level of economic and social development?

Veronique Neiertz: We Socialists are absolutely opposed to this idea. There can be no hierarchy among the European partners. For instance, Francois Mitterrand will be opposed to the existence of a Paris-Bonn special axis, which would take decisions in which the other European partners took no part. No, there will be none of this, quite the contrary. We will do our utmost to ensure rapproachement and friendship between the French and German peoples. There is no question of that. But we do believe that when countries become partners in Europe they must be equal-based partners with the same involvement in decisionmaking.

It will therefore also be necessary for them to have the same obligations--be they Portugal, Spain or even Britain.

EXPRESSO: The EEC was formed with 6 member countries. It could become ungovernable with 12. What does Francois Mitterrand intend to do in this connection?

Veronique Neiertz: I do indeed believe that some countries are using the unanimity clause solely in their own interests. And this is not the spirit in which Europe must function. But we also say that since Europe isn't functioning--and it isn't at present--the best way to make it function is not to add further additional countries to an organization that is already paralyzed. It will be necessary at least to get what already exists working. This is something that applies to Europe itself and not to the countries in the process of joining. But Francois Mitterrand also believes that before joining Europe there must be bilateral negotiations between various countries, especially between France and Spain and between France and Portugal. We believe, unlike Giscard d'Estaing, that the negotiations must be extremely rapid and thorough, not only to encourage young democracies such as Portugal's--which in our opinion might sometimes seem fragile--but also to accelerate the negotiation process and to permit a more rapid membership.

First Politics, Then Defense

EXPRESSO: What kind of parallel will the new French president establish between NATO's and Europe's military objectives?

Veronique Neiertz: There can be no European defense policy as long as there is no previously established political Europe. In Europe as it now is, there are all kinds of political situations with regard to NATO. This will not prevent economic and social Europe from embarking on a phase which we consider possible. But let us first start with the political, economic and social Europe before proceeding to defense.

JOSPIN CITES CONDITIONS FOR AGREEMENT WITH PCF

LD261431 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 May 81 p 9

[Report on speech by PS First Secretary Lionel Jospin at PS national convention in Paris on 25 May]

[Excerpt] Shortly after the convention opened, Jospin discussed the need to "extend" the presidential majority which carried Mitterrand to power to the parliamentary level. The first secretary added that victory in the parliamentary election is "necessary in a negative way if the Socialists want to prevent a kind of political crisis." He explained: "Therefore, in these parliamentary elections--and this should be the central watchword of our action--we must give Francois Mitterrand, the new president of the republic, the means of carrying out his action and his policy."

Jospin then condemned "the cynicism and opportunism" which, according to him, are being shown by the "two wings of the right," which have reached agreement "without political basis, without real discussion, on 10 vague points which in no way form a program." He indicated: "In the campaign, it will be very important to show that this is an unprincipled coalition among people who have been divided, who remain divided and who are quickly trying to conceal this split in order to preserve their privileges."

The first secretary explained the choice to be made on 14 and 21 June by the concern to take advantage "as quickly as possible" of the dynamism created in favor of the PS by Mitterrand's victory. He specified that the Socialists will fight their campaign "on the lines upheld by the candidate" who has become president of the republic. Jospin added: "Moreover, to win it will be necessary to use the strength of the presidency and the government. Of course, Francois Mitterrand doesn't intend to intervene in this parliamentary campaign in terms which would not be in keeping with his idea of democracy, but it is obvious that he will indicate what he wants in this campaign in a moderate but at the same time forceful way.... To win we must rally more support behind us without repudiating our nature or the themes on whose basis we fought during the presidential campaign."

Turning to the prospect of the discussions which the PS is to open "with all those who contributed to Francois Mitterrand's victory," Jospin raised the question of relations with the PCF in the following terms: "We who remain attentive observers and who must remain lucid in the midst of euphoria, enthusiasm and excessive illusions, know that although the Communist voters and party members made a decisive contribution to Francois Mitterrand's victory, that doesn't mean that their party's leadership wanted that, at least not in the previous period. For many months, until the past few weeks and until the first round of the presidential election, we were criticized by their leadership in a way which we regarded as unacceptable and unjust and which we don't want to be repeated but which we know might be repeated.... All that means that the conditions for an agreement with the PCP are difficult and are governed by specific rules."

"Afghanistan, Poland...."

Jospin defined three types of vital conditions for reaching a "political agreement" with the PCF:

"We must not abandon any of our principles or any of our fundamental domestic policy stances relating to freedoms, the economic program, the rate of change, the conditions in which changes will be made, notably links with other countries, whether they relate to political life or international life, together with the principles we have adopted on peoples' rights, human rights, the intention to struggle against the arms race, on such sensitive issues as Afghanistan, Poland and the SS-20 missiles. We must maintain our positions in full not only because they are just but also because victory essentially depends on it, in view of the pledges made by our candidate who has now been elected and of our people's wishes.

"We must also obtain a clear promise of solidarity in government action. There can only be one policy or government but there must be solidarity in implementing it in governing France.

"Finally, we must secure a return to an atmosphere worthy of men and women aspiring to govern a country together, in other words, the abandonment of political campaigns against us, although we do of course accept the right to criticize on specific points."

The first secretary explained that, if an agreement is reached, the president and premier "will have to ratify the conclusions on the plan of government action." He said he hopes for an "election agreement," but added: "It is obvious that we cannot form some kind of trade union for outgoing deputies.... We think that it is vital to reach a good agreement on standing down which will benefit all the leftwing forces, taking account of the first round results, and we also think that if there are problems, they can be examined in good faith after the first round."

Jospin added that "regular contacts" are planned between the Elysee, the government and the party. National Secretariat member Paul Quiles intervened on this subject to express the hope that "the party will not be pushed into the background." He indicated that the PS "will change because it will have to ensure relations with the government and integrate the tens of thousands of new members who will join."

NEWLY ELECTED NATIONAL ASSEMBLY TO MEET 2 JULY

LD231230 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 23 May 81

[Summary] The timetable of the parliamentary elections is now known. The candidatures will be accepted from 25 through 31 May. The campaign will open on 1 June. The first round of the elections is set for 14 June and the second round for 21 June. The newly elected National Assembly will meet on 2 July for 15 days.

MITTERRAND, SEGUY DISCUSS MINIMUM WAGE INCREASE

LD261518 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] After the Workers Force Union and the CFDT, Francois Mitterrand received a CGT delegation late this morning at the Elysee. Georges Seguy, who led the delegation, demanded an immediate increase of 20 percent on the minimum wage. And it seems, in fact, that the minimum wage will certainly be increased by about 10 percent right at the beginning of June. Georges Seguy also indicated that his talks with Francois Mitterrand took place in an excellent atmosphere.

FORLANI SUBMITS GOVERNMENT RESIGNATION TO PERTINI

LD261036 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1000 GMT 26 May 81

[Excerpt] The Forlani government, the 40th government of the republic, in office since last 28 October, has indeed resigned. At 1120 this morning, at the end of a rushed last meeting of the government, the president of the Council of Ministers left Palazzo Chigi [seat of government] for the Quirinale [presidential palace], were he is at this moment, to hand over the government's resignation to President Pertini.

Such is the consequence of the serious situation caused after the P-2 Masonic lodge affair blew up. During the brief Council of Ministers meeting, Forlani informed the members of the government about the situation which had arisen after the decision of Craxi, the Socialist Party secretary, not to take part in the previously announced summit of the majority yesterday--a situation which the president of the Council of Ministers declared to be such as to force him to accept the necessary consequences.

Caretaker Role

LD261128 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1103 GMT 26 May 81

[Gian Battista Fenu report from the Italian seat of government in Rome--live]

[Excerpt] Forlani has resigned. The president of the republic, who received Forlani at 1130, accepted the government's resignation but asked the executive, according to convention, to remain in office to look after day-to-day affairs. The president will commence consultations at 1730 today.

More on Resignation

AU261530 Rome ANSA in English 1525 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Rome, 26 May (ANSA)--The Italian Republic's 40th government stepped down today. Premier Arnaldo Forlani submitted the resignation of his four-way ruling coalition of Christian Democrats (DC), Socialists (PSI), Social Democrats (PSDI) and Republicans (PRI) after a brief cabinet meeting this morning.

Shortly afterward, the Socialists said they would vigorously push for the formation of a new government having a Socialist premier. This tack was announced by Socialist State Participation Minister Gianni de Michelis as he came out of the meeting.

The Forlani team lasted barely seven months and one week, having been launched on October 18, 1980. Its lifespan was noticeably under the average for the previous governments which was around 11 months. Observers attached political significance to this, as a sign that Italy's index of governability has been falling off in recent years.

After the decision to step down was reached this morning, Forlani went to the Quirinale Palace to submit the cabinet's resignation to head of state Sandro Pertini. Pertini decided to start a first round of consultations this afternoon to settle the crisis.

The head of state will meet with former presidents of the republic Giuseppe Saragat and Giovanni Leone from 17:30 to 18:30 local time. At 18:30 he will meet with Senate Speaker Amintore Fanfani and at 19:00 with House Speaker Nilde Jotti. On Wednesday he will receive delegations from the various parties throughout the day. Tomorrow's consultations will begin at 9:00.

This is Pertini's timetable during Wednesday morning's round of talks.

9:00 With the Christian Democratic party delegation.
9:45 With the Communist Party (PCI) delegation.
10:30 With the Socialists.
11:15 With the "MSI" neofascist movement.
12:00 With the Social Democrats.

The Wednesday consultations will be resumed in the afternoon at 16:00 local time according to the following timetable:

16:00 With the Republican Party delegation.
16:45 With the Radical Party delegation.
17:30 With the Liberal Party (PLI) delegation.
18:15 With the independents leftwing group in the Senate.
18:45 With the Proletarian Democratic Party (PDUP) delegation.
19:15 With the mixed group in the Senate.
19:30 With the mixed group in the House.
19:45 With the South Tyrol-Volkspartei delegation.

Although the crisis was offically opened today, it was already clear yesterday that the Forlani government would be the next casualty of the mounting scandal surrounding the powerful P-2 Masonic lodge. The Freemasons' scandal broke wide open last week when Forlani disclosed a list of more than 900 purported members of the P-2 lodge, short for Propaganda-2, considered a secret power center by investigating magistrates. The names of three cabinet ministers two Christian Democrats and a Socialist, and three undersecretaries in Forlani's government were on the lost.

The only government official who quit when his name was revealed was Justice Minister Adolfo Sarti (DC), who resigned from office Saturday although he denied being a member of the power-wielding lodge, which has been implicated in a wide range of criminal, political and financial misdeeds. Labor Minister Franco Foschi (DC), Foreign Trade Minister Enrico Manca (PCI), and the three undersecretaries all stayed in their posts.

The secretaries of the coalition parties were supposed to have met in Rome yesterday to decide whether or not to order a cabinet reshuffle, purging the government of suspected Freemasons. But the meeting did not take place. PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi announced Monday morning that he would not attend because he believed the whole affair needed to be reviewed first by each party.

When Craxi announced plans to desert the political summit, Forlani went to the chief of state to brief him on the situation.

The first to indicate that a government crisis was in the offing yesterday was PRI Secretary Giovanni Spadolini. Shortly afterwards, PSDI Secretary Pietro Longo, whose name is one of those on the lodge list, voiced the same opinion. This morning the crisis became official.

Given the exceptional rapidity with which Pertini is getting consultations underway the parties will hold their own leadership meetings earlier than planned.

P-2 Investigations To Continue

AU260927 Rome ANSA in English 0910 GMT 26 May 81

[Excerpt] Rome, 26 May (ANSA)--Investigations into the elite "P-2" Masonic lodge have have spread out to encompass a major kick-backs scandal and a mysterious murder case.

Judges probing the powerful lodge, whose members reputedly include government ministers, members of parliament, judges, armed forces and police officers, bankers, journalists and other ranking figures in the Italian establishment, have apparently uncovered new details about a 1979 oil deal between Italy's state-run "ENI" natural fuels corporation and the Saudi Arabian company, Petromin.

They have also jammed into another investigation underway into the slaying in Rome last year of journalist Mino Pecorelli, the head of a political gossip weekly and news agency.

It was learnt late last night that former Premier Francesco Cossiga testified at length Sunday about the ENI-Petromin affair. Cossiga was in power when the scandal broke, when reports alleged that some 85 million dollars of slush funds were involved in the Italian-Saudi Arabian oil sale.

The "commission" was officially pocketed by a Panamanian company called Sophilau for its role in mediating the contract but there were strong suspicions that much of that money made its way back to leading Italian politicians.

The oil scandal surfaced in recent days after it was learnt that a large file on the contract was found in the home of Licio Gelli, the grand master of the P-2 Masonic lodge. Gelli, who is in hiding abroad, has been slapped with two arrest warrants, one for political and military spying and another for illegally procuring information concerning the security of the Italian state.

The warrants were apparently issued in connection with government documents found when magistrates in Milan ordered a police search of Gelli's villa in the Tuscan town of Arezzo earlier this year.

One of these documents, according to press leaks, was a report Cossiga drew up on the alleged kickbacks scandal in the ENI-Petromin deal. The document was rounded out with copies of internal company reports by ENI on the progress on negotiations with Petromin and Sophilau.

Magistrates also questioned former ENI President Giorgio Mazzanti, who lost the post when the scandal broke out. Mazzanti reportedly denied that the money turned over to Sophilau ever got back to Italy in his account to investigators Monday. The former ENI president, whose name was among the more than 900 men of the "P-2" membership list made public last week, denied that he ever offered any "favors" to the grand master, Gelli. He was shown the ENI-Petromin dossier found in Gelli's home and asked to indicate the office from which it was lifted.

Colon Antonio Viezzer, another member of the lodge and former head of a disbanded government intelligence organization, was cross-examined yesterday too.

Viezzer, who was arrested Friday on the same charges as Gelli on the suspicion that he turned over secret security documents to the Freemasonary chieftain, may also be cited in connection with the Pecorelli slaying.

Magistrates reportedly suspect that the muckraking journalist's death came as a result of a dispute with his "P-2" brothers.

CALVO-SOTELO ADDRESSES CONGRESS ON BARCELONA SIEGE

LD262146 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1445 GMT 26 May 81

[Statement by Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo before Congress of Deputies on weekend bank siege in Barcelona--live]

[Excerpts] I am not going to give a detailed narrative of what happened. I do not believe that it is my job as prime minister to do that. What I do want to do is outline some of the most important points in the long and difficult process. Once we had knowledge of the communique issued by the gunmen , they were told in the first stage that those whose release they were demanding did not wish to be released and that the country they had named as their destination was not prepared to grant them asylum. On this point I should like to highlight the efficiency and speed of diplomatic action and the cooperation afforded by the Barcelona press, which brought out special editions to publicize this information in a trustworthy fashion.

Second, the expected reaction came from the gunmen; they refused to accept the information given them and they demanded, with the threat of carrying out immediate executions, that their demands be met. I have no need to stress to this house how at such moments one feels the full weight of responsibility. But it is my duty to bear such responsibility and so I bore it. However, I do wish to repeat that we wanted to make clear to the gunmen our most absolute firmness in defending the state.

Then there was a third stage, which was the negotiation of how the gunmen would surrender. I should like to stress the bravery shown by the government delegate and the director-general of police in going to the front of the bank to speak with the leader of the gunmen. The aim of this was not only to negotiate their surrender but also to obtain information which would be of assistance in the ultimate intervention by the security forces if, as was becoming more and more apparent, this was going to be necessary.

And this was the fourth and last stage in the process. Once we had become convinced that the circumstances permitted intervention, both from the state of mind apparent among the gunmen and also from the status of the hostages, authorization was given for the security forces to intervene at the moment which seemed best from a tactical point of view. And this was done, with the happy outcome of which we are all aware.

With the gunmen now having been under interrogation for only 1 and 1/2 days, there remain some points which, despite the government's desire for clear explanations, cannot as yet be clearly seen, (?free of all doubts).

First, there is the problem of the number of gunmen. Information on the number (?changed) as the siege proceeded, and came either from the gunmen themselves or from the hostages as they were released. As far as the latter are concerned--and I personally spoke at length with some of them--it must be said that at the moment they were released their state of mind did not permit them to give an exact account of what they had seen, that their state of mind when they had been inside, under the threat from the gunmen, had not enabled them to make precise observations. It should further be said that they had been held in groups in different places, and that none of them--not even the cashier, who as everyone knows played a most notable part throughout the siege--none of them, I repeat, ever had an overall view of what was happening or had the opportunity to see all the gunmen together. In addition, the latter apparently frequently changed their clothing and kept their faces covered at all times, which made it much more difficult to keep count of them.

Statements made at police headquarters in Barcelona and others made on television, which you, ladies and gentlemen, undoubtedly heard, mention figures between 10 and 12. Some of the hostages had spoken originally of 15, but this was always somewhat uncertain. It was the gunmen themselves who spoke first of 20 and later 24.

And it was these figures, undoubtedly given for purposes of simulation and in order to exaggerate their own strength--and I shall speak more about this later--these were the figures which reached the public. They reached the public perhaps as a result of a wish on the part of those directing the operation in Barcelona to provide information frankly. These people, probably hastily, let it be known that the gunmen were saying that they numbered 20 or 24, or that there appeared to be 20 or 24 of them.

A total of 12 weapons were recovered. It is reasonable to believe that some of the attackers--the one with the submachine gun--might also have carried a pistol. It seems unlikely that there might have been unarmed gunmen.

The doubt might be raised that one or two might have got away among the hostages, especially when these were leaving in large groups. From the first moment that the order was given in Barcelona that all hostages, all those physically able to do so, should be taken to police headquarters for identification, this was done. This was done systematically. It therefore seems unreasonable to believe that the gunmen, who according to some reports are missing, could have used this opportunity for escaping.

Moreover, the statements that the detained gunmen started making to police on the night of Sunday to Monday and throughout yesterday point to a total figure of 10 for the whole group. An 11th man arrested was the brother of one of the 10 and it appears that he was not inside the bank.

If the successive figures given failed to tally, this was not due--and I wish to make this quite clear--to any desire to conceal information, but rather the opposite. It was due to the desire to provide such information, indeed, to provide it early, before rigorous verification was possible.

In few events of this kind has there been such extensive information given and therefore it is very unlikely it could be entirely without discrepancies. So, as far as the question of numbers is concerned, there has been no intention whatsoever on the part of the government to cover up anything, nor has there been excessive caution or precaution. Rather, and I ought to (?ponder) this, what there has been is a lack of caution or precaution, inasmuch as the operational headquarters set up opposite the Banco Central in Barcelona put out unchecked information which had come from the gunmen themselves.

A second point on which doubts have been expressed concerns the gunmen's identity. Their names have appeared in the press. The interior minister has the facts on their background. The investigation into their past activities is open and, in several cases, will continue.

As far as investigations have gone so far, no evidence has been found of any of them being a member, now or in the past, of the state security forces.

A third question is that of their political affiliation. If at an early stage the Barcelona police spoke of anarchist connections this was because there are police files on some of the gunmen, including one on the man who appears to be the leader of the group. Those files record links with groups of that nature, with the autonomous anarchist group. This does not mean that the initiative and responsibility for these events belong to anarchist organizations. It means, purely and simply, that at least two of the gunmen had previous connections with anarchist groups recorded in the Barcelona police files.

Ninety minutes after the questioning began, that is to say, at midnight on Sunday, the secretary of state for information stated that first signs pointed to an operation planned and financed by extreme rightwing sources. This was stated by the secretary of state with a view to providing rapid information. Maybe it was overly hasty, maybe it was premature, but it was necessary to meet the demand for facts.

I spoke earlier of "simulation," and I said I would have a little more to say about that. What has occurred in this case was an exercise in simulation, a bluff pursued systematically by the gang right up to the final hours of the siege; a bluff regarding the number of gunmen--making the number seem greater than it really was--in order to exaggerate the strength they commanded. A bluff when they spoke of having explosives when the fact is that there were no explosives. A bluff when they spoke of drilling holes to plant these explosives and blow up the entire building if the security forces tried to enter. A bluff by simulating military attitudes, using commanding tones of voice and the device of addressing one another by numbers; and also in their conversations with the government delegate-general and the inspector-general of police, in which they made repeated mention of concepts of honor, rank and discipline.

These are the facts we have so far though the police have only begun their investigations. We are collaborating with the French police to track down the man who originally contacted the leader of the gang. The government intends to keep this house and public opinion informed of the progress of the investigations; and as I have stated before, will provide this house with the reports drawn up by the Ministry of the Interior as well as the recordings of the telephone conversations with the gunmen.

I must admit that there remains a basic question that worries us all, the government included, a question to which I am not at this stage in a position to reply conclusively. The question is, who was behind these events?

I have indicated the directions in which early leads are pointing, but it would be irresponsible of me to go any further because at this stage there are no new facts to substantiate these suspicions. As soon as such facts are established they will be conveyed to the house and to the public.

The government does not believe this to be the spontaneous initiative of a group of common criminals. Whatever the truth of their first statements, and we know that the gunmen are capable of simulation and deceit, and therefore it may be that new facts will emerge in the next few days [passage indistinct] suspicion that the action may be part of a broader context.

The Ministry of the Interior is working on a number of different hypotheses, and it is not discounting any hypothesis, just as the government did not discount any while the events (?were taking place). So this naturally means that it is not even discounting the hypothesis that individuals belonging to the civil guard might have been involved in the siege, in particular possibly in a back-up role to this [word indistinct]. Although it has not been further confirmed, the minister of defense has spoken of the presence in Andorra of Capt Sanchez Valiente, which the intelligence service had indicated. So far there are no other facts to confirm this line, [words indistinct] this hypothesis. But I repeat that the government is not rejecting any hypothesis and it is urging that they all be investigated until total clarification of the facts is achieved.

Parliamentary Responses

LD270255 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] When the prime minister finished speaking, it was the turn of the various parliamentary groups to speak.

Antonio Carro Martinez, deputy of the Democratic Coalition, took the rostrum. He called for an investigation into what and who was behind this siege, and for the good name of one of the institutions of the armed forces to be restored. He also spoke of the early reports given in the press to the effect that there had been members of the Civil Guard taking part in the siege. Finally, Sr Carro said that his group condemns violence and terrorism and he expressed a wish to see democracy consolidated.

The next to speak was the extreme rightwing deputy, Blas Pinar, representing the National Union group. He complained that the armed group had been described as extreme rightwing, that this had subsequently been confused with "fascist," then with "New Force"--Pinar's own party--and finally with his own name. And he added that these events occurred because the intelligence services are not working properly and once again had been caught unaware.

Ernest Lluch, of the Catalan Socialists group, said that the situation had been resolved well, but that there are public misgivings over the way in which the struggle against terrorism is being waged. These misgivings have been generated by recent events, for instance the Almeria affair, which still has not been cleared up. There is a lack of information on the black intrigues of extreme rightwing terrorism, and also on measures being taken against individuals and organizations of the extreme right and the so-called yellow commandos. To quiet the general anxiety, some loose ends must be tied up, events such as the Almeria affair and 23 February, in order to create a climate of confidence.

The Communist representative on this occasion was the Catalan deputy Jordi Sole Tura, since the group's spokesman, Santiago Carrillo, is on a trip to Romania. The speaker asked the prime minister if negotiations had taken place with the armed gang to resolve the conflict,a conflict which he noted had occurred at a moment when it caused a great shock in the country. This siege, he said, was not an isolated incident but comes after 23 February and the Almeria events. He asked: Who is behind all this? There is distrust of the government because it has done nothing to resolve those other problems (?which have connections with this one). The Communist deputy ended by calling for a more broadly based government, and he drew the conclusion that the problem lies in the Calvo-Sotelo government's lack of credibility.

The prime minister replied to him by saying that there had not been any kind of negotiations or secret pact with the gunmen, and secondly that complete information is still not available because investigations and interrogations have not yet ended.

The main opposition leader, PSOE Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez, began his contribution by saying that there are two quite separate points which must be distinguished. First, there is the objectively observable account of events, which as far as is known consists of the fact of a gang of terrorists, whatever their methods, aims and weaponry, took over a bank and took hostages which were rescued safely after a number of hours.

The other stems from the moment of the rescue, with the dual feelings stemming from joy over the events coming to a happy end mixed with the disbelief which probably the government also feels. The Socialist opposition leader added that the operation appears to have been clearly political since, as the government itself has admitted, it was aimed at creating a particular kind of feeling in certain military corps and in a particular place, namely Catalonia. Felipe Gonzalez stated that he is sure that the government itself believed this, though he could not yet prove it; and he went on with a warning that all of this is a conspiracy by enemies of democracy in Spain, which he described as murderers of freedom and as deep-rooted black intrigues attempting to generate opposition to bodies such as the Civil Guard, which is accepted by the Spanish people at all levels. Felipe Gonzalez finally warned that the government will have to resolve to cut short the activities of these black schemers and get to the bottom of this conspiracy, which was perfectly planned and aimed solely at sinking the democratic state. Terrorism, under whatever sign, he said, will not put an end to the democratic state for the moment but it is working towards a major blow to finish it off. The way to avert this is to call for a powerful commitment to democracy by all and for a firm government.

After Felipe Gonzalez's speech, Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo spoke again, saying that the leader of the PSOE had merely said with greater emphasis what he himself had stated in his initial address. On the subject of the incredulity to which Sr Gonzalez had alluded in connection with those involved in the siege, Sr Calvo-Sotelo said that they had been expecting that when the siege was ended uniforms might be found, that there might have been members of the Civil Guard among those involved, but he had been very happy to find that that was not the case. He repeated that the government was not discounting any of the hypotheses suggested. He said the government knew that democracy was under threat from both the extreme right and the extreme left and it had taken the measures it considered necessary so far and would take further ones as necessary. He also said that, like the opposition leader, he is in favor of freedom and democracy.

After some further words from Felipe Gonzalez, saying that he was pleased to be in agreement with the prime minister that the democratic state is under attack from both the extreme right and the extreme left, the prime minister closed the debate by stressing once again the agreement between government and opposition over the need to see the investigations through to the end and to fight for the defense of freedoms.

REPORTS ON LEADERSHIP OF BANK SEIZURE GANG

Government-Connected Sources

LD261434 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] According to sources connected with the authorities in charge of the matter, Juan Jose Martinez, the leader of the gunmen who occupied the Banco Central in Barcelona, has stated under interrogation that he does not know the person who planned the operation and that he was told merely that this was a very important action. The same sources say that Juan Jose Martinez claims that he first met a man he did not know in Perpignan, Frnace, from whom he received 1.5 million pesetas of the total of 5 million promised.

On 25 March the leader assembled a group consisting of common criminals and former members of militant groups. Most were unemployed and living in southern France and Catalonia. On 12 May, according to the same sources, Juan Jose Martinez met a stranger in Barcelona and received from him a bag with a Sten submachinegun and six pistols. The final details of the operation were conveyed at this meeting, but its purpose remained unclarified. The sources say that Juan Jose Martinez was a paid police informer from 1976-79 and helped in the dissolution of anarchist groups in Barcelona by working as an infiltrator.

All the men involved in the Barcelona siege are being held under the antiterrorism law. They are being kept in solitary confinement at Barcelona central jail and are being subjected to intensive questioning by the police. In accordance with the antiterrorism law, they must be placed at the disposal of the judiciary within 10 days at the most.

"Anarchist" Sources

NC261103 Paris AFP in English 1053 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Barcelona, Spain, 26 May (AFP)--Gunmen who seized the Central Bank here at the weekend taking over 200 hostages were led by a police informer, anarchist circles said today. Enrique Buendia, secretary-general of the anarchist trade union CNT, said that Jose Martinez Gomez, wanted in connection with the seizure--which ended Sunday with the safe release of all hostages by a Spanish anti-terrorist squad--had infiltrated anarchist circles on police orders. He added that Martinez also worked for the Civil Guard.

Yesterday, a French police source said that Martinez and his two brothers-in-law Carlos and Cristobal Valenzuela were wanted in France for a series of holdups across the border around Perpignan that netted a total of 1.6 million francs ($300,000) late last year and early this.

Barcelona anarchist sources said today that Martinez--known as "El Rubio" (The Blonde)--was believed to have informed on two members of the "free autonomous groups", Bernard Pensiot and Jose Palau, as they attempted to cross into France with illegally-held arms in 1977. The sources said that when arrested along with several anarchists suspected of involvement with an arson case in 1978, Martinez was the only person to be freed almost at once. They added that when in jail he was nearly lynched by other inmates.

Meanwhile the newspaper DIARIO 16, quoting official sources, said that "El Rubio" had been given five million pesetas (over $50,000) in Perpignan to finance the Barcelona raid. The newspaper said that on two trips to France in March, the suspect met a certain Antonio Luis who briefed him on the assault on the bank. Quoting sources close to the police, DIARIO 16 added that Martinez met this person again in a Barcelona cafe on May 12 and took delivery of arms for the hostage seizure.

Coup Plotter Identified

LD240852 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0800 GMT 24 May 81

[Text] The EFE agency, citing reliable sources, has reported that one of the attackers in the Banco Central in Barcelona has been identified as Civil Guard Capt Gil Sanchez Valiente. A spokesman of the Directorate General of the Civil Guard in Madrid said the Civil Guard had not released this report. He added that he had no information on this and had been completely ignorant of the possibility that Gil Sanchez is one of the attackers.

As you will recall, this Civil Guard officer has been connected with the 23 February assault on the parliament. He fled to London a few hours after the event and took with him a number of documents connected with the coup attempt which he later deposited in a London bank. A recent administrative order issued by the Directorate General of the Civil Guard reported Gil Sanchez missing from the force after 2 months AWOL.

Confirmation Given

LD241102 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0950 GMT 24 May 81

[Excerpts] The second in command of the attackers on the Banco Central has been identified as Civil Guard Capt Gil Sanchez Valiente, according to official confirmation given to EUROPA PRESS. According to statements by some of the relatives of the hostages and to a EUROPA PRESS report the hostages could still number around 150 and not 100 as is being reported by official sources.

ADDITIONAL COMMENTS ON TERRORISTS' BANK SEIZURE

Interior Ministry Note

LD240047 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2305 GMT 23 May 81

[Excerpts] In connection with the Barcelona events, the Interior Ministry issued a note this evening which states inter alia that the group who occupied the Banco Central issued a communique to the effect that their action is aimed at bringing red terrorism to an end and clearing the names of those involved in the occupation of parliament on 23 February.

The note adds that the defense lawyers of the people charged in connection with the 23 February incident have rejected the group's proposals.

The Interior Ministry stresses that this is an absolutely isolated incident that has met with the strongest repudiation from all sections of the country's public opinion.

Detained Officers Deny Ties

LD232008 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] Lieutenant Colonel Tejero, upon hearing news of the attack on the Banco Central, entrusted his defense lawyer, Angel Lopez Montero, with distributing a communique in which he categorically rejects use of his name in any kind of action directed against innocent people. The communique continues, saying that Lieutenant Colonel Tejero, from his imprisonment in the Castillo de La Palma, appeals to those responsible for the incident, whatever their ideology, their motives and their intentions, to release immediately the innocent people who remain hostage.

Meanwhile, Col Jose Ignacio San Martin, former chief of staff of the Brunete 1st Armored Division, who is currently in preventive custody in connection with the events of 23 February, made a statement at 1700 in which he says that he has absolutely nothing to do with the events at the Banco Central and that he disapproves of and rejects such acts.

Gen Torres Rojas Denounces Attack

LD231433 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] The defense lawyer for Gen Torres Rojas and Civil Guard Lieutenant Nunez (Ruano), both allegedly implicated in the 23 February coup, has expressed the two military men's repudiation of the methods used by the men who attacked the Banco Central in Barcelona. He says that the methods are, and we quote, "diametrically opposed to their ideas." According to the lawyer, both military men will only make use of the laws available in the legislation in force in order to demonstrate their innocence; they will never be able to agree with this type of action, which is exactly what they have fought against all of their lives. Gen Torres Rojas is one of the four people whose release has been demanded by the attackers of the Banco Central in Barcelona. They also demand that the four men be flown to Argentina.

Catalonian Generalitat's Note

LD232038 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] The Secretariat General of the Generalitat of Catalonia has issued the following note:

The Generalitat most forcefully condemns the events taking place at the Banco Central in Barcelona. Apart from its criminal nature, the Generalitat denounces the intention to destabilize the country and provoke violent clashes which might lead to irreparable situations.

The note also says that the president of the Generalitat once more emphasizes the importance that the next few weeks might hold for coexistence, democracy and autonomy, and alerts the population of Catalonia to attempts to undermine the policy of harmony, understanding and the peaceful and responsible evolution of Spanish society. The note ends by saying that the president of the Generalitat also wishes to tell the country that the forces and institutions entrusted with guarding public order and protecting legality are acting and will act with a high sense of responsibility as regards protection of the lives of our fellow citizens in order to ensure a successful end to the conflict.

Rightist Leader's Disavowal

LD240149 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 24 May 81

[Statement by Blas Pinar, leader of Fuerza Neuva; time and place not given--recorded]

[Excerpts] To begin with I do not believe that there is any connection between the events of 23 February and those that took place today in Barcelona.

The mass media say that the extreme right is directly involved in this affair. As a result of this propaganda, in a virtually inevitable association, broad sections of the Spanish people identify Fuerza Nueva with the extreme right. In this connection I wish to make the following statements:

First, Fuerza Nueva is not a political group of the right or of the left because it does not accept the liberal system. Therefore, not being of the right, it can hardly be of the extreme right.

Second, even if Fuerza Nueva were really a group of the extreme right, it has its own ethics which, according to the principles enshrined in its program, reject any morally dishonest methods of political activity.

Last, with regard to this affair at the Banco Central, it is clear that not even the old saying that the end justifies the means has an application in this case. For the means is radically dishonest. The armed occupation of the main office of a bank where there are people conducting their personal or commercial business is a dishonest act, whatever its goal. But the end too is dishonest, for I believe that it is in the interests of the men, the soldiers involved in the famous action of 23 February, to stand before a court to explain the reasons for their participation in the said action, and especially, when and from whom they received the orders to carry it out.

If someone like Lieutenant Colonel Tejero rejected the offer of a plane and 50 million pesetas on the tense and difficult night of 23 to 24 February, it is inconceivable that he should now seek means to leave the country and evade his responsibilities.

PCE Condemns Incident

LD231522 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1445 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] The Spanish Communist Party [PCE] has issued a communique in connection with the attack on the Banco Central of Barcelona by an ultra rightwing group. It says:

The PCE expresses its most strenuous condemnation of the incident which, apart from constituting both an intolerable attempt to blackmail democracy in our country and an attack on the constitution, is also a provocation of the armed forces on the very day that celebrations in honor of them begin [Spain's Armed Forces Week begins 24 May].

The communique also says that the incident is aimed at fomenting a permanent climate of insecurity among public opinion in an attempt to prevent normal and peaceful coexistence between all Spaniards.

The second point of the communique says: The PCE urges the government to not yield to this unacceptable blackmail and to adopt the measures necessary to safeguard the lives of the hostages and to detain the terrorists and subject them to the full force of the law.

The final point in the communique says: Once more the PCE expresses its confidence in the calmness and the steadfastness of the Spanish workers and people in the defense of democracy. It repeats its conviction that an indispensible condition for defending freedom, democracy and the constitution is using the maximum energy necessary to combat putschism and terrorism of any brand.

FINLAND

COMMUNIST PARTY HOLDS 19TH PARTY CONGRESS

Call for Unity

LD221205 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0930 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] The deputy chairman of the Finnish Communist Party [SKP], Taisto Sinisalo, thinks that the time is ripe for restoring the party's unity. Opening the 19th party congress of the SKP in Helsinki today, Sinisalo pointed out that only a year ago the idea of SKP unification was illusory. However, he stressed that there is now reason to speak in all seriousness about the new prerequisites for an improvement of unity. He mentioned certain district statements which were unified in a new way, as well as the activities of many trade unions that are more unified than before. However, Sinisalo stressed at the same time that unity will not return by itself. For that joint work, joint efforts and patience are needed. The speaker pointed out that courage is also needed in order to revise rigid attitudes. According to him, the SKP cannot recover if it talks backwards toward the future. Speaking on one of the chief topics of internal differences within the SKP, government cooperation, Sinisalo pointed out that there are no differences in principle concerning either participation in the government or the basis for the government. The problems arise from the attitude toward the government's policy.

This afternoon, SKP Chairman Aarne Saarinen will present his own statement on the state of the party. He will deliver the Central Committee's action report to the party congress. The elections of leaders, anticipated with excitement, and the adoption of the chief resolutions will take place on Sunday, the last day of the congress.

The delegation was cordially welcomed at the Helsinki-Vantaa Airport by Anna-Lissa Hyvoenen, member of the Finnish Communist Party Central Committee Politburo, and Erkki Kivimaeki, secretary of the Central Committee.

BCP's Delegate's Address

AU221921 Sofia BTA in English 1850 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] Helsinki, 22 May (BTA)--A greetings address of the CC of the BCP to the 19th Congress of the Finnish Communist Party, read today by Mr Georgi Atanasov, secretary of the CC of the BCP, says in part: "We are strongly impressed by the clear and principled stands of the Finnish Communist Party in support of the consistent peace policy of the Soviet Union and the other fraternal socialist countries, to their efforts to remove the threat of a new war, for curbing the arms race, in defence of the achievements of detente, for peace, security and mutually advantageous cooperation."

The message denounces the growing military activity of imperialism in all parts of the world, the growing pressure of the imperialists on the European public to deploy new nuclear missiles of medium range in Western Europe. "Unfortunately, the latest NATO session this year made no corrections in the line of confrontation pursued by imperialism. NATO turned its back on the constructive initiative posed at the 26th CPSU Congress".

Congress Proceedings

LD221932 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] A front against the party leadership is strengthening at the Finnish Communist Party [SKP] Congress in Helsinki. Some important district organizations representing the socalled SKP majority have already announced at the congress that they would like to see changes in the party leadership. It is particularly significant that the powerful district of Lapland decided after a vote to demand that Chairman Aarne Saarinen be replaced by a new chairman. The decision of the Lapland district also calls for a change of the first deputy chairman, Taisto Sinisalo. It remains to be seen in the course of the congress how much support the attempt to change the chairman receives.

The main theme at the 19th party congress, which is to continue over the weekend, is the reunification of the party. Chairman Saarinen today also dealt with the presidential election. According to Saarinen, the Communists are to put up their own presidential candidate for the election in 1984.

In his view, the party's own candidate is necessary as there is no candidate in the offing that could be the joint presidential candidate of the left and the center or the candidate of the left.

RCP's Gainuse Attends

AU231839 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1750 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] Helsinki, 23 May (AGERPRES)--The RCP delegation led by Alexandrina Gainuse, member of the Executive Political Committee of the CC of the RCP, now in Helsinki to attend the proceedings of the 19th Congress of the Finnish Communist Party, met with Kalevi Sorsa, chairman of the Finnish Social Democratic Party.

The interview occasioned an exchange of cordial greetings between Nicolae Ceausescu and Kalevi Sorsa. During the interview, opinions were exchanged on some questions of the international relations, on security and cooperation in Europe in particular. Emphasis was placed on the good relations between the RCP and the Finnish Social Democratic Party and the joint wish was expressed to further develop and expand them.

The RCP delegation also met with Marjatta Vaananen, deputy chairman of the Centre Party. During the talks conducted on the occasion, satisfaction was expressed at the good relations between the Socialist Democracy and Unity Front of Romania and the Centre Party. The two parties' wish was highlighted of further developing those relations. [as received] The RCP delegation had another interview with Jorma Hentila, secretary-general of the Finnish People's Democratic League. On the occasion, opinions were exchanged on the concerns and tasks of the Finnish People's Democratic League and of the Socialist Democracy and Unity Front. Satisfaction was expressed at the relations of friendship between the two organizations just as the common wish to develop them in the interests of the two countries, of the Romanian and Finnish peoples.

CPCZ Delegation

LD231916 Prague CTK in English 1655 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] Helsinki, 23 May (CETEKA)--Czechoslovak Communist Party [CPCZ] Central Committee Secretary Mikulas Beno appreciated here Saturday the resolve with which the Communist Party of Finland comes out (?against) the aggressive policy of imperialism and for peace, disarmament and extension of cooperation with the Soviet Union and other socialist countries.

Addressing the 19th Congress of the Finnish Party on its second day today, the head of the Czechoslovak Communist Party delegation noted that reactionary imperialist circles, especially in the United States, want to reverse detente.

They have set out on the road of the arms race and would like to turn Europe again into a continent of tension and a potential theatre of a nuclear missile war. He stressed that "mankind is now faced with no more important task than to contain and repulse these dangerous plans", and voiced support for the peace initiatives presented by Leonid Brezhnev to the 26th Soviet Communist Party Congress.

Mikulas Beno recalled the long-time traditions of relations between the communist parties of Czechoslovakia and Finland, based on loyalty to the ideas of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism.

He stressed that the 16th Congress of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia analyzed past results and laid down concrete tasks for the future which were received by the whole party and public with optimism and determination to fulfill them. He also mentioned the 60th anniversary of the founding of the Czechoslovak party which is now being celebrated.

RCP Conveys Message

AU232034 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1840 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] Helsinki, 23 May (AGERPRES)--On behalf of the RCP, Alexandrina Gainuse, member of the Executive Political Committee of the CC of the RCP, head of the Romanian delegation to the Congress of the Finnish Communist Party underway in Helsinki, conveyed the delegates a cordial salute and wishes of success in the proceedings of the congress. She pointed to the positive course of the relations of friendship and collaboration between the RCP and the Finnish Communist Party and expressed the conviction that they would further develop. Referring, among other things, to the international policy of the RCP and the Romanian state, the speaker stressed that the policy started from the deep-going revolutionary social and national transformations, from the changes occurred in the balance of forces on a world plane.

In her international activity--Alexandrina Gainuse said--Romania attaches great attention to the development of her relations with all socialist states, to the expansion of her links with the developing countries, with the nonaligned ones, with all the states of the world, irrespective of their social system, under the principles of full equality of rights, national independence and sovereignty, non-interference in domestic affairs and mutual advantage, renunciation of the use or threat of force, thus taking part in the world exchange of material and spiritual assets.

The RCP and the Romanian Government act consistently for strengthening collaboration and security in Europe, for ensuring the successful conclusion of the Madrid conference and the unitary translation into fact of the Helsinki-signed documents, the calling of a conference on confidence-building and disaramement, for halting the location of new missiles on the European Continent, and for achieving a passage to negotiations in view of their complete elimination.

In the spirit of its rich internationalist traditions--the speaker also said--the RCP works steadfastly for strengthening its solidarity and collaboration with all communist and worker parties, for achieving a new-type unity grounded on the principles of equal rights, mutual respect, international solidarity, observance of each party's right independently to work out its political line, tactics and strategy in keeping with the specific conditions in which it carries on its activity.

Hungarian Leader Havasi

LD232344 Budapest Domestic Service in Hungarian 1630 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] At the Finnish Communist Party Congress the speakers have presented resolutions to end divisions within the party which have lasted for 15 years. They also urged that the Leninist norms should be realized and democratic centralism should be restored.

Many of the speakers recommended extensive changes in the composition of the party leadership. Others, however, expressed the view that the present leaders of the Finnish Communist Party should be given a vote of confidence.

The leader of the Hungarian delegation, Ferenc Havasi, addressed today's session of the congress. He said, among other things, that the activities of the Finnish fraternal party merited great international interest because of its special situation of being able to represent the interests of the working class as a member of the coalition government of a capitalist country. Referring to the experiences of the MSZMP [Hungarian Socialist Workers Party], he emphasized that the party needed an unequivocal program and that the unity of the party had to be strengthened anew each day.

RCP Delegation Meets Saarinen

AU241642 Bucharest AGREPRES in English 1539 GMT 24 May 81

[Text] Helsinki, 24 May (AGERPRES)--Aarne Saarinen, chairman of the Finnish Communist Party, received the Romanian Communist Party's delegation to the 19th Finnish Communist Party Congress led by Alexandrina Gainuse, member of the Executive Political Committee of the CC of the RCP. The meeting was an opportunity for an exchange of salutes between Nicolae Ceausescu and Aarne Saarinen.

During the meeting, information was interchanged on the two parties' activity in various fields as well as opinions on questions of the communist and working-class movement, of the international situation, stress being laid on the need for all democratic, progressive, anti-imperialist forces to join in the fight for peace and social progress, for disarmament, security, for democracy and collaboration among all peoples.

Highlighting the good relations of friendship and solidarity between the Romanian Communist Party and the Finnish Communist Party, the mutual wish was expressed to develop and deepen them in future too, in the interest of the two countries and peoples, of the cause of peace and socialism.

Party Congress Ends

LD241856 Helsinki International Service in English 1830 GMT 24 May 81

[Text] The Finnish Communist Party wound up its congress in Helsinki on Sunday with party Chairman Aarne Saarinen and Vice Chairman Taisto Sinisalo getting their mandates renewed. The Communist Party congress had a somewhat unusual character as there were strong demands from the party rank-and-file for changes in the top leadership. There were calls from the party majority wing for Mr Saarinen to step down, which would in turn have opened the way for the replacement of minority leader Mr Sinisalo. The minority wing was, however, strongly opposed to Mr Sinisalo's resignation, and Chairman Saarinen was unwilling to resign--nor was any majority wing leader willing to step into his place.

The Finnish Communist Party, through the People's Democratic League, is a member of the present four-party center-left government under Social Democratic Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto. The Finnish Communists have been split for over a decade into a mainstream wing under Mr Saarinen and a minority wing under the Vice Chairman Sinisalo. The party's minority wing has at times strongly opposed participation in the coalition government.

SED's Lange Visits Leaders

[Text] Helsinki, 25 May (ADN)--The SED and the Communist Party of Finland [SKP] will continue to strive unswervingly and wholeheartedly for the continuation of the process of detente and in the direction of disarmament.

This was stated in a conversation in Helsinki on Monday by Inge Lange, candidate member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee, and Aarne Saarinen, chairman of the Communist Party of Finland, with Deputy Chairman Maija-Liisa Halonen and General Secretary Arvo Aalto. They emphatically condemned the peace-endangering antidetente imperialist arms drive. They affirmed their parties' determination to consolidate their fraternal relations in the spirit of proletarian internationalism.

Inge Lange exchanged views with Aarvo Salo, member of the Executive of the Social Democratic Party of Finland. The exchange passed in a friendly atmosphere. They discussed questions of the common struggle to safeguard peace and strengthen the constructive cooperation of both parties.

AFTENPOSTEN PONDERS DELAY IN APPOINTING U.S. ENVOY

LD221337 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 20 May 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Wanted--One Ambassador"]

[Text] It is 4 months ago today since Ronald Reagan was installed as President of the United States and as such became head of state of the nation which has traditionally led the Western world and stood as chief guarantor of Norway's national security. One of the very first things Reagan did was to recall--quite sharply and unsentimentally--two or three dozen U.S. ambassadors. These included the U.S. Oslo ambassador, Sidney Rand, who after a year in Norway had not even reached the stage of having any real knowledge of conditions in our country. But after this resolute opening gambit from the new U.S. President it has all been pretty quiet on the ambassador front--the most important chair in the U.S. Embassy on Drammensveien in Oslo is still empty.

It is regrettable that President Reagan has not been able to put "his man" in place in Norway after such a long time, especially in a period with difficult international problems which make enormous demands on cooperation between the allies in NATO. It is precisely in such times that people feel that the need for authoritative contacts and the frequent exchange of ideas is particularly urgent, and this perhaps especially in Norway--since we stand outside the foreign policy coordination between the EEC countries in West Europe we are particularly dependent on our relations with the United States. An ambassador is not only the symbol of such a relationship; he or she can through endeavors and insights also make a positive contribution to the expansion and reinforcement of the relationship between our two countries.

We do not know whether the long pause that has already passed without the appointment of a new U.S. representative is due to the fact that Washington is having problems finding suitable candidates. If this is the case, we might perhaps be allowed to offer some cautious advice; an effective U.S. ambassador does not need to be an astronaut or theologian, or a newspaper publisher, rich businessman or active environmentalist.

It might for once be worth trying a knowledgeable and experienced diplomat who really knows his difficult field--and there is hardly any shortage of such people in the U.S. Foreign Service.

We are convinced that an expert diplomat in the ambassador's chair in Oslo would not only be greeted with relief but also with sympathy and warmth.

Norway is not alone in waiting for a new U.S. ambassador--we find ourselves in good company with such important nations as the Soviet Union, China, West Germany and Italy. Indeed, in the whole of West Europe there are now only five capitals in which the United States has an ambassador--Reykjavik, Bern, Helsinki, Paris and London. What we must hope is that this line from the Reagan administration is not a warning that the United States wants to reduce the role of diplomacy in the difficult relations between nations in favor of other forms of political intercourse. As international tension grows we need more, and not less, diplomacy.

USSR REPORTEDLY PROSPECTING IN DISPUTED AREA

LD241918 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 24 May 81

[Text] Norway claims that the Soviet Union is prospecting for oil in the so-called grey zone of the Barents Sea. The grey zone is part of the unsettled continental shelf area in the Barents Sea on the division of which Norway and the Soviet Union have been negotiating for over 10 years. Five years ago, Norway also conducted seismological research in the same area for the utilization of possible oil deposits. Here is a report by Ulla-Maria Johansen from Oslo:

[Begin recording] [Passage indistinct] the Norwegian foreign political and oil industry leaders are clearly irritated by the fact that the Soviet Union is prospecting for oil in the grey zone of the Barents Sea, an area the ownership of which is still under discussion between Norway and the Soviet Union. The grey zone is the area in which the Norwegian and Soviet fishing limits meet and which is part of the unsettled border zone in the Barents Sea.

According to information confirmed by the Norwegian Foreign Ministry, the Soviet Union is conducting extensive seismological research in the grey zone. The oil industry board maintains that the Soviet Union has neither applied for nor received permission for seismological research in the area. We must remember, however, that Norway has also prospected for oil in the grey zone; this took place in the summer of 1976 when Norway carried out seismological research in the area. The research was stopped following a Soviet announcement that it would conduct rocket tests in the same area.

Both states are obviously interested in the possibility of oil in the Barents Sea and, besides the military-political aspects, this is an important factor in the search for agreement on the division of this strategically important sea between Norway and the Soviet Union. Talks have been underway for over 10 years and so far, they have yielded two principles of division; the median line principle proposed by Norway, and the sector line proposed by the Soviet Union. The sector line would be considerably further west. Between the median lind and the sector line there is an area of 155,000 square kilometers, an area which is as big as Norway's entire sector of the North Sea. The talks were to continue in May, but at the Soviet request they have been postponed until the fall since the Soviet Union stated that it needs additional time for preparations. Apparently, the Soviet Union wants first to have results [words indistinct] from the Law of the Sea talks and possible proposals for the grounds of the international division of continental shelves.

The question of the division of the Barents Sea is a major issue in Norwegian-Soviet relations. It is on this unresolved problem that the neighborly relations are built.

The slightest factor increasing tension in the northern area, for instance in the form of oil prospecting, is immediately reflected in relations between the two countries. Norway and the Soviet Union have agreed on fishing arrangements in the grey zone. Now it seems that an agreement must also be concluded on oil prospecting for the period during which talks are conducted on the continental shelf division. [end recording]

PRIME MINISTER FALLDIN APPOINTS NEW MINISTERS

LD221144 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1030 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin today presented the new government. It contains five new ministers. Liberal Party member Karin Ahrland will become minister of health; Claes Elmstedt of the Center Party will be minister of communications; Torsten Gustafsson of the Center Party will be defense minister; Bjorn Molin of the Liberal Party will be the minister of trade; and Ulla Tillander of the Center Party will be minister of schools. All five are Riksdag deputies.

In addition, there will be changes in the government, so that Energy Minister Axel Patri becomes justice minister, retaining his nonpolitical status. Energy matters will be taken over by minister of labor Ingemar Eliasson. The Minister of Housing Birgit Friggebo takes over responsibility for planning too. There will be no new minister of economy, but Rolf Wirten will be both minister of economy and minister of the budget.

In his government declaration, Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin said the new government's political platform is a centrist policy, and the government will continue the work started by the three-party government. The new government will endeavor to find solutions which can attract wide political support, said the prime minister. The broad political settlement which brought the collapse of the previous government, the tax settlement with the Social Democrats, is to be implemented by the new government, Falldin said.

Government Platform

LD221535 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1000 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] At 0900 this morning Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin climbed on to the rostrum in the Riksdag building to present the members in his new government, which consists of both Center and Liberal party members. We shall now have to learn a few new names on the ministerial chairs. Falldin also delivered his new government's platform; it indicates that the new government will continue to work on the basis of the former three-party government. Among other things, this is what Falldin said:

[Begin recording] [Falldin] the new government's political platform is a centrist policy. It will continue the work started by the three-party government. The most important foundations of this work are the government declarations given in 1979 and 1980.

[Reporter] In the government declaration Prime Minister Falldin promised to carry out the tax agreement that the Center and Liberal party reached with the Social Democrats and which became the cause of the collapse of the three-party government. But for the rest he emphasized that the new government is to pursue a non-socialist policy, and he also promised to fulfill several of the Moderates' demands, the same promise that gave to the Moderate leader, Gosta Bohman, in a letter last Friday which led to the Moderates' abstention during the voting on the new government.

[Falldin] Both export companies and companies operating in competition with imported products in Sweden must be given better opportunities to assert themselves internationally.

And for that reason, no increases in the employers' contribution will be proposed beyond what is needed to carry out the tax reform and what is necessary for insurance. Private savings must be stimulated, and trade and industry's supply of risk capital must be improved. Tax savings and tax fund savings will be retained on unchanged terms. The working committees which have been appointed to look into an expansion of tax fund savings in companies not quoted on the stock exchange, as well as a general easing of double taxation in limited companies, will continue their work according to current directives.

A review of the employment protection act is in progress. After the current budget and government policy debate, the government will submit a proposal to the Riksdag concerning wider possibilities of trial employment of youths and extended possibilities of lifetime employment during maximum loads.

[Reporter] This was promised by Prime Minister Falldin in reference to the Moderates among others.

The remainder of the government declaration contained few surprises. Prime Minister Falldin repeated once again that Sweden's economic situation is grave, and that the cure for this, now as before, is saving--saving the municipalities' and the state's expenditure. The public expenditure saving target for the budget year 1982-83 is set at a minimum of 12 billion kronor. [end recording]

POLAND'S WALESA VISITS MALMO TO ACCEPT PRIZE

LD221254 Stockholm International Service in Swedish 1000 GMT 22 May 81

[(Aake Gustafsson) report]

[Summary] Polish Trade Union Leader Lech Walesa arrived in Malmo yesterday to receive the "Let Live" prize of the ARBETET newspaper. The day began with a reception at city hall and ended with a banquet at which the prize was presented. All day he was surrounded and cheered by enthusiastic Poles living in Sweden.

"At a press conference, Walesa declared that the difficult economic situation in Poland is at present the most important issue for Solidarity, but he hoped that this problem and others, too, could be solved at a negotiation table now that the Polish Government is taking the Solidarity trade union seriously. New strikes would in the end only affect ourselves, Lech Walesa said.

"He once again praised the Swedish working movement for its support for Solidarity. No country has helped us as much as Sweden, Walesa said and wondered whether this was due to us being so rich or whether the Swedes are particularly kind-hearted.

"As usual, Walesa, puffing on his pipe, glided lightly and elegantly past most of the heavy questions, about the crises in Poland and the opposition role of Solidarity. No, he said, we do not want to replace the government, only control it. Socialism or capitalism, then? It does not depend on the packaging but the contents. What kind of system does he dream of? A good system. And so on in the same style.

"Lech Walesa regretted in the end that this visit was only a hello, thank you and goodbye visit, but promised to return to Sweden at a later date."

KIPRIANOU PLEASED WITH ELECTIONS, CALLS FOR UNITY

NC261117 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] In a statement on Sunday's parliamentary elections, President Kiprianou expressed full satisfaction for the smooth and democratic way in which the elections were held. He stressed: This has again proved our people's standard of civilization. There might have been controversies and some isolated impermissible actions, he added, but the elections in general were held with exemplary order and calm.

Mr Kiprianou said: On this occasion I would like to publicly express my appreciation to the competent minister of interior, Mr Veniamin, and the general returning officer, Mr Kondozis, the returning local officers and their collaborators, to the police, the Public Information Office, the Cyprus Broadcasting Corporation and in general to all those who have contributed to the holding of the elections, for the perfect way in which they have performed their duties.

President Kiprianou added: Now that the elections turmoil has ceased, I call all the Cypriot people to unity and unanimity in the joint effort for progress and prosperity, and particularly in the struggle for survival and vindication and for an honorable Cyprus solution based on the UN resolutions and the summit agreements, a solution that would restore the unity of state and people and would safeguard the just rights of all the citizens of Cyprus.

Kiprianou also added: I am absolutely certain that this is the desire of the vast majority of our people, and inasmuch as this would depend on me, from my responsible position as president of the republic, I shall do everything possible to this end.

Finally Mr Kiprianou congratulated the new members of the House of Representatives and expressed his belief in harmonious cooperation between the executive and the legislative authorities for the benefit of the country.

AKEL Secretary's Election Comments

NC271022 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 27 May 81 p 1

[26 May statement by AKEL Secretary General Ezekias Papaioannou commenting on the results of the parliamentary elections; place not given]

[Text] The results of the parliamentary elections constitute a splendid victory for the democratic, patriotic forces of the cruelly suffering Cypriot people. It is a splendid victory for AKEL, the party of the working people, which once again has proven to be the primary political force in Cyprus. This can easily be seen from the fact that almost 70 percent of the votes--with the largest percentage for AKEL--said "no" to the establishment of the economic oligarchy and to the politicized coupists, represented by the Rally Party.

This victory acquires even greater dimensions when taking into consideration the internal and international conditions under which the Cypriot parliamentary elections were held; on the domestic side there is the divided front of the democratic patriotic forces, and on the international side the imperialist tension, especially in the eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East.

With the U.S. factor at the helm, imperialism exerted desperate efforts and spent much money to turn the unenslaved Cypriot people's verdict to its favor. The recent statements of U.S. Ambassador Stone in Nicosia--which constitute a scandalous intervention in Cyprus' internal affairs--and the [attempted] extortion by the Rally Party that in case AKEL is elected the primary party, Turkish troops will occupy all of Cyprus; these are some of the typical examples of the imperialist threats and extortions that were used in order to sway the popular will.

However, with its overwhelming majority in percentage of votes the new parliament will be democratic with AKEL as the primary party, despite imperialist threats, extortions, bribes, and other kinds of extortions that have been used.

The overwhelming majority of the people said "no" to imperialism and to the faits accomplis of the Turkish invasion and occupation. The overwhelming majority voted for a truly independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federated and demilitarized Cyprus on the basis of the UN principles, resolutions, and the summit agreements.

With their votes, the Cypriot people have shown that they reject a solution of their problem outside the UN framework and resolutions, and that they insist on a peaceful, democratic solution by means of the intercommunal talks and an international conference within the UN framework.

Popular verdict has supported patriotic, democratic unity on the basis of the approved and declared line and tactics for the solution of the Cyprus problem, within the struggle for independence and freedom. Life has proved that the victory of these forces in the elections would have been even greater had there been unity among the democratic patriotic forces.

After all, as AKEL declared before the elections, it will struggle with even more zeal and self-denial, inside and outside parliament, for a strong unity--which will be based on a common course and a common minimum program, because this is dictated by the vital interests of our people and their cause. AKEL will honor to the full its contract with the people by always being the vanguard of the people's struggle for independence, peace, democracy, social progress, and a nonaligned and demilitarized Cyprus.

Lissaridhis' Election Statement

[Text of 26 May EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis' statement on results of Cyprus Parliamentary elections]

[Text] This is the beginning. I greet the vanguard that received the message in its right context. I am certain that very soon the people will truly realize the situation that has been created and will adopt in mass the socialist party EDEK's course, the only course that leads to national salvation. Some should ponder their responsibilities for the ascendancy of fascism.

Kliridhis' Comments on Results

NC270920 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 27 May 81 p 1

["Text" of 26 May exclusive statement to I SIMERINI by Democratic Rally Chairman Kliridhis]

[Text] The fact that the Democratic Rally [DISI], which constitutes the official opposition, will be represented in the new house with 12 deputies, is obviously a great change. There will no longer be a monologue in the house.

As the election results show, DISI's force has considerably increased in Cyprus--a fact that shows the people's will for change. Compared to 1976, 30,000 more votes were cast for DISI; DISI has increased its force by 1/3 by obtaining about 100,000 votes--1/3 of the electoral body.

Now DISI will try, both inside and outside the House, to implement its promises and play a more decisive and effective role for a consistent and, at the same time, militant opposition.

However, the most significant message of Sunday's elections, besides the downfall of the small opportunist parties, is that it is now clearly shown that President Kiprianou's party constitutes a small minority that cannot govern this country. The president, who must realize that the Sunday elections constitute a vote of no confidence in him or his bankrupt government, should ponder this fact.

KIPRIANOU DENIES ALLEGED COOPERATION WITH AKEL

[Text] Referring to Mr Kliridhis' claims that Mr Kiprianou is allegedly promoting AKEL's interests and plans or that he has made a secret agreement with AKEL, President of the Republic Kiprianou has made the following statement:

I am neither promoting nor have I undertaken to promote the interests and plans of AKEL or of anyone else. What I have undertaken is to promote the people's interests and our national issue, and this is what I am doing with consistency and responsibility. The allegations about my promoting AKEL's interests and plans as well as the allegation about a secret or open agreement with AKEL are figments of the imagination and obviously aimed at misleading some of the people.

FOREIGN MINISTRY DENIES ALLIED PLAN ON CYPRUS

NC252040 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 25 May 81

[Text] The republic's Foreign Ministry has denied a report in the London SUNDAY TIMES, also published in today's edition of a Cyprus newspaper, that during his recent contacts in the United States, Foreign Minister Rolandhis discussed a plan for the solution of the Cyprus issue, prepared by the United States, Britain, Greece, Turkey and the United Nations.

A Foreign Ministry statement stresses that during Rolandhis' contacts, no plan for the solution of the Cyprus issue was raised nor was such a plan brought to the notice of the Cyprus Foreign Minister, either officially or unofficially.

The statement adds that during his meetings with Bush and Haig, Rolandhis discussed the Cyprus issue in all its aspects as well as the possibilities of increased movement on our problem during the coming summer.

ANKARA REPORTS ON UPCOMING ELECTIONS IN NORTH

TA231822 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] Five candidates will participate in the presidential elections to be held in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus on 28 June 1981. The parliamentary elections will be held on the same date as well and 233 candidates will participate.

The Turkish Radio and Televison Bureau in Cyprus reports that the five presidential candidates are: The current president, Rauf Denktas, from the National Unity Party; Ziya Rifki from the Communal Liberation Party; Husamettin Tanyar from the Democratic People's Party; Ozker Ozgur from the Republican Turkish Party and independent Sami Dedecay.

Any objections to these candidates must be made by 31 May. The list of candidates will be final on 1 June.

In the 28 June elections, the Turkish Cypriots will elect a president and 40 members of the Legislative Assembly. Of the 40 deputies, 18 will be elected from Lefkosa [Nicosia], 15 from Gazimagosa [Famagusta] and 7 from Girne [Kyrenia].

BRITISH COUNCIL FACILITIES DESTROYED BY BOMB

NC270730 Paris AFP in English 0721 GMT 27 May 81

[Text] Salonica, northern Greece, 27 May (AFP)--A home-made bomb destroyed the British Council's city centre premises here during the night, police said today.

Responsibility for the blast was not immediately claimed, but police speculated it may have been caused by sympathisers of the provisional IRA (Irish Republican Army) fighting the British military presence in Northern Ireland.

No one was hurt, police added, though the blast, in a large fourth-floor apartment in a eight-story building, blew out windows up to a kilometer (nearly a mile) away. The bomb could have taken a heavy toll if exploded a few hours earlier, when discotheques and gaming clubs in the same building were crowded, police said. The district is watched night and day by police because it includes the U.S. Consulate. Damage inside the apartment was estimated at around $40,000 dollars.

TURKISH AEGEAN AIRSPACE VIOLATIONS PROTESTED

Ambassador Summoned

NC261857 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Deputy Foreign Minister Rendis this morning summoned Turkey Ambassador in Athens Alacam to whom he protested the violation of Greek airspace in the Samos area by Turkish fighter planes. Rendis drew the attention of the Turkish ambassador to the need to avoid similar incidents which make the atmosphere between the two countries difficult. A similar protest was scheduled to be made by Greek Ambassador in Ankara Papoulias to the Turkish Foreign Ministry.

Statements Issued

NC261717 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 26 May 81 p 1

[Text] The new, most brazen provocation, which was manifested yesterday morning when, in the area of Samos Island, Turkish fighter (F-104) planes flew at low altitudes over two Greek destroyers which were tailing Turkish ships that were participating in an exercise, raises serious questions--"at what are the Turks aiming?" "Are they escalating the war of nerves?"

The Greek ships were not intimidated by the flight of the Turkish planes and continued tailing [the Turkish ships]. The issue has provoked various reactions. Late last night, a statement was issued by the National Defense Ministry. Statements by PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou and a reply by National Defense Minister Evangelos Averof followed.

The statement on the incident says: "At 0845, Turkish fighter planes of the F-104 type, participating in the Turkish exercise (Ilk-Hedes), flew at low altitude over destroyers Aspis and Aetos which were sailing in the area of Samos on the boundary between territorial and international waters and following the movements of the Turkish ships. Our ships continued following the Turkish ships.

"After a relevant briefing by the National Defense Ministry, the Foreign Ministry made the necessary representations to the Turkish side."

PASOK Chairman Papandreou's statement reads: "The government made two contradictory statements, one by a government source and another by the National Defense Ministry, about the new, extremely serious act of the Turkish Air Force.

"It is unacceptable that there should be two contradictory Greek Government positions on such a serious issue. However, in addition to this, we wonder what is the meaning of the Foreign Ministry's representation when the National Defense Ministry almost forgave the Turkish Air Force in its statement.

"At these critical moments for the nation, the least that is required is a consistent national policy. But, unfortunately, even this doesn't exist because no government exists."

Averof's reply to Papandreou's statement is:

"There is a government. An opposition with a feeling of responsibility doesn't exist. The fact that the National Defense Ministry's announcement stated that our destroyers were at the boundaries of the Greek territorial waters is due to the fact that the General Staff learned this when it received the exact location of the ships. The government spokesman knew of the provocation, which he didn't want to conceal, but he couldn't possibly know the exact location point. The Greek Government always responsibly briefs the Greek people. As for those who make provocative acts, the government replies to them both with the internationally established diplomatic means as is the Foreign Ministry's demarche and with the steadfast maintenance of our naval ships in the area of the Turkish exercises."

Papandreou counterreplies:

"The national defense minister admits that the government spokesman speaks on behalf of the government without knowing the facts. This admission proves the correctness of my statement."

The statement by the government source about which mention is made in the Papandreou-Averof statements (a statement that had preceded the Defense Ministry's announcement) said:

"This morning, two Turkish F-104 planes flew at low altitudes over two Greek destroyers in the area of Samos, 1 or 2 miles inside our territorial waters, and departed. The Foreign Ministry made a demarche."

DANISH FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES ON 3-DAY VISIT

NC242130 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 24 May 81

[Text] Danish Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen arrived in Athens this evening on an official 3-day visit. The Danish official was received at the airport by Deputy Foreign Minister Rendis, the Danish ambassador in Athens, the Greek ambassador to Copenhagen and other officials. Olesen will confer with Prime Minister Rallis tomorrow after first attending a meeting at the Foreign Ministry.

Rallis, Mitsotakis Meetings

[Text] Prime Minister Rallis at noon today received Danish Foreign Minister Olesen. Bipartite and international issues as well as EEC affairs were examined during the meeting. Olesen was accompanied by the director of political affairs of the Danish Foreign Ministry and the Greek ambassador to Copenhagen.

Before his meeting with the prime minister, Olesen had a private meeting with Foreign Minister Mitsotakis. Afterward, an open meeting was held during which bipartite issues were examined with officials from both sides attending. They also reviewed the international situation, with emphasis on Middle East problems.

The Greek minister briefed Olesen on the progress of Greek-Turkish relations and the intercommunal dialogue in Cyprus. Mitsotakis accepted in principle an invitation to visit Denmark.

GOVERNMENT REQUESTS EXTRADITION OF HIJACKERS

TA261139 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] The investigation in connection with the hijacking of the Turkish plane to Burgas and representations for the extradition of the hijackers are continuing. The four hijackers were arrested by Bulgarian officials after having been captured yesterday. Meanwhile, in addition to the passengers who were released, the remaining passengers who arrived in Istanbul yesterday night were sent to their homes following the necessary procedures.

Foreign Ministry Secretary General Ambassador Kamuran Gurun, who arrived together with some passengers in Ankara after midnight, said that the fact that a hijacked passenger plane was for the first time being rescued by the passengers and crew is very pleasing to Turkey. Gurun added that during his contacts in Burgas there was never any question of accepting the demands of the hijackers. He noted that the necessary representations for the extradition of the hijackers are being made through the Turkish Embassy in Sofia.

Further Details

TA261640 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1530 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 26 May (AA)--Secretary general of the Foreign Ministry, Kamuran Gurun, said Turkey would lodge a new extradition demand--in addition to the one made on Sunday--with the Bulgarian authorities to have the hijackers extradited to Turkey following execution of their sentences in Bulgaria. Whether they would be extradited in the end or not would depend on the decision of the Bulgarian authorities since the incident took place on Bulgarian soil, he added.

[Prime Ministry office statement]

[Text] Contacts with Bulgarian officials are continuing in connection with the Turkish Airlines airplane hijacked to Burgas by four hijackers. The hijacked airplane is still in Burgas.

In a bid to further intensify cooperation with the Bulgarian authorities and to assist them, a Turkish delegation under Foreign Ministry General Secretary Ambassador Kamuran Gurun has left for Burgas aboard a special plane. Developments will be announced to the public.

HAIG PRAISES GOVERNMENT'S STAND ON HIJACKING

TA261453 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1438 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 26 May (AA)--U.S. State Secretary Alexander Haig sent a message to his Turkish counterpart Ilter Turkmen congratulating him on the liberation of the hostages in the THY (Turkish Airlines) plane hijacked to Bulgaria's Burgas Airport two days ago. The passengers included five American nationals. It was the Turkish Government's determined stance against the terrorists blackmail which led to the freeing of the hostages, he stressed, praising the "full, rapid and close consultations" between Turkey and the U.S. during the past two weeks and thanking Turkish officials.

In his reply, Turkmen said he hoped the successful ending of the incident would facilitate prevention of such terrorist incidents in the future.

U.S. DEFENSE DELEGATION DEPARTS FOR TUNISIA

TA222045 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] The U.S. deputy defense secretary, Francis West, and the chairman of the Defense Security Assistance Agency, Lt Gen Ernest Graves, who arrived in Ankara on 20 May, departed Turkey today. Military cooperation, military assistance, and the various needs of the Turkish Armed Forces were taken up in talks with the two defense officials and the delegation accompanying them. The U.S. defense delegation left Turkey for Tunisia.

LIBYAN 'FOREIGN MINISTER' ARRIVES FOR TALKS

TA262043 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] 'Abd al-'Ati al-'Ubaydi, Libyan foreign minister [as heard, secretary of the People's Committee of the People's Bureau for Foreign Liaison], arrived in Ankara today for an official visit. The visiting minister was received at the Esenboga Airport by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen. In a statement on this occasion Turkmen said that international issues as well as bilateral relations would be discussed during the talks with the visiting foreign minister. Turkmen expressed his hope that these talks would serve to promote Turkish-Libyan relations.

In his statement, Al-'Ubaydi said that international issues in the region would be taken up in addition to the further development of the existing good relations between the two countries. The Libyan foreign minister said that his visit would further enhance relations between Turkey and his country, taking into consideration the mutual interests of the two countries.

Tomorrow, the Libyan foreign minister will begin his official talks in Ankara.

GENDARME COMMANDER CELASUN LEAVES FOR WASHINGTON

TA231726 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] Gendarme commander and National Security Council member Gen Sedat Celasun has left for Washington where he will be the official guest of the U.S. attorney general, William French Smith. During his stay in the United States, General Celasun will hold talks on the relations between the two countries and on the issue of fighting narcotics smuggling.

General Celasun will return to Turkey on 2 June.

ISCEN CRITICIZES MILITARIZATION OF AEGEAN ISLANDS

TA221505 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1445 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 22 May (AA)--It has been stated that Greece's militarization of the Aegean islands is contrary to the Lausanne Treaty.

In a statement regarding press reports to the effect that Greece is arming the islands in the Aegean Sea, Foreign Ministry spokesman, Ambassador Oktay Iscen said that the islands have to be demilitarized in accordance with international agreements.

Noting that Turkey is continuously discussing the issue at the dialogue continuing between the two countries, Iscen added that the agreement on the demilitarization of the island is being recalled at the dialogues. He said: We (?hope) that the Greeks will sooner or later abide by the Lausanne Treaty.

SOCIALIST PARTY HOLDS 26TH PARTY CONGRESS

AU261310 [Editorial Report] Most Vienna papers in the period 23-25 May carry extensive reports on the 26th party congress of the Austrian Socialist Party [SPOE] held in Graz from 22 to 24 March. According to Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German of 23-24 May, party Chairman Bruno Kreisky was reelected with 523 out of the total of 535 delegates' votes, that is 98 percent. The lowest votes in the National Party Board member election were obtained by Socialist Youth Chairman Cap (270 votes) and Young Generation Chairman Edlinger (381 votes), both of whom had opposed the nomination of former Vice Chancellor and Deputy Party Chairman Androsch inthe debate preceding the vote. Androsch himself was elected National Board member with 442 votes.

According to WIENER ZEITUNG in German 24 May, the National Party Board on 23 May elected the party Presidium, which consists of the party chairman and--from now on--nine deputy chairman. Heinz Fischer, Leopold Ratz, Theodor Kery and Leopold Wagner were reelected as SPOE Presidium members, and Karl Blecha, Hans Gross, Leopold Gruenzweig, Jolanda Offenbeck and Fred Sinowatz were "newly elected with an overwhelming majority." Fritz Marsch, who to date had been one of the two SPOE central secretaries together with Karl Blecha, will from now on be the party's only central secretary.

ARBEITER-ZEITUNG on 25 May gives prominence to SPOE Chairman Kreisky's statement that he acknowledged the party's wish that he run again as the SPOE's top candidate in the next general elections, but that he would like the final decision on that to be made only in 1 year's time. According to the paper, Kreisky's decision was "enthusiastically accepted" by the delegates who afterwards adopted the SPOE economic program with only one negative vote. Prior to adopting the economic program, the paper says, "the party congress discussed a number of proposals which dealt with the neofascist danger, disarmament and policy of detente, women's problems and various other subjects."

DIE PRESSE in German on 25 May concludes from Kreisky's statement that he may run again in the next elections and that these elections could be held in the fall of 1982 rather than in the spring of 1983 as scheduled. The paper claims that the SPOE Congress has specifically strengthened the positions of Karl Blecha and of Vice Chancellor Fred Sinowatz, as well as of Heinz Fischer who got the highest number of delegates' votes in the Presidium members' elections--528 out of 532 votes, as against Kreisky's 527, and Sinowatz's 520 votes. The paper stresses that Blecha has given up his other functions--that of central party secretary and SPOE information media spokesman--to concentrate on his work as deputy party chairman, and that he has now become one of the party's "crown princes"--the potential successors of Kreisky as party leader.

DIE PRESSE also highlights Kreisky statements after the party congress that he had no intention of reshuffling the government before the next elections, and that he did not regard former Deputy Party Chairman Androsch as a candidate to succeed him. Androsch has chosen a different career, that of a bank director general, and he should stay with it and do a good job there, Kreisky said, according to DIE PRESSE.

Kreisky Address

AU271138 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 25 May 81 pp 9-13, 15

[Speech by Austrian Socialist Party (SPOE) Chairman Bruno Kreisky at the 26th SPOE Congress in Graz on 24 May 1981]

[Excerpts] The current international political situation is characterized, among other things, by the events in and around Afghanistan and Poland, and--in the West--by the new administration in the United States from where one occasionally hears the term "hardline policy."

A big country such as the Soviet Union is of course even more apt to make errors than a small country. I have felt from the very beginning that the Soviet Union, with its military intervention in Afghanistan, which I most deeply condemn--first, because it is an intervention and second, because of the consequences that this entailed--that the Soviet Union or its leading figures were not fully aware of the consequences of this action.

Obviously, Moscow acted under the impression that what it was doing in Afghanistan was a brutal arbitration process between two communist potentates and factions, and the the world would more or less put up with it--so to speak as a controversy within that the world states. Had this not been believed, had this not been erroneously assumed, would this world power otherwise have launched a military operation that still could not be completed after nearly 1 and 1/2 years?

But even if one explains the events in Afghanistan in such a way, this explanation is not contradictory to the fact that the Soviet Union also has substantial interests in the Gulf region, and that it obviously intends to assert these interests in the future.

The military intervention in Afghanistan has aroused the great majority of the peoples of the Islamic world, and has induced them to joint actions. The Soviet Union will have to take this reaction into consideration and ultimately--I am convinced of this--it will have to consent to a political settlement of the Afghanistan conflict.

What is more dangerous, even more dangerous I believe, is the situation in Poland. Recently I gave a lecture on the policy of detente at Sofia University, and on that occasion, I also spoke about Poland. I mention that here because I am of the opinion that we Social Democrats should speak the same language everywhere, irrespective of whether we are in a democratic or in a communist country.

And thus I am taking the liberty to quote from this lecture: "And here I would like to say, with all due caution, that to me the future of the policy of detente seems to a large degree to be dependent on the future of the development in Poland and around Poland. Here we are aware of the great importance of the internal autonomous development. And we think we know the limits that are set for this development.

It is inherent in the nature of the communist social system--as I see it--that there is an identity of economic and state leadership, something which a priori does not apply to Western democratic states, although here, too, the mutual relations between state and economy have changed as against the classic picture of the past as it was described, say, by the liberals and by Marx himself.

I believe that in Poland a dialectic development, taking into consideration all forces which are active in the Polish society today, will lead to a societal synthesis only if, on the one hand, the state leadership is again comprehensively in a position to govern, in other words to ensure a frictionless functioning of the overall economic process, and if on the other hand the new forces that have so clearly manifested themselves in the society can ensure for themselves that freedom of action which permits them to become effective without always having to resort to the 'ultima ratio'.

"But that is only one side of the problem. On the other hand--and I have to say that, wherever I am asked to speak, with the same emphasis: It is of axiomatic importance for the continuation of the policy of detente that this process I have alluded to develop without direct or indirect influences from outside. Any such action would invariably have to lead to a termination of the process of detente, indeed for a long time to come. Closely connected with that is the statement that under such circumstances all disarmament efforts would come to an end, and an unprecedented arms race would invariably ensue."

Just imagine for a moment that Poland would suffer a fate similar to that of Hungary or Czechoslovakia. In what situation would those find themselves who plead in their parliaments for moderation in armament, for disarmament talks?

They would be asked if they wanted to prepare the same fate for their own peoples. A reckless arms race would result, and all hopes for arms limitation, for substantial negotiations in this respect, would be crushed. And we must also say all that in the direction of the Soviet Union.

A Social Democratic foreign policy at such a time must stick to the policy of detente, taking into consideration the changes that have occurred primarily in the United States. I said recently that the meaning of this policy is easier to understand for those who directly benefit from its advantages than for those who cannot make head or tail of it.

Let me quickly, with all due brevity, recapitulate some of the advantages of the policy of detente. I have spoken before of the really tremendous progress that has been achieved in Austria during the past few years. No matter how highly we may think of ourselves, how much we are aware of our own activities--does anyone really believe that all that could have been possible, that we could have solved our tasks so well if we had been in the shadow of the Cold War? And, what is more, right at a demarkation line between the two big blocs, that is partly identical with our borders with the East European countries?

Just remember the daily crisis around Berlin. Should all that be revived again? Just think of everything that has been achieved in the German-German relationship--economically and in the humanitarian sector. Think primarily of the fact that we have now had a quarter of a century without war or danger of war in Europe. All that must not be jeopardized. And that is why it is plainly the task of the Social Democrats to advocate in international politics, toward both sides, the continuation of the policy of detente. One side must be told what detente has brought for the peoples of Europe, but the others must be told equally clearly what would endanger detente. And thus European Social Democracy has been given today a particularly difficult and important task.

It is necessary to draw attention to that, dear comrades, because in the information media the impression is created that the policy in the democracies is exclusively determined by the men of the new U.S. administration or by the Conservative government in England.

The policy of European democrats is last but not least formulated to some extent by the work of the Social Democrats in Switzerland and in Austria.

A common policy of the democracies will materialize only if we succeed in coming as quickly as possible to a fruitful dialogue with the new American administration. Here we have to take cognizance of the fact that it was the will of the great majority of the American people to make Ronald Reagan President of the United States, in everything he represents and what he advocates, even if it seems to be a political philosophy which we believe to date back to way before the Roosevelt era.

It is obviously the American people's wish to have such a government policy. As democrats, we have to take cognizance of that. However, over there they will also have to take cognizance of the fact that within the world's democracies there are also other political philosophies. The strength of democracy in the great struggles that occur every day will depend on the extent to which we succeed in achieving a synthesis between the ideas I have just mentioned.

What is at stake here is not only the policy of detente, it is disarmament, and also the great dialogue between what has been called the North and the South.

It was a little over a year ago when SPD Chairman Willy Brandt approached me with the request to contribute toward bringing about a summit conference, as has been proposed in the report published under his name.

The Brandt report is certainly the best and most comprehensive document that has been worked out to date about the so-called North-South issue, and I am convinced that this report, similar to that of the Club of Rome about the limits of growth, will be of basic significance for years to come.

It was not easy to tackle this task, because while at first there was a great deal of scepticism to be overcome with many states, it was later equally difficult to limit the number of participating countries But now it looks as if actually a conference of nearly 25 state and government chiefs will take place in Mexico as a result of the initiative taken by the Mexican president and myself.

However, if I am asked today what will be the outcome of this conference, all I can say is: First of all, the most important problems will be dealt with directly by the government chiefs and not by the second or third echelon. At a time when global negotiations about the North-South question failed to materialize, that can already constitute an important contribution. It is too early to say whether there will also be any tangible results on some issue or other.

And let me say a word about Austria's role in this issue: It is certainly not that we have been invited to take over a function here because our accomplishments in the field of development aid are so impressive.

Unfortunately, the opposite is true. However, the fact that we have been invited is most certainly an expression of the political prestige we have acquired especially among the developing countries on account of the open and understanding policy of the Austrian Government toward them. This confidence placed in us, however, also imposes on us the commitment in future to make far greater efforts regarding material development aid.

The situation in the Middle East has been greatly exacerbated in the past few weeks, and the situation can be summed up briefly as follows: Behind Syria, which at the same time exerts control over large parts of Lebanon, stands the Soviet Union as its closest ally. Israel can reckon on the support of the United States. A conflict between Syria and Israel must necessarily involve the two big powers. And to them, nothing is more unwelcome at the moment than such a confrontation, especially in this so very dangerous part of the world where the peoples involved again and again manage to get out of control of their large allies.

At present, we are observing feverish efforts of both superpowers to avoid this confrontation between Syria and Israel. We can only hope that they will succeed. But there is one lesson we can draw from this situation, regardless of what speeches are delivered during an election campaign, regardless of what differences may exist between the superpowers: If the danger of confrontation is great, they simply have no other choice but to seek, and also find, a partner for talks on the other side.

And that is the only aspect that could fill us with confidence, that the sense of responsibility of those who are at the top of these powerful nations is big enough, as is their knowledge about the destruction potential that is in their hands, so that they will not allow things to get out of hand.

In the Middle East issue--and I know that in that respect I have not always met with the approval of all our friends--we have for a long time adopted a position which we believe is the only one that is right; if one wants peace in the Middle East, then it must be a solution which equally meets the interests of Israel and those of the Palestinian people. The rights of both sides must be unreservedly recognized. That includes the right of the Palestinians to a state of their own.

For some months now, this principle has been completely accepted within the European Community, and views along these lines have been clearly expressed only recently by the British foreign secretary, as well as by [FRG Chancellor] Helmut Schmidt.

I cannot refrain from recalling once more how that policy which I have for years advocated both in and outside of Austria, has been mocked and derided by the People's Party--and now that policy has been accepted by all countries of the Community.

I am saying that not to demonstrate a know-all attitude but for one single reason; because I believe that if the problems existing in the world are approached on the basis of democratic-socialist principles, in accordance with our method of thinking, one is bound to be ultimately right.

Comrades, a few years ago the conservatives in Europe and the overwhelming majority of the media available to them triumphed; the time of social democracy was over. Margaret Thatcher's victory, the bourgeois coalition in Sweden after a 43-year period in government of the Social Democrats, and recently Reagan's victory in the United States, and the confidently expected victory of Giscard--all that, they said, indicates the end of a social-democratic epoch.

But, how does the world look today? In Sweden the bourgeois bloc has fallen apart. In a few months--that an be predicted with certainty--social democracy will again be the determining factor in Sweden. True, the outcome of the Berlin elections has again made headlines in the Austrian media, such big headlines as to leave no room for the victory of the Labor Party in London and in a hundred other cities and local communities. And finally, as an indication of the great turn, there is Mitterrand's election victory marking the end of the two decades of conservative rule in France.

In the big debates that were held in France before Mitterrand's election and also in the French newspapers, the Austrian example was repeatedly referred to. It was pointed out how we Austrian Socialists have sought to turn Austria, with the aid of big reforms, from an object of prey into one of the few really stable points in a world that is in upheaval as never before. This was written--I have already quoted it--by one of the great French newspapers, LE MONDE.

We Socialists have led Austria far ahead, and we were only able to do so because the great majority of the Austrian people worked together with us in fulfilling this task. It was the Austrian path, it was our policy that has brought our country so far to the front. It will be our task to see that it stays in front.

CSSR'S STROUGAL MAKES 1-DAY VISIT TO VIENNA

Meets With KPOE Chairman

AU261303 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 26 May 81 p 4

[Text] Vienna--Lubomir Strougal, member of the CPCZ Central Committee Presidium, who visited Austria in his capacity as CSSR premier, met with Franz Muhri, chairman of the Austrian Communist Party [KPOE] in Vienna on Monday. During the talk which was held in an atmosphere of sincere friendship, opinions and information of mutual interest were exchanged.

Both sides agreed that the safeguarding and continuation of the international process of detente and the preservation of peace were the most important tasks facing the peoples, and that the development of good relations between the Republic of Austria and the CSSR should be viewed within this framework. In this context, Muhri especially stressed the importance of the two countries' economic relations which, he said, had always been advocated by the KPOE and which constituted a valuable contribution toward the safeguarding of jobs in Austria. The meeting was also attended by Milan Kadnar, CSSR ambassador in Austria.

Press Conference With Kreisky

AU261416 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 26 May 81 p 5

[Text] Vienna (APA)--Last week, 25 cooperation projects that have been worked out in detail, and 18 new cooperation projects between the CSSR and Austria were discussed between the two ministers in charge, Staribacher and Barzak.

It is now up to the firms concerned to implement these projects. They are investment projects such as cement works, powerplants, brick factories and various installations with a high technical standard. They are intended for Algeria, Libya, Egypt, Iraq, Turkey and other countries in the African-Asian region. Third countries will also participate in these projects. This was stated by Czechoslovak Premier Strougal on Monday [at a Vienna press conference] following his working talks at the Austrian Chancellery.

Strougal left for Prague by air on Monday in the early afternoon, after ending his barely 24-hour visit to Vienna.

Asked about the cancellation of Czechoslovak participation in the Vienna festival weeks, Strougal said that was only a small cloud in the blue sky of mutual cultural cooperation. The production of a play by an author "who is in a peculiar position in our country, is actually a delicate question for the public."

Asked about a potential easing of border crossing regulations, Strougal held out the prospect of certain improvements at the border crossing points as of 1982-83, improvements designed to shorten waiting periods for tourists. These long waiting periods, he said, had also affected members of his own family, including his brother.

Chancellor Kreisky declared that he had also broached the question of facilitating border crossing procedures for journalists, but Strougal, in reply to a question about this issue, differentiated between "benevolent" and "others" press representatives. On Sunday, the talks had dealt with the international situation and on Monday with bilateral issues. They were held at first in strict privacy by the two government chiefs, and then between delegations, the CSSR side being represented by Deputy Foreign Minister Jablonsky and Ambassador Kadnar, and the Austrian side by Trade Minister Staribacher and Ambassador Weinberger, in addition to some civil servants.

Kreisky recalled the fact that at the last working talks 2 years ago, annual meetings (without much protocol burden) had been agreed on--a practice that the sides intended to maintain. Strougal observed that this time 2 years had passed since the last meeting, but that this had been exclusively due to reasons connected with his work and not to any political reasons. He added that, on the occasion of President Husak's official visit to Austria, the new 5-year trade agreement would be signed in Vienna by President Husak next fall.

The Socialist East Europe Committee submitted to Strougal a written protest against the persecution of charter 77 civil rights fighters and appealed to him to support an amnesty and a discontinuation of all proceedings against the democratic opposition.

INTERNATIONAL SOCIALIST YOUTH TO MEET 5-9 JUNE

AU261500 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 26 May 81 p 4

[Summary] After 1929 and 1952, the third international socialist youth meeting is to be held in Vienna over Whitsun weekend, 5-9 June. It will be organized by the Socialist Youth International (IUSY), and some 10,000 guests from all over the world are expected to attend. The meeting will be held guided by the motto, "Youth for socialism," and its three main slogans are: "For peace, disarmament and detente," "For international solidarity," and "For a new world economic order."

The agenda provides for numerous discussions on topics such as economic democracy, the peace policy, the situation in Latin America, the world economic order, the Palestinian problem, youth unemployment, international solidarity work, the arms trade, alternative service for conscientious objectors, ecology, democratic rights, antifascism, and the situation in Poland. The main discussion will deal with work among youth from 1929 through 1952, and to 1981, with representatives of three generations participating.

NETHERLANDS

GENERAL SECOND CHAMBER ELECTION RESULTS REPORTED

LD262248 Hilversum Domestic Service in Dutch 2135 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] We now will learn of the state of affairs with 97.5 percent of the votes cast having been counted. These votes have been cast in 799 municipalities. The turnout was 86.2 percent, 1.4 percent less than during the second chamber elections of May 1977.

Here is the forecast, expressed in seats:

The Labor Party gets 44 seats, a loss of 9.
Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA] gets 48 seats, a loss of (?1).
People's Party for Freedom and Democracy [VVD] now loses 2 seats and ends up with 26.
A CDA-VVD coalition would then get 74 seats.
The Democrats 1966 get 17 seats, an increase of 9.
The Political Reformed Party remains unchanged with 3 seats, just as the Radical Political Party.
The Communist Party gains 1 more seat, now having 3.
The Reformed Political Union remains the same, with 1 seat.
The Pacifist Socialist Party gains 2 seats and now has 3.
The Farmers' Party and the Democratic Socialist 1970 disappear from the second chamber.
The Reformational Political Federation wins entry to the second chamber with 2 seats.
This is the forecast so far, based on 97.5 percent of the votes. There was no change in the forecast after 93 percent.

DEN UYL CITES 'INACCURACIES' IN MOSCOW PAPER

LD270957 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 22 May 81 p 7

[Text] Labor Party leader Den Uyl might well dislike the interest shown in him by Russian journalists, especially those of the Moscow-published LITERATURNAYA GAZETA. At the beginning of April, Den Uyl spoke to the paper's Bonn correspondent. Despite the fact that Den Uyl had approved one version of the conversation, a different version appeared in the columns of the newspaper.

According to the Russian journalist, the socialist chairman is supposed to have said that "the material from the 26th CPSU Congress gave an exhaustive answer to the question of how the Afghanistan conflict should be resolved." In addition, the Labor Party leader was supposed to have made a plea for unilateral disarmament. Den Uyl pointed out these "obvious inaccuracies" to the correspondent, who had submitted the text for approval.

What was it then that Den Uyl said? Two things, says the Labor Party: "For Afghanistan, there should be a political solution, under the terms of which the Russian troops would be withdrawn," and "in the short term, talks must begin between the Soviet Union and the United States. These talks must discuss the avoidance of possible deployment of medium-range missiles and the reduction of already deployed (Russian) SS-20 missiles."

REPORTAGE ON OFFICIAL VISIT OF IRAQI DELEGATION

JN262044 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1945 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Bonn (INA)--Official Iraqi, FRG talks began here this evening.

The Iraqi delegation is headed by Taha Yasin Ramadan, Revolution Command Council member and first deputy prime minister, while the FRC delegation is headed by Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

The talks are attended by Foreign Ministry Under Secretary Ahmad Husayn; Najih Muhammad Khalil, president of the scientific research establishment; the Iraqi ambassador in Bonn and ranking officials. On the FRG side, the talks are attended by Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff, the FRG ambassador in Baghdad and other ranking officials. The two sides discussed bilateral relations and ways of strengthening them in service of the two countries' mutual interests. They also discussed international issues of mutual interest to the two countries.

At the beginning of the session, Ramadan praised Iraqi, FRG relations and the importance of developing them. He also spoke about the current Arab situation and the developments of the Palestinian cause stressing that this cause has been the Ba'th Party's central cause since its establishment.

Ramadan said: There is an Arab unanimity represented in the Baghdad summit conference which has set the minimum that can be accepted in the wake of As-Sadat's exclusion from Arab ranks and his conclusion of the Camp David agreements which added more complicated problems to the cause instead of contributing to its settlement. Ramadan stressed that Iraq supports any efforts that will solve this cause. Despite the nonexistence of any positive indications so far, we will continue to support any European efforts which will contribute to the recognition of the Palestinian people's inalienable rights.

Referring to the Arab-European dialogue, Ramadan stressed that Iraq is not for its limitation and that it had, on many occasions, proposed holding a separate dialogue with the Arab Gulf countries.

The first deputy prime minister spoke in detail about the dimensions of the Iraqi-Iranian dispute and about Iraq's readiness to enter into direct or indirect negotiations for settling this dispute and withdrawing from Iranian territory if Iraq's inalienable rights to its territory and water are secured.

The FRG foreign minister then welcomed Taha Yasin Ramadan and his accompanying delegation and said that the visit will strengthen relations in the two countries' common interest. He added that the FRG stated in the United Nations in 1974 that the Palestinian problem isn't a problem of refugees but one of a people who have the right to determine their fate. Thus, the FRG was the first European country to adopt such a stand and has been working ever since to make the EEC adopt a clearer position on the Palestinian cause because, he added, this serves our interests in the area. Genscher referred to the Iraqi-Iranian dispute and showed understanding at the explanation given by Ramadan. He said that the FRG is looking forward to a peaceful solution to end the fighting and enter into negotiations for the settlement of the problem between the two countries.

Trade Talks

JN261802 Baghdad INA in English 1720 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 26 May (INA)--Iraq's Revolution Command Council (RCC) member and Trade Minister Hasan 'Ali held here last night talks with a delegation from the association of German chambers of industry and commerce.

Mr 'Ali said the economic, scientific and technical agreement which the two sides, Iraq and Federal Germany, intend to conclude is aimed at creating a solid background for bilateral cooperation for the service of the two countries' interests.

The Iraqi official added that in spite of the war imposed on Iraq, the economic situation is solid and Iraq, he further said, has great financial capabilities.

Mr 'Ali is a member of a delegation led by RCC's member and first deputy prime minister Taha Yasin Ramadan now on a several days visit to Federal Germany.

The Iraqi official said allocations of the import programme for the current year have increased by 27 per cent compared with last year's while earmarks for this year's development programme have increased by 30 per cent compared with last year.

RCC's member and trade minister affirmed that the overall allocations of 1981's import and development programmes reached more than 45 billion (B) dollars. He stressed that Iraq is going ahead with its development programmes in spite of the war conditions. He pointed out that the Iraqi Government deals with the companies which continued their work during the war in a preferential manner in commitment to the spirit of cooperation of these companies.

Cooperation Agreement

JN261905 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1750 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 26 May (INA)--Iraq and the FRG signed an agreement on economic, technical and scientific cooperation this evening. It was signed for Iraq by Hasan 'Ali, Revolution Command Council member and trade minister, and for the FRG by Hans-Dietrich Genscher, foreign minister. Taha Yasin Ramadan, RCC member and first deputy prime minister, Otto Graf Lambsdorff, FRG minister of economics and the Iraqi delegation's members were present.

The agreement provides for expanding and promoting cooperative relations in the economic, scientific and technical fields, concentrating on the fields of industry, oil industries, petrochemicals, transport, communication, agriculture, technical consultations and the exchange of information and expertise between the two countries. It also provides for training the Iraqi cadres in the various economic and scientific sectors as well as establishing a joint committee on the ministerial level to supervise the implementation of the agreement and submitting proposals for the expansion of trade and the diversification of economic cooperation. The joint committee will meet alternately in Baghdad and Bonn to discuss ways of promoting bilateral cooperation.

Hasan 'Ali and Genscher expressed the hope that this agreement will serve as a fundamental basis for economic dealings between the two countries and for regulating relations in the interest of the two countries' peoples.

'Berlin Clause'

LD261710 Hamburg DPA in German 1541 GMT 26 May 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 26 May (DPA)--The FRG and the Republic of Iraq, the most important German trading partner in the Arab world, today concluded in Bonn a comprehensive economic, technical and scientific cooperation agreement.

After initial hesitation, Baghdad also accepted the inclusion of a West Berlin clause (Berlin clause). This is taken as a signal of Iraq's intention to enter into a closer political relationship with the Federal Republic. It is the first agreement of this kind that Iraq has concluded with a Western country.

German-Iraq trade--German exports in 1980 were DM3.3 billion and Iraqi exports DM1.15 billion--developed significantly in the first months of this year. The socialist state, with 13 million inhabitants and lying between the Euphrates and the Tigris, has given major contracts worth DM4.5 billion to German firms since December, among them the contract for constructing the Mosul dam (to a German-Italian consortium), against Soviet competition.

Meetings With Officials

LD262126 Hamburg DPA in German 1716 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 26 May (DPA)--Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today signed an agreement with Iraq, after which he said that the signing opens new horizons for closer relations. He mentioned in particular the planned German contribution to training schemes, the planned transfer of technology and the formation of a high-level joint economic commission.

At a dinner on Monday night, both Taha Yasin Ramadan, Iraqi first deputy prime minister, and Genscher expressed the intention of their countries to strengthen cooperation. The Iraqi first deputy prime minister expanded this beyond the economy to "all areas." Genscher pointed out the natural position of Bonn in the Iraq-Iran war and reminded the rich oil-producing state of its responsibility to the world economy. Hitherto, Iraq has only played a subordinate role among oil exporters to Germany (1980: 2.5 million tons or 2.6 percent of German oil imports).

Politically, Bonn and Baghdad agreed on the role of nonaligned states--Iraq is among the sharpest critics of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan--and on the need for a close Arab-European dialogue. When Taha Yasin Ramadan met Wischnewski, both politicians agreed that increased contacts between the SPD and the Socialist Ba'th Party are an important contribution to German-Arab relations. Considerable differences of opinion existed on the Near East question. Baghdad demanded that the Camp David agreement be declared invalid and called for full recognition of the PLO. Taha Yasin Ramadan will meet Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on Wednesday evening.

German-Iraqi economic relations were the main topic at a meeting between 150 representatives of German industry and the Iraqi delegation. The honorary president of the Federation of German Industry (BDI), Dr Hans-Guenther Sohl, assured the Iraqi side that German firms are prepared to help in the realization of the new Iraqi 5-year-plan. Taha Yasin Ramadan said that German firms had proved themselves to be reliable partners who adhered to their contacts.

Press Statement

JN271746 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1715 GMT 27 May 81

[Text] Baghdad, 27 May (INA)--A press statement issued in Baghdad and Bonn today described as successful the results of the talks Taha Yasin Ramadan, Revolution Command Council [RCC] member and first deputy prime minister, held with FRG officials.

The statement said that Iraq and the FRG believe that Ramadan's talks with Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FRG foreign minister, will give a new momentum to relations between the two countries and that both sides express their satisfaction with the results of these talks.

The press statement, which was issued at the end of a 3-day official visit to Bonn by Taha Yasin Ramadan at the head of a delegation, pointed out that the talks dealt with bilateral relations and ways of developing them, in addition to international issues, particularly those related to the Arab region, West Europe, the Arab-European dialogue and the Iraqi-Iranian conflict.

The press statement said that FRG President Karl Carstens' reception of Taha Yasin Ramadan was held in an atmosphere of amity and friendship, during which Ramadan conveyed President Saddam Husayn's greetings and good wishes.

The statement added that fruitful talks were held between Ramadan and FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. These talks, which were held in an atmosphere permeated by frankness and mutual understanding, dealt with bilateral relations and international issues that concern the two countries.

The Iraqi and German sides expressed their high appreciation for the signing of an agreement on economic, scientific and technical cooperation. They stressed that this agreement will expand the domain of bilateral cooperation in the above fields.

The statement stressed that Taha Yasin Ramadan and his delegation were received with a welcome and hospitality that reflected the good relations and traditional friendship between the two countries' peoples.

The delegation accompanying Ramadan comprised Hasan 'Ali, RCC member and trade minister, and a number of senior Iraqi officials.

Ramadan Press Conference

JN271612 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1425 GMT 27 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 27 May (INA)--Taha Yasin Ramadan, Revolution Command Council member and first deputy prime minister, has asserted that what Iraq demands in its conflict with Iran is that Tehran rulers frankly and legally recognize its legitimate historical rights to its land and waters and that they adhere to the policy of good neighborliness and relinquish their aggressive expansionist political trends.

In a press conference held here today, Ramadan said: Since the advent of the new regime in Iran, Iraq has wished to have good relations between the two countries and has expressed this desire by various means. The Iranian side replied by frankly declaring its expansionist ambitions, aggressive intentions and claims to illegitimate rights in some Arab Gulf states like Bahrain, Kuwait and part of Iraq's lands. This declaration was made by senior Iranian officials and was followed by Iran's occupation of Iraqi territories.

He went on to say: Iraq has tried to find a solution to these problems through diplomatic channels, but the Iranian stand was not only negative, but even launched attacks against the Iraqi borders. Most prominent among these attacks was the one launched on 4 September [1980] when Iraqi border towns and villages were hit by planes and artillery. We warned them against aggression but they did not listen to our warnings. We were then forced to reply to aggression with a large-scale strike on 22 September. Within a week after that date, our armed forces were able to regain our occupied territories, enter Iranian territory and effectively achieve all their targets.

Ramadan added: After the Iraqi forces had attained the planned targets, Iraq, through President Saddam Husayn, declared that it was ready for a cease-fire if the other side accepted this and to begin direct or indirect negotiations aimed at guaranteeing our rights. The Iraqi forces would then withdraw to a border on which the two sides would agree. Ramadan stressed: Otherwise the Iraqi forces will not withdraw until Iran recognizes all our rights, headed by those related to Shatt al-'Arab.

The first deputy prime minister reviewed the efforts that have been exerted to achieve a cease-fire, pointing out Iraq's positive stands toward the peace missions of the United Nations, the Nonaligned Movement and the Islamic Conference Organization. He added that Iraq would exert all efforts to render these initiatives successful and reach a peaceful settlement of the conflict on the basis of Iraq's just principles and full rights.

Speaking about the results of his visit to the FRG, Ramadan said: We have sensed a desire for developing and expanding cooperative relations in a balanced and gradual manner in the balance of payments in view of Iraq's vanguard and prominent position in the Arab arena, its active role in the Nonaligned Movement and the FRG's role within the EEC. By developing these relations, we will contribute to the development of Arab-European relations and create a positive atmosphere on the road to Arab-European dialogue.

On the political aspect of the talks, Ramadan said: Each party informed the other about its viewpoint and each party assessed events in light of its interests and policies on these events. The final upshot is that we feel that this visit has achieved its positive objectives as a first step on the road to strengthening bilateral cooperation. If the sincere desire and intentions to translate what has been agreed continues, then relations will be further strengthened by seeking new methods in service of the two parties' common interests.

In reply to a question on Iraq's stand on the United States, Ramadan stated that the causes which dictated severing relations still exist, particularly the U.S. hostile stand on the Arabs and more specifically the complete U.S. bias toward the Zionist entity against the Palestinian people's rights. He added: If no change or relative progress takes place in the U.S. stand, then Iraqi-U.S. relations will remain as they are.

On the possibility of an Israeli aggression against Syria, Ramadan said that Iraq's stand is a principled one. It consists of repulsing any aggression carried out against any Arab country regardless of bilateral relations. We will be included in the confrontation against Israel if it attacks any other Arab country.

Remarks on Weapons

LD271212 Hamburg DPA in German 1200 GMT 27 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 27 May (DPA)--Iraq would willingly buy weapons from the Federal Republic. This was stated by Taha Yasin Ramadan, the Iraqi head of government, at a news conference in Bonn today. Ramadan, who was ending a 3-day visit to Bonn, said in reply to a question: "My country wants weapons from all the countries in the world, and the FRG is a country which manufactures weapons." According to information from government circles, however, the question of German arms supplies was not discussed during Ramadan's Bonn talks. His country is at war with Iran.

Ramadan described the comprehensive German-Iraq cooperation agreement signed yesterday as a tangible expression of the determination of both states to further expand their relationship, which is based on good economic relations. This would also be fruitful for European-Arab cooperation as a whole. Ramadan said the acceptance of the Berlin clause in the agreement is no problem for his government, which pursues an independent policy and isn't dependent on great powers, including the Soviet Union.

Ramadan said that Iraq doesn't intend to join the cooperation council just formed by six Arab Gulf states. "We have good relations with these countries," he said. "They thought it useful to form such a council. We don't intend to join this council."

GENSCHER ASSURES ENVOY OF FRG-ISRAELI RELATIONSHIP

LD221414 Hamburg DPA in German 1244 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 22 May (DPA)--According to Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, Israel can count on the Federal Republic of Germany "for all time," despite differences of views on Mideast policy. Speaking in Bonn today at a farewell luncheon for outgoing Israeli Ambassador Johanan Meroz, Genscher said that this assurance "transcends individuals and time." Bonn will continue its Mideast policy on the basis of the joint EEC position but will be aware at all times "of the special moral and historical quality of German-Israeli relations," and act accordingly.

Genscher left no doubt that Bonn regards Israel's existance in secure and recognized frontiers as an indispensible part of a Middle East peace settlement. "Because such a peace is inconceivable without the recognition and security of Israel there are no conflicting interests between the Federal Republic of Germany and the state of Israel on this fundamental position," Genscher said. "Nor is there any contradiction between our interests and what we regard as our historic responsibility."

Genscher paid tribute to the contribution made by the Israeli ambassador to the relations between the two countries and pointed out that during Meroz's tenure of office controversies had occurred "which we would have preferred not to have had."

BERLIN FDP CONGRESS REJECTS COALITION WITH CDU

LD222142 Hamburg DPA in German 2102 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] Berlin, 22 May (DPA)--The Berlin FDP rejects any support for a CDU-led minority senate. A special party congress decided tonight by 134 votes to 93--and 3 abstentions--not to enter into a coalition with the Christian Democrats in the senat and to oppose the formation of a government by the CDU.

The motion also states that the FDP would neither support nor suffer "in any form" a CDU-led senat, and thus will hold no coalition negotiations with the Christian Democrats.

NEW GOVERNMENT HOLDS FIRST CABINET MEETING

NC271922 Paris AFP in English 1856 GMT 27 May 81

[Text] Paris, 27 May (AFP)--French Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy today blamed the previous administration of Valery Giscard d'Estaing for the run on the franc since President Francois Mitterrand was voted in to power on May 10.

"I can only condemn the irresponsible statements of politicians who try to stir up trouble where it does not exist, like arsonists who sound the fire alarm," Mr Mauroy said at a press conference after his first cabinet meeting. He said that the money markets started to become nervous in February. Since last Friday they had stabilised and since Monday the flight of capital prompted by the election of a Socialist government had ceased. Next Monday Mr Mauroy will start meeting representatives of management and trade unions. Within the next two weeks he wants to start negotiations between both sides of industry on the introduction of a 35-hour week and five weeks paid holiday a year.

Today's first Socialist cabinet meeting in 24 years agreed to raise the minimum wage, reduce the retirement age from 65 to 60, boost state allowances for families, the old, handicapped and home buyers, and help small industries. Most of the moves will be announced June 3 and June 10, just before the crucial legislative elections in which the Socialists hope to wrench a governing majority from their center-right rivals.

"We have a great historic task to carry out," Mr Mitterrand told the 42 ministers and secretaries of state crowded around an oval table in the Murat room. "Let us be worthy of France." Mr Mitterrand recognized the leftist victory will not be complete without success in the legislative contests. "The action begun today must be long term to succeed fully," the president said in remarks later reported by a top aide. "In effect the government needs a solid majority to conduct the policy of France."

Observers agreed that it was only after the new National Assembly was formed that Mr Mitterrand would be able to begin work in earnest on some of his more controversial proposals, such as nationalization of banks and key industries.

The president already asked for preparation of an inventory of French companies that have filed for bankruptcy and for a report by the autumn on "the new rights of workers."

With an army of journalists and photographers on hand to chronicle the arrival of a new era in French politics, Mr Mauroy pledged that the watchwords of the new government will be "simplicity, economy and discretion."

But not all was rosy among the 36 men and six women in the first Socialist government since the administration of Guy Mollet that ruled briefly in 1956-7 under the old Fourth French Republic. "Six women," grumbled Yvtte Roudy, minister for the rights of women, "that is not enough."

TRADE UNION LEADERS MEET WITH PRESIDENT MITTERRAND

LD271329 Paris LE MONDE in French 27 May 81 pp 1, 39

[Jean-Pierre Dumont report]

[Text] Workers' Force [FO] Secretary General Andre Bergeron started the series of consultations which Mitterrand had 26 May with the leaders of the five big trade union organizations.

This "trade union" day was preceded the previous day by a lunch at the Elysee with Economy and Finance Minister Delors and the minister delegate in charge of the budget, Fabius, and Tuesday morning by talks with Mauroy.

In April, prices increased by 1.4 percent. That automatically brings a 3.3 percent increase in the minimum wage on 1 June. When he left the Elysee, Bergeron stated that Mitterrand had indicated to him that the minimum wage would be increased "very soon." "There is talk of 10 percent," Bergeron added. The head of state also confirmed that family allowances will be increased by 25 percent and that the minimum old age pension will increase from Fr1,417 to Fr1,700 before the parliamentary elections.

The franc's recovery within the European Monetary System, which began on 25 May, continued 26 May with the Deutsche mark dropping from Fr2.4040 to Fr2.2980 on the Paris market.

The dollar rose strongly on all the exchange markets, rising from 2.3130 to 2.33 against the Deutsche mark in Frankfurt and from 5.56 to 5.58 against the franc in Paris.

The five big trade union organizations received in succession at the Elysee on 26 May were to put their demands to President Mitterrand together with the means of meeting them by law as quickly as possible through trade union-employer negotiations extended to include the government.

The explanations give by CFDT leaders at a press conference 25 May, regarding the trade union's national council meeting, and the statements made by Edmond Maire (CFDT), Krasucki (CGT), Bornard (French Confederation of Christian Workers) [CFTC] and Bergeron (FO) during the television Channel 2 program "Questions des Temps" on Monday at least made clear their priorities and attitudes if not their specific demands.

The CFDT leader recalled his union's "realistic and ambitious" demands and its timetable (35-hour week within 5 years, 30 percent increase in the minimum wage's purchasing power within 3 years), stressing the effort that that represented for small and medium-sized enterprises and firms in which the working week is long and wages are low. Maire also explained that the hierarchical scale should tend to contract to a gap of between 1 and 6 [times the minimum wage] and indicated that wage compensation in cases of shorter hours should also only relate to wages between 1 and 6 times the new minimum wage.

Krasucki, who was attempting to charm, was anxious to announce that the CGT would be reasonable and responsible while demanding "large or significant" increases in the minimum wage. "We should be able to agree," he indicated with regard to the CFDT, although the latter is advocating that the effect of the minimum wage increases on higher wages should be limited. The CGT, on the other hand, wants to obtain more than the CFDT. Krasucki, launching an appeal for employee action and trade unionization, explained that one of the priorities should be to settle outstanding conflicts and enforce respect for union members' rights and annul the recent or long-standing sanctions taken by "arrogant employers."

Bornard (CFTC), who is demanding a 3-point priority policy (struggle for employment, struggle against inflation and revival of the contractual system) stressed, as did the CFDT, the need to avoid "meaningless" measures and expressed his organization's desire to obtain precise indications on the method of financing social benefits. The CFTC, like other trade unions, is agreed to state participation through an increase in value added tax.

Bergeron, with his customary simplicity and realism, also stressed FO concern over future financing of new measures, notably unemployment insurance whose cost will apparently increase from Fr35 billion to Fr45 billion in 1981. Preferring trade union-employer negotiation to any form of three-party "Grenelle" negotiations [reference to agreements following 1968 disturbances], he pointed out that the government could intervene in the sphere of reducing working hours by submitting a bill on a fifth week of annual leave.

In general, can the trade unions all be said to be enjoying a "honeymoon," being aware of responsibly playing a tricky game with a government described as a partner?

All the confederations know that they must face two crises: the obvious crisis in international economic relations and the more disputed but real crisis of a wage earners' world which has matured and become aware of all kinds of difficulties and is spurning trade union action. Of course, there is a "mobilization of opinion" but it is more a calm and serene interest in social questions and a reserved backing for the trade unions. As the CFDT admits, there is no wave of new members joining in the enterprise sections and the most that can be said is that this trade union made clear gains during the recent elections (note: According to a CFDT source, CFDT support increased by 8.8 points in the Clermont-Ferrand Michelin workers' college, by 5.3 points in Renault-Annonay and by 9.6 points in Renault-Cleon and so forth, mostly at the CGT's expense).

The "honeymoon" if it exists is to be found less in the trade union world than among the grassroots who are waiting. This expectation is one in which self-control is mixed with a deep hope of finally securing the right to voice their opinions and the right to a better distribution of wages, jobs and working hours.

INTERIOR MINISTER SUSPENDS EXPULSION ORDER

NC261750 Paris AFP in English 1733 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Paris, 26 May (AFP)--France's new interior minister, Gaston Defferre, today suspended expulsion orders against foreigners in France pending a general review. The only exception to the suspension would be for urgent reasons of public order. The decision, described as temporary, was to take effect immediately.

Speaking of the country's some four million immigrants--about 7.5 per cent of the current population--Mr Defferre said: "It would be profoundly unjust for these workers, who form an integral part of our working class, to bear the cost of the economic crisis we have inherited."

Mr Defferre, who was named minister of the interior and decentralization in the first cabinet of President Francois Mitterrand, was indirectly referring to the increasing number of expulsion orders handed down in recent years, as France felt the economic crunch affecting many Western countries with burgeoning numbers of unemployed. From 2,300 in 1964, the total of expelled immigrants grew to 4,790 in 1979.

The interior minister pledged meanwhile a thorough review of expulsion procedures in order, he said, to "ensure true respect of defense rights."

While expulsion orders were theoretically applied only to immigrants convicted of misdemeanors or felonies, they were at times used for other purposes. In one such case, Simon Malley, publisher of the Paris-based progressive fortnightly AFRIQUE-ASIE, was deported last October after authorities charged him with "lacking the restraint incumbent on all foreign residents." Mr Malley, an Egyptian-born naturalized American, returned to France yesterday, as the new Socialist government lifted his expulsion order in a move concurrent with Mr Defferre's decision.

Citing the need for greater security for foreigners living in France, who often work at jobs which the French themselves refuse to do, Mr Defferre said that the suspension would affect all cases except those "justified by the need to maintain public order."

Singling out young foreigners born in France or who arrived in early childhood, Mr Defferre said: "France is their country. If they commit a crime, they will be handed over to the courts but will no longer be forced after serving their sentence to go to a country in which they often do not even know the language."

However, said the minister, suspension of the expulsion measures would not affect current laws regulating the flow of workers into the country.

"In the current economic situation, and with the exception of cases involving the right to asylum and the right of families to stay together, I will not propose that the government alter the existing controls," he said.

"However, I will see to it that these controls, notably at the ports and airports, be carried out with respect for people's rights and dignity."

Expulsions became a presidential campaign issue last month, when a public protest grew up around the cases of several young foreigners facing deportation after committing minor crimes. Three young people in Lyons, central France, were widely supported in a 20-day hunger strike. Following the protest, the previous interior minister, Christian Bonnet, suspended expulsion measures for three months. Mr Defferre's decision today reaffirmed and amplified that decision.

LE MONDE EXAMINES PS DOCUMENT ON AFRICA POLICY

LD261035 Paris LE MONDE in French 22 May 81 p 18

[Philippe Decraene report]

[Text] "One of our most cherished plans is to quickly establish close relations with the frontline southern African countries," PS national secretary for international relations Veronique Neiertz told us when commenting, for LE MONDE, on the 35-page document which the PS has devoted to black Africa. Entitled "The PS and sub-Saharan Africa," this document, drafted under the direction of Lucien Praire, head of the party's Third World group, was the subject of long internal discussions and was very carefully polished before being published.

After initial surprise--and caution--the first African reactions to the statements made from the Nievre department have been fairly favorable. The viewpoint prevailing among leaders as different as Felix Houphouet-Boigny of the Ivory Coast and Omar Bongo of Gabon is that the accession to the presidency of the republic of the man who was minister of French overseas territories in 1950-51 heralds a new era in French-African relations. While the document drawn up by the PS contains many specific proposals and innovations, these don't seem to be at all extreme.

The flaw in the document is a desire to overdramatize the situation observed throughout Africa. It can also be criticized for a degree of idealism in the presentation of the origins of the black continent's political fragility.

"We are worried by the change in the U.S. attitude in southern Africa, notably in Angola," Veronique Neiertz continued, mentioning the White House's tendency to move closer to the guerrillas belonging to the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola--the movement which is threatening to destabilize the Luanda regime.

Some remarks by Reagan and Mrs Kirkpatrick, U.S. representative at the United Nations, are worrying the PS foreign policy officials who chiefly want to prevent the Africans from committing themselves to a particular bloc. For instance, erferring to Zimbabwe, Mrs Neiertz explained: "Regarding Robert Mugabe, for whose admission to the Socialist International we ardently hope, we want to enable him and all his African colleagues to escape the Yalta logic, in other words, alignment with one of the two blocs."

Turning to foreign interventions, the PS document expresses the view that the Soviet Union's interventions are largely attributable to "the Western powers' gross blunders or cowardice." It continues: "Soviet policy in Africa has hitherto been stamped with legalism: The USSR has never supported seccessionist or rebel movements (except in southern Africa, and it cannot be blamed for that) and it has cooperated with the most diverse regimes." It adds: "In the present situation, Soviet influence seems complete in some countries in that it is not seriously and honestly opposed, nonetheless, it is by no means irreversible, as is shown by the change in Egypt and Somalia."

One of the most accurate assessments made on black Africa's evolution relates to the extent of regional disparities and the emergence of some regional poles of political attraction.

While perhaps tending to underestimate the role played by Libya and Cuba in the abrupt changes now taking place south of the Sahara, the documents' authors do not disregard it and above all do not try to gloss over it.

Giscard d'Estaing's Failure

The failure of Giscard d'Estaing's African policy, which almost no black African leader, aside from President Sekou Toure, now doubts, is analyzed at length. This analysis contains this strong condemnation: "The majority of French interventions, which were completely voluntary since they were carried out in countries to which we were not bound by defense agreements, were aimed at countering virtually hopeless situations for which France bore considerable responsibility in various ways.... The French attitude is based on an arsonist-fireman's policy: The Elysee was incapable of helping to solve national problems and even caused those problems by its blunders, was jointly responsible (in southern Africa and in the Sahara) for the development of major tensions through its disregard for people's right to determine their own future, and maintained its control over a number of states because of their difficulties--difficulties which it created or perpetuated."

While criticizing Giscardian France, the PS also criticizes other powers, indicating: "Whatever the French Government's blunders and scandalous actions, the other powers aren't doing much better. The USSR for instance is equally hegemonistic and concerned with its own interests and only provides extremely limited aid." It concludes: "Giscardian policy has now reached its end. The 7-year term is ending in both military and economic failure."

In the second part of the document, the authors define a new African policy whose broad outlines don't seem likely to worry Paris' African interlocutors. With regard to southern Africa, this point can be noted: "A leftwing government must take immediate steps to stop giving solace to the Pretoria regime by its financial and technical contributions." It will take decisions to stop all state or semistate investments, to stop all aid to private investments in South Africa and in occupied Namibia; it will support the economic sanctions adopted by the United Nations. Taking technical constraints into consideration, it will reduce its imports from South Africa as quickly as possible.... Regarding the continent's eastern horn, the report observes: "The PS, which recognizes the Eritrean national cause and that people's right to self-determination, maintains friendly and sustained relations with the Eritrean People's Liberation Front and supports its proposals for a referendum on self-determination.

In addition, it has maintained dialogue with the Ethiopian Government. It attaches great importance to that country's evolution toward a more just and proper prosperous society and is fully aware of the need to guarantee it security of access to the sea...."

The authors conclude: "In our view, any attempt from any quarter to call into question the borders inherited from colonization is unacceptable. That is why we have come out in favor of self-determination for the Saharan people (and have done the same for Eritrea). Of course, the borders in Africa are artificial, but they are throughout the world. Nonetheless, they do have meaning in the framework of the political contract freely agreed among all the inhabitants. It is that contract which must be clearly defined."

Regarding the Indian Ocean, the PS indicated that "the island of Mayotte must be restored as an integral part of the Comoro archipelago," that "there must be negotiations with Madagascar and Mauritius on the small islands to which they are laying claim" and that "any attempt to integrate the South African naval base of Simonstown into the Western camp's military network would be a very serious threat to peace in that zone."

The PS advocates maintaining military cooperation although it wants to renegotiate the defense agreements. It considers that "the question of military bases must be treated separately in an open and new spirit, with the countries concerned, taking account of their geostrategic position." With regard to the new concept of cooperation, it intends to uphold it energetically. The PS "intends to broaden the range of our relations on the continent" and asserts that "cooperation concerns all the French people...and should no longer be controlled by some central state body....It should also be the concern of the regions, departments and municipalities. We must also strongly encourage the action of the trade unions and professional associations...."

In the PS view "that presupposes, of course, that the various actions be properly coordinated. That would be the role played by a cooperation agency whose administrative council would include representatives from the various bodies listed above...." Does this view imply purely and simply eliminating the existing Cooperation Ministry? That doesn't seem to be the PS objective. Questioned on this subject, Mrs Neirtz told us: "In any case, this isn't one of the first priorities." Therefore on this specific point, as on the objectives of development aid, there doesn't seem to be any serious cause for anxiety among the African capitals friendly with France.

On the contrary, the desire to ensure greater economic security for the African countries, to speed up the formation of economic groupings, to boost research, to give priority to agriculture, to regard industrial development only as a complement to rural activities, to broaden the cultural dimensions of cooperation and to reject a "cold withdrawal into our heritage" are attractive. It must be added that the PS program will not necessarily be that of the president who will clearly have a special interest in African questions and who doesn't intend to speak only for the Socialist voters.

ENVOYS TO REASSURE ARAB STATES ON INTENTIONS

NC261044 Paris AFP in English 1033 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Paris, 26 May (AFP)—The new French Government is to send envoys to Arab states in the next few days, newly-appointed External Relations (Foreign) Minister Claude Cheysson announced here today.

Their mission will probably be to reassure Arab states of President Francois Mitterrand's intentions in the Middle East, particularly in its policy towards Israel which the French leader plans to visit soon, observers said.

The new president's brother, General Jacques Mitterrand, managing director of a French aerospace company, met Crown Prince Fahd in Saudi Arabia to deliver a message from Mr Mitterrand even before his election, Mr Cheysson said.

Mr Cheysson, who earlier today met Lebanese Foreign Minister Fu'ad Butrus, stressed in a radio interview here that "France was a reliable partner and would remain so. We are not going to change everything from one day to the next," he said. "France must show the Americans we are reliable partners," the foreign minister said. "We will be that much stronger in the Atlantic alliance, which is the basis of all our security and our foreign policy, if our policy is felt elsewhere, even if we disagree with the Americans," he said.

JOSPIN SPELLS OUT PCF COALITION CONDITIONS

NC272235 Paris AFP in English 2230 GMT 27 May 81

[Text] Paris, 27 May (AFP)--French Socialist Party First Secretary Lionel Jospin spelled out today under what conditions Communists might join a new government to be formed after next month's legislative elections.

Mr Jospin, whose party dominates the government appointed last week after President Francois Mitterrand's election victory, said: "You cannot form a cabinet with people with whom you do not see eye to eye--there cannot be two policies within the government."

As a consequence, the Socialist first secretary added, "A government pact must be signed" among any partners in the new cabinet embodying its basic orientations, and it was "difficult to envisage such a pact with the Communists."

Communist Party leader Georges Marchais has let it be known that the Communists were ready to take on government responsibilities. But Communists and Socialists differ on the speed with which domestic changes should be pushed through, the Socialists being more cautious, and on foreign policy issues.

The Socialists have condemned the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan which the Communists have approved, and the Socialists accept the idea of more Western missiles installed in Europe, something the Communists oppose.

Discussions on such differences between the two parties are to open on Friday, ahead of elections in which both left-wing parties are already pledged anyway to come to each other's support.

MARCHAIS OUTLINES AIMS FOR ASSEMBLY ELECTION

LD221535 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 16 May 81 pp 4, 5

[Report on PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais' report to PCF Central Committee meeting in Paris on 15 May: "We Are in the New Majority"]

[Text] Georges Marchais presented the following report to the PCF Central Committee yesterday:

After 23 years in power, the right has lost control of the country's affairs. Giscard d'Estaing has been defeated. Francois Mitterrand, for whom we asked people to vote, has been elected president of the republic. Thus, a radically new situation has been created. Great hope has been raised among working men and women and among all those men and women who suffered from capital's policy. They are rejoicing and are counting on change. We fully share their satisfaction. Our whole battle was waged with the desire to remove Giscard d'Estaing and to pave the way for change. We must now define our line and our tasks in the present situation.

I--Our Line

Our policy and our strategy are those defined by our 22d and 23d congresses. I will summarize their main outlines very briefly.

As our 23d congress resolution indicates, we are struggling for "a social transormation which will make democracy progress further than it has ever done," to the stage of the democratic, self-managing socialism which we want for France. This choice--I quote the resolution--is "ambitious but not arbitrary. It constitutes the modern, popular and realistic response to French society's objective need and is the only way out of the crisis."

We want to attain this objective of a democratic socialism by following a path which is itself democratic. This democratic path is indivisibly the path of struggle--social struggles and election struggles to secure ever more advanced democratic victories--and the path of union. The union we want is a new, loyal and clear union based on a grass-roots movement of workers in action and reflected in agreements among political parties "which do not embellish the partners' real positions, do not disguise either the things which unite them or the things which still divide them and which promote, not curb, the people's movement's action." We want a union which respects the individuality and autonomy of each party, and, of course, at the same time the joint pledges made.

In this spirit, congress called on us not to separate the struggle for union from the effort to develop the influence of our party's ideas, its positions, it own activity and organizations. "Union in struggles for democratic change"--I am again citing what we said at the 23d congress--"cannot successfully be attained, maintained and promoted without the existence and strengthening of the revolutionary party, in other words our PCF."

Indeed, progress along the path of democratic change presupposes both. This path is neither one of isolation for the party aspiring to lead the masses toward changes on its own, nor one of reducing the party to the role of backup force for a policy of administrating the crisis for capital's benefit.

It is on the basis of this policy--briefly summarized here--that we appointed a Communist candidate for the presidential election and fixed a clear objective for the party's campaign: to defeat the government and capital's policy embodied by Giscard d'Estaing and to change the country's policy.

It was in keeping with this approach that I explained on 23 March--in my capacity as Communist candidate--the way in which we intended to move toward that objective.

Finally, it was that same approach which inspired our Central Committee's decision, 2 days after the first round, to throw all our forces into the battle to defeat the right and ensure victory for Francois Mitterrand.

I would like to recall that we adopted that stance without in any way underestimating the inadequacy of our result in the first round and the difficulties which could stem from that in the future. But the analysis we made led us to the conclusion that this setback was essentially due to the specific characteristics and nature of this election, to the fact that some of our voters, who nonetheless continue to regard themselves as Communist voters, sought what they saw as the most "useful" vote for immediate change. In these conditions, we felt that we could count on appreciable political strength. We chose clearly and plainly to move forward, as our activity between the two rounds demonstrated.

We are, therefore, justified in saying that we made a full contribution to the election victory which has now been won. I stress the word "full." As simple arithmetic clearly reveals, the Communist voters' contribution in the second round was a determining factor in ensuring Francois Mitterrand's election.

But above all, I mean by that that it was precisely the implementation of all aspects of the 23d congress--as I have just outlined it--which rendered our share in the victory possible. With our policy and our action, the right has been defeated this time, whereas it won in 1978 and before that in 1974.

This essential conclusion is not altered by the fact that, owing to the nature of the presidential election, which poses a problem for us to which we will return, we recorded a drop in our votes in the first round.

Francois Mitterrand's election constitutes a sanction, a rejection of Giscardian policy and government, of the right's exclusive domination of the country for 23 years.

The scope of that desire for change was such that the maneuver, used by Chirac since 1976 on behalf of the bourgeoisie, which consists in adopting a position which make it possible to capture the votes of discontented voters and transferring them to Giscard at the last minute, was not enough. The right has been defeated. The tactical nature of Chirac's operation has now been revealed by the UDF-RPR agreement, which was concluded within a few hours.

Therefore, we must not disguise the fact that we are facing a complex situation. Comrades have stressed that in the meetings which have been taking place since Sunday. They are right. But at the same time, there is no cause to be surprised by that.

We stated clearly at our congress that, given the conditions of our country and our age, "the socialist transformation must be accomplished with the clearly and democratically expressed agreement and the active participation of the majority of our people." And we explained that, to "build this movement," it is necessary to envisage not an abrupt and complete break but a "process," "a series of mass struggles" aimed at broadening the workers' positions and securing increasingly advanced democratic changes.

We also indicated that our party intends to act with a view to encouraging progress in all circumstances and to do so in the awareness that, although it plays an irreplaceable role as a driving force in the people's movement, our party cannot replace that movement in taking steps and determining all the conditions in which they are taken.

I repeat, therefore, that there is no reason for us to be surprised at the complexity of the situation, at the inconsistent nature of the movement we are witnessing, still less--should we be so tempted--to be afraid of it.

In the new phase of the struggle which is now starting, everything will still depend on the capacity of the majority people's movement to progress toward the realization of the hopes placed in the election victory.

The line we are proposing to the Central Committee is quite simply to adhere to the line we have hitherto followed--the line laid down by our congress.

As an integral part of the majority people's movement which has removed the right from power, our party's sole aim is to do all it can to contribute to the changes the workers expect and the country needs. Our party's sole aim is to help the workers to progress, learning from each experience at each stage, and in this way, to create the right conditions for ever bigger democratic advances.

II--Implementation of Our Line in the New Situation

That was the spirit of the statement which I made on the Politburo's behalf immediately after 2000 hours on Sunday evening [10 May]. I recall the essential wording of that statement. After expressing the joy and hope of all Communists after the election victory, I immediately stressed that our party is prepared to assume all its responsibilities, in government and at all levels of national life, in implementing the new policy which the country needs. Our desire is to contribute, with all our forces and from our rightful place, to the task of renovation which the country wants and expects. Our approach is positive and constructive.

What does that imply in practical terms for our activity in the coming period? We think it will be necessary to consider our medium- and long-term activity when the time comes.

There are, of course, lessons to be learned from the battle which we have just experienced --lessons which apply to the development of our activity in all spheres. There will be tasks to define and, moreover, they mainly will be continuations of the decisions taken at our 23d Congress, which we have started to implement.

For instance, we will have to review our effort to gain a better understanding of and to address ourselves to the working class in all the diverse categories it comprises, from the most seriously exploited workers, to whom we rightly devote great attention, to the technical workers in whose direction we have begun constructive work. We must consider how to pursue our action toward the workers in small- and medium-sized enterprises.

We must also develop our work with women, whose election campaign clearly showed that their action is indeed one of the characteristic traits of our age. The same is true of young people, whose votes made a great contribution to the victory last Sunday.

In the spirit of the Bobigny national council meeting and in view of the lessons to be learned from the election campaign, we must also continue to improve our approach to the intellectuals.

We must also recall the special importance which we attach to dialogue and action with the faithful.

Those are just a few examples, not a full list. A living party like ours must necessarily constantly consider its activity, discuss it at all levels in the appropriate frameworks fixed by our rules and closely link its theory to its practice, to its action as a revolutionary and democratic party struggling in the workers' service.

That is what we have striven to do--and, moreover, we provided ourselves with new means of doing so at our 23d congress--and what we will do in the future.

At the present time, we are proposing to the Central Committee that we should concentrate all our attention and all the party's activity on the urgent tasks facing us in these few weeks between the new president of the republic's inauguration and the election of a new National Assembly and the formation of a new government. There is a great deal to be done. Let us examine that in detail.

In a few days' time, Francois Mitterrand will take office. He will appoint his government. We, for our part, have said that we are prepared to assume all our responsibilities immediately.

This government will be able to take a few measures without awaiting the parliamentary election and respecting its prerogatives. We are thinking in particular of increasing the lowest wages, particularly the minimum wage, increasing pensions and retirement benefits, family and housing allowances, ending redundancies, temporarily freezing the prices of mass consumption products and certain other prices and taking steps to protect the country's economy and our currency. Negotiations must be opened with the trade union and employers' representatives and action must be taken to ensure that they result in prompt satisfaction of workers' demands.

With regard to the democratic reforms which can be envisaged, we, for our part, still consider that proportional representation is the best electoral system. To implement this system, it would of course be necessary to take the initiative of examining the possibilities of a favorable vote in parliament. Nonetheless, the decisive step for the future is obviously the parliamentary elections.

We are positively and wholly part of the new majority--the movement which made Francois Mitterrand's election on 10 May possible. Our aim is to confirm the right's defeat, to successfully bring about change by installing a strong, clear and stable leftwing union parliamentary majority and a union government which will contain all the forces which contributed to the victory and will work to implement the policy the country wants.

That means that the PCF must have an adequate electoral influence, that it must have its place in the new majority and the government--a place which will enable it to make its voice heard, to make its original contribution to the common task. Just as they formerly worked in the opposition as consistent defenders of the manual and intellectual workers and determined fighters against the employers and the right, the Communists and their elected representatives intend to work within the majority in the future as good spokesmen for the workers who are the best architects of change.

In all the constituencies where the outgoing deputy is a Communist, forming the leftwing majority which will work for change with the president of the republic means reelecting the Communist deputies who already belong to the new majority and have proved that they are in the best position to defeat the right.

It is for these objectives that we propose to you that voters be called upon to vote for the candidates put forward by our party. We are going into battle with the avowed objective of securing the reelection of all our outgoing deputies and winning seats from the right.

Of course, we must not oversimplify things or deny the complexity of the situation. In our view, this situation merely increases the need to wage our battle in a clearly positive and attacking way.

The conditions for and significance of the voting in the parliamentary elections are, in fact, not the same as in the presidential election. It is no longer a matter of electing a man but of electing an assembly. It is a question of confirming a power, a majority which has existed de facto since last Sunday. The question posed isn't whether the right will or will not be defeated. It has been clearly defeated and will be defeated again in 5 weeks time.

In clearly posing the question of our party's need to have an adequate place in the new assembly, our only intention is to create the best conditions for establishing a strong, well-constituted majority firmly anchored in the left and a leftwing union government.

Voting Communist and ensuring the election of a Communist deputy is a useful vote for bringing about change for the leftwing union and for the new majority.

This line raises two questions which I would now like to tackle. The first is: On what program are we to fight this election?

We have the 131 struggle plan proposals which I defended during the presidential election campaign. They express what we want and what is necessary to steer the country out of the crisis. They were approved by 4.5 million voters for whom we have the duty to act as spokesmen. They are, therefore, still fully valid. We propose to regard them as the party's general program for the future.

However, the object of the forthcoming elections is to install a majority and a new government whose task it will be to take the initial step toward implementing the new policy.

That is why, with a view to this initial step, we think it appropriate to put to the country a more limited range of objectives for government action--objectives drawn from the struggle plan and faithful to its general orientation.

These objectives might, for instance, relate to the struggle for full employment and against job insecurity, the struggle for social justice and improving the lives of working men and women and young people, national industrial, agricultural, scientific and cultural development and the introduction of reforms which will provide the necessary economic and financial means, the extension of democracy at all levels and the guarantee of freedoms; the assertion, while respecting its alliances, of France's independent role in the world in the service of settling conflicts, of peace, disarmament and the establishment of a new economic and political order. In each of these spheres, some of the measures we are proposing would have to be recalled in accordance with their importance or urgency.

This brings me to the second question raised: negotiations with the PS.

During his campaign, Francois Mitterrand indicated that there would be negotiations among the leftwing parties. I will repeat there what I said on Sunday evening--that we are prepared to take part in those negotiations. We are available for contacts at any time.

We are prepared to discuss with the intention of ensuring the best conditions for the left's victory in the parliamentary election, with the intention of taking our place in the union government which will implement the new policy the country needs.

That means that we don't intend to approach these negotiations by asking the Socialists to abandon their ideas and their program for which the voters voted, in short, to stop being Socialists, any more than we can be asked to stop being what we are. A merger between our two parties isn't on the agenda. It isn't necessary or even desirable. Consequently, we don't expect and aren't asking for the forthcoming discussions to produce completely identical views in all spheres.

We don't think that in any way prevents us from agreeing to work together--each obtaining his own place--to confirm the right's defeat and to govern together in cooperation based on loyalty, mutual respect, democratic discussion and solidarity in action.

To succeed, the essential thing is the will to work together to fulfill the country's expectations. We, for our part, have that will. It is in this spirit that we are proposing to the Central Committee that negotiations with the PS be approached.

In conclusion, I will very quickly outline some of the party's immediate tasks.

First, we think that, in the coming days, we must continue to publicize and defend our constructive, attacking position by holding an increasing number of meetings with the workers in the enterprises, with the population of the big urban areas and also in the suburbs and villages. We must pay particular attention to young people and address ourselves to them by specific initiatives in liaison with the Communist Youth Movement. All these initiatives could make it possible to win many new members and strengthen the party's organization.

Second, we must plan the parliamentary election campaign. That means that we must quickly appoint and ratify the candidates and plan the various publications and initiatives. In this connection, several federations have decided to transform their federal festivals essentially into political rallies. It means taking steps to pursue the effort of distributing our press and boosting subscriptions. We must plan and conduct a campaign whose forms are in keeping with our line, in other words, a dynamic, responsible, reasoned and very active campaign in the field and in the constituencies.

UDF'S LECANUET SAYS CENTRISTS NOW IN OPPOSITION

LD261507 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 May 81 p 10

[Text] UDF Chairman Jean Lecanuet, who was the Europe 1 Press Club's guest on Sunday, 24 May, maintained that the centrists are now in opposition and refused to contemplate "a hypothesis in which Socialists and Communists would no longer be united." He stressed: "Faced with the threat posed by a Socialist and Communist majority, it is my duty to oppose it, to forget quarrels and to be a man of union.... These are the constraints of the majority election system."

The UDF chairman expressed the view that if Mitterrand "had wished to shake off the ties which bind him to the PCF," he could have put to parliament "the question of how he wanted the National Assembly to go to the country." That was a reference to altering the electoral law. He added: "We advocated the majority system as long as we were in the majority. I have read the Socialist program and, in theory, the Socialists advocate proportional representation."

Lecanuet then asserted: "It isn't I who is splitting France in two. My whole political life has been based on a fight to try to overcome this division among the French people. It is the method of electing the president and, now, the method of electing deputies that is causing the split. Why are the Socialists forced to form an alliance with the Communists? To be elected. And why are we centrists forced to form alliances? Because, without alliances, we would have no deputies and without them would not be represented in the assemblies. Without that representation in the assemblies, there would be no way of putting our ideas across."

The UDF chairman nonetheless ruled out the idea of reforming the constitution with regard to the presidential election. He added: "I am forming the center with Chirac.... The majority voting system forces me to form alliances in order not to abandon the country to the absolute and unrestrained domination of Socialists and Communists. The same problem is facing the Socialists in their relations with the communists."

"If, as I hope," he continued, "we win the elections, to prevent the country from sliding completely toward the excesses of the Socialist and Communist program, we will have to take account of a number of changes which France has expressed by choosing a new president--just as that new president will have to take account of the options we represent to maintain a society based on freedom and responsibility. There will have to be an agreement. That agreement will necessarily be reached."

With regard to Giscard d'Estaing, Lecanuet noted: "I hope that...while playing a more detached role, he will remain in French political life and will give us advice. When the time comes, if he wishes, he will demonstrate his presence to the French people...." With regard to the possibility of the former president standing as candidate in the parliamentary elections in the second Puy-de-Dome constituency (where Murellon (UDF), his former replacement, isn't standing) Lecanuet stated: It isn't for me to express my intention or desires on the former president's decisions. It is for him to decide."

Lecanuet then turned to economic questions, indicating that this would be the dominant theme of the election campaign. On this point, he stated: "I think that the presidential majority has deluded the country by making promises it will not be able to keep and we are already seeing the harmful effects of its action on the state of the franc.... The dollar is now worth Fr5.6. The oil bill which was Fr130 billion will increase to Fr200 billion toward the end of 1981.... The interest on loans granted by the Bank of France have increased from around 12.5 percent to 22 percent, which is an extraordinary record. You [as published] are restoring exchange controls and starting to close the borders by limiting the purchase of foreign assets. In short, after a few days, we are seeing--I deplore this, don't think it pleases me--the consequences of the implementation of the Socialist program. Naturally, this is producing an extremely serious deterioration in the monetary situation and the franc's value, with all the consequences that will have."

CUBAN DELEGATION ATTENDS CONFERENCE IN PARIS

Talks With Marchais

He was said to have agreed to try to form a new government.

DC PARTY RULES MASONIC LODGE MEMBERS MUST RESIGN

[Text] Rome, 27 May (ANSA)--The Christian Democrat Party (DC) many of whose card-carrying members' names appeared on a purported membership list of the Propaganda-2, P-2 for short, secret Masonic lodge, has ruled that the persons involved will have to clarify their position before the party within ten days and step down from the posts they hold within the party.

The decision was reached yesterday by the DC Steering Committee and announced in a communique today which reiterated "irreconcilability and incompatibility", implicit in the party statute, between membership in the Catholic party and Masonic organizations, which are traditionally laic.

The spreading scandal of the powerful secret lodge, whose members are believed to include government ministers, members of Parliament, judges, armed forces and police officers, bankers, publishers, journalists and other high-ranking figures in the Italian establishment, has already brought about the fall of the four-party coalition government of Premier Arnaldo Forlani (DC), which stepped down yesterday. The names of three cabinet ministers, two Christian Democrats and a Socialist, and three undersecretaries in the government were on the list.

The only government official who quit when his name was revealed was Justice Minister Adolfo Sarti (DC), who resigned from office Sunday although he denied being a member of the power-wielding lodge, which has been implicated in a wide range of criminal, political and financial misdeeds.

Other Christian Democrats who appeared on the list were former Foreign Trade Minister Gaetano Stammati, outgoing Labor Minister Franco Foschi (who declined to step down after the list was revealed last week), former minister Mario Pedini, Undersecretary Vito Napoli, M.P.'s Publio Fiori, Massimo de Carolis and Gianaldo Arnaud, Senator Vincenzo Carollo, former President of the Lombard Region Cesare Golfari.

Meanwhile, as the political world is trying to regain its balance after the shockwaves of the P-2 scandal, the military and secret services are still reeling from the release of the list of names. The list also included the names of high-ranking military officers such as defense chief of state Admiral Giovanni Torrisi, military counterespionage chief General Giuseppe Santovito and internal security service chief General Giulio Grassini, as well as many others. One of these, Colonel Antonio Viezzer, was arrested Friday on charges of political and military spying.

Magistrates probing the various ramifications of the lodge scandal today questioned three officers of the secret service. Up to now, none of the officers implicated in the affair have stepped down and all have denied membership in the lodge. Socialist M.P. Falco Accame former chairman of the House Defense Commission, today urged that all the officers take a leave of absence.

COLOMBO MEETS SPAIN'S PEREZ LLORCA ON EEC ENTRY

AU262007 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Rome, 26 May (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and the head of Spanish diplomacy, Pedro Jose' Perez Llorca, on a working visit to Rome, met today for consultations on Spain's future entry into the European Economic Community and NATO and a range of bilateral issues connected to Italian exports of manufactured goods.

The two ministers, whose meeting came off as scheduled despite the opening of an Italian Government crisis, took up discussion on an agenda covered at the end of April during the visit to Rome of King Juan Carlos of Spain. On the matter of Spanish membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Colombo yesterday expressed Italy's satisfaction on the prospect of Spain's entry and noted the agreement of all the fifteen NATO members on the issue. The Italian foreign minister was in Venice for the final day of the four-day NATO Parliamentary Assembly.

Perez Llorca, speaking about Spain's application for membership in the European Community filed five years ago and the negotiations of the past two and-a-half years, said that entry was "a national policy necessity". He went on to mention the importance his government attributes to contacts with Italy, referred to as an "ally" in Spain's battle for entry into the EEC, on the political and technical levels.

Spain and the Community have failed to reach agreement on fourteen points in membership negotiations. The outstanding problems concern social policy and fiscal affairs and the requirement for Spain to adopt a value added tax regime to align fiscal policy with that of the Community Ten. The more weighty difficulties are those of fishing and agriculture. Farm policy negotiations may be moved forward in the near future with the disclosure of the outlines of agricultural policy reform now under study in Community quarters. In this connection, the Italian foreign minister told his colleague today that Italy will not accept farm policy reform measures which might pose new obstacles to the entry of Spain in the Community.

ROMANIAN PARTY LEADER RADOI ATTENDS PRI CONGRESS

Calls on Spadolini

Appreciating the presence of the RCP at the proceedings of the PRI Congress to be an expression of the excellent relations between the two parties, Giovanni Spadolini expressed his high appreciation of the international role and activity of the Romanian leader and stressed that his party wished to amplify its relations with the RCP.

Meets PCI's Berlinguer

AU231355 Bucharest Domestic Service in Romanian 1300 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] Comrade Enrico Berlinguer, general secretary of the Italian Communist Party [PCI], received Comrade Marin Radoi, candidate member of the Political Executive Committee of the RCP Central Committee, in Rome.

The Romanian guest extended greetings and wishes for new successes in the activity of Italian Communists, on behalf of Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, RCP secretary general.

Thanking Comrade Marin Radoi for the message, Comrade Enrico Berlinguer asked him to extend to Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu warmest and most friendly congratulations and greetings on the 60th RCP anniversary, in his own behalf and on behalf of the PCI leadership, as well as wishes for progress and prosperity to the Romanian people and wishes for success to all communists in implementing the decisions of the 12th RCP congress.

Stressing with satisfaction the friendly relations between the two parties, based on mutual esteem and respect, the sides expressed the desire to develop and diversify these relations to the benefit of strengthening traditional ties between the Romanian and Italian peoples and in the interest of the cause of peace, progress and detente in Europe and throughout the world. Comrade Marin Radoi is in Rome attending the proceedings of the 34th Congress of the Italian Republican Party as RCP representative. He extended a message of greetings to the congress on behalf of the RCP Central Committee and its secretary general, Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu.

RCP Message

AU231841 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1745 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] Rome, 23 May (AGERPRES)--Addressing the participants in the 34th National Congress of the Republican Party of Italy, the representative of the Romanian Communist Party, Marin Radoi, alternate [candidate] member of the Political Executive Committee of the CC of the RCP, reiterated Romania's stand on the main international questions. He pointed out that the Romanian Communist Party and his country paid special attention to the strengthening of cooperation and security in Europe, declared for resolute actions towards disarmament, nuclear disarmament in the first place, for the establishment of a new international economic order.

The RCP--the speaker highlighted--consistently works for developing its relations of friendship with all the communist and workers' parties, with the Socialist and social democratic parties, with the national liberation movements, with the democratic, progressive parties and organizations everywhere with a view to preventing the deterioration of the international situation, democratizing interstate relations, ensuring each nation's free and independent development on the road of progress and civilization and the triumph of the cause of peace and collaboration among peoples.

Conference With Craxi

AU251050 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 0925 GMT 25 May 81

[Text] Rome, 25 May (AGERPRES)--Marin Radoi, alternate [candidate] member of the Political Executive Committee of the CC of the RCP, called on Bettino Craxi, secretary-general of the Italian Socialist Party, to whom he conveyed a cordial message of salute on behalf of Nicolae Ceausescu, RCP general secretary. In his turn, Bettino Craxi conveyed the head of the RCP a warm and friendly salute, on his own behalf and on behalf of the entire Socialist Party.

During the talks, which passed in a particularly cordial atmosphere, the good relations were highlighted between the RCP and the Italian Socialist Party which were given fresh impulses after the meetings between Nicolae Ceausescu and Bettino Craxi, the wish being also expressed of developing those relations which contribute to the deepening of the good links between Italy and Romania, to the strengthening of international solidarity in the struggle for defending the peoples' freedom and independence, for a better and more just world. Marin Radoi also had talks with Gian Carlo Pajetta and Gianni Giadresco, member of the CC of the Italian Communist Party, focusing on the current concerns on an internal and international plane of the two parties.

UCD CHAIRMAN ON POLITICAL SCENE, PARTY RECORD

LD271217 Madrid YA in Spanish 19 May 81 p 18

[Francisco Muro de Iscar interview with Union of the Democratic Center (UCD) Chairman Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun: "Disenchantment Unjustified in Times of Freedom"]

[Text] For the past 100 days Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun, a 50-year-old from Avila and extrepreneur expert at extricating companies from their crises, has been chairman of the UCD, the man who took over the post from Adolfo Suarez when Calvo-Sotelo became prime minister. Now, 100 days after the Palma congress, it is possible to make an initial stocktaking of what has been achieved, of the situation and of the future. The topics for discussion were state and party matters. Although he began by saying: "Please do not ask me whether the UCD is splitting--and I did not ask him that--the conversation naturally proceeded from this context.

[Rodriguez Sahagun] I have appealed for the solidarity of all UCD members so that in their appearances they do not give the impression or feeling--sometimes caused by the desire for protagonism or personalism--that there is a split or a rupture within the UCD. I am absolutely sure that it does not exist, although I accept that some people might not feel comfortable within the party, which is a living organism. If somebody leaves the UCD it does not matter. Similarly, one must accept the entry of people previously outside the party. That does not matter either. Has the PCE split because Tamames left? That is an important event, because it demonstrates the existence of a crisis, but the parties' maturity is measured precisely by their ability to resolve their crises. If we analyze the UCD's maturity, it must be borne in mind that the UCD has emerged triumphantly from two general elections; a transition process; the Mallorca congress, with its open, tough and transparent debate; and a crisis in which its leader abandoned the prime ministership and party chairmanship at the same time....

Of course, many people have in mind the votes which we lost in parliament. But how many votes have the party and the government won, as against these few lost, however serious--and we will prevent this happening again by means of increased discipline and the demand that our deputies be present. All the laws have been passed thanks to the support of the UCD's parliamentary groups.

I recognize that we have not managed to sell the product, to win the media battle, and that we must improve considerably in this direction. We will try to remedy this by means of greater propaganda aggressiveness, by not evading debate, involvement and dialogue and by ever increasing our representation so as to reach the whole of society.

[Question] The recent Political Council meeting reasserted that the UCD's strategy must be that of a center-center, in the present situation being experienced by Spanish society. This is a constant factor in the UCD's statements. But some people believe that this reaffirmation is prompted by the fact that the party is not certain about its political space....

[Answer] Spanish society has shown that it is moderate and tolerant and that it does not want a radicalization or confrontations between the major blocs, and this prompts it to declare its propensity toward an approach which coincides 100 percent with the UCD's objectives. Therefore, we realize that, because of the scale of our electoral space, attempts are being made from outside the party, both on the left and on the right--but sometimes by individual internal attitudes, misinterpreting what it means to belong to our party--to wrest this space from us. Even those who did not participate in the parties' present consolidation are trying every means to create an image of weakness within the UCD.

Nor do I conceal the fact that there could be attitudes in our party which at a given time are not the most suitable.

But as against this, the great majority of UCD members are working day by day to strengthen the party and to ensure that it has the vigor it needs.

[Question] Mr Chairman, was there or was there not a debate at the UCD Political Council meeting?

[Answer] In view of what has been said, I must state that there was a debate--and a thorough one. No less than 21 speeches were delivered, of which only 2 were critical. This means that there was agreement with the analysis of the major topics made by the party leadership bodies and the government.

The party has three very clear tasks. The first is continuous backing for the government and for those holding decision-making posts or posts of responsibility within the administration, the autonomies or the municipalities. The results of the coming elections will depend on how well they function in all these areas, because we will be able to capitalize on their activity. But the consolidation of the democratic state will also depend on their efficiency and results.

The second task is to be permanently prepared to contest both scheduled and future elections. In the fall, which is just around the corner, there are elections in Galicia which are of fundamental importance to everyone and constitute a most important test.

Last, the third task demands the consolidation and penetration of the sociological infrastructure of the center electorate, the middle classes, who are in the majority and who have been our voters.

[Question] But perhaps while the policy pursued by the UCD is designed to suit the middle classes, it does not exactly benefit them....

[Answer] This criticism cannot be made in general terms without a careful analysis of the facts. The UCD's major problem has been not what it has done but its failure to explain what it has done. UCD governments have been more concerned with building a modern Spain than with explaining what was being done, to a society unprepared for social, and therefore political, change. Moreover, simultaneous government and party responsibilities constitute a major handicap to displaying the media aggressiveness displayed by the other parties, because it is much more attractive to attack the government than to support it or defend its actions. But in view of the demagoguery, which is making increasing headway, we have a logical mission; to give society not more factors of instability but elements of stability and rationality.

[Question] Must society do more, despite its problems?

[Answer] I believe that to some extent problems are being delegated and responsibilities evaded. A society accustomed to paternalism whereby it was given everything, is suddenly being confronted with freedom and maturity of conscience. And it is resisting. We are creating a different kind of society, perhaps guided and led, but never supervised. But society's attention is being concentrated on artificial problems or problems always viewed in the short term; we are living from one day to the next, without a strategic view of our future, perhaps because there is such an accumulation of problems that we scarcely have time to reflect. If we concentrated on emphasizing what it is that we are trying to build, on discussing the real solutions to unemployment and studying how to achieve higher savings and investments....I believe that we would all benefit.

[Question] But it is the ruling class, the politicians, the employers and trade unions round a table who must do this....

[Answer] I identify three kinds of issue. Matters of state, which must be decided by the political forces by means of consultation and dialogue so as to reach an agreement.

An offer in this direction has been made by the prime minister and a positive approach is being adopted to the autonomies issue and is necessary in other areas, such as terrorism and public security and the state. What we are witnessing are attacks not on a particular government or party but against society as a whole.

[Question] Why are some parties--for instance the governing parties of Catalonia and the Basque country--being excluded from this?

[Answer] It is a matter not of exclusions but of separate phases, stages in the conduct of the dialogue. First, the agreement of the major parties is fundamental, and one cannot pretend that all the parties carry the same weight, bearing in mind the election results and their consequent representation in parliament. On the other hand, one cannot presume to adopt a partisan stance on the autonomies issue or to use it as a weapon. Hence stem the parties' responsibility and the need for their leaders to explain it to the grassroots. Everything to do with consultation involves some internal political cost, but that is what we politicians are here for--to sacrifice ourselves and to ensure progress with respect to the fundamental issues. The first priority is to achieve a strong state, which does not mean a centralist one, but one which is the sum of all the components of a state--power at the central, autonomies and local levels--and which functions efficiently, with guarantees. A territorial organization of the state implies a distribution of political power among the various decision-making levels, a distribution which need not affect Spain's unity in the least, just as it is not affected by the existence of executive, legislative and judicial powers. But in this context, gestures are very important and it is very important that Spain's unity and the importance of the state's strength be proclaimed at all levels, that there be no centrifugal impetuses and that the development of the autonomies take place with an attitude of cooperation, collaboration and solidarity.

[Question] What scope is there for consultation on social and economic matters?

[Answer] They too must be the subject of a dialogue among the social forces concerned, although at times of crisis, such as the present, the government must intervene to encourage stimuli that will facilitate agreement and the implementation of an economic policy beneficial to society as a whole. We need more solidarity. Every day contradictory demands are being made on the state. For instance, greater purchasing power for salaries, less unemployment and lower inflation. Obviously these three things are impossible to achieve all at once. As far as I am concerned, the priority now is to cut unemployment and control the other factors. I believe that we leaders should join together in stating certain clear, albeit harsh, realities. For instance, that the basic need is for people to work harder. That nobody can earn more without working harder; that we have recently set up a society based on rights, whereas at the moment we should be concentrating on obligations, duties and merit. I believe that we must improve the level of productivity and competitiveness, which are our major problems at present, by working harder and better. The government and the employers' and trade union organizations are trying to do this in the quest for a framework that will make possible an active unemployment policy.

It is also necessary to create the climate for private and public investment and to ensure that small and medium enterprises can work with prospects of feasibility, which demands a policy that will enable us to lower financing costs, which are at present eliminating any chances of profit. It must be stated clearly that profits are legitimate and indispensable.

[Question] This requires a contribution from everyone....

[Answer] And the contribution that everyone must make is their capacity for self-sacrifice. With regard to the trade union organizations this applies to productivity and the purchasing power of earnings.

If they do not do this there will be further crises in certain sectors and more unemployment. As for the enterprises, it means investing and creating more jobs. And for the administration and the government it means establishing clear rules of the game that will not interfere in but make possible all the foregoing.

[Question] Mr Prime Minister, is the government governing?

[Answer] At what is a difficult time the government is governing; it is implementing its program, as it has promised its voters to do. Possibly at some moments part of the electorate might say that deviations are occurring. I would like a serious debate so as to disprove this, because I believe that the UCD is implementing its program. We are midway through the legislative term and it can be shown that in many fields we have already fulfilled 80 percent of our promises. Since we have a definite determination to reach the end of our mandate, we will continue to do so.

As for disillusionment and disenchantment, which can be justified at times of dictatorship or oppression, there is no place for disenchantment in times of freedom. [answer ends]

Rodriguez Sahagun, optimistic despite everything, ended by citing a remark by Kennedy: "The problems which we men create by our errors we can remedy through wisdom and determination." Now, 100 days after the Mallorca congress, the party headed by the man from Avila needs a great deal of wisdom and determination: Although it must be said that here and now the party is trying to achieve this and that the government has improved its image.

PSUC CENTRAL COMMITTEE SUPPORTS EUROCOMMUNISM

LD271255 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA In Spanish 19 May 81 p 10

[Text] The PSUC [Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia] Central Committee has proclaimed the party's Eurocommunist character, confirming its political line on "socialism within freedom." The resolution introduced and formulated by the present leadership was approved by 63 votes to 33 with no abstentions. This agreement does not invalidate the results of the Catalan communists' controversial fifth congress. Nevertheless, it does imply an attempt to surmount the contradictions apparent in the various documents approved at that time. Be that as it may, the PSUC national conference in July will in turn have to ratify this Eurocommunist definition "as a synonym of the revolution of the majority as defined by the two previous congresses and as a road to socialism within freedom and to communism." Two executive members, Pere Adriaca (chairman) and Joan Ramos (trade union policy chief,) voted against.

The PSUC leadership believes that this reaffirmation of the Eurocommunist character of party policy and the 10-12 July national conference must bring to a close the period of uncertainty that began following the congress in January. Its analysis of the last 5 months includes no concessions to overconfidence. The reality of the "process of decline" experienced by the party is reflected in the report in remarks such as: "The split which emerged at the fifth congress is in danger of spreading to the entire organization." "The Central Committee believes that it is necessary to end the process of decline that is apparent particularly in the election of leadership bodies (a reference to local or regional committee--LA VANGUARDIA editor's note) and that is introducing irrationality into the internal debate." It also recognizes that there has been a progressive process of self-isolation, "which is leading to a loss of political and mass initiative and to an increasing gulf between internal activity and society" and a crisis in relations with the PCE.

The result of the voting--63 for and 33 against--shows, however, that the pro-Soviet sector has reaffirmed its stances, while the other trends seem to agree with the ideological and interpretative substance of PSUC policy given in the resolution passed.

As for the more moderate Eurocommunists, they are still demanding an extraordinary congress to achieve a definitive clarification of the situation, although less forcefully than before. The leadership's action, which to some extent implies a rapprochement with this sector's political stances, has certainly lessened the major differences that have existed hitherto. Be that as it may, the executive and its secretary general [Francesco Frutos] also received some punitive votes when Frutos presented an analysis of the present situation--39 in favor, 34 against and 18 abstentions. It seems that both sides considered themselves alluded to in the indication of the causes which led to and affected the process experienced by the PSUC, in statements which of course they could not support. Frutos also announced in his speech that from now on, implementation of the party rules would be ensured "to safeguard the democratic functioning of the PSUC," as he also announced at a press conference yesterday morning. At the press conference he also criticized some of the statements made on the occasion of the presentation of the book on Eurocommunism and the PSUC by Gutierrez Diaz and Lopez Raimundo. Specifically, he described as illegal the presentations organized by the Olot and Tarragona local groups, "because when there is an internal debate it is necessary to take advantage of the vehicles available to all members."

Last, it should be pointed out that PCE leader Armando Lopes Salinas made a very positive assessment of the resolution adopted by the PSUC Central Committee. Gutierrez Diaz also expressed his definitely favorable attitude, although in different terms. Francesco Frutos also explained to the press that Tamames' recent departure from the PCE is not unconnected with the absence of an adequate framework in the party within which different viewpoints can be expressed.

Last, the death of three young people on a road in Almeria was condemned most forcefully and described as a serious attack on the most basic civil rights. Defense of and support for the antiterrorist struggle was expressed, as long as it does not conflict with these rights, and the need to democratize the state apparatus was asserted.

PCE SECRETARIAT REJECTS TAMAMES CRITICISMS

LD270827 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 22-28 May 81 p 2

[PCE Central Committee Secretariat note: "Tamames' Departure a Personal Decision"]

[Text] On learning of the public statements which Ramon Tamames is making following his decision to leave the party, the PCE Central Committee Secretariat wishes to state the following:

1--That Ramon Tamames' departure from the PCE is due to a personal and voluntary decision, unrelated to any stance by the party which could justify that decision, and therefore it rejects any kind of responsibility.

2--That Ramon Tamames, like any other PCE member, has constantly upheld his opinions within the party and its Central Committee with complete freedom, without situations occurring at any time which would explain the accusations which Tamames makes about the impossibility of conducting a thorough political debate within the PCE.

3--That the PCE Central Committee Secretariat rejects with the utmost vigor the charges which Ramon Tamames is making against PCE bodies and against its leaders.

4--That it reaffirms its desire to advance along and enhance the Eurocommunist political line approved at the ninth congress, as well as to ensure the party's full democratic functioning, guarantee openness in its activity, and develop its organization with the aim of giving our country's workers and forces of culture the party which we need today to tackle the grave problems posed in Spanish society.

5--That it regrets the public statements made by Tamames against the political parties at a time when the Spanish people's maximum confidence in their legitimate representatives is necessary as an essential condition for strengthening the democratic system.

The Ethiopian delegation is led by F. Desta, a close collaborator with the country's head of state, Mengistu Haile Mariam.

ACCORD REPORTEDLY REACHED ON JAN MAYEN ZONE

LD271309 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 20 May 81 p 8

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRAA report]

[Excerpt] According to reports received by NORSK TELEGRAMBYRAA, Iceland will have a continental shelf stretching a full 200 nautical miles toward Jan Mayen Island--at the cost of parts of the Norwegian 200-mile zone around the island. At the same time, Norway and Iceland will set up a partnership for the exploitation of any future oil resources on the whole of the continental shelf area. Norway will be entitled to 25 percent of possible finds on the Icelandic section of the shelf and Iceland to 25 percent on the considerably larger Norwegian section. AFTENPOSTEN has received confirmation of this from Icelandic sources.

This is the recommendation which the Norwegina-Icelandic-U.S. arbitration commission will be presenting to the Icelandic and Norwegian Governments. If the recommendation is accepted, and there is good reason to believe that it will be, it would mean that Iceland would abandon its earlier view that Jan Mayen did not have a continental shelf and also abandon its claims to the whole of the shelf up to a possible 12-mile zone around Jan Mayen. Nevertheless, Iceland benefits most from this arrangement.

The chairman of the arbitration commission, former U.S. Attorney General Elliot Richardson, will arrive in Oslo tomorrow from Reykjavik to present the commission's recommendation to Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund. The other members of the commission are Icelandic international law expert Ambassador Hans Andersen and his Norwegian counterpart Ambassador Jens Evensen. The recommendation is unanimous.

In June last year negotiations on the fishing zones around Iceland and Jan Mayen resulted in an agreement that the Icelandic fishing zone would stretch to its full 200 miles toward Jan Mayen. Thus the boundary of the continental shelf will coincide with the fishing zone boundary. In the opinion of the experts, this is the most practical solution to the demarcation issue.

International law experts told NORSK TELEGRAMBYRAA that this solution to the question of the continental shelf around Jan Mayen is quite unique in international law and that it could be of great significance for similar problems elsewhere in the world. But it has been stressed that the Jan Mayen solution will hardly be of any significance for the question of demarcation line in the Barents Sea.

STATEMENT CLARIFIES HANDLING OF FAMAGUSTA ISSUE

NC231741 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] An official statement issued today on the Famagusta issue says that no opportunity about the town has been lost and stresses that both the Cyprus Government and the Greek Cypriot side at the talks have exerted and will continue to exert every possible effort for the town's return as a question of priority. The statement says that the only opportunity lost was when the town was abandoned without a real reason during the period when Mr Kliridhis presented himself as president of the republic.

The statement further says that Turkish Cypriot Leader Denktas never offered Varosha for the settlement of its inhabitants and that, at his 19 May 1979 meeting with the president of the republic, he admitted that what he had proposed was the settlement of only about 10,000 inhabitants of Varosha under Turkish sovereignty status and in a manner that the inhabitants would become enclaved.

The statement adds: This proposal, which was made with the sole aim of lifting the [U.S. arms] embargo a few days before the voting in the U.S. Congress, was rejected not only by the government but also by representatives of the town's inhabitants.

The statement further says that the Famagusta refugees movement, in a cable to members of U.S. Congress, stressed that as long as the prerequisite for the implementation of any possible agreement for the return of a number of inhabitants to Famagusta would be the resumption of intercommunal talks based on the unacceptable Turkish proposals of April 1978, this proposal should be regarded as without any substantive content and therefore it could not be accepted.

The official statement concludes: Concerning the handling of Famagusta, the Famagusta refugees movement sent a memorandum to the president of the republic on 28 July 1978 expressing full satisfaction to both the president and the government.

KIPRIANOU LAUDS PARTY'S ELECTION VICTORY

NC271043 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 27 May 81 p 1

[26 May statement by President Spiros Kiprianou on Democratic Party's election results]

[Excerpts] The result of the parliamentary elections essentially constitutes a victory for the Democratic Party. With its work that lasted only a few months after the defection, and despite the systematic undermining and polemics from various directions, the Democratic Party has currently become, as was its goal, the regulating factor of the country's political life. This constitutes a feat for the Democratic Party if one takes the conditions into consideration. The Democratic Party begins today, with enthusiasm and conviction, a new start and a new ascending course for the implementation of its program to serve popular interests and our national cause.

The Democratic Party constitutes an independent homogenous entity that is proud of its candidates, including those who won and those who lost, because they all set as their goal the party's progress. The Democratic Party is proud because in parliament it will have a team that will be notable both from the viewpoint of numbers and from the viewpoint of quality, and thus it will be able to fulfill its regulating role in a substantive and constructive manner. The Democratic Party is proud because it is the only party that indisputably represents the center and the democratic right at the present time and invites all of those who share the same philosophy and believe in the same goals to join its ranks. The Democratic Party is proud because it is the first party in Cyprus' history to have elected a woman member of the House of Representatives. Finally, the Democratic Party is proud because it has succeeded not only in surviving but in taking roots in our people's conscience.

I pity the country if, as a result of the elections, the Democratic Party had not become the regulating factor. The result would be complete polarization with unforeseen disastrous consequences.

The Democratic Party will constitute a true shield for the country, for those who may attempt to hurt it more or impose unacceptable solutions on it. Democracy has functioned and everybody must respect the result of the democratic procudures because only in conditions of true democracy, like the one we have and about which we are proud, will it be possible for our people to successfully continue the struggle for survival and vindication.

The Democratic Party offers itself as a genuine militant bastion for our people and will continue with consistency and determination to constitute the vigilant sentinel and defender of the ideals of freedom, democracy and justice.

ZHIVKOV ARRIVES IN RHODES ON OFFICIAL VISIT

Received by Karamanlis

NC271235 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 27 May 81

[Text] Bulgarian Chairman Zhivkov arrived in Rhodes at noon today on an official [as heard] visit on an invitation from President of the Republic Karamanlis. The aircraft carrying the Bulgarian chairman landed at Rhodes airport at exactly 1200 and Zhivkov was received by President of the Republic Karamanlis, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, Bulgarian Ambassador to Athens Todorov and Greek Ambassador to Sofia Nomikos, the Dhodhekanisos Nomarch Panayiotidhis and other officials.

Zhivkov is accompanied by Bulgarian Foreign Minister Mladenov, Minister of Power Supply Todoriev, and senior officials of the Bulgarian Foreign Ministry. The head of the military command and a contingent of commandos paid tribute.

From the airport, Karamanlis and Zhivkov travelled to Rhodes in a motorcade, stopping on the way at the intermediate villages of Kremasti and [Trianda], whose inhabitants gave them a very warm welcome.

In Rhodes, the two presidents, arriving at 1235, were welcomed in the central square in front of the municipal building by Metropolitan Bishop Spiridhon and Mayor Venetoklis, at the head of the municipal council. The mayor welcomed Zhivkov and presented him with the gold medallion of the city of Rhodes with a related diploma, proclaiming him honorary citizen of Rhodes.

Replying to the mayor's address, Zhivkov expressed his thanks for the warm welcome and said the presentation of the city's gold medallion is the highest tribute for the entire Bulgarian nation. He also referred in warm words to Greek-Bulgarian friendship, stressing that the ties between the two countries have developed exceptionally well in recent years thanks to the efforts of President of the Republic Karamanlis and himself. Zhivkov's speech was accompanied by prolonged applause from the crowd which had congregated in the center square of Rhodes. Zhivkov and his entourage proceeded to the Grand Hotel where they will stay.

In the afternoon, the Bulgarian president will visit (Philerimos) and the official talks between Karamanlis and Zhivkov will start at 1900. The talks will cover bipartite and international affairs. The Greek and Bulgarian foreign ministers will attend the talks together with the Bulgarian minister of power supply. At 2100 Karamanlis will give a dinner in honor of Zhivkov at the Knights Castle.

Talks Topic Cancelled

NC271402 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 27 May 81 p 1

[Text] Only a few hours prior to the commencement of talks between President of the Republic Karamanlis and Bulgarian Chairman Zhivkov, the government suddenly announced that an agreement on the use of the Nestos River waters, which was considered the prime topic for their talks, has not yet been completed.

While it was expected that the signing of this agreement (which has been the subject of protracted and difficult negotiations between the two countries) would be the culmination of the talks to be conducted in Rhodes, the government spokesman in answering questions last night, stated that the experts have not concluded the necessary preparatory work for the signing of the agreement and that, for this very reason, the issue of the Nestos River waters will not even be discussed by Karamanlis and Zhivkov.

Despite the reserved wording (with which the experts are blamed for not concluding the preparatory work) it is obvious that the disagreements, which have long existed between the two countries on this issue, could not be bridged.

Thus the main topic for talks between Karamanlis and Zhivkov will be a review of the Balkan situation, the latest developments in the area as well as an exchange of views on the multilateral Balkan conference due to meet in Sofia in the middle of June.

Karamanlis was accompanied to Rhodes by Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and the Bulgarian chairman was accompanied by Bulgarian Foreign Minister Mladenov.

Karamanlis, Zhivkov Talks

NC280840 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0400 GMT 28 May 81

[Text] During the first round of their talks yesterday, Karamanlis and Zhivkov examined bipartite issues and the Balkan situation. At the start, the two presidents held private talks but were later joined by Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, Bulgarian Foreign Minister Mladenov, Bulgarian Minister of Power Supply Todoriev and other officials.

According to authoritative sources, they made a broad review of the situation in the Balkans and the Middle East. Relations between the two countries were also examined and there was an exchange of views. The same circles stressed that it was established that despite the difference in social systems, relations between the two countries are developing satisfactorily and essentially without problems.

The well-informed sources did not reject the possibility that the Nestos River waters issue would also be examined, because it is complicated with many problems. This issue has not yet been resolved and the signing of the relevant agreement is pending. According to the same sources, the two sides agreed to hold the Balkan conference in Sofia from 15 to 19 June, with transportation as the main topic.

These sources also underlined that the meetings between Karamanlis and Zhivkov are being held within the framework of joint cooperation between the two countries and the personal friendship of the two leaders. Good relations between Greece and Bulgaria, these sources pointed out, serve their interests as well as the interests of the Balkan countries and are a contribution to the cause of international peace.

Dinner Toasts Exchanged

NC271947 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 27 May 81

[Excerpts] Talks between President Karamanlis and [Bulgarian State Council] Chairman Todor Zhivkov started at 1930 today. At this moment, President Karamanlis is giving an official dinner in honor of Zhivkov and his entourage.

Addressing Zhivkov, Karamanlis stated: Mr Chairman, I am particularly happy because once again I welcome you to our country. I welcome you as a personal friend but also as a leader who has demonstrated rare political attributes during his long career. Rhodes, in any case, today gave you an example of the feelings which the Greek people have for the Bulgarian people. [words indistinct]

The frequency of our contacts, Mr Chairman, [words indistinct] expresses the [words indistinct] in recent years between our two peoples. At a time when mistrust causes serious problems in the world and creates years-old disputes, we have followed the course of cooperation in a spirit of mutual confidence and good faith.

President Karamanlis continued: This bipartite cooperation between us is developing within the framework of a broader cooperation in the Balkans. The picture given by our relations [words indistinct] and the general climate prevailing in the Balkans are in clear contrast to what is happening in other [words indistinct] which even though they may not be the theater for bloody clashes, are in the throes of severe differences.

The creation of this climate most certainly was helped by the frequent contacts between the leaders of our area and particularly by our own contacts which developed into a sincere and productive friendship. The fact that despite the difference in our political and social systems our relations have followed a steady upward trend is, I think, due to our joint dedication to the UN Charter and to the Final Act of Helsinki and, particularly, to respect of the principles of independence, sovereignty of all nations, and nonintervention into their internal affairs.

This is also the reason that, although we belong to different political coalitions, our views coincide on many international problems. One of these is the tragic problem of Cyprus. The uncertainty of this problem is, unfortunately, prolonged, naturally not due to any responsibility on our part. On this occasion I would, once again, like to state to you that the Greek people deeply appreciate the understanding demonstrated by Bulgaria on this problem.

Karamanlis then continued: Our views also coincide on another issue of (?international) life. I refer to arms limitation and the continual threat to peace. This cannot be solved without a balance of power at the lowest possible level. It is only in this way that the mistrust which prevails in relations can be solved, the mistrust which is fed by the armaments competion.

In our restless times there are many and dangerous problems, both old and new ones. In my opinion all these problems could be given their solution if there is logic and good faith. Our governments perhaps evaluate certain of these problems differently, but they always face them in good faith. This is why these problems do not affect our friendship and our cooperation.

The friendship between nations, Mr Chairman, like friendship between persons, requires ceaseless effort. It needs continual stimulation and enrichment, or else it is in danger of loosing its strength and develops into a conventional relationship. Our frequent personal contacts and the mutual confidence which permeates our relations not only protect Greek-Bulgarian friendship from this danger, but they strengthen it and continually revitalize it. This truth is also confirmed by our present meeting in Rhodes. With these thoughts I raise my glass to the prosperity of the Bulgarian people and to your personal health and happiness, dear Mr Chairman, Karmanlis concluded.

In his reply the Bulgarian chairman stressed:

I am happy to express to the hospitable hosts my heartfelt thanks and those of the persons accompanying me for the extremely warm welcome accorded to me by both the official authorities and the people of Rhodes.

The caressing sun and the beautiful nature of this admirable corner of the Greek land are in full harmony with the noble sentiments of sympathy and friendship between our two nations.

It has become a good tradition, Zhivkov continued, to meet regularly and this is absolutely natural in the relations between two friends. I wish to express my deepest satisfaction, because through our personal ties we have strengthened mutual confidence, we developed broad cooperation betweeen our two countries. I sincerely believe that both of us, Mr President, not only desire but we also have much [word indistinct] strength to contribute to the fullest exploitation of the prospects existing for further development of this cooperation.

The Bulgarian and the Greek people who have overcome the predilections and the heritage of a complicated past are firmly marching along the road of goodneighborliness, the only correct road which fully responds to their interests.

The upward development of Greek-Bulgarian relations is a convincing proof of the fact that when there is good faith and realism, then different social systems are not an obstacle to the creation of relations of goodneighborliness and friendship within the spirit of the principles of the Final Act of Helsinki.

One can note with satisfaction the positive changes brought about in the political climate of the Balkans. We are against any attempt to disturb the state of affairs in the region and we will, as always, do whatever is possible to live in a climate of mutual respect and sincere cooperation with our neighbors, with all the Balkan peoples. We will always diligently pursue our adopted positions of principle. This is the purpose of our latest initiatives [words indistinct]. Unfortunately, we are witness to a serious and dangerous tension in the world situation. The war policy of confrontation pursued by some has caused a considerable increase in international tension with all its subsequent consequences.

It is our duty to once again declare our undeviating determination to fight for the cause of peace and international detente, for the cessation of the armaments race and for general and total disarmament. In our opinion, it is now imperative to make new considerable efforts to eradicate the sources of tension in the Middle and Near East in order to defend peace throughout the world. To this end it is necessary to have a realistic position and to have open dialogue, a dialogue which has nothing to do with confrontation and [word indistinct], a sincere and constructive dialogue.

I sincerely wish to state that I came to this meeting with optimism, because I believe it will be another step forward in friendly Greek-Bulgarian relations and a new contribution by our countries to the efforts to strengthen peace and security in the Balkans, in Europe and the world.

Believing firmly in the fruitful results of our efforts, allow me to propose a toast to the prosperity of the friendly Greek nation, to the continued progress in Bulgarian-Greek relations and goodneighborliness, to your personal health and happiness Mr President, to the health of all those present.

JOINT MILITARY EXERCISE IN AEGEAN AREA ENDS

TA261648 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1545 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Izmir, 26 May (AA)--"First Target-81" military exercises held in the international waters and airspace of the Aegean Sea as well as in the western Anatolia region with the participation of ground, naval and airforce units were brought to a successful end today, officials announced, with the elimination of "enemy forces."

National Security Council member and commander of Ground Forces General Nurettin Ersin said, after attending the final stage of the exercises in nearby Doganbey, that they had been simply "excellent." Ground, naval air force units gave an excellent example of cooperation in combat and communications and fulfilled their missions with good coordination, he added. A bridgehead had been established under artillery cover the amphibious units landing on the Doganbey shore and taking captive the "enemy" soldiers. The exercises had been far better than those of last year with errors seen (?in) practice corrected with further experience, general Ersin said. Live ammunition was used during the exercises.

REPORTS OF NUCLEAR TEST WITH PAKISTAN DENIED

TA222020 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] It has been announced that press reports that Turkey is to conduct an atomic bomb test in cooperation with Pakistan are unfounded. A statement by the Foreign Ministry's Information Department says that Turkey has not and will not permit a nuclear test to take place on its territory. The statement adds that Turkey favors the use of nuclear energy only for peaceful purposes. It supports banning the proliferation of nuclear arms. The statement recalls that Turkey has signed an agreement to this effect, and adds that Turkey also initialed last week the agreement authorizing supervision by the international nuclear energy agency on this subject.

TALKS BEGIN WITH BULGARIAN ECONOMIC DELEGATION

TA261747 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] The sixth round of talks of the joint Turkish-Bulgarian economic and technical cooperation committee began today in Ankara. The Turkish delegation to the talks is headed by Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk while the Bulgarian delegation is led by Transportation Minister Vasil Tsanov who arrived in Turkey today.

In his opening statement at the talks, Canturk said that developments in the fields of agricultural and food industry, energy, transportation, communication, tourism and technical cooperation would be assessed during the talks in addition to trade relations between the two countries. He added that measures to obtain further development of cooperation in these fields would be sought. Canturk said efforts would be made to diversify the fields of cooperation between the two countries.

In his statement, the visiting Bulgarian transportation minister said his government paid great importance to cooperation between the two countries and added that he was convinced that the talks in Ankara would contribute to the further development of relations. Tsanov explained that solutions based on mutual interests would be sought.

A protocol is expected to be signed at the end of the sixth round of talks. Bulgarian Transportation Minister Tsanov visited Commerce Minister Canturk for talks prior to the meeting of the joint committee.

LIBYAN FOREIGN MINISTER BEGINS TALKS IN ANKARA

Meets Evren, Ulusu

TA271046 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 27 May 81

[Text] Libyan Foreign Minister 'Abd al-'Ati al-'Ubaydi, who arrived in Ankara yesterday, began his talks today. Head of state Gen Kenan Evren received the visiting foreign minister at the Cankaya Mansion at 1130. Al-'Ubaydi presented to General Evren a message of good wishes concerning relations between the two countries from Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi.

The Libyan foreign minister was received by Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu prior to his visit to General Evren. In a statement during the visit, Ulusu expressed his pleasure over developments in relations between the two countries. He added that he was convinced that such visits would contribute to the strengthening of cooperation between Turkey and Libya.

In his statement, Foreign Minister al-'Ubaydi recalled that Turkey and Libya had in the past supported each other in all fields and that he hoped that this stand would continue in the future as well. Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen was also present at the meetings between the visiting minister with General Evren and with Prime Minister Ulusu.

Bilateral relations as well as regional and various international issues were taken up during the talks between the delegations headed by the foreign ministers.

GENERAL EVREN STRESSES SIGNIFICANCE OF 27 MAY

TA271823 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1705 GMT 27 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 27 May (AA)—"One of the main characteristics of the May 27 (1960) intervention, had been the determination of the Turkish Armed Forces to reinstall democracy in the country," said the General Kenan Evren, president of the Turkish state, in a message released on the occasion of the 21st anniversary of the coup d'etat, which toppled the government of the late Adnan Menderes. President Evren remembered that the takeover in 1960 had been effected against a government which had lost its legitimacy, before praising the memory of the late General Cemal Gursel, chief of the 1960 coup.

MINISTER REPORTS STEEL MILL EXPANSION POSTPONED

TA231502 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1415 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 23 May (AA)—Two major projects--the expansion of the Iskenderun steel mill and the proposed Sivas steel mill--have not been canceled, but have been postponed until their feasibility can be studied more thoroughly, Industry Ministry Sahap Kocatopcu told the ANATOLIAN NEWS AGENCY Saturday. He said the projects were still on the list of important development schemes, but would be taken up at a later stage, when Turkey's external financing problems were settled. He said the crisis in the world steel industry had also affected Turkey.

MILLIYET ON GREEK MILITARIZATION OF AEGEAN ISLANDS

NC270859 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 23 May 81 pp 2, 14

["Viewpoint" column by Mumtaz Soysal: "Not Merely Guilty But Aggressive Too"]

[Text] A fact hitherto not fully known is now gradually coming to light: Greece is militarizing the Aegean islands which are right under our noses.

According to widespread reports, there are at the moment over 25,000 troops, a great number of tanks, guns, anti-aircraft guns, missiles, armored vehicles, mines and other heavy armament on these islands. This isn't what is really important. What is really important is the airfields built in Rhodes and Mytilene for military purposes. What is more, the airfield built in Limnos isn't meant "to be used only for emergency landings." Planes are based there. The big towns and cities in western Anatolia and the Marmara region as well as the installations in these regions come within the immediate range of these planes. The same could be said of the missiles.

The reason given for all these military activities is Turkey's intervention in Cyprus. Greece alleges that it has had to take these measures against a country like Turkey which may, one day, attempt to "invade" the islands in the same way that it invaded Cyprus. Greece ignores the contrast that exists in the essence of its attitude. Turkey has no interest in capturing nonmilitarized islands where no war preparations are carried out; the islands become vulnerable to occupation to the extent that they are militarized and used for war preparations.

It is common knowledge that after the Tripoli and Balkan wars, the militarization and fortification of certain islands, which we had to sacrifice, became subject to internationnal agreements. Under the 1923 Lausanne treaty, the islands of Mitilene, Khios, Samos, and Ikara, and under the 1947 London agreement, the Dodecanes--which were transfered from the Turks to the Italians and later from the Italians to the Greeks--were definitely given this status.

It is obvious that disarmament is subject to a conciliation price. When a mainland state lets islands, whose proximity is sometimes less than 2 nautical miles, go to another country, that state has every right to expect such behavior from the opposite side in return. We believe that no one can object to this point. In return for this compromise, which international treaties and logic dictates, there is another compromise upon which Greece has almost openly been insisting since the Cyprus intervention. This is what is implied: Turkey must consent to the militarization of the Aegean islands until it withdraws from Cyprus--as if Turkey's intervention in Cyprus is not based on righteousness and international treaties.

Thus, a situation arises in which law and logic contradict themselves. To put it more clearly, a state considers itself justified in violating an international treaty because of the situation created by the Cyprus intervention, ignoring the fact that this state itself is behind this Cyprus affairs.

Colloquially this is "being not merely guilty but aggressive too." But even more important is Turkey's failure to take any serious action whatsoever against the militarization of the islands, as if it approved such logic, despite the fact that militarization had started before the Cyprus intervention. Naturally, sharing the beauty of the Aegean in a friendly manner and coexisting like decent human beings in the peacefulness of this matchless sea is the only way out for such an interlocked neighborliness. But the price for this is not to create new injustices by exploiting unjustified situations, but to remain loyal to agreements that are based on logic and wisdom. This should be brought home to our Greek neighbor in an extremely explicit and understandable language.

AUSTRIAN-IRAQI ECONOMIC TALKS BEGIN IN VIENNA

JN271922 Baghdad INA in English 1850 GMT 27 May 81

[Text] Vienna, 27 May (INA)--Meetings of the fourth session of the joint Iraqi-Austrian commission for economic and technical cooperation began here tonight.

Revolution Command Council member and Oil Minister, Tayih 'abd al-Karim, chaired the Iraqi delegation to the meetings, while Austrian Minister of Commerce, Trade and Industry, Dr Josef Staribacher, chaired his country's delegation.

The Iraqi minister expressed Iraq's staisfaction over the development of economic relations with Austria and said Iraq wants to develop its relations with Austria to become a sample for the equivalent ties between countries based on mutual interests.

The Austrian minister in a similar speech said that Austria also wants to develop relations with Iraq on political and economic levels and his country endeavors to extend its aids to cover training and preparing Iraqi cadres. He pointed out that Austria will participate with a large number of companies in the forthcoming session of Baghdad international fair. He announced that a technical delegation will go to Baghdad at the end of next November to seek spheres of mutual cooperation between the two countries.

VOEST CORPORATION PLANS TO EXPAND ARMS PRODUCTION

AU271005 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 27 May 81 p 1

[Special DIE PRESSE report by "RR/M" and "E.KH"]

[Text] Vienna--The Voest-Alpine Corporation will start producing ammunition to complement its arms production. The purchase of the Hirtenberger Ammunitions Company by the Voest Steel Corporation already has been negotiated and the deal is to be closed within the next 2 weeks.

To date, the Hirtenberg stock has been in the possession of the Mandl family, but the principal heiress, Monika Mandl, for personal reasons wants to sell the factory. For Voest, the purchase of the ammunitions factory is important because it is increasingly selling heavy artillery pieces. Thus, among other things, 155 mm long-barrelled guns are being produced with Canadian know-how, for which there already have been numerous export orders, among others from Thailand, Jordan and Saudi Arabia. Voest also plans to produce antitank weapons, but without an ammunition factory of its own it could not go ahead with these plans.

The current market value of the Hirtenberg Company is estimated by experts at about 130 million schillings. The purchase still requires approval by the leading bodies of the Voest Corporation and the National Industry Holding Company [OEIAG]. This year, the Hirtenberg Company had a turnover of about 500 million schillings. After a strained period, the company has made profits again and paid dividends since 1972.

INTERIOR MINISTER ON NEW CLUES IN NITTEL MURDER

AU272035 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 27 May 81 p 2

[Text] It still isn't exactly known whether the group of Palestinians, who, after the killing of Vienna City Councillor Heinz Nittel claimed responsibility for the act in a leaflet in Damascus, constitutes the right lead. This is what Interior Minister Lanc stated yesterday in connection with an interview with representatives of the Palestinian "Fatah Revolutionary Committee," published by a weekly this Monday.

Austrian law enforcement authorities have followed up the lead since the emergence of the leaflet and have noted that the original was dated 2 May, that is, the day after the murder in Vienna. It had been originally assumed that the leaflet was published too late, that is, only a few days after Nirtel's murder when the crime was already generally known. In addition, the leaflet was not produced by a small mimeograph, Lanc explained. It fits into the political line of that political splinter group around Abu Nidal to now also utter specific threats against Chancellor Bruno Kreisky and Yasir 'Arafat. These persons --like Heinz Nittel--have strived for peace settlements for the Middle East in the past few years.

It is precisely that policy which is being attacked by the splinter group whose leader, Nidal was excluded from the PLO and sentenced to death in the 1970's. He is being charged with murdering other PLO leaders and, in addition, is allegedly responsible for several plots in West Europe.

SOVIET MEDIA'S CRITICISM OF SCHMIDT REJECTED

Wischnewski: Unjustified

LD281707 Hamburg DPA in German 1505 GMT 28 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 28 May (DPA)--The SPD has strongly rejected as "unjustified" PRAVDA's attacks on Chancellor Schmidt. SPD Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski declared that a careful reading of the communique on Schmidt's U.S. visit showed that it was concerned with achieving comprehensive negotiations on the limitation of medium-range missiles in Europe as quickly as possible. On the other hand, it is a fact that the present one-sided arms policy of the USSR isn't helpful. To allege that Schmidt had contributed to an aggravation of the international situation is a distortion of the facts. The Federal Government and the SPD made it clear in Tuesday's lower house debate that they stand by NATO's twin decision.

SPD REPRESENTATIVES DEFINE STANCE ON NATO DECISION

DW221252 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 22 May 81 p 14

[Position paper on the NATO dual decision compiled by members of the security policy commission of the SPD Executive Board, Hans Koschnick, mayor of Bremen and chairman of the commission; retired Lt Gen Wolf Graf von Baudessin, head of the Hamburg Institute for Peace and Conflict Research; and Klaus von Schubert, historian and professor at the Bundeswehr college in Munich]

[Text] Security policy is one of the fundamental topics of social debate and political will-forming because it is important for survival. Security policy cannot be supported by experts alone and requires social legitimation.

This legitimation requires information, discussion and a realization of the fundamental interrelations. Security policy action is rooted in decisions on values and, hence, also must be discussed in moral categories, of course, just as it must expose itself to fundamental criticism. Pacifists do have a place in the social debate on the foundations of security as warners toward practical politics. Yet wanting to count arms and throw away arms alone is unpolitical. Especially in connection with this subject, emotionality and rationality must not rule each other out. It would be tragic if the longing for peace and practical politics would become impossible to impart. Peace policy is the instrument of the longing for peace.

What has been valid is this: "Without the longing for peace, antimilitarism and an active peace and disarmament policy, the SPD would lose its identity as a social democratic party." It is for this very reason that social democrats feel challenged by new forms, movements which are supposed to serve peace, whose questions and objectives are understandable even if they cannot show any solutions.

The social discussion on security policy must serve clarification and enlightenment. In this connection, the politically responsible people must phrase basic predications understandably and in a way suited for imparting. Reality demands that contradictions be called by their name rather than suppressed.

The deterrence dilemma that has become evident to the public, namely, that we threaten with harm to avert harm, is part of the contradictions which we must bear until a better international order makes the threat with deterrence superfluous. Working concretely on this international order makes the current security policy legitimate.

During the past several months, a deficit of the inadequate dialogue on the basic problems of our security between politicians and especially the youth, the public, the media, the churches, the scientists has become evident. This discussion began with critical inquiries as to the bases and the logic of our security policy. Politicians as interlocutors and parliaments and governments as the bearers of responsibility must formulate arguments and set signals which make both the purpose and the course of their policy credible.

The SPD must more clearly and more offensively meet this challenge, also for the sake of preventing the justified discussion of the NATO dual decision from being narrowed down to this point alone and thus inevitably ending up in a misjudgment of the overall security policy concept and our negotiating position in foreign policy.

1. Our own security also is the security of the other.

Democracy and socialism are based on solidarity among people--in the family, in social groups, in the state and in the international life. The basic value of solidarity is in keeping with the Christian commandment of charity. This basic value supports all programmatic predications of the SPD on security policy--from the Godesberg program up to the fundamental decision of the Berlin party congress in 1979.

Social democratic security policy serves the preservation of peace. The SPD in this connection doesn't interpret peace to be the expectation of salvation in some distant future but the continuous task of the present in the dealings between people and states.

Peace capability requires self-awareness which not only knows one's own interests but also the interests of others. This includes the will to find compromises and to tolerate conflicts of interests.

Security is a basically human requirement and not a state end in itself. Security cannot be achieved against one another but only together.

Nobody can drop out of the present system of international security policy all by themselves. Security is inconceivable without the security of others. Individual decisions will not solve the problem of state security policy. Topics such as "better Red than dead" or "live without arms" will not cause any prevention of wars and don't relieve any politically responsible person of the need for pursuing security policy.

Anyone wishing to change the reality must not run away from it. The will to change requires readiness for many toilsome steps. What is required is the reduction in destruction potentials and confrontations on the one hand and the building of an international community of cooperation on the other.

The SPD is following this maxim--also and especially since it has governmental responsibility. It was partly its doing, for example, that NATO in 1967 made detente an alliance mission equal in rank to defense, that the Federal Republic, proceeding from its mooring in the Western alliance system, now is supplementing its foreign policy with the treaties with the East through cooperation and renunciation of force with the neighbors in the East, that is in addition to the arms control talks of the great powers the security interests of the medium and smaller European states have been included in the process of negotiations beyond the bounds of the blocs, through conferences such as the CSCE.

What matters to social democracy is to keep its security policy outlooks visible from its historical role as the strongest peace movement in Germany and to prove credibility by demonstrating in open discussion that concrete, possibly only small, steps are marking the road toward this goal.

2. Politics has no future unless it is possible as before to prevent wars.

Since Hiroshima, the prevention of war has been based on mutual deterrence under the threat of war with mass destruction weapons. Deterrence stands for the concept whose material prerequisite lies in the military capability of demonstrating to any aggressor credibly the unbearableness of his risks. Besides, military capabilities are intended to preserve the freedom of political action against attempts at blackmail, without leading to any escalation. We call this state of affairs strategic stability.

Yet nobody can overlook the fact that any additional pileup of destruction potentials on both sides may entail new risks and meets with increasing lack of understanding from some segments of the people.

The objective of social democratic security policy is this: Armed forces and arms are intended to maintain deterrence on a lower level with less vulnerable systems appearing less threatening. At the same time, this serves social and strategic stability.

The avoidance of war through deterrence in the age of the global East-West conflict cannot be organized on a national or even purely European level. The strategic stability in Europe can be preserved only with alliances and in the dialogue between them--also and particularly in crises where antagonists due to the danger of escalation are forced to become partners of action in a conflict system.

The deterrent effect of the alliance is based among other things on the joint risk. Mutual deterrence takes place globally and regionally, including division of labor in the alliances. The deterrence potentials must increase the risk without, however, lowering the threshold of war. That pertains also to fears which have come up recently in the public that central Europe could become the place for a limited war waged between the superpowers. The conventional defense ability has priority for the Federal Republic's military efforts. It is a state which has explicitly and permanently renounced the possession and production of nuclear arms.

The United States, however, has the capacity of nuclear deterrence. Division of labor and a community with regard to risks preserves the linkage of the alliance partners. Only within the alliance can influence be brought to bear directly on the policy of the entire alliance. It presupposes that agreements made in the alliance must be precisely adhered to by all involved. NATO has stressed in Rome this basis of its existence.

3. Arms reduction tomorrow presupposes arms control today.

Strategic stability must be used to decrease armament in such a way that security can be achieved on a lower level. More transparency is therefore necessary with regard to the planning of armament.

On every step of reduced armament, an approximate balance serves continuous effective deterrence. Partial or temporary superiority or inferiority must be tolerated as long as this doesn't create an additional risk and as long as an approximate balance is preserved.

Arms control cannot take place one-sidedly. It can take place bindingly only through agreements. One-sided steps can be revoked one-sidedly. In addition, they can fail to be effective if they are too small, and they can be considered as a one-sided security reduction if they are too big. A policy aimed at a balance rules out the striving for superiority.

Arms control cannot set in only with regard to already existing arms systems. It must involve blueprinted armament developments before their arms technological possibilities can be assessed. Since comparable arms projects in the East-West conflict and their planning and construction take place at different times, the agreed arms control must set in at an early stage so that the dynamics of technical modernization, which are typical for the armed forces, will not lead to strategic unstableness, which would inevitably reduce the detente preparedness of those involved.

With its dual decision of December 1979, NATO has attempted to handle the changed phases of comparable arms projects with arms control policy by linking the decision on future armament with the announcement to cancel planned arms systems in case of successful arms control negotiations. The time between the armament decision and the introduction time is supposed to be used for arms control negotiations. Concern about the speed of negotiations is understandable in view of the time that has already elapsed.

The U.S. Government, which is supposed to hold the respective negotiations with the Soviet Government since American and Soviet nuclear systems are involved, clearly demonstrated at the NATO council session in Rome its determination to hold negotiations this year.

Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has given significant impulses in 1980 to the efforts aimed at the beginning of negotiations. The Federal Government is urged to act without delay for serious negotiations. The Federal Government also is urged to bring influence to bear on the Soviet Government as before, urging it not to complicate arms control negotiations on Eurostrategic arms through the undiminished deployment of SS-20 missiles. If some partner should deviate from the NATO decision, the question of deployment in the Federal Republic would be asked anew.

The alliance's aim of negotiations on Eurostrategic arms is first of all the "zero option," calling for a respective compromise of the Soviet Union. If that should not be achievable, agreement on as low a level as possible should be aimed for.

For the purpose of alleviating the negotiations, the SPD underscores the option mentioned in its Berlin party congress decision in 1979 that it is possible in a process of negotiations to make verifiable agreements concerning the halt of the production and deployment of new nuclear weapons systems ("moratoriums").

Confidence creating has a rank equal to that of agreements on arms limitation. The confidence-building measures introduced in the CSCE process are to be enhanced. This also holds true for the MBFR. Confidence-building must have as a content the transparence of arms and the verifiability of the agreements and must primarily be directed toward the limitation of the options of military action. In this connection, confidence-building measures should above all be discussed in Europe so as to rule out the capability of a surprise attack.

Readiness to talk, predictability and the capability of visualizing oneself in the other's place constitute a necessary basis for European security.

The SPD expects the Madrid CSCE followup conference to issue a mandate for a European disarmament conference (KAE). The conference has been alleviated by the Soviet readiness to extend the area of validity of the confidence-building measures in Europe up to the Ural Mountains.

4. Deterrence and arms control require an operational Bundeswehr.

Its self-assessment is derived from the political mission of preventing war within the framework of the alliance. The armed forces of the Federal Republic are indispensable for the strategic stability in Europe, and consequently, also for farther-leading arms control negotiations for European security. Being firmly integrated in NATO, the Bundeswehr by its militarily quality strengthens the representation of our interests and our say in the alliance.

With this as a background, an Ostpolitik was possible which did not arouse any distrust in the West and which was taken seriously in the East.

The Bundeswehr is always confronted with the task of absorbing and digesting the social and technical changes as well as further developments of deterrence and of the arms control mechanism. It can do so in the awareness of its 25 years of tradition as an army of war prevention which is integrated in the constitutional structure and in the social pluralism of the Federal Republic. The integration of the Bundeswehr soldiers in society is reality, although it is also necessarily exposed to discussion in a pluralistic society. What remains the basis is the guiding image of the citizen in uniform supported by all parties already when the Bundeswehr was founded. The armed forces must not be held responsible for problems in the achievement of a security policy consensus in society nor must the Bundeswehr be the scapegoat for the failure to make security policy adequately comprehensible.

5. Security is more than just military security.

Social democratic policy doesn't simply narrow security down to military security. The preservation of the ecological preconditions of life, for example, and the challenge to mankind to economize on scarce raw materials and distribute them justly, is a fundamental factor determining the security of the peoples on this globe. This is why the Federal Republic must continue to cooperate in the building of a political and economic system of relationship which will help overcome the gap between rich and poor and which will balance the interests between the producers of raw materials and the producers of technologies. Zones full of tensions will not become less full of conflict as a result of the use, or the threat with the use, of direct or indirect military action. All industrial nations must cooperate in putting resources tied up by armament to different use as a result of negotiations on arms reduction. At the same time, the industrial nations must make up their minds to achieve agreements on reserve in arms exports to the Third World.

The structures and procedures of the East-West conflict must not be carried into the relationships between the North and the South. The distribution of scarce resources must not be managed with an attitude of confrontation but with an attitude of cooperation under inclusion of all parties involved and affected. In this respect, negotiating partners may consciously enter into mutual dependencies. The responsibility of the international organizations for the balance of interests will grwo along with the dissolution of the classical decisionmaking centers. The present behavior of the partners in the North-South relationship must create the prerequisites for a situation where, under the conditions of shortage, there will not be any unilateral seizure but agreeable and solidary distribution.

6. The SPD suggests the installation of a federal institute for arms control.

The number of competent arms control discussion partners in the administration, scientific organizations, parties and media is too small in our country. A federal institute for arms control should not only represent and make credible the political weight of this security policy sector, but also supply--without being directly imbedded in the administration--the necessary arms control policy expertise for the departments of the Federal Government, of parliament and for the public.

In addition, this federal institute should take over a significant role in the dialogue with scientific organizations, universities, the institutes advising the government and with peace research organizations abroad. The institute also could take over tasks in discussions with the public, with engaged groups and in representing arms control policy in the media.

In a federal institute for arms control, the worldwide available data, information and ideas must be collected, evaluated and prepared for forming a political will. The public is to be informed at regular intervals on the state of the arms control process, on agreements made, on negotiation leeways and perspectives of arms control policy. The institute can have the additional effect of producing young people competent in arms control policy for the administration, for media and scientific organizations.

A federal institute for arms control should belong organizationally to the Office of the Federal Chancellor because its tasks involve the departments represented in the Federal Security Council. Only in such a way can doubts pertaining to NATO's dual decision be eliminated.

FOREIGN MINISTER HOLDS TALKS WITH SWAPO HEAD

LD261520 Hamburg DPA in German 1245 GMT 26 May 81

[Excerpts] Bonn (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher received the head of SWAPO, Sam Nujoma, in Bonn today for a talk on possibilities for the internationally accepted independence of Namibia.

A Foreign Office spokesman described Genscher's exchange of views with Nujoma as part of the West's efforts to find new ways for the implementation of UN Security Council resolution 435, which provides for free elections under international supervision and with the participation of all political forces as the precondition for Namibia's independence. The semiautonomous government in Namibia formed by the multiracial democratic Turnhalle alliance isn't recognized by the Federal Government.

PRESIDENT CARSTENS MEETS WITH GHANAIAN COUNTERPART

LD261090 Hamburg DPA in German 0918 GMT 26 May 81

[Excerpts] Bonn (DPA)--Federal President Karl Carstens today received for a talk Ghanaian President Hilla Limann. The head of government of the West African Republic, who is in the Federal Republic on a working visit, was earlier welcomed with military ceremony by Carstens in front of the Villa Hammerschmidt.

STRAUSS CONFERS WITH ROMANIAN TOURISM MINISTER

AU221828 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1809 GMT 22 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 22 May (AGERPRES)--Franz-Josef Strauss, minister-president of the Land of Bavaria, received in Munich Emil Draganescu, minister of tourism and sports of Romania.

During the talks questions were approached relating to the collaboration between Romania and the Federal Republic of Germany, in the mutual interest of the two peoples. The interview occasioned an exchange of friendly messages between Franz-Josef Strauss and Nicolae Ceausescu.

RCP'S UGLAR PRAISES WEST BERLIN SOCIALISTS

AU161943 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1749 GMT 16 May 81

[Text] West Berlin, 16 May (AGERPRES)--Iosif Uglar, member of the CC of the RCP, that represents the RCP to the sixth congress of the SUP [Socialist Unity Party] of West Berlin, called on Horst Schmitt, president of the party.

The interview occasioned an exchange of cordial salutes between Nicolae Ceausescu and Horst Schmitt.

The president of the SUP of West Berlin highlighted that the West Berlin communists enjoyed sincerely the successes of the Romanian people under the RCP leadership, in the making of the new society, highly appreciating the role played by Nicolae Ceausescu in the entire social, economic and political activity unfolding in Romania, his contribution to solving the complex international problems, to the promotion of a policy of peace, detente, security and cooperation internationally.

Highlighting the good relations existing between the RCP and the SUP of West Berlin the sides expressed the mutual wish to further develop them in the future, to the advantage of the two parties, of peace, democracy, progress and collaboration internationally.

During the second day of the congress, on behalf of the RCP, of its General Secretary Nicolae Ceausescu, the RCP representative addressed the members and the militants of the Socialist Unity Party of West Berlin a warm salute of friendship and solidarity.

SAUDI ENVOY CALLS FOR CLOSER SECURITY COOPERATION

LD251732 Hamburg DPA in German 1612 GMT 25 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 25 May (DPA)--The outgoing Saudi Arabian ambassador in Bonn, Shaykh Muhammad Nuri Ibrahim, called today for closer German-Saudi security cooperation. Without referring to Bonn's currently negative response to his country's desire for arms supplies, Ibrahim, speaking at a dinner to mark his departure, stressed Saudi Arabia's great security needs. "We need close cooperation with the Federal Republic to protect our part of the world," he said. "A stable and secure Saudi Arabia also means security and stability for the Gulf region and thus security for Europe, too."

Ibrahim, who was for 6 years a former head of the West Europe department of the Saudi Foreign Ministry, is leaving Bonn after 4 years and is to be his country's ambassador in Madrid. He is regarded as one of the diplomats who always had access to the chancellor. At the dinner, given by Foreign Ministry State Secretary Guenter van Well, Ibrahim made it clear that his transfer has nothing to do with "the success or failure" of the chancellor's recent visit to Riyadh. Until a successor to Ibrahim is appointed, Saudi envoy Yusuf Motabbakani will be in charge.

KHMER ANTICOMMUNIST MEETS WITH OFFICIALS IN BONN

LD221526 Hamburg DPA in German 1415 GMT 22 May 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 22 May (DPA)--In its struggle against the Vietnamese occupiers in Kampuchea, the anticommunist Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF) depends on help from the West. This was stressed by Son Sann, chairman of the KPNLF and the last prime minister under Prince Sihanouk, in an interview with DPA in Bonn today. Son Sann, who has already been accorded friendly receptions in Beijing and Washington, had talks in Bonn with Foreign Office officials and parliamentarians. He called for a Western economic and political boycott of Vietnam to secure the withdrawal of foreign troops from Kampuchea and free elections.

According to Son Sann, the KPNLF could field an armed force equal to that of Khmer Rouge if the West could bring itself to supply it with arms.

MAUROY DISCUSSES GOVERNMENT'S IMMEDIATE TASKS

LD281101 Paris L'UNITE in French 23 May 81 pp 2-3

[Interview with French Premier Pierre Mauroy; date and place not given]

[Text] L'UNITE: Pierre Mauroy, you were candidate Francois Mitterrand's spokesman during the election campaign. Now you are premier of his first government. What feelings do you have about the transition from one role to the other?

Pierre Mauroy: There is total continuity between the two roles. Throughout the campaign, I had to explain the nature of Francois Mitterrand's proposals, what he would do if elected. Now I have the honor of starting to implement the blueprint for change approved by the majority of the French people.

L'UNITE: For the time being, there is a transitional government, which will be active for some weeks. What will it be doing?

Pierre Mauroy: Its first task, since the president of the republic has decided to dissolve the National Assembly, is to organize the general elections, which will take place on 14 and 21 June. We will urge French men and women to act consistently by electing a new majority in the assembly, composed of leftwing deputies keen to support throughout the legislative term the policy for which Francois Mitterrand was elected.

Before the election, the government will be active in the statutory field, adopting by decree a number of social measures connected with lower incomes and the least prosperous sectors of society. This will be a first step toward the new economic thrust that is one of the cornerstones of the new policy defined by Francois Mitterrand during his campaign.

L'UNITE: It has been said that these social measures, particularly the raising of the minimum wage, threaten to cause problems for enterprises and to deter them from creating new jobs.

Pierre Mauroy: That was said during the campaign, as were many other things designed to frighten the French people and to make them believe that Francois Mitterrand's election meant the establishment of disorder in our country. Some people seem astonished now to observe that since 10 May there have been no street disorders, but on the contrary, demonstrations of popular joy and enthusiasm. I would like to point out that the measures that we will adopt will have been discussed by the social partners. And in this connection, I am delighted by the remarkable sense of responsibility demonstrated by the leaders of all the trade union organizations, who are determined to press for their demands but also to contribute to the new policy's success. I also will point out that, while we will be raising the minimum wage, on the other hand we will be taking a whole series of measures designed to improve the situation of the small and medium enterprises, particularly by lightening their financial burdens. I would add that they will benefit very directly from the increased purchaing power of the more underprivileged sectors.

L'UNITE: Are you therefore shouldering your duties with optimism?

Pierre Mauroy: I would say with clearheaded optimism. We are perfectly aware, having proclaimed it throughout the campaign, of the very burdensome record that we are inheriting from the right which ruled for so many years. We have no magic wand that can reverse the course of events at a stroke. But we do intend to keep the promises that we made to the French people and that will gradually move the country in a different direction.

We want them to be able to observe this themselves in the measures that we will be taking in the coming weeks and after the election of the new National Assembly, particularly in employment, the struggle against inequalities, the new economic thrust, the media and so forth. There is so much to do! But we will do it. And I am happy and proud to be called on to shoulder this task under the guidance of the first Socialist president of the republic elected by universal suffrage.

JOBERT VIEWS PROSPECTS FOR MITTERRAND TENURE

LD221617 Paris LE MATIN in French 20 May 81 p 6

[Dominique Burg and Jean Bothorel interview with former French Foreign Minister Michel Jobert--date and place not given]

[Text] LE MATIN: You are known to be in frequent contact with the president of the republic. It is probable that you will be called upon to assume major responsibilities. What are the main things which you expect from the new 7-year term?

Michel Jobert: Frequent contacts? They are certainly less frequent than other people have. My personal movements aren't in the least important. But it is important for me to choose, in the conditions facing all of us, and to state clearly why I chose to change rather than to persist in my mistake. I expect the 7-year term now starting to restore the French people's spirit as far as possible, but the will to do so must exist. I want this to happen after a long operation which, I am sure, was not premeditated but which had the effect of robbing the French people of their essence, plunging them into irresponsibility and appealing solely to their capacity to be docile and not to a legitimate but rather vague desire to stand on their own feet. In the short term, I expect lucidity, enthusiasm and moderation from this 7-year term. I expect a fresh and liberal attitude, no harping on doctrines, and confidence to be placed in the citizens in all spheres of daily life as long as that is compatible with the state's progress. I cannot talk to you as a Socialist but as a Jobertist. They are sometimes similar. And that has been true for the past 7 years.

LE MATIN: Since Francois Mitterrand's election, the public has been worried about the falling exchange rates, the increase in interest rates and the blows which have been dealt to the franc. Do you feel the same anxiety at the evolution of these indicators?

Michel Jobert: One observation must be made: The signs now being given by the indicators clearly stem from the previous administration. If Valery Giscard d'Estaing had been re-elected, I am convinced that the same anxieties over the franc, employment and inflation would immediately have emerged. They would probably have done so in an atmosphere of serious psychological deterioration. The way in which the transition has now been made gives the new government the best chances. As I told you before, if it shows lucidity, enthusiasm and moderation I don't see why there should be irrational reactions in addition to material difficulties. Everybody knows--especially I, since I have been proclaiming this since 1974--that we are passing through a tougher period than 1960-70.

LE MATIN: Are you prepared to lead a political movement which could go into the parliamentary battle with your support to ensure that the ideas you have just outlined are put into practice?

Michel Jobert: We are moving onto a different level. Let's be more moderate in our ambition and less theoretical. It is important that the presidential majority isn't reduced to a juxtaposition of the two big parties. To succeed, it must be broader and go beyond the eternal left-right split and give 2 million French people who gave their votes to Francois Mitterrand--outside any consideration of that split--a sign of recognition and a chance of expression, in and beyond parliament and in various elected representative bodies. I don't need to point out to you that we have not, by some sudden miracle, escaped from a political system whose main effect is to give preference to the big parties and to crush all the others. In that respect, I am not sure that we can expect change in the near future.

LE MATIN: That is rather a pessimistic view....

Michel Jobert: No. It strikes me as very wise and it clarifies the method to be adopted to move toward what I have just described, a flexible, "confederal" organization uniting--with a view to the election but also in a permanent way--all those who don't intend to be caught between left and right but to be the pillar of benefical collective action. When you want to give pride of place to diversity you mustn't start acting like a gauleiter. I am referring to myself. Many small groups must now stop and think and reach some cohesion to arrive at the joint table with a consistent and determined attitude. In that spirit, I hope to be able to play a role with many other people.

LE MATIN: Do you feel that the new, essentially Socialist team which is going to take power wants you and others to play a role?

Michel Jobert: In fact, I have detected a laudable effort--in its own interests, which is fully justified--not to abuse the victory and its effects. There are some constraints, of course, but there is also inspiration. Everybody must liberate himself from the former and honor the latter.

LE MATIN: You seem to be suggesting that the PS would like to go it alone in the parliamentary election battle.

Michel Jobert: You are at liberty to think that. I am just expressing my hope and not an analysis.

LE MATIN: One last question which relates to the former presidential majority: What is your reaction to Jacques Chirac and Jean Lecanuet shaking hands?

Michel Jobert: It isn't a normal handshake. It is a political handshake. It is part of a different order in which ordinary respectable values no longer apply. I deplore it.

LE MONDE EXPLORES POSSIBLE ARAB RELATIONS

LD271529 Paris LE MONDE in French 27 May 81 p 3

[Paul Balta article]

[Text] By sending his own brother, Gen Jacques Mitterrand, chairman and managing director of the National Industrial Aerospace Company, to Saudi Arabia, France's main oil supplier and one of its main arms clients, the head of state was anxious to show that he placed the country's interests before "ties of personal friendship" (Note 1: to cite the expression used by Arab League Secretary General Klibi in his interview to LE MONDE of 20 May). Moreover, this isn't the only gesture he has made since he entered the Elysee to reassure the Arabs who were worried about a radical policy change. Indeed, the Arabs have welcomed the appointment of Claude Cheysson to the Quai d'Orsay and Michel Jobert to the Foreign Trade Ministry.

Indeed, as soon as the presidential results were known, Algeria played an important role. On the one hand, it persuaded the Arabs--its ambassador to Paris Mohamed Sahnun and Mohamed Yazid, Arab League Bureau director and former minister in the provisional government of the Algerian Republic have been particularly active--not to make hasty and rash gestures. In particular, it asserted the positive aspects which the new team would have in the spheres of North-South dialogue, emigration and the struggle against racism and the humanist character it would bestow on cultural dialogue.

At the same time, the Algerians--and also the envoys from the Moroccan Socialist Union of Popular Forces--established contact with Lionel Jospin and Pierre Joxe, among others.

"The new government must safeguard its future at both the political and the economic level," they stressed, urging the Socialists to avoid "blunders" over Israel and the Palestinians. And they reassured Arab economic and financial circles whom "well-meaning" Frenchmen and foreigners had tried to convince that their capital, public and private, would be "nationalized by the collectivists" if they won power.

Indeed, there are five elements which sum up the importance of France's relations with the Arab world. At economic level, its imports--mainly oil--rose to Fr91.5 billion in 1980 and its exports to Fr48.7 billion. The deficit--it has only been Fr25 billion in 1979--is partly compensated for by the deposits of Arab capital in France--some Fr30 billion, in other words around one-fourth of currency reserves (130 billion) and above all by sales of military equipment. The latter reached Fr25 billion in 1979 and Fr35 billion in 1980, of which more than half were for Arab countries.

At the cultural level, the Maghreb leads the field in purchases of French books (Note 2: More than Fr107 million, including some Fr57 million to Algeria, Fr38 million to Morocco and Fr11.5 million to Tunisia out of total sales of Fr1,279 million) and newspapers. In fact, Algeria, with its 20 million inhabitants, is the leading French-speaking country after France. And several near Eastern states, where English traditionally predominates, are seeking to promote our language. At the social level, the Arab community is the biggest foreign community in France, with Maghreb nationals alone approaching the 1.5 million mark. Finally, at the political level, France, a Mediterranean power and the link between Europe and Africa, has been the "driving force" in Euro-Arab dialogue by vocation and out of interest.

This raises the question: What changes is the new team likely to make in France's Arab policy? PS officials who follow these questions are making a few prior observations on the most sensitive point--relations with Israel. They note that the "pro-Israelis" are only in a majority in Pierre Mauroy's faction. But they also note that there are many ministers in the government who could be regarded as "pro-Arab" and they are among the young ministers.

They admit that there is a weak point which time ought to remedy: As a whole--aside from the "Rocardians" who presently tend to be on the fringes of the party--the Socialist political class is scarcely acquainted with the Arab political, economic and cultural leaders. They stress, however, that by using the "good personal image" which he has in Israel and the image which France has in the Arab world, President Mitterrand ought to be able to give French diplomacy a considerable original role in the Near East.

The party's ideological and moral requirements and the realism of state interests could come into conflict, notably regarding arms exports. If it suspended sales to some countries, wouldn't France be likely to lose its credibility with other clients and, through an abrupt reduction in its production, its own autonomy in the armaments sphere? Will the government invoke General de Gaulle's formula of "no arms for warring countries" and symbolically suspend arms supplies to Iraq and Iran, which are at war, without bothering to find out whether they are nonetheless obtaining supplies from friendly countries? Could it decree such an embargo while ignoring Israel and its adversaries? These various debates are continuing and don't seem to have been settled.

Chad and the West Sahara

The party, however, could help the state to modify its policy. For instance, Mitterrand praised President As-Sadat for having the courage to make peace with Israel but the PS opposed the Egyptian head of state's application to become an associate member of the Socialist International owing to his rather undemocratic domestic policy. The PS, moreover, doesn't conceal its hostility to the overly-conservative Socialist Interafrican. "We are in favor of a pluralist Africa and not of one Africa against the other," Lionel Jospin said. And hence, the state will not feel embarrassed about maintaining relations with Dakar and Antananarivo, Tunis and Tripoli, Libreville and Maputo.

Regarding Chad, the PS stance which is likely to prevail is: "Above all no direct action by France which was discredited in the past by helping to demolish the country; it must, however, support any African initiative and that presupposes, among other things, that it will hold discussions with the Libyan leaders." Moreover, the latter just made an approach in that direction with a view to clarifying the two countries' positions. As a good will gesture, they started work as soon as the presidential election results were known on repairing the French Embassy in Tripoli which was sacked in February 1980. Such contacts would not prevent the government--unlike the last government--from guaranteeing Malta's neutrality, as Italy has done, and from strengthening the position of socialist government leader Dom Mintoff in the face of the island's "bourgeois" opposition, which apparently has been financed by Colonel al-Qadhdhafi since he quarreled with Valletta.

As for the Western Sahara, the other hotbed of tension in northern Africa, Jospin has taken a firm line on the principle of self-determination (as he has for Eritrea). But although the party has adopted a militant position in favor of the Polisario Front, the French Government's approach apparently will be more cautious and will proceed in stages. According to Rue de Solferino [PS headquarters], these stages could be: 1--The withdrawal of some military aid from Morocco; 2--Contacts with all the sides, including Mauritania and Libya; 3--Opening a Polisario office in Paris or, at least, establishing official contacts with it; and 4--Drawing up a procedure to promote the settlement of the conflict through negotiation.

Finally, the first secretary's entourage points out that neither of the two previous French presidents made an official visit to Mauritania--a country struggling for its survival and independence and which Francois Mitterrand knows well since he went there when one of his sons was an AFP correspondent there. It is thought that if he devoted one of his first visits abroad to Nouakchott and Algiers, which has launched the idea of a new international order, the head of state would endow those visits with symbolic meaning.

L'HUMANITE: PCF WILL SHOULDER RESPONSIBILITIES

23 May Statement

LD281615 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 23 May 81 p 3

[Text] The composition of the new government is now known. There are no Communist ministers in it.

Since the evening of the leftwing victory, 10 May, Georges Marchais has been stressing--in his television statement and in his congratulations message to Francois Mitterrand--that the Communists are willing to shoulder all their responsibilities--in government as at all other levels of national life.

Since then, the Politburo and the Central Committee have reasserted this stance. The president of the republic and the premier have decided otherwise. As far as we are concerned, we still believe that it is the best solution for implementing change. We remain willing to shoulder our responsibilities in a union government embracing all the forces that made the victory possible.

25 May Editorial

LD290847 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 25 May 81 p 1

[Francois Hilsum editorial: "Any Time"]

[Text] Scheduled for the end of a week characterized by hope, the announcement on the composition of Pierre Mauroy's government was obviously eagerly awaited.

The absence of any Communist ministers surprised a great many French people. Many of them are worried.

Since Friday evening and throughout the weekend, appeals in this connection have been flowing into the L'HUMANITE offices. A careful perusal leads one to conclude that the appeals did not originate solely from Communist Party members or from correspondents very close to the Communist Party--far from it.

It is, therefore, necessary to point out, as Paul Laurent did on Saturday on TV Channel 2, that ever since 10 May, the Communists haven't stopped repeating that they are willing to shoulder their responsibilities and, therefore, to participate in government action. Even now, following the decision taken by Francois Mitterrand and Paul Mauroy, the Communists are still willing, at any time.

This constructive stance reflects popular feeling and an obvious fact which all French people have recognized--without the Communists, the 10 May victory would have been impossible. In any case, Lionel Jospin acknowledged this fact at the PS national convention yesterday: "Communist Party members, supporters and voters contributed to Francois Mitterrand's victory."

Common sense and logic extend this argument as follows: Just as it was needed to beat the right, the Communists' contribution is needed to implement the new policy. The new majority needs all its constituent potentials and strengths to satisfy the people's expectations. The coming week should see the start of discussions between the Socialist and Communist Parties.

As Georges Marchais announced at the outset at the latest Central Committee session, the Communist Party has the same willingness for any contacts at any time as it has with respect to the government. It formulates no assessments or proposals and poses no conditions that might be considered capable of hindering an agreement. It would not be the right way. Therefore, it isn't ours.

The Socialist and Communist Parties have their own identities, their own specific arms and their own political stances. Each wants to remain true to itself and that is legitimate. Therefore, there is no reason to expect such talks to lead to identical views in all fields. No one would dream of such a thing. However--and this is the most important consideration--the Communists believe that it is possible to work together, in government, as at all other levels of national life.

The objectives which the PCF put forward last Saturday--which L'HUMANITE published but which the major media haven't discussed much--are part of this positive demarche to take the first step in the new policy. These objectives will be at the heart of our election campaign.

The campaign of the Communist candidates--who are already getting registered in their respective districts--can be summed up in the following formula: For a union of the left majority and for a leftwing government, vote Communist.

Indeed, you don't need to be an expert in political science to realize that the total number of votes received by the PCF throughout the country, the national total of these votes and the number of Communist deputies in the National Assembly will exert an essential influence on the future.

COLPIN SENDS PCF GREETINGS TO FINNISH COMMUNISTS

LD290827 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 25 May 81 p 7

[Text] PCF Central Committee Secretary Jean Colpin yesterday conveyed to the Finnish Communist Party congress, which is being held in Helsinki, "the French Communists' and workers' warm and fraternal greetings."

He stated: "Struggling in highlydeveloped countries, strong with the support of very broad sectors of the world of labor, our two parties share a number of common concerns and convergent aspirations--all things underlying the strong mutual respect which unites us. This is the case particularly with our common concern to contribute to the strengthening of peaceful coexistence and the deescalation of the arms race. Moreover, we express satisfaction at the stand taken by the Finnish Communist Party at last year's Paris meeting of European communist parties on detente in Europe. We are convinced that we will find ourselves again side by side whenever it is a matter of advancing our common ideals of peace and solidarity."

FOREIGN SOCIALISTS' PRESENCE AT INAUGURATION NOTED

[Editorial: "The Socialist International at the Rendezvous"]

[Text] The handover of power at the Elysee was unusual, and not only because of the political alternation which it reflected in France for the first time since the beginning of the Fifth Republic. The presence in Paris of several foreign personalities imparted to it for the first time an international character which neither analogous ceremonies in the past nor even similar ceremonies which regularly take place in other European countries have.

It is true, however, that this presence deliberately took a very discreet form both not to embarrass the people invited and not to expose their host to the accusation of "ideological internationalism" which could have offended the shades of Gaullism. The leaders of the Socialist International came to Paris as the new president's "personal friends" and they participated only in a part--the less official one--of the ceremonies. The only one exercising governmental duties--Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky--decided not to come at the last moment. All the people present are either "former" luminaries like Senegal's Senghor, Sweden's Palme, Portugal's Soares and FRG's Brandt (who furthermore is chairman of both the party now in power in Bonn and the Socialist International) or "future" rulers who presently are leaders of opposition parties in their respective countries, from the Spaniard Gonzalez to the Italian Craxi. The only person among the latter whose presence could have created some problems for socialist diplomacy in the future was Shim'on Peres, leader of the Labor opposition in Israel. He finally decided to remain in Jerusalem for reasons which may not be exclusively connected with the existing tension with Syria and Habib's visit. Be that as it may, the presence of Messaadia, who is a member of the Algerian National Liberation Front Central Committee, is likely to ensure for the new team the "Arab support" of which it was deprived as a result of the noncommital attitude adopted by most Middle East capitals and Begin's ethusiasm.

But the fact remains that the presence of these foreign guests has emphasized the international importance of the event which has just occurred in France and the affinities created throughout the world in general and in France in particular as a result of a common adherence to a certain concept of socialism and democracy. But even though they are displayed openly, these affinities are nonetheless both ambiguous--not all socialist parties view in the same way either international problems or, a fortiori, relations with communist parties--and cautious insofar as the way in which they have been expressed is concerned. On 6 May, Brandt and Carlsson, Socialist International secretary general, sent Mitterrand an official message of support but the leaders in power, who were anxious to preserve their relations with the outgoing president in case he was reelected, were unwilling to take sides directly. Their "colt's" victory has nonetheless greatly comforted the socialists who are soon to be faced with elections, in Italy and Greece among others, and has raised, as Brandt said, "the left's hopes throughout the world."

PUBLIC ATTITUDE POLLED ON MITTERRAND'S ELECTION

NC232040 Paris AFP in English 2030 GMT 23 May 81

[Text] Paris, 23 May (AFP)--Forty-five percent of French men and women consider the election of Francois Mitterrand, France's first left-wing president in 23 years, as "an extraordinary political event," according to a public opinion poll release today.

The survey, commissioned by the weekly newsmagazine LE POINT and conducted by the IFOP French polling institute, also showed the 40 percent of those questioned thought Mr Mitterrand's election was similar to changes in other democracies, eight percent said it was a political event of secondary importance and seven percent expressed no opinion.

According to the survey, 43 percent thought that life in France in the next three years would improve, 17 percent thought that things would get worse and 40 percent did not express an opinion.

Asked about their buying power over the next three years, 27 percent of the poll thought that it would increase, 38 percent thought it would remain the same or would drop and 19 percent did not state an opinion.

The poll was based on 1,187 interviews taken between May 19 and 20.

CHEYSSON MEETS WITH BRITAIN'S LORD CARRINGTON

LD282328 Paris Domestic Service in French 2200 GMT 28 May 81

[Text] Lord Carrington, Britain's secretary of state for foreign and commonwealth affairs, made a stopover in Paris today on his way home from Algiers in order to meet with his French counterpart, Claude Cheysson. Cheysson expressed pleasure at the visit and said that it is a pity to confine discussions to matters such as fish, lamb and budgets, to make these the only possible subjects of talks between Britain and France within Europe. The minister considers that both countries have many common interests and much to do together.

GUNMEN SHOOT TEACHER AT ROME TECHNICAL COLLEGE

NC290943 Paris AFP in English 0938 GMT 29 May 81

[Text] Rome, 29 May (AFP)--Three women and a man burst into a technical college here today tied up and gagged a teacher and then shot him three times in the legs, police said. The teacher, Giuseppe Magagna, 28, was attacked in the courtyard of the college run by Salesian monks. His life was not in danger, sources said.

The attackers hung a notice round their victim's neck declaring: "Against the exploitation of clandestine work." No one has claimed responsibility for the attack, but witnesses said one of the gunmen claimed to be from the Red Brigades terrorist group.

FORLANI CONTINUES TALKS ON FORMING NEW GOVERNMENT

AU290836 Rome ANSA in English 0810 GMT 29 May 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 29 May (ANSA)--It will probably be another four or five days before premier-designate Arnaldo Forlani will be able to announce whether he has succeeded in forming a new government. Forlani, tapped Thursday by head of state Sandro Pertini, said he is aware of the difficulties confronting him in a bid to form Italy's forty-first post-war government and added that the decisive day of his consultations will be next Tuesday.

On Tuesday in fact Forlani will have probably have wound up his talks with which he hopes to form a coalition--his own Christian Democrats (DC), the Socialists (PSI), Social Democrats (PSDI), Republicans (PRI) and perhaps the right-of-center Liberals (PLI).

The major hurdle confronting Forlani now is precisely the relationship between the Christian Democrats and Socialists which is necessary to continue government cooperation between the two parties. The other two parties, the Social Democrats and Republicans, lean towards a continuation of the previous line-up, although "on a new basis".

Socialist Party Secretary Bettino Craxi, nevertheless, has already ruled out that his party can accept "partial or in any case repetitive" solutions, and is pushing demands to break the DC's more than thirty-year monopoly of government leadership with a Socialist premier.

The Christian Democrats, however, insist that the necessary condition for a government agreement is that Forlani be reconfirmed, or at least another Christian Democrat be placed, at the head of the government.

On the opposition front, Communist Party leadership member Alessandro Natta called once again for a leftist government, a change in the country's political leadership and the Communists' participation in the government.

Issues Acceptance Statement

LD282226 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 28 May 81

[Statement by Italian Prime Minister Designate Forlani, following his 28 May meeting at the Quirinal with President Pertini, on his decision to accept Pertini's mandate to form a new government--recorded]

[Text] The president of the republic has charged me with forming the government and I have accepted, with the usual reservations. I am grateful for the honor, although I am aware of the difficulties which lie ahead. The crisis has arisen out of a need to clarify matters and out of events which have necessarily preoccupied both Parliament and public opinion. To solve these problems, it is necessary to proceed with rigorous checks but without quickly judging and condemning.

The democratic system makes it possible to uncover government malfunctionings which must be corrected. When there are deviations, they are eliminated. However, we must not confuse the issues and we must not make a mountain out of every molehill. Above all, we must guarantee the objectivity of judgments and reject speculation, and sectarianism. All those who helped with the birth and strengthening of our democratic system must also be interested in defending the system. The government which I headed encountered difficult and painful situations. That government carried out programs and initiatives which I believe are valid and can continue; the reconstruction of the vast regions affected by the earthquake; the fight against inflation; the interim plan for resuming government activity, for safeguarding employment, for the south of Italy. It is essential that these objectives have the active contribution of all the social and productive forces. The fight against terrorism and crime must continue with increasing effectiveness and we must guarantee that the judicial system and various state powers can perform their functions with full and objective responsibility.

By fulfilling these requirements, we shall strengthen democracy and the conditions for peaceful national living linked to the European Community and to the defense commitments of the Atlantic alliance. I told the president of the republic that on this political and programmatic basis I shall try again to find the convergencies necessary for the formation of a majority and of a government.

SECURITY, FINANCE CHIEFS 'SUSPEND ACTIVITIES'

AU281400 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 28 May 81

[Text] Rome, 28 May (ANSA)--The three chiefs of Italy's secret services named as members of the secret Propaganda-two Masonic lodge have announced that they will suspend their activities while "awaiting a clarification" of their positions.

Prefect Walter Pelosi of the Information and Security Services (CESIS), General Giuseppe Santovito, the head of the Military Information and Security Service (SUSMI) and General Giulio Grassini, chief of the Service for Information and Democratic Defense (SISDE) were included on the list of alleged members of the lodge which toppled the government of Prime Minister Arnaldo Forlani.

Also the commanding general of the Guardia di Finanza, Italy's revenue police, General Orazio Gianni, announced in the evening that he would step aside for the immediate future. The general's name, like those of the secret service chiefs, was one of many high-ranking members of the nation's armed forces associated with the lodge in documents seized during a search of the grand master's villa ordered by magistrates.

TUNISIAN PARTY LEADER HOLDS TALKS WITH PCI LEADERS

LD281145 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 20 May 81 p 19

[Unattributed report: "Tunisian Communist Party (PCT) Secretary Visits PCI Headquarters"]

[Text] Rome--Tunisian Communist Party [PCT] Secretary Comrade Mohamed Harmel met yesterday with PCI Secretary General Comrade Enrico Berlinguer to whom, having expressed his hearty congratulations on the success in the referendum battle, he pointed out the importance of the Italian Communists' and democratic forces' contribution to peace in the Mediterranean, cooperation among the peoples and the defense of the Palestinian people's legitimate rights.

Before that, Comrade Harmel met with the following comrades: PCI Directorate member Gian Carlo Pajetta, Central Committee member and Foreign Section Chief Antonio Rubbi, and Foreign Section aide Nadia Spano. During the meeting, characterized by the ties of friendship and solidarity that have bound the two parties for some time, Comrade Harmel gave a lengthy report on the new situation in Tunisia following the official recognition of pluralism and the positive results achieved by the trade union and political forces' struggle for a future of real democratization and for new economic and social policies.

PCP, YEMEN SOCIALISTS END TALKS, ISSUE COMMUNIQUE

LD281527 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 21 May 81 p 5

[Text] At the conclusion of the talks between PCP and Yemen Socialist Party [YSP] delegations, the following communique was released:

At the invitation of the PCP Central Committee, a YSP delegation headed by Central Committee member Rajab Salih Naji and comprised of Salih Habib Tamini of the international department and Abdullah Nasir Muhammad visited Portugal 13-19 May.

The YSP delegation met with PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal and held talks with a PCP delegation comprising Domingos Abrantes, member of the political commission and Central Committee Secretariat, Central Committee member Vitor Neto and Antonio Angelo of the international section. The two delegations exchanged information on the situation in their respective countries and their parties' activity and broached some issues concerning the international communist and revolutionary movement and the current international situation.

The YSP delegation expressed its party's solidarity with the struggle of the communists, the working class and the democratic forces in Portugal in defense of the revolutionary gains of 25 April [1974] and for democracy, national independence, peace and socialism. It expressed satisfaction at the important role played by the PCP in this process and congratulated the Portuguese communists on their party's 60th anniversary.

The PCP delegation expressed its party's solidarity with the Socialist Party and the people of democratic Yemen in the struggle to consolidate the revolutionary process in South Yemen under the YSP's leadership, congratulating them on the achievements and successes attained and emphasizing the great significance of the revolution in their country for the people's liberation struggle.

The two delegations reaffirmed their parties' solidarity with the struggles of the peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America against imperialism, colonialism, Zionism and reaction and for freedom and national independence, peace, democracy and social progress. They expressed in particular their solidarity with the Arab peoples' liberation struggle, and in the first place with that of the people of Palestine for their right to return to their own land, to self-determination and to the setting up of their independent state under the leadership of the PLO--the Palestinian people's legitimate representative.

The two delegations condemned the militarist and aggressive policy of U.S. imperialism and of NATO's most reactionary circles, which is increasing tension and endangering peace in the Gulf, the Red Sea, the Arabian Sea and the Indian Ocean and world security. They reaffirmed the need to end the imperialist military presence in the region.

The two delegations expressed their parties' firm determination to struggle against imperialism and for detente, disarmament and security, responding to all peoples' aspirations for peace and social progress.

The two delegations expressed their parties' desire to work for the intensification of the relations of solidarity and fraternal cooperation between the PCP and the YSP, as a contribution to strengthening the friendship between the Portuguese people and the Yemeni people and in the interest of the unity of the international communist movement and of all anti-imperialist forces. To that end they signed a protocol of cooperation for 1982-83.

DEFENSE MINISTER DISCUSSES TEJERO, TERRORISM, NATO

LD281007 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 22 May 81 p 11

[Pilar Cernuda report]

[Excerpts] Madrid, 21 May--Probably the most significant thing about the meeting with Defense Minister Alberto Oliart were his evasions and silences. He disclosed no important information and made no remarks to make the headlines. He was cautious, answered questions and was cordial and calm. His first statement was "I do not want to talk about 23 February." But he did say something about it.

[Question] Why is Tejero allowed no visitors?

[Answer] Visits have not been stopped, simply restricted. Responsibility for this matter rests with the commander in chief of the military region and prison governor. Tejero can receive visits from his family and from a limited number of friends, but there is no ban on visits.

[Question] Do you acknowledge that there is a campaign to create a myth surrounding Tejero?

[Answer] Clearly there is a phenomenon whereby those who support the coup are creating a myth surrounding him or exalting him. There is no question about that.

[Question] And a campaign against the king.

[Answer] I am acquainted with what the newspapers have published. The king defined his stance very clearly on 23 February, and what the putschists are trying to do now is to attack him by implicating him, because they believe that unless they implicate him they will have no success.

[Question] What is the exact situation regarding the trial of the putschists?

[Answer] I would like to make it quite clear that the armed forces are aware of the situation concerning the trial and respect it completely. The trial is the exclusive responsibility of the military court, which is as independent as the ordinary courts. The various stages are as follows: At present an indictment is being drawn up, which will be submitted to the Higher Council of Military Justice, which will issue an authorization document. Once this has been done the plenary proceedings will start. I reckon that the trial could start in about 2 months' time.

[Question] Are you worried about the verdict?

[Answer] No. Any decision taken by court always seems to me a good one--and I say this as a professional, because I am a government attorney. One of the best lessons in democracy and respect is to accept that once this matter has passed into a court's hands, the court is responsible for it. I am not worried about any possible leniency or harshness because I sincerely have faith in the verdict.

[Question] But it will be a political trial....

[Answer] Attempts will be made to politicize the trial, but it will remain divorced from political considerations.

[Question] Do you believe that the current fear of another coup is justified?

[Answer] No, I do not believe so.

[Question] Are our intelligence services good enough to justify your assertion?

[Answer] I believe so. On the basis of my information I believe there are no plans for another coup. People believe that there are, because they believe in 23 February and because there is a minority in favor of a violent change of the constitution. It is a mainly extreme rightwing sector.

[Question] What is the result of this unceasing terrorism?

[Answer] I believe that the terrorism is pursuing a regressive line, designed to cause chaos--with or without a dictatorship, but chaos, nevertheless. This is nothing new. It is on record. They believe that they can attain power through chaos. Moreover, this situation comes about if terrorist regression combines with the extreme rightwing. But I do not believe that the armed forces are involved in it at all.

[Question] Mr Minister, it has been rumored that your meeting with the joint chiefs of staff on the evening of 7 May was a very stormy one. Is it true?

[Answer] No; I have not had a single stormy meeting with them. On this particular occasion there was some emotion following the attack on Lieutenant General Valenzuela, but this emotion must in no way be confused with a stormy meeting.

[Question] Do you believe that we are in some way subject to military pressure? That we are experiencing what is called supervised democracy?

[Answer] No. We do have a very serious problem, because we have been experiencing a very major crisis throughout the world since 1973. Moreover, in Spain there has been a very major political change too, and all this must be made to take root and consolidated promptly, responsibly and, above all, sensibly.

[Question] Let us return to terrorism. How is the armed forces presence in the single command organized? Are the military authorities under the command of Commissioner Ballesteros?

[Answer] The single command includes a lieutenant colonel and the line of command is maintained. Also there is general coordination with regard to the intelligence services. I would like to add something further: Terrorism is creating a strategy with very specific ends, and eveyone has a duty to keep calm and to allow the government to take all the necessary measures to try to eradicate it. It is true that we have suffered a great deal in the recent attacks, but it is no less true that the police have achieved some very major successes, although this does not mean that there will not be further attacks, unfortunately.

[Question] How have the armed forces as a whole received the active reserve law?

[Answer] Well, I believe, despite what has been said, moreover, this had been planned for some time.

[Question] Why have there been so many leaks to the press since you became minister?

[Answer] This question is very much misconceived. The fact is that I do not know why leaks take place. Perhaps because before we were not so concerned with matters to do with the army, whereas now we do indeed devote great attention to news of the military, trials, actions and maneuvers...and also because the pro-Tejero campaign is taking effect.

[Question] Why are you so much in favor of NATO membership?

[Answer] Because NATO originated to defend the lifestyle of the Western and European democracies, and this is the form of economic life and social and political constitution that I want for my homeland.

This is the basic and fundamental reason why I am in favor of entry into NATO. There is another reason, which is the effectiveness of alliances. I believe that NATO is more effective for us than pacts with other countries. NATO membership is very important from the strategic viewpoint and from the military viewpoint too.

[Question] When should we join?

[Answer] If there is a sufficient majority in parliament, the sooner the better.

[Question] Under what conditions should we join NATO?

[Answer] This is something that must be discussed and talked about. For instance, I believe that, among other things, we must have command in an area that is important to us. I believe that the Balearic Islands-Canary Islands-Gibraltar Straits area is very important and we will struggle for command over it.

[Question] Is there any pressure from the USSR to prevent Spain joining NATO?

[Answer] At the moment I am not aware of any. I do not know whether there has been any in the past.

[Question] Last, what objectives have you set yourself as minister of defense?

[Answer] I would like to leave behind me armed forces more integrated with the society to which they belong and, conversely, a society more integrated with its armed forces. From the questions that you have asked me I realize that society feels rather divorced from its armed forces' problems. Above all, I would like to leave behind me armed forces capable, if necessary, of acting to the required standard within the Atlantic alliance.

PCE CONGRESS THESIS DISCUSSES PARTY LIFE, PROBLEMS

LD221501 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 15-21 May 81 pp 51-55 (special supplement)

[Draft Thesis VII for 10th PCE Congress: "The PCE"]

[Text] 1. The PCE has played and continues to play an important role in the period of transition as a political force struggling for the consolidation of democracy and its development in a direction of progress. Under complex and difficult conditions it has been able to assess correctly the political stage, gauge the correlation of forces and formulate the policy of centration; this policy has been an essential factor in the defense of the nascent and weak democracy and has been confirmed as the most correct for the interests of the working class and of the people.

The PCE has been able during this period to secure its legalization; to have considerable power of attraction, to promote mass mobilizations, to conduct important election campaigns, to take part in the consolidation of the workers commissions, to carry out vigorous parliamentary activity in defense of democracy, the autonomie, the workers' interests and the modernization of social life, to have a political participation in the major problems of strengthening democracy greatly exceeding its electoral representation, to be an important factor in the drafting of the constitution and of the autonomy statutes, to hold the ninth congress, at which it affirmed its Eurocommunist policy, to democratize its structures after 40 years of clandestinity, and to recruit hundreds of new cadres into leadership bodies at various levels.

The PCE maintains an organized force of 160,000 members, thousands of committees and associations, a considerable network of headquarters and offices, with autonomous parties organized in nationalities and regions and over 1 million popular votes giving it their support.

We believe that in a context in which the difficulties and problems stand out it is advisable to make a correct assessment of what has been achieved and accomplished in order not to increase them subjectively ourselves.

But at the same time it is necessary to note with courage, realism and critical awareness that the party's development is being effected excessively slowly and sometimes accompanied by phenomena of stagnation and political and organizational distintegration. This is a result essentially of the difficulties of the situation, although also of our own shortcomings and defects.

2. The overall trend of the current political situation in the world and in Spain is not favorable to our objectives and aims. The world crisis, the increase in tension between the blocs and the general trend toward conservatism are intensifying the anticommunist pressure.

The democratic change effected without a break and under the hegemony of the right; the considerable conservative influence of the established powers; the keeping of essential sections of the state apparatus undemocratized; the exacerbation of the political, social and economic problems, which is creating disenchantment and increasing apathy among the population; the great obstacles to participation and a leading role for the population in the country's political life; the fear which persists in the light of the instability of the situation and the proven danger of regression; the campaign of disparagement against the political parties and, in particular, against the PCE; all this is the expression of a nonrevolutionary situation of ebbing and falling back, with hegemony in the hands of the rightwing social bloc and a correlation of forces unfavorable to the left, and especially to the PCE.

This does not deny the real prospects for changing the situation and the important role which the PCE can and should play, but it does indicate the limits, the ceiling which we have and the foreseeable pace in the process of changes. It is a reality which we must take into account in order not to slip and to be in a position to tackle the situation and its negative repercussions on our own ranks.

It is a difficult situation which requires of us firmness and tenacity in defending the party's policy, at the same time as determination in correcting our shortcomings.

As a widespread defect it is necessary to add a decline in concern toward the party as such, its functioning and progress in building it. It is a defect which in not a few instances is accompanied by lack of understanding with respect to its role and its necessity as a collective revolutionary instrument for conducting political activity.

It is true that we have had to tackle new tasks beyond our strength, several election campaigns and work on the front of the institutions and in the mass organizations; tasks to which it was necessary to attend and to which we must continue to attend. But in devotion to the various fronts we have not always achieved the necessary balance.

We have a good policy at the general level, but grave weaknesses in implementing it in all its potential, in developing it and translating it into actual work at all levels; as a result of insufficient attention to the instrument for so doing, which is the party as a whole. It is a matter of ensuring that the party as a whole conducts political activity.

In all the organizations, in all the committees and among all members it is necessary to strengthen concern for building the party and its functioning, devoting to this sufficient effort and the necessary cadres, to make progress in the party's development--something which entails patience, tenacity and thoroughness--and, aware that this is a task which requires planning, to set stone upon stone in a long-term effort.

3. During this period, trends with a certain degree of crystallization have appeared in our party which partially or totally call into question the ninth congress' policy. This has brought about the practicing on some scale of forms of work outside the party's regular life and in violation of our rules of functioning and democratic centralism; negative aspects which had their greatest manifestation at the Fifth Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia Congress and which have gravely harmed the party's activity and its standing in society.

These are phenomena whose emergence and development have been influenced, together with our own mistakes, by, among other factors, the incorrect assessment by a section of comrades of the situation and of the real correlation of forces; the temptation to evade that reality by means of verbal radicalisms and tokenist stances; the fact that our policy has not triumphed; the insufficient knowledge of it; and insufficiently rich and integrative organizational life, which has been unable to analyze and generalize the various experiences on the work fronts; the little experience and knowledge of the party on the part of most of the new recruits, who joined the party in large numbers after legalization; insufficient training works; the existence of a body of cadres and members with different origins and training, whose need for homogenization we already pointed out at the Cordoba Central Committee plenum and in which we need to make progress calmly; the fact that we have not as yet secured a sufficiently widespread agreement about the Eurocommunist policy formulated at the ninth congress; and, last, the pressures which are being exerted from outside our party to make us change our policy.

In the first place, the party's problems must be tackled by formulating and implementing a policy which meets the needs of the struggle for democracy and socialism in Spain; a policy which essentially we have and which is in keeping with the best of our distinguishing features--the heritage of the 60 years of our history and of many members' effort and sacrifice, the heritage of the working class and of the Spanish people as a whole.

And it must be pointed out that the PCE's distinguishing features include constant effort to apply Marxist theory and the experiences of other communist and revolutionary parties creatively to Spain's specific conditions, its international setting and the historical moment; the struggle against narrowness, sectarianism and dogmatism; our constant practice of internationalist solidarity, which at the same time asserts with the utmost vigor throughout the Spanish Communists' history their patriotism and the PCE's consistent struggle for Spain's national interests, its unity and its full sovereignty--something which entails our total independence and the rejection of interference by any party or state in another's internal affairs; the defense of freedoms and democracy, as something inherent in our strategy toward socialism and conception of it; and unity in the party, unity within the left--and especially with the socialists--and a broader democratic and progressive unity, capable of swaying increasingly broad social sectors toward transformation and change, and to contribute also to the necessary effort at surmounting the historical split in the workers movement.

Second, we must tackle the party's problems by strengthening with the utmost firmness its nature as a Marxist, revolutionary, democratic mass party of struggle and government, and by homogenizing it around the 9th congress' policy and its development at the 10th congress, by means of a broad and constant political debate and improvement in the activity of the party as a whole and of its political and organizational life.

4. There has been insufficient debate and explanation of the party's policy. Discussion in the party is usually excessively general, abstract and ideologized, not being constantly linked with the experiences of practical work of the whole of the association or body concerned.

Using on not a few occasions language which is not very simple and accessible to the members as a whole, discussion sometimes tends to be repeated at all levels with the same degree of generalization, reformulating again what has already been formulated and very frequently forgetting that at each level it is necessary to analyse what is specific to it.

This is a method of discussion which does not enhance much the party's standard and political homogeneity; which considerably hampers the contribution of the comrades as a whole and drives away many from the debate; which does not sufficiently link the political discussion with the specific tasks to be performed, so that much of the political analysis is not reflected in organized political activity with respect to the masses; and which, therefore, does not increase our links as a body with reality and the population.

In daily work, specific tasks are not always set, nor is there examination of how those tasks were performed, assessing collective and individual performance.

Not infrequently, no systematic and tenacious attempt is made to establish increasingly close and coordinated links with the masses and to strengthen the mass movements.

Tasks such as organization, propaganda and finances, the party press, and political training, which are essential in our activity, do not always have the necessary emphasis.

In conclusion, it is a matter of acquiring a style of work in each organization and committee based on constant comparison between debate and political practice, with a view to the implementation and development of our policy in defense of the people, which will enable us to generalize experiences and to give the party as a whole and its political line greater support and power to transform.

5. With respect to the party's growth, following the massive influx after our legalization, it must be said that we have not as yet succeeded in inducing the party as a whole to accept concern for growth as something regular in the individual and collective activity of members and organizations.

During this period, there has been a considerable loss of membership, whose general causes have to do with the political situation and the party problems which we are analyzing, but which will have to be investigated far more specifically. It is a loss of membership which has most severely affected sectors of professionals and intellectuals. Also, our membership continues to show a very low percentage of women.

To this must be added the fact that the party's strength geographically is very uneven throughout Spain.

Enterprise organizations, which are key elements in our party, have not received the necessary attention, and in not a few instances have been neglected by committees.

And, although it is true that the party's growth depends on the situation, on having a good policy, on there being an attractive political and organizational life in our organizations and on the links which they establish with the masses, it also depends on our succeeding in recovering the proselytizing spirit in the party as a whole and the conviction that numbers are an essential factor for a mass party and that we are capable of thorough, planned and organized work to take our organization everywhere and to all sectors and to win over to our ranks many more workers, professionals, artists and intellectuals, peasants, small and medium tradesmen and businessmen and many more young people and women.

6. We must continue to adjust our organizational structures to the conditions of democracy and to the characteristics of a mass party in legality. The ways and methods of clandestinity still have an influence over us.

The criterion of territorialization of our organizations has been applied rigidly and even with misinterpretations. The factory organizations and the membership of professionals, intellectuals and artists in the party have suffered principally from this.

In view of the difficulties in ensuring that the territorial forms of organization achieve their full potential, and the confusion of political problems and difficulties with organizational problems and difficulties, the territorial principle of organization is sometimes questioned and there is a desire to return to old forms which are now outdated and ineffective during this stage.

So it is desirable to reaffirm the general principle of territoriality--that is, organization on the basis of the place of work, study or residence as the place of activity of all the communists of that sphere. As a form of organization appropriate to this stage and to our party's policy and nature, it makes it possible to formulate overall and particular responses to the population's problems everywhere, for the party to penetrate into the broad framework of the social fabric; and for the activity of the forces of labor and culture, representing the sectors destined to transform society, to be harmonized in the same body.

Setting up the territorial organizations in a rigid manner has contributed to the loss of political influence and to the party's organizational retrogression in some sectors as important as teachers, artists and professionals. The specific nature of these sectors, their dispersal, the complexity of the political problems presented within them and the sensitivity in cultural and ideological issues have not found within the territorial associations and committees an adequate framework of organization and political leadership to ensure their guidance and organize activity within them. For this reason, our party will have to make its organizational forms more flexible, seeking to find organizational machinery within which intellectuals, professionals and artists can analyze the problems of their front of activity as such, and conduct a policy which will influence those sectors more deeply.

7. One of the greatest weaknesses in our work lies in the fact that we have not as yet been able to organize adequately the associations' activity and functioning. Here, party life still suffers from defects which make their meetings routine and ineffective and uninteresting.

It is indisputable that there are exceptions which the party as a whole will have to study. But in general, the associations have not as yet been able to carry out work which has the dual aspect of activity of a mass party--political, cultural, recreational and other activities--and to organize their members' work in the society surrounding them, presenting the party's options, knowing and struggling for the improvement of its living conditions, organizing the various sections of the people around them for the sake of their interests, mobilizing and explaining the party's policy in each instance, disseminating the party's press and publications, organizing financial aid and so forth, and causing the greatest possible number of comrades and supporters to take in these tasks.

The associations' committees should plan their public activities and the various tasks of their organization, monitor implementation, and set up working groups for each front of activity, seeking to extend the party's activity and organization to the enterprises and teaching and health centers around them and to each population center, establishing political relations with the democratic forces established there and with the personalities enjoying influence among the masses.

It must be ensured that our party centers, our party offices, are centers which radiate outward and which project outward the party's influence among the masses--pleasant, attractive, open places which carry out activities of interest to the population as a whole.

To succeed in improving our associations' work and make them more lively and attractive, with committees which know how to direct their activities, is one of the most crucial tasks which the party currently faces, and should be a constant concern of leaders and cadres.

Traditionally the PCE has unhesitatingly upheld the historic nationalities' right to the autonomies. Being sensitive to this reality of Spain, the Communist Party of the Basque country and the Communist Party of Galicia have existed within it as organizations with their own personality since 1935 and 1969. For specific historical reasons, there has existed in Catalonia since 1936 the Unified Socialist Party, which originated from the merger of four Marxist parties--an independent party with which the PCE has always maintained close political and organizational links aimed at ensuring that it is an entirety in the state, with the same policy, the same general principles and the same organizational principles.

When democracy arrived and the state of the autonomies began to be organized in accordance with the constitution, the PCE promoted the transformation of its regional organizations into autonomous communist parties within the PCE. The communist parties of the Canary Islands, Valencia, the Balearic Islands, Andalusia, Asturias, Murcia, Cantabria and Extremadura gained this status, and the communist parties of Aragon, Castile-La Mancha and Castile-Leon are in the process of gaining it.

This is a process which the PCE is adjusting to Spain's autonomy reality. Each of these parties has full autonomy for formulating the policy of its community and possesses its own political personality in its nationality, country or region, seeking to link itself as closely as possible in this way with its people's working class, forces of culture and progressive sectors. It is this organizational reality which can undoubtedly make possible the most active identity with the interests of each of Spain's peoples.

At the same time, this does not deny but reaffirms the PCE's unity as an entirety and as an organization which conducts political activity throughout Spain, with a joint leadership, policy and discipline. Spain is a historical reality, with a single working class, an oligarchy and a joint democratic and revolutionary blueprint.

The PCE's process of adjustment to the state of the autonomies, effected not without distortions during these years of transition, has been one of the greatest innovations in the party's life. To combine the principle of the autonomy and personality of each of the parties with the affirmation of the PCE as a crucial instrument for democracy and the transformation of Spanish society, avoiding falling into centralist or nationalist extremisms, will be one of the keys to the triumph of our policy in each of the autonomous peoples and in Spain as a whole.

The party has taken great steps in internal democracy since legalization. This is a course which it will have to continue, making democracy increasingly effective in its internal life.

It is clear that this is not resolved solely by making all bodies elective. A crucial factor for enhancing democracy in the party is to increase the participation of the great majority of its members to debate, in political life and in the party's activity. Democracy is participation, information and activity on the part of the organization as a whole or of the vast majority of it.

At the same time, the constant development of democracy in the party requires applying the rules of unity of action and of the minority's subordination to the majority--in a word, of democratic centralism. The PCE, as a democratic and mass party of struggle and government, with a diversity of currents within it, requires collective vigilance to ensure that discipline does not deteriorate. As a revolutionary Marxist party struggling for the transformation of society and for socialism and communism, it combines the broadest internal democracy and respect for each member's opinions with a consciously accepted discipline.

10. The PCE's experience has been open to the renewal of cadres and leaders, even during the Francoist clandestinity. It has constantly attempted to combine renewal with the necessary continuity.

It is clear that any renewal must be effected in accordance with a policy, promoting the cadres most identified with it according to their ability and experience; seeking an integrative political homogenization, with a wealth of diversity of nuances and experiences within it and with a capacity for consistency, shunning improvisation.

Important changes in the recruitment of new cadres have occurred in general in the party's leadership bodies. Taking the party as a whole, there has been an extensive process of renewal which has promoted hundreds of new leaders.

This process will have to continue to advance at all levels. At the same time, we must seek to ensure that the committees experience an essential consolidation and stability, without which they are unlikely to be transformed into experienced and capable leadership bodies. The experiences are very diverse, but in some organizations the negative idea that the committee or its members must be changed each year, believing that this is the most democratic procedure, has predominated. This practice renders difficult a minimum degree of stability in the leadership bodies, giving the organization a temporary nature which weakens its work. Renewal and promotion must be combined with consolidation and collective ability, which cannot be improvised in a leadership team.

Over the last few years, the practice of creating very large leadership bodies, confusing gigantism with democracy, has flourished, even at the highest level. These committees found themselves confronted with grave difficulties in organizing their work and giving their members real participation in the leadership tasks, with frustrations and repeated absences from meetings occurring. An excessive number of leadership bodies were sometimes also created.

Neither experience has helped to improve the political leadership's collective work, the allocation of duties within it and the pinpointing of responsibilities.

The leadership bodies should combine maximum democracy within themselves with an adequate division of labor and loyalty among their members. One clearly negative aspect which has sometimes occurred over the last few years is the exacerbation of personal and group conflict within the leadership bodies and on the part of the cadres. This practice has been strongly criticized by the party's grassroots, who have vigorously rejected it. The PCE's consolidation and democratic maturity depend on surmounting these practices within it and, in particular, in its leadership bodies.

It must also be noted that during this period the relationship of the party leaderships, including the Central Committee, with the grassroots has not been satisfactory. The direct, systematic and frequent participation of the leaderships in the grassroots organizations has been inadequate. The information supplied to all organizations and members must also be far more extensive and systematic, bearing in mind the key role played by information in a mass party and in a society like present-day society. In this connection, it is desirable to analyze, in order to correct them, the shortcomings in the leadership and in the party as a whole which rendered unfeasible the continuation of the MUNDO OBRERO daily.

Generally, there is a real gap between the leadership's analyses, guidelines and resolutions, and how they reach, become known to and are analyzed by the grassroots. This defective relationship is one of the greatest obstacles to an effective political leadership and to the party's making progress, becoming homogenized, facilitating participation by members, acting as an entirety, and translating the guidelines into action.

The considerable lack of communication between the leadership and the grassroots has created in not a few instances a distorted view of our policy, ignorance of it on the part of sections of the party, and sometimes weakening of some of its aspects--such as all those concerned with mass mobilization--whose implementation depends on the party as a whole putting them into practice.

It is therefore necessary to bring the party leadership much closer to the grassroots, and to shift the leadership cadres' activity more toward the grassroots. For this it will be necessary to improve the leadership bodies' activity and make them more efficient; for the committees' composition to have a sufficient number of men and women devoted primarily to carrying out political and organizational work, which we have so far scarcely fulfilled; and to make much more progress in organizing a good party apparatus, increasing the number of members professionally devoted to it, as one of the key issues for improving the PCE's structure and its capacity as a mass political force.

The debate on these issues, appraised with the contributions of all the comrades, with their ideas and experiences, will enable us to make progress in the improvement of the party's activity and of its organization and functioning, so necessary for the defense of democracy and its consolidation and development, in order to open up prospects in Spain for a socialist society.

FL281836 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1808 GMT 28 May 81

[Text] Amadeo Blanco, Cuban vice minister of foreign trade, met in Helsinki with Finnish Foreign Trade Minister Esko Rekola. The two officials expressed interest in expanding and intensifying economic and trade cooperation. The Cuban official also held talks with firms that have commercial links with Cuba.

PARTY REPRESENTATIVES MEET WITH GDR DELEGATE

AU271440 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 22 May 81 p 2

[Summary] On 20 May, Inge Lange, SED Central Committee Politburo member candidate and SED Central Committee secretary, who is heading a delegation to the 19th congress of the Finnish Communist Party, met with representatives of the Finnish Democratic People's League.

At the cordial meeting, the great importance of the struggle for political and military detente was stressed. Both sides assessed the relations between the GDR and Finland as a real example of cooperation in the spirit of peaceful coexistance.

In a cordial meeting between Inge Lange and Anna-Liisa Hyvonen, Central Committee Politburo member of the Finnish Communist Party, the two sides paid tribute to the fraternal relations between the two parties and expressed their full agreement on basic questions of international politics.

GOVERNMENT AGREES TO SUPPLY WHEAT TO NICARAGUA

FL261807 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 1745 GMT 26 May 81

[Text] Stockholm, 26 May (NOTIMEX)--Sweden will supply 10,000 tons of wheat to Nicaragua to lessen the foodstuffs shortage being experienced by the Central American country. This was announced in Stockholm this afternoon at the end of a meeting between Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto and Swedish Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin.

The value of Swedish wheat shipments, including transportation, amounts to 14 million Swedish kronas (about $2.8 million). The wheat is being supplied in addition to Swedish development aid which in the 1980-81 fiscal year amounts to 30 million Swedish kronas (about $5 million).

In his meeting with d'Escoto, Falldin called for Swedish-Nicaraguan cooperation in the fields of research, trade and industry. The Swedish prime minister also expressed hope that the system of democratic political parties in Nicaragua is strengthened and that free elections are held in 1985.

The Nicaraguan Foreign Minister leaves Sweden tomorrow after a 3-day visit.

OWEN PROPOSES EEC HELP IN NORTHERN IRELAND CRISIS

LD221147 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 22 May 81 p 14

[Peter Pryke report]

[Excerpt] A political initiative on Northern Ireland is now necessary to meet the growing public frustration at the government's failure to come forward with any proposals, Dr David Owen, the former Labour foreign secretary, said in the Commons last night. Pointing out that there had been no such initiative for seven years since the collapse of power-sharing, he said: "There is growing dissatisfaction at the inability of this house to grapple with this problem. There is a feeling there is a lack of resolution, boldness and new thinking."

The initiative proposed by Dr Owen, during the debate on the spring recess motion, was that the British and Irish Governments should seek a solution through the political cooperation framework of the EEC. Dr Owen, now one of the joint leaders of the Social Democrats, said the anxieties aroused in Northern Ireland by the talks between Mrs Thatcher and Mr Haughey showed the difficulties of bilateral dialogue. There was a readiness within the Irish Republic to think in a community dimension and there was no reason why the British Government should give up any of its sovereignty by seeking a solution through the EEC. The object should be to find a status for Northern Ireland which was unique. There could be a great deal of regional autonomy on matters such as health. While he did not believe there should be a sovereign state of Northern Ireland, there were a range of indeterminable positions short of that, such as already had been seen in the Channel Islands.

Mr Robert Adley suggested that the majority in Northern Ireland would be against the proposal and asked: "Would you then press ahead with the idea?"

Dr Owen replied that if it was said you could never put proposals forward which did not have the support of the majority in Northern Ireland they would be discussing the problem for the next decade. "You have to take a bold initiative, put down on the table a total package, which no one section will find totally favourable. Maybe initially it will have a hostile response. We would have to stand firm both in Dublin and in London."

Mr Pym, leader of the house, replying to the debate, virtually rejected the proposal for a solution through the EEC. He said he was "very dubious indeed" whether it could make a significant contribution to solving the problem which was highly specialised. "It is awfully easy to throw out ideas," he said.

Another proposal, that of Mr Benn for involving the United Nations, had been seen by many people to have "real difficulties."

PAISLEY CLAIMS 'LANDSLIDE' IN ULSTER ELECTIONS

LD221141 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 22 May 81 p 1

[Report by "our Belfast correspondent"]

[Text] The Rev Ian Paisley last night described the successes his Democratic Unionist Party had won over the Official Unionist in the bitterly-fought Ulster local government elections as a "landslide." With more than half of the results still due when counting resumes today, Mr Paisley's party has already won 80 seats, six more than it took in the elections four years ago. The Official Unionists have won 85 seats. The mainly Catholic Social Democratic and Labour Party more than 50, and the Moderate Alliance Party fewer than 20.

KLIRIDHIS DISCUSSES IMPLICATIONS OF ELECTIONS

NC271138 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 27 May 81 pp 1, 8

[I DHILINI exclusive interview with Democratic Rally Chairman Kliridhis on the outcome of parliamentary elections in Cyprus; date not given]

[Excerpts] Question: How do you view the Democratic Rally's [DISI] entry into the House with regard to solving Cyprus' burning problems?

Answer: With its entry into the new House, DISI's first goal will be to implement the basic principles of its elections manifesto and carry out the promises that it gave to the people. Both myself and the other DISI deputies will do everything that is within our power to work responsibly and consistently to serve the interests of all Cypriots without exception and without looking into their political affiliations.

Question: As an opposition party, what will DISI's philosophy be in the new House?

Answer: DISI is entering the new House as an official opposition party and as such its role will be constructive and in the interest of Cypriot Hellenism.

Question: To what do you attribute this change in the people? Namely, why did they no longer have confidence in the president of the republic and the government and turn toward DISI?

Answer: The turning of the people toward DISI is due to their disappointment with the stand of the Kiprianou government and the Democratic Party. The president, government and Democratic Party have made terrible blunders regarding the people and our national cause.

Before closing the interview we asked Mr Kliridhis to send a message to the Cypriot people through our column. The DISI chairman said: "To the DISI followers I address a message and an assurance that we will faithfully and responsibly resolve the people's problems. To those who have worked for the party's victory I express deep gratitude. I assure all our people that DISI will act in the new House with the implementation of its promises as its yardstick.

Democratic Party Response

NC280914 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 28 May 81 p 1

[Text] In a statement the Democratic Party calls on Democratic Rally Leader Kliridhis not to be in a hurry to derive conclusions on the popular support of President Kiprianou and his government, advising him to be patient until the presidential elections.

"Democratic Rally Chairman Glavkos Kliridhis seems to be in a hurry to maintain what he stated in his party organ, the afternoon newspaper I DHILINI." In his statement, Kliridhis said that "the main message of the election is that President Kiprianou and his government have failed to secure a vote of confidence from the people..."!

"Whatever the chairman of the extreme right party said is ridiculous. No serious and responsible politician would have conducted demagogy in such a misleading way. Things are very simple. The parliamentary elections cannot give the measure of the popular support toward the government and the president of the republic.

"Kliridhis deliberately confuses things for demagogical reasons. We advise him to have a little patience until the presidential election takes place. Then he can make the proper deductions."

KHARAVYI CLAIMS SECRET KLIRIDHIS-DENKTAS LINK

NC240813 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 24 May 81 p 12

[Special London dispatch]

[Excerpts] Democratic Rally Party Chairman Glavkos Kliridhis and Turkish Cypriot leader Rauf Denktas have reached a secret understanding which provides for the early closing of the Cyprus issue in the event they both win the elections in their respective communities!

Our informant is in a position to know "a lot," as he himself has said, because of his relations and contacts with circles of the British Foreign Office and foreign embassies. He has revealed that the secret Kliridhis-Denktas understanding was reached as a result of feverish and successive mediation efforts by a Western diplomat.

The new Kliridhis-Denktas secret understanding--according to our reliable informant--stands on "basic principles." The solution of the Cyprus issue, on the basis of these "principles," is tantamount to a virtual selling out of Cyprus. According to the "four basic principles," the Kliridhis-Denktas understanding provides for:

1. Readjustment of the borders.

2. "Settlement of the Famagusta question" with particular emphasis on the "reopening of hotel units and enterprises."

3. The return of an (unspecified) number of refugees.

4. The need to "limit the strength of communists and their fellow travelers" in both communities.

It becomes evident from the above "basic principles" of the secret understanding between Democratic Rally leader Kliridhis and Denktas that the basis for the closing of the Cyprus issue--the selling out of Cyprus--are the faits accomplis created by the invasion and the occupation of 40 percent of Cypriot territory by the Attila hordes.

Particular sensation is caused by the provision for the need "to limit the strength of communists," a fact that brings back to the forefront the identical provision of the notorious Acheson plan, which set the "elimination of communists and Makarios" as an essential term for his partitionist plan of double enosis.

The revelation of the secret Kliridhis-Denktas understanding explains many cloudy and vague points in the recent farewell press conference given in Nicosia by U.S. Ambassador Stone. As is known, the Stone statements were characterized by cynicism and have been received by the Cypriot people with feelings of mistrust and indignation. Neither less nor more, the U.S. ambassador called on our people to digest the faits accomplis and negotiate the terms of their subjugation.

The secret Kliridhis-Denktas understanding also gives full explanation to the articles by the Democratic Rally organ I SIMERINI, which was urging us "to negotiate the terms of our subjugation with maturity and skillfulness."

Both the Stone statements and the earlier advice by the Democratic Rally "to negotiate the terms of our subjugation" are now considered to be actions toward preparing the grounds for the realization--under certain conditions and prerequisites--of the secret Kliridhis-Denktas understanding.

GREEK IRA SUPPORTERS CLAIM 27 MAY EXPLOSION

NC281459 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 28 May 81 p 1

[Report by TO VIMA correspondent in Thessalonika]

[Excerpts] Thessaloniki, 27 May--In a telephone call to one of the city's newspapers late this afternoon, an organization which identified itself for the first time as "Greek Armed Group for Support to the Northern Irish Struggle" [elliniki enopli omadha yia ipostirixi tou vorioirlandhikou agona] claimed responsibility for the planting of explosives, which, at 0315, caused two terrible explosions in succession at the British Council offices.

Also, earlier, a spokesman for the security authorities had not ruled out the possibility that the blowing up of the British Council offices might have been an act of protest against the British attitude toward Ireland, and in support for the Irish Republican Army guerrillas.

AUTHORITATIVE SOURCES COMMENT ON AIR, SEA RIGHTS

NC241902 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 24 May 81 p 22

[By P. Kamvisis]

[Text] "The 10-mile airspace limit will never be reduced to 6 miles. No government could make such a decision, including the present one."

This blunt, categorical statement was made to AKROPOLIS by an authoritative government source who stressed that: "The government's position on this issue is clear and firm. This has been made clear to everyone."

The government's position is unchanged because:

--The 10-mile limit is the least limit that will secure the defense of our islands.

--The reasons behind Ankara's questioning the eastern Aegean's present status are declared repeatedly and methodically.

At this point it must be stressed that Ankara is escalating its pressure on the islands. Besides the obvious daily assaults and threats reported in the Turkish press, the statement by the representative of the Turkish Foreign Ministry, Oktay Icsen, is characteristic. The Turkish diplomat again brought up the issue of the disarmament of the eastern Aegean islands, while, at the same time, he said that "Ankara is trying to solve the problem within the framework of the Greek-Turkish dialogue."

Before these escalating provocations--which accompany continuous merciless provocations and violations of our airspace and continental shelf--the reiteration of the Greek Government's firm stand is imperative. It is also imperative that the government's stand on the issue of arming the islands be firm. The islands must remain armed in order to be able to defend themselves. It is stressed that no government will accept leaving the islands unarmed and fearful under the threat of the Turkish Aegean army and the hundreds of Turkish landing craft that lie in wait on the Asian Minor shores....

Authoritative political and diplomatic observers questioned yesterday on this issue stressed that:

1. The Rallis government's decisive stand is in accordance with and echoes the feelings and the will of the Greek people, irrespective of party or ideological stand.

2. Peace and security in our area is attributed to this Greek government's clear stand. And the reason is simply because: If, on the contrary, the Greek side's attitude on these issues was unclear and if it created an impression of indecisiveness, probably--if not certainly--this would have encouraged Ankara to increase its pressures and provocations. And of course, it is evident which dangers can be provoked if the violations of the Greek national airspace and continental shelf by the Turkish aircraft and naval ships continue.

3. The government's decisive stand also "puts in place" the thoughts and intentions of those powers that want and seek "to have a say" in the area's developments. For example, it is advocated that when the West realizes that Greece's sovereign air and sea rights are not negotiable and that the defense of our islands is a national duty of all Greeks, then the government will define its stand toward Ankara's views and relations accordingly. More simply, no one would dare to encourage Ankara's aspirations in the Aegean when one is convinced that the present Greek Government, or any other Greek Government, and the Greek people have adopted the decision to protect with all means the security integrity and dignity of the nation.

AKROPOLIS: TURKEY WARNED ON CONTINUED VIOLATIONS

NC271431 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 27 May 81 p 2

[From the "Laconic" column: "Let Them Read History"]

[Text] Ankara plays with fire when allowing--if not encouraging--the Greek airspace violations by Turkish military aircraft instead of taking measures to end the provocations. What would happen if we also followed Turkey's behavior and started reacting not with protest demarches but in a similar manner? How would things develop if the Greek Air Force and Greek Navy gave--as they have the right and duty to do--a good lesson to the "braves" of the Turkish Air Force? And why should we alone think of the possible results from such a clash and not Ankara as well? Could it be that Ankara would like to test the actual limits of our tolerance? Or is it perhaps interpreting our wisdom and restraint as weakness? If Ankara trusted its memory more than its judgment, then it should recall what happened to others--and moreover big powers and not small countries--who, not too long ago, took our love for peace as defeatism and, particularly, in a period when the Greek Armed Forces did not possess the present modern arms. We certainly want peace and we are doing all we can to protect it. We have a lot to do; we do not live from usurpation and looting. However, if war is imposed on us, we will show that we also know how to fight. We will not sacrifice peace, our freedoms or our rights. For Hellenism such a dilemma does not exist. Throughout the entire course of its history, Hellenism always set freedom at the top of all values and not peace, regardless of how much it was desired.

I AVYI URGES RADICAL FOREIGN POLICY CHANGE

NC271648 Athens I AVYI in Greek 27 May 81 p 8

[From the "I AVYI" column: "The Turkish Provocation"]

[Text] The new Turkish provocation in the Aegean with the flights of the Turkish Air Force fighter planes over two Greek destroyers, which were sailing in Greek territorial waters in the Samos island area, stresses the seriousness of the crisis in Greek-Turkish relations and the increasing threat to our national interests from the escalating aggressive policy of Ankara's rulers. Let it be noted that this action has followed after an interval of a very few days the attacks of Turkish ships on Greek fishing boats and in this instance the undisguised violation of Greek territorial waters right up almost to the port of Khios.

Consequently, we are not discussing isolated incidents without significance. With these provocations Ankara is stressing its intention to maintain and feed the atmosphere of tension, thus constantly keeping on the agenda the issue of its illegal demands in the Aegean and its estimation that eventually tranquility in the Aegean area will be purchased through the acceptance of its demands against our national interests.

It concerns a well-balanced strategy that reckons as a basic element for its success the favorable U.S. and NATO stance toward Turkey and its demands and the avoidance of any reaction that could make Turkey unpleasant to the USSR. In this sense it is a delusion for one to believe--as the government lets it be apparent that it does believe--in the possibility of some "guarantees" by the United States against any Turkish threat.

Many times we have stressed that any "settlement" of our differences with Turkey within the NATO framework cannot but be against our national interests. Turkey's position and possibilities within the system of U.S. aggressive strategy in the areas of the eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East predetermine the stand of the United States and NATO, a position that is absolutely unfavorable to Greece on the issue of Turkish demands, as, after all, has been proved by the Turkish invasion of Cyprus in 1974 and confirmed daily since then.

By orienting the country toward a return to NATO and attachment to the U.S. strategy, the New Democracy governments have encouraged Turkish aggressiveness. It is not at all accidental that the increasing Turkish provocations are coinciding with the completion of the Atlantic policy, which the current government had set as its goal, with the last step at this stage being the acceptance of the U.S. bases on Greek soil.

The contradictory government statements on the recent Turkish provocations and, more specifically, the National Defense Ministry's obvious effort to lessen the significance and seriousness of these provocations constitute a very typical indication of how little the New Democracy government can effectively defend national interests, of how yielding and conciliatory it is to provocations because it has advanced much and is still advancing more deeply on the road of "compliance" with the demands of the U.S.-NATO strategy. By following this road, it is increasingly reducing the possibilities for effective resistance to the Turkish provocation and leaving NATO arbitration, that is, national humiliation, as the only "way out."

If the recent and repeated Turkish provocations contain something positive, this consists of the fact that they have stressed the need for a radical change in the policy the country is following. The New Democracy government, which even a few months before the elections seeks [to accomplish] "faits accomplis" behind the people's backs, through the agreement for the U.S. bases, has led the country to a true impasse and its removal from power becomes an increasingly imperative national need.

I AVYI CRITICIZES GOVERNMENT COLD WAR POLICY

NC221609 Athens I AVYI in Greek 22 May 81 p 8

[From the "I AVYI" column: "The New Provocation"]

[Text] The U.S. landing exercise, which will be held from 25-31 May in the Orfanou Kolpos with the cooperation of Greek units, constitutes a new provocative act that shows how much the New Democracy government has sl'd down the road of accession to the aggressive policy of the United States. The U.S. landing exercise clearly has a Cold War manifestation at a time when the international situation in our area, and specifically in the Middle East, is being dangerously aggravated.

The announcement to hold the exercise coicides with reports that an agreement has already been reached for maintaining U.S. bases on Greek soil.

Thus, shortly before the elections, the government is forming a complex of "faits accomplis" around the basic problems of the country's international orientation, about which the people are entitled to have a sovereign and decisive opinion. At the same time, the government is attempting to create an atmosphere of psychological duress for the elections.

We have repeatedly explained and analyzed how these actions and orientations fully clash with our national interests. Nothing, however, shows more descriptively this reality than the fact that at the very moment when the U.S. (essentially U.S.-Greek) landing exercise, directed at the "north," was being announced, in the area of Khios the Turks were chasing Greek fishermen in Greek territorial waters and, in fact, had nearly arrived outside the Khios harbor, challenging and laughing at Greek patrol boats. So, when the permanent threat against our vital national interests, which emanates from our "ally" Turkey, becomes more acute the Greek Armed Forces cooperate with the U.S. Armed Forces in holding cold war exercises on Greek soil directed against the socialist countries, while at the same time the maintenance of U.S. bases on Greek soil, with its detrimental consequences for our country and peace in the area, is being perpetuated.

Of course, the government should not deluge itself that its policy is not being categorically rejected by the great majority of the people who are struggling and will continue to struggle for its abolition. The new provocation along the Struma River makes the imperative national need for the removal of New Democracy from power and a radically different policy much clearer.

MITSOTAKIS' EFFORTS AVOIDED EC ANTI-TURKISH STAND

NC230910 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 20 May 81 pp 1, 15

[Text] Brussels (ANKA)--It has been reported that the Greek government has urged Greek parliamentarians at the European Parliament and the Council of Europe not to adopt an anti-Turkish attitude at these institutions. According to information received from reliable sources, this request was made by Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis. It is stated that Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen drew Mr Mitsotakis' attention to this matter in a private conversation in Rome.

The Greek Government has asked Greek parliamentarians at both institutions "to refrain from any action likely to damage the dialogue between Ankara and Athens and not to participate in any voting against Turkey."

Political commentators say that this attitude yielded positive results during the voting at the Council of Europe assembly.

The same circles recall Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis' statement at the EEC foreign ministers political consultative council in Venlo, the Netherlands, that Greece would not support decisions taken against Turkey or the efforts to expel Turkey from the Council of Europe, adding: "Ilter Turkmen's warnings after the Rome talks have begun to yield results, with Athens appearing to be making great efforts not to undermine the bilateral talks."

KKE CABLES AKEL ON CYPRUS ELECTION SHOWING

NC261726 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 26 May 81 p 1

[Text] On behalf of the KKE Central Committee, Secretary General Comrade Kharilaos Florakis yesterday sent to AKEL Central Committee Secretary General Comrade Ezekias Papaioannou the following congratulatory telegram:

"On behalf of the Communists and Greece's working people I express to you very warm congratulations on the great electoral victory of AKEL and its popular ratification as Cyrpus' primary political force.

This verdict by the Cypriot people constitutes a recognition of the long and tough struggles by Cypriot Communists for the improvement of the life of working people, for the independence and survival of the Cyprus republic, for peace in the area and manifestation of popular will, for the repulsion of Atlantic partitionist plans and implementation of UN resolutions on Cyprus.

"We also greet the fact that the Cypriot people's great majority supported the democratic patriotic forces which want an independent, nonaligned, sovereign and demilitarized Cyprus which opposes pro-NATO reactionary forces.

"The Cypriot people's victorious message inspires the Greek people with militancy and optimism in their struggle for change, for an independent Greece outside NATO, without U.S. bases and nuclear weapons--a decisive supporter of the Cypriot people's struggle."

KKE-Interior Comment

NC271422 Athens I AVYI in Greek 27 May 81 p 1

["Text" of statement by secretary of the KKE-Interior Central Committee Bambis Dhrakopoulos; date and place not given]

[Text] "The results of the Cypriot election express the confidence of the greatest majority of the Cypriot people in the democratic, patriotic, political forces that fight for the independence and sovereignty of the Republic of Cyprus, for the rejection of partitionist plans and for a just solution to the Cyprus problem within the framework of UN resolutions. They also express the hope and strong desire of the Cyprus people that the Greek Government will stand by their side in the struggle, maintaining an open front against the trends to make concessions and service the partitionist U.S.-NATO plans. In this light there is a special importance in the presence of the leftwing forces, which received more than 40 percent support in the election.

"However, the increased strength of the 'Democratic Rally' (DISI) which represents a trend toward concessions and which is supported by the U.S.-NATO policy--an increase which is not unrelated to the rift in the patriotic forces front--is a point of concern which must not be underestimated.

"Today, when the Turkish chauvinists, with the help of Washington climax their expansionist plans at the expense of Hellenism in the midst of dangerous international conditions, particularly those in the Middle East, it becomes more than ever imperative that the patriotic forces of Cyprus should unite around a jointly agreed-upon line for the successful handling of the national Cypriot cause."

TERCUMAN COMMENTS ON STATIONING RDF IN TURKEY

NC280826 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 22 May 81 p 4

[Commentary by Fahir Armaoglu: "RDF and Turkey"]

[Text] It is very noticeable that since the Reagan administration assumed office there has been a constantly increasing rapprochement between Turkey and the United States. Together with this rapprochement, Turkey's strategic importance in the Middle East and the role it could play in the region are receiving profound attention.

With U.S. Under Secretary of Defense West's visit to Ankara, which began the other day, Turkey has again been put on the U.S. agenda. What is mainly being discussed is the question of the Rapid Deployment Force [RDF] that the United States wishes to set up.

Let us first state that the RDF is a military measure that would be rapidly implemented in the event that the Soviet Union attempted to invade the Middle East oilfields, particularly the Gulf region, which is the West's primary source of energy. But using this force against any of the Arab states is out of the question.

Following the sudden Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, which caught the West unaware, the United States will be able to dispatch this force very rapidly to any region where trouble arises.

As one can infer from its name, the basic factor in the use of this force, which possesses the strength to strike, is "speed." To secure this, it is highly important that countries close to the Middle East provide transit, accommodation and stockpiling facilities for this force. It is obvious that Turkey is the most ideal for this purpose, which is why the United States has attached great importance to Turkey right from the start. In return for this, Turkey obviously has certain conditions; first, it does not wish to undertake a new defense contribution outside NATO, which is why the United States is now trying to turn the RDF into a joint defense system within the wider framework of NATO, because it will not be easy to implement such a plan without West European support.

Another problem for Turkey is the reaction that the RDF will provoke in the Middle East at a time when Turkey is trying to improve its relations with the Arab states, particularly with Saudi Arabia. According to U.S. Under Secretary of Defense West, it appears Saudi Arabia's sympathy for this project has been secured. Nevertheless, this point does not seem easibly solvable. Another issue to be considered is that Turkey must be militarily powerful to be able to counter the risks that assisting the RDF will create.

To put it briefly, the RDF is logical and realistic, but it is also true that Turkey will have to strike delicate balances.

LIBYAN FOREIGN MINISTER HAS MEETING WITH TURKMEN

TA281602 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1450 GMT 28 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 28 May (AA)--Secretary of External Liaison Bureau of Libya Peoples Socialist Jamahiriyah, 'Abd al-'Ati al-'Ubaydi, paid a courtesy call at the Ministry of Defence this morning and talked with Defence Minister Haluk Bayulken. Al-'Ubaydi later headed the Libyan delegation for official talks with the Turkish side.

Secretary of External Liaison Bureau of Libya (Foreign Minister) al-'Ubaydi gave a luncheon in honour of Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen. Heads of diplomatic missions in Ankara, ministers and government dignataries attended the lunch.

Libyan Foreign Minister al-'Ubaydi in his speech at the lunch praised Turkey's role in assisting at the development projects of Libya, where about 42 Turkish firms with more than 70,000 workers are taking active part.

He condemned all acts of terrorism, kidnappings, hijackings, etc but he exempted Palestinian struggle which the Palestinian (?Arabs are) fighting for a just cause. We have openly supported our Palestinian brothers and we will continue to do so, he said.

Libyan foreign minister accused Israel for its continuous attacks at Lebanon and singled out Israel as the (?cause) of instability at the Middle East region. He also condemned the United States for siding with Israel and called all the countries of the region to take a firm stand in condemning Israeli attacks. "We believe all Moslem countries will be with us in supporting the rights of our brothers in Palestine" he said.

Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen in return said during their talks earlier in the day they had the opportunity of reviewing the Middle East situation and Arab-Israeli conflict.

Stressing that Turkish-Libyan relations were developing within the frame principles set by Ataturk, "we firmly believe. that the relations between our countries will rest on stronger foundations for the benefit of our nations" Turkmen concluded. Libyan Foreign Minister is expected to meet with Deputy Premier Turgut Ozal later today, and to leave for Istanbul, where he will stay until May 31.

EVREN RECEIVES BULGARIAN TRANSPORTATION MINISTER

TA281634 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 28 May 81

[Text] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren received [Bulgarian] Transportation Minister Vasil Tsanov at the Cankaya Mansion at 1730. According to a statement made by the press and public relations secretariat of the head of state's office, Tsanov presented General Evren with a message from Bulgarian State Council Chairman Todor Zhivkov referring to bilateral relations and expressing best wishes. Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk was also present at the meeting.

Before calling on General Evren, Tsanov was received by the Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu. In a statement during the meeting, Ulusu said that Turkish-Bulgarian relations are continuously developing. Noting that the two countries are involved in joint activities in the fields of trade, tourism, energy and transportation, Ulusu said that the government wishes to include the fields of industry and agriculture to this list. Tsanov said that one of the greatest desires of Bulgaria is to further develop relations with Turkey.

Tsanov visited Trabzon this morning. Speaking in Trabzon, Tsanov said that when certain port facilities are completed in Trabzon services can begin within 3 months. He added that if the Turkish-Iranian transit route is brought up to standards, transit transportation can be speeded up. A trade protocol is expected to be signed between Turkey and Bulgaria tomorrow.

BENELUX DELEGATION BEGINS TALKS ON VISA ISSUE

TA271533 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1505 GMT 27 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 27 May (AA)--Negotiations between Turkey and Benelux countries on visa issue started today in Ankara.

The delegation headed by Mr Stutterheim of the Netherlands is composed of two delegates from Belgium two from the Netherlands and one from Luxembourg. Negotiations will continue for two days.

Visa Requirements Eased

TA281925 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 28 May 81

[Text] The visa requirements imposed by the Benelux countries, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg, on Turkish citizens have been eased. The visa talks between Turkey and the Benelux countries that began in Ankara yesterday have been concluded. At the end of the talks, the parties involved reached a unity of view concerning various principles regulating the visa requirements.

According to a statement issued by the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General, as of now Turkish visitors to these countries will be able to receive multiple entry visas for the duration of a year, provided they present their residence permits. Turkish businessmen and Turks employed in international transport will also be able to obtain one-year visas. Turkish citizens who wish to travel to the Benelux countries may apply to the consulates of these countries at any given country to obtain their visas. Turkish citizens who wish to visit relatives in or who wish to travel for touristic purposes to the Benelux countries will be able to obtain at most 3-month visas, provided they fulfill conditions required by the Benelux countries.

The Turkish and Benelux delegations also decided to meet again in 6 months to review the visa issue. The Benelux countries imposed the visa requirement on Turkish citizens on 1 November 1980.

TALKS WITH SOVIETS ON ISKENDERUN PLANT END

TA281631 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 28 May 81

[Text] The Turkish-Soviet talks on the full capacity functioning of the Isknederun iron and steel installations have been concluded in Ankara. A program on the work to be undertaken has been prepared during the talks. In addition, a consensus has been reached on purchasing equipment from the Soviet Union in exchange for iron and steel products. The Iskanderun iron and steel installations are producing under capacity due to various technical obstacles and due to difficulties encountered in the transportation of iron ore. The Soviet delegation that left for Istanbul after the talks ended in Ankara will leave Turkey tomorrow.

GUNAYDIN COMMENTS ON GREEK CYPRIOT ELECTIONS

NC290644 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 26 May 81 p 12

[Resat Akar report from Nicosia]

[Text] The parliamentary elections, which were held in the Greek Cypriot sector of Cyprus the day before yesterday, have been won by the party of Glavkos Kliridhis, who is known as a moderate, peace-loving politician. Kliridhis' party has won the highest number of votes with the Communist Party, AKEL, securing the next highest votes. Kiprianou's party has suffered a great defeat, obtaining only 20 percent of the votes.

Political observers say that Kliridhis' victory will have a positive affect on the bilateral talks being conducted with the Turkish Cypriots and that it will expedite the settlement of the Cyprus dispute. These observers interpret Kiprianou's defeat as the beginning of a return to common sense by the Greek Cypriots. The British press has reported that Turkey, Greece and the United States have agreed on a new 5-point Cyprus plan. The plan envisages the formation of a biregional confederation, the reduction of the Turkish Cypriot territory to 28 percent, the return of the refugees and the return of Varosha to the Greek Cypriot side. The demarcation of the borders will be carried out after an agreement has been reached on the territorial issue, but part of Famagusta will be placed under UN control before this is done.

When Glavkos Kliridhis learned the result of the elections, he said: "The DISI has won because the people have voted for those who love justice. The parliament will represent the will of the people."

Greek Cypriot leader Spiros Kiprianou, whose party has, according to the votes that have been counted so far, been holding the third position, has stated that the president is, to a great extent, independent of the parliament except in matters relating to the budget.

UNION LEADERS TRIAL BEGINS; PRISON SENTENCES ASKED

TA281758 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 28 May 81

[Text] The trial of Abdullah Basturk, leader of the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK], and his 149 colleagues, who are charged with participating in an illegal strike with a political aim and violating the orders of the martial law command, has started at the Second Military Court of the Istanbul Martial Law Command.

Reading the indictment at the trial, the prosecutor said that in their statements published in the confederation's organ on 25 and 28 April 1980, Basturk and the other members of the DISK administrative council encouraged and provoked the workers to participate in an illegal strike with political aims. The military prosecutor noted that following the statement made by the DISK administrative council, certain workers affiliated with DISK held an illegal political strike in the form of a slowdown or a work stoppage on 30 April 1980. In the last part of his indictment, the prosecutor demanded prison sentences ranging from 1 to 6 months for Basturk and the other administrative council members for violating the orders of the martial law command and for the other 143 suspects on the grounds that they participated in an illegal political strike and violating the orders of the command. Then the suspects were interrogated. The trial will be continued tomorrow.

APPEALS COURT APPROVES TERRORIST DEATH SENTENCE

TA281755 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 28 May 81

[Text] The Council of Offices of the Supreme Court of Military Appeals has approved the death sentence for Ahmet Erhan. Erhan, who killed rightist Mehmet Kilic by laying an ambush in Istanbul on 1 August 1978, was sentenced to death by the Istanbul Martial Law Command First Military Court.

The death sentence that was earlier repealed by the Supreme Court of Military Appeals was approved by the Council of Offices of the Supreme Court of Military Appeals upon the objection of the public prosecutor's office.

VOTCP CRITICIZES U.S. DEFENSE DELEGATION VISIT

TA221146 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 22 May 81

[Station commentary: "No to U.S. Aggressive Units"]

[Text] Dear listeners: The Pentagon sent a delegation to our country immediately after the NATO meeting. A U.S. delegation headed by the person in charge of international security affairs arrived in Ankara--an important stopover in its tour that included Oman, Saudi Arabia, Egypt, Jordan and Israel.

The head of the U.S. delegation claimed that the so-called joint interests of Turkey and the United States would be discussed during the meetings [with Turkish officials]. Defense Minister Bayulken, on the other hand, said: Certain technical issues will be discussed. However, the purpose f this visit is evident. It consists of applying pressure on Turkey to defend U.S. interests in the Near and Middle East and intensifying U.S. pressure and blackmail.

As will be recalled, the expansion of NATO's sphere of influence was approved in principle through decisions made during the recent NATO meeting. However, it was decided to support the U.S. moves in the Near East on the basis of various countries' bilateral agreements with the United States and through bilateral discussions and not through an international NATO unit to be established now.

Turkey has signed a bilateral slavery agreement with the United States. Especially the secret appendices of this agreement concerning the method of implementation include provisions endangering national security and interests and eliminating national independence. Now the U.S. Government is pressuring Turkey on the strength of this agreement and its provisions and the NATO decisions.

The extent of the tension in the region is obvious. On the one hand, Israel--which is being supported by imperialists--is preparing to divide Lebanon, attack Syria and cause another war in the region. On the other hand, the United States is moving ships from the Indian Ocean into the Mediterranean. On the same days, NATO's Mediterranean maneuvers are being held with the participation of Turkey as well. What will the future of our country--which is situated in the center of all these threats--be in such an atmosphere?

Dear listeners, the stand of the junta government on this matter is not open and clear. The imperialist press reports, on the one hand, that Foreign Minister Turkmen secretly promised the United States that it can use its bases in military operations against Syria, Iraq and Iran. Turkmen says: We cannot assume responsibility beyond NATO. The defense minister is reiterating the same arguments. However, the pressure is being applied on the basis of the bilateral slavery agreement. The Pentagon is now imposing endless conditions on Turkey and pressuring it on the strength of this secret agreement, which enslaves our country to imperialism and whose contents are not known to our people.

In its article published in May entitled "No to the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force," the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] organ, ATILIM, notes that through ambiguous statements, the government is stepping on shaky ground. In the same article, ATILIM refers to the bilateral slavery agreement and notes that this agreement grants the imperialists the right to use our soil unconditionally. ATILIM also stresses that NATO membership constitutes an oppression for our people and our country. The enraged Pentagon generals, who have vowed to set the world afire, are taking advantage of this oppression and staging a show of force in Ankara immediately after the 19 May anniversary and plotting schemes to drag our country into their dirty affairs.

The most fervent and genuine defenders of national independence, democracy and international peace are currently being pressured, investigated and arrested. There are attempts to stifle--under conditions of military dictatorship--the voices of the leaders and members of class unions, democratic mass organizations and associations and of various deputies who are opposed to the bilateral slavery agreement, to the NATO oppression and to being dragged into imperialist adventures. However, many European governments are now easily opposing numerous impositions by the United States and NATO on the grounds that their people are not approving. It is seen that the people and the democratic forces are the sole defenders of national sovereignty and independence. The attempts to crush and silence these forces benefit the most reactionary, pro-American and collaborationist circles internally, and the U.S. administration and the ringleaders of NATO externally. It is particularly necessary not to forget that our country could at any moment be faced with a fait accompli at a time when imperialists are planning--through Israel--to attack our neighbor Syria and when provocative maneuvers are being held in the Mediterranean with the participation of Turkey as well. It is not sufficient to merely remember. It is also necessary to enhance the unity of action against imperialist pressure and internal reactionary attacks.

The TCP demonstrates, through evidence, that Turkey cannot be a real independent country if it remains a member of NATO. The TCP calls on all the national democratic forces to unite in action and assume their duty to prevent the country from becoming a slave to NATO decisions and our soil from being used in the service of imperialism, and to disallow U.S. aggressive units.

COMMUNIST LEADER CONGRATULATES FINNISH COMMUNISTS

TA230808 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 23 May 81

[Congratulatory message by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen to the 19th Finnish Communist Party Congress--read by announcer]

[Text] To the 19th Finnish Communist Party [SKP] Congress, dear comrades: On behalf of all Turkish communists, our country's working class and toilers, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee extends its revolutionary struggle greetings to the friendly SKP's 19th Congress.

As the leading party of the Finnish working class, your party has played a significant part in the struggle for peace, democracy, social progress and for the interests of the people and toilers. The Finnish Communists have made a notable effort to safeguard [global] peace and to promote friendly relations among the peoples.

Engaged in a difficult struggle since 12 September in a climate of military dictatorship, the TCP has worked to establish the united front of all national democratic forces in a bid to eliminate the pressure of imperialists on our country, to put an end to the exploitation of the monopolies, to weaken the positions of the most reactionary forces within and outside the military junta and to advance in the path of democracy.

Our party believes that it is imperative to repulse the aggressive and adventurous policies of the imperialists, to curb the arms race, and to safeguard international security in solving all problems both at home and in the world. That is why the concrete peace proposals raised at the podium of the 26th CPSU Congress are of such a vital importance.

The TCP as well as the SKP are linked as brothers due to a common cause of struggle and internationalist relations. The TCP wishes great success to the 19th SKP Congress. With our communist greetings.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General I. Bilen, 22 May 1981

IRAQI OIL MINISTER MEETS WITH CHANCELLOR

JN292149 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1900 GMT 29 May 81

[Text] Vienna, 29 May (INA)--At a meeting here today, Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky gave Tayih 'Abd al-Karim, Revolution Command Council [RCC] member and oil minister, a message addressed to President Saddam Husayn dealing with relations between Austria and Iraq. During the meeting, Chancellor Kreisky praised Iraq's stand on various international issues, particularly the situation in the Arab region.

The RCC member conveyed President Saddam Husayn's greetings to the Austrian chancellor and Iraq's wish to expand cooperation with Austria in various fields. During the meeting, viewpoints were exchanged on several international issues of common interest, particularly the Arab-Zionist conflict and the situation in Lebanon. The RCC member briefed the Austrian chancellor on the latest developments in the Iraqi-Iranian war and the Tehran rulers' continued rejection of the peaceful efforts to stop their aggressive war against Iraq.

[Text] Vienna, 31 May (INA)--Iraq and Austria today signed the general minutes of the fourth session of the Iraqi-Austrian joint committee on technical and economic cooperation. The minutes were signed by Tayih 'Abd al-Karim, Revolution Command Council member, oil minister and head of the Iraqi side on the committee, and Josef Staribacher, Austrian commerce, trade and industry minister and head of the Austrian side on the committee. The minutes cover the expansion of bilateral cooperation in the sphere of industry, the oil industry, trade, agriculture, irrigation, housing, tourism and culture.

'ARAFAT TO ATTEND SOCIALIST YOUTH FESTIVAL

AU291618 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 28 May 81 p 2

[Text] Together with a PLO delegation, PLO head Yasir 'Arafat will come to Vienna to attend the International Socialist Youth Festival from 5 to 9 June. This was announced yesterday by Josef Cap, chairman of the socialist youth, at a press conference. According to Cap, this is the first time that the International Socialist Youth Festival has been open to liberation movements. Apart from the PLO, representatives of liberation movements from El Salvador, Nicaragua and many other Latin American countries, as well as SWAPO from Africa, are expected in Vienna. At the same time, contact with young representatives of the oppositon in the CEMA countries in the Eastern bloc is fostered; thus, members of the Polish trade union movement "Solidarity" will come to Vienna. The socialist youth of Austria plan to get together PLO representatives and critical opposition forces from Israel for a dialogue in Vienna.

Over 10,000 participants are expected at the festival. The biggest delegation comes from the FRG, then come Scandinavia, Italy, France and Spain. In many places in Vienna, for instance in communal buildings, in the City Hall square and in squares of the city of Vienna, political events will be linked with cultural events.

[A report on the same subject published in Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German on 29 May 81 on page 2 notes: "One of the main subjects of the festival will be a discussion on U.S. foreign policy. The main points here are the interventions of the United States in Latin America and the intention of the Reagan administration to make Europe the battlefield of possible nuclear conflicts."]

PLO REPRESENTATIVE ASSASSINATED IN BRUSSELS

LD010830 Brussels Domestic Service in French 0800 GMT 1 Jun 81

[Summary] The PLO representative in Belgium, Na'im Khadir, was assassinated on a Brussels street this morning. This has just been announced in a report by the AGENCE BELGA. Na'im Khadir was on his usual way to work at the PLO office on Franklin Roosevelt Avenue at about 0900 when he was gunned down by five large caliber bullets. AGENCE BELGA adds that Na'im Khadir died while being taken to a hospital. The killer's car, bearing German registration plates, was pursued by a passing motorist who was later joined by police cars. It is understood that the assassin was finally detained at Ixelles. No information is yet known about his identity.

Killer Still at Large

LD011005 Brussels Domestic Service in French 0900 GMT 1 Jun 81

[Summary] Police all over Belgium are now actively seeking the killer of Na'im Khadir. the PLO representative in Belgium shot in the street this morning as he was heading for the PLO office on Franklin Roosevelt Avenue. The assassin's car was found abandoned after a chase, along with his overcoat and umbrella. The car bore West German number plates. A good description of the assassin has been obtained by the police from witnesses to the killing. A photofit picture has been circulated to all police forces.

FRENCH MISSILES PURCHASED BY CHILE HELD AT AIRPORT

LD291149 Paris LE MONDE in French 24-25 May 81 p 24

[Text] French Crotale missiles with their launchers, purchased by Chile, are apparently at present being held at Brussels airport, according to a report in the Belgian daily LE SOIR for Friday, 22 May. Late this Saturday morning it was not possible to find out whether Paris had intervened to prevent the departure of those weapons.

Usually it is up to the buyer, in this case the Chilean Government, to collect and transport the equipment purchased. Therefore, these arms, duly purchased by Santiago, theoretically no longer concern the French Government.

According to LE SOIR, Matra Thomson CSF, the exporting company, decided after Mr Mitterrand's election to send missiles via Belgium. They apparently arrived in Brussels Sunday, 17 May.

Belgian law makes it possible to decree an embargo not only on arms produced in the country but also those which are sent via its territory. Such an embargo has been imposed on Chile. The missiles and their launchers have therefore remained in the open air at the airport, according to LE SOIR.

The Chilean Air Force had ordered those missiles in April to be used for defending its bases against low-flying enemy aircraft.

NETHERLANDS

NRC HANDELSBLAD REACTION TO UK DEFENSE POSTURE

LD291225 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 21 May 81 p 7

[Editorial: "British Defense"]

[Text] British Prime Minister Thatcher has in common with U.S. President Reagan the fact that she talks tough, especially where East-West relations are concerned. An appreciable increase in British military power was therefore one of her most important election promises.

But in contrast to the United States, the United Kingdom no longer possesses the economic basis required for realizing such an intention. Moreover, the drastic economic program of the Conservative government in Britain has not achieved the expected turnabout. The consequence is that even more cuts must be made in public expenditure, and in so doing no exception can be made for military expenditure.

This is now creating the inevitable political difficulties for Mrs Thatcher. And those difficulties are being created not so much by the socialist opposition, but above all by her own Conservative rank and file. Many people there are still devoted to military power in its traditional forms; their hearts have remained in the days of old, when the British fleet not only sailed but dominated the oceans.

British Secretary of State for Defense Pym was one of the first casualties of the evolution of Conservative military policy. At the beginning of this year he received another post in the cabinet after he refused to carry out his treasury colleague's instructions to cancel 500 million pounds in defense spending.

This week a harsher fate befell the junior minister Speed--the man concerned with naval affairs at the Defense Ministry. Prime Minister Thatcher dismissed him after he said in a speech, without consultation with his minister, that he would oppose any cutback of the navy within the context of the government's retrenchment plans. Within 10 years, according to TIMES, the Ministry of Defense would have to save 8 billion pounds and the navy would have to account for 3/4 of that. With his remarks Speed called to arms not only the Conservative rank and file but also a number of senior military personnel, and that greatly distressed Prime Minister Thatcher.

In the Commons debate on military policy, Secretary of State for Defense Nott has now denied that drastic cuts in the published defense estimates are intended. His argument was to the effect that it is a matter of changes in the composition of the armed forces, not of cuts. He also emphasized that the British Government will keep to its defense plans, including the introduction of the expensive Trident missiles.

But the Conservative government has been unable to really reassure its rank and file in the Commons. The impression persists that drastic measures are imminent, which will especially affect the navy. The Conservative government has stopped short of a real confrontation with the rank and file. The lesson to be learned is that the British Conservative Government's tone could sound more realistic as a result of a little modesty. Going along with traditionalist and frequently also sentimental feelings could lead next time to more than muttering.

NEWSPAPER VIEWS POSTELECTION PROSPECTS, JOCKEYING

[Own correspondent report]

[Excerpts] The Hague--The incumbent Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA) and People's Party for Freedom and Democracy (VVD) ruling coalition has lost its small majority in the Second Chamber. The leftwing parties, from the Democrats of 66 (D'66) to the Communist Party of the Netherlands, together did not win a majority of the 150 seats in the Chamber. Thus yesterday's election ended in a sort of stalemate, which could open the way for a broadly based cabinet embracing the CDA, the Labor Party (PVDA) and D'66, which gained most ground on Tuesday.

It seems from the first reactions of Prime Minister Van Agt, who headed the list of CDA candidates, that he is little inclined to continue the present coalition with the help of the small Christian parties such as the Political Reformed Party (SGP), the Reformed Political Union (GPV) and the Reformational Political Federation (RPF), which for the first time won a surprising two seats in the Chamber. Van Agt said that the most important aspect of the election result was that the CDA had emerged as the largest party. What was needed was a stable and courageous program, Van Agt said, repeating one of his campaign statements, and anyone who wanted to cooperate in achieving this was welcome. Van Agt also made it clear that in his opinion the CDA as the largest party in the Second Chamber would have to play a leading role in the talks on government formati ..

PVDA Chairman Den Uyl admitted as much. He said that it was not unreasonable, given the election result, that the CDA should begin the government formation process. Yesterday evening there was all manner of speculation that D'66 leader Jan Terlouw, as the election's biggest winner, would be the first to be asked to attempt to form a government.

For this reason, the various parliamentary parties will meet today to decide on what line to take in the next few days. Queen Beatrix will receive the party leaders for the first time to hear their advice, after she has consulted Deputy Chairman of the Council of State Scholten (who is also acting in this function for the first time) and First Chamber Chairman Thurlings.

The voters did not make things easy for these advisers yesterday. The election result indicates no clear choice between "right" and "left." The ruling coalition lost a few seats and therefore its majority. The progressive parties won a few seats, but not enough to have a majority.

Because of this result, first reactions made frequent mention of the possibility of a government consisting of the CDA, PVDA and D'66 as a cabinet which would be able to count on broad support. Den Uyl said that there would have to be a new program and a new government, but that the PVDA's first preference, a leftwing majority cabinet, is impossible given the election result. The PVDA will negotiate with the CDA, however, but not about a continuation of the present cabinet's policies. D'66 leader Terlouw was more optimistic about the chances of realizing his party's primary wish--a coalition of D'66, PVDA and CDA.

Yesterday evening Prime Minister Van Agt said that he was prepared for talks with the PVDA and mentioned the "Albeda plan" as a basis for talks. This 10-point plan drawn up by the present social affairs minister was launched in the latter half of last week in the CDA election campaign.

WILLY BRANDT SET TO VISIT USSR 30 JUNE-2 JULY

LD011302 Hamburg DPA in German 1219 GMT 1 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 1 Jun (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt will visit Moscow from 30 June to 2 July at the invitation of Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev. SPD Executive spokesman Wolfgang [name indistinct] said today in Bonn that the visit is for a comprehensive exchange of views on the international situation, including above all, questions on European security. Other topics will be the relations between industrial and developing countries.

Brandt will be accompanied by the chairman of the foreign policy working group of the SPD Bundestag Parliamentary Group, Peter Coterier. It is Brandt's first visit to the USSR since the summer of 1975.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Criticism

DW020757 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 2 Jun 81 p 12

[Commentary signed ME.: "Without a Mandate"]

[Text] It will be interesting in the next few days to observe whether the federal chancellor will indicate agreement or even pleasure with the fact that SPD Chairman Brandt--who is simultaneously the president of the Socialist International--will go to Moscow in late June on disarmament matters. The urgently renewed and now gladly accepted Soviet invitation to Brandt has the clearly recognizable aim of introducing him in the game as the most accessible person to Soviet arms control plans. It can only benefit Moscow if the Soviet state and party chief's visit to Bonn is prepared generally and not by the responsible Foreign Office, but by the Brandt office in party headquarters and by the SPD leftwing. In addition, the so-called "independent commission for disarmament and security" of the Swedish Socialist Palme will go to Moscow for the same reason, and 2 days prior to this, Brandt's aide Egon Bahr also will go there--switchmen without authority or mission. It is more and more surprising what people have talks with the Soviet superpower on Western security policy without having a mandate, talks which could have a prejudicing function. In a political sense, they are traveling scholars who mess up the work of responsible and elected officials in an inadmissible way.

SPD'S EPPLER STATES OBJECTIONS TO COUNTERARMAMENT

DW010900 Frankfurt Hessischer Rundfunk Network in German 1600 GMT 30 May 81

[Excerpts from correspondent Tauber interview with SPD Presidium member Erhard Eppler; place not specified--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] You have a skeptical attitude toward the NATO dual decision on counterarmament. The chancellor announced the other day that he stands or falls with this decision. Do you propose to overthrow the chancellor along with the dual decision at the SPD congress next spring?

[Answer] I cannot prevent anyone from uttering such threats. Willy Brandt probably is right when he says: In most cases, only those people resign who don't talk about it. Klose is one of them, just as I was one of them at the time, and so are others. But you see, if it is my conviction that the deployment of medium-range missiles in the Federal Republic, which indeed can destroy Moscow, Leningrad or Kiev but cannot reach the SS-20 against which they are officially deployed--because the SS-20 missiles are deployed far too deep into Russian territory--actually threatens the life of our people, that this deployment makes the destruction of the Federal Republic much more likely or even definite in a conflict, then it is necessary in all probability to push certain tactical considerations into the background--if the existence of the entire nation is at stake.

[Question] By saying that, you practically imply that the Americans intend to gain a strategic advantage for themselves by deploying tactical medium-range missiles in Europe.

[Answer] Why, of course. It is the first strategic advantage to destroy the Soviet centers from non-U.S. territory. And this for the Russians means about the same as the attempt to deploy missiles in Cuba--which had the capability of hitting the centers, at least the southern centers, of the United States from outside the Soviet Union, that is, from Cuba--meant for the Americans.

GENSCHER, NEWSPAPERS DISCUSS FDP CONGRESS

Foreign Minister's Interview

DW011010 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1700 GMT 31 May 81

[Otto Diepholz interview with Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FDP chairman and federal foreign minister, on the FDP congress, recorded in Cologne]

[Text] [Question] Mr Genscher, the chancellor and you, his vice chancellor and foreign minister, in very short sequence threatened to resign. Is this Federal Government still capable of action within and predictable without?

[Answer] As far as I am concerned, it is absolutely necessary for a politician bearing governmental responsibility to make it clear where the limits of his leeway of movement are. After all, the questions concerning security policy are fundamental questions of the existence of the whole country. This is what I stated here. And the decisions of the party congress show that the party backs me. It supports me in security policy. This makes the policy of the Federal Government clear, unequivocable and predictable. And quite clearly, it spells backing for the government and thus also for its action capability.

[Question] Does this also mean that you can successfully counteract the financial dilemma? What you demanded here, after all, was that tangible incisions be made in the social benefits as well. Couldn't this become the breaking point of this coalition?

[Answer] I didn't rule out anything, which means that subsidies and laws on benefits must be part of it. This is always justifiable provided that the burdens are equally distributed and nobody is spared. This is necessary in the interest of the solidity of our state finances. I am sure that the chancellor and the finance minister also see it that way. Hence, I don't doubt that we will jointly cope with this great task.

Press Comments

DW011231 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 1 Jun 81

[From the press review]

[Text] BREMER NACHRICHTEN writes: The FDP can be content with its party congress. It obviously seems to be, even although it sometimes looked at Friday's counterarmament debate as if two different parties were debating with each other. Genscher, who was acting in a most engaged way, prevailed in the end. But after all, some 30 percent of the delegates didn't follow him. The counterarmament debate, led with great seriousness and competence, demonstrated one more thing--Genscher dominates over the liberals as never before. He has also the full confidence of the leftists, despite all the contradiction with regard to some factual problems. Seen that way, Cologne was a Genscher party congress.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU states: Genscher's victory in Cologne probably would not have been that great had he not threatened with the big stick. The foreign minister demonstrated at the party congress that he is sensitive and that he fears becoming not credible. There is hardly another way to explain his preparedness to link his own political fate with the Reagan administration, whose preparedness to negotiate with the Soviet Union he guarantees. Genscher has gone farther than the chancellor, but both have linked the Bonn coalition's chance to survive with Washington, with the American preparedness to steer the policy of strength in time on a more careful course. Schmidt and Genscher, who depend on each other, have run a great risk.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG maintains: The delegates of the Cologne FDP congress have withstood the temptation to disperse their factual discussions although this opportunity has come up more than once. When the security policy issue came up, the chairman himself avoided a too wide controversy over the question whether nuclear medium-range missiles should be deployed in the future at the sea and not on the land, because he fully realized that this discussion was about to become a burden for him as a discussion partner of the Western alliance. The other problem, how the next federal budget could be saved financially, is considered by Genscher as a main point for the political action of the FDP. The party congress, however, shied away from a wide discussion of the issue, knowing that it would provoke not only quarrels but maybe already call the coalition into question.

DIE WELT writes: The stage management on which any party congress is based this time strangled a topic which sometime may well plunge the liberals, who have grown self-aware since 5 October last year, into new distress. Barely 2 hours were allowed to discuss the coalition issue which was triggered by the homemade chaos of Berlin's FDP. Nevertheless, some outlines for future conflicts took shape. Genscher and the Bonn party leadership have long ceased talking of the historical alliancee. The term social-liberal no longer possesses the emotional content of ethically founded balance. It has been reduced to a factual abbreviation of everyday politics. Impassionately, the formula is: We at any rate will not be the ones by which the coalition will fail. By and large there is no call indeed for any enthusiasm over this.

The editorial of FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE says: The two-faced character of the FDP guarantees that this coalition will stay. With some restrictions whose conditions will not occur, Genscher has avowed the coalition and Baum has supplemented this with something that is even harder to interpret. What these members of the government part of the party say--who differ by type and ambition--expresses the power ratio. One-third of the party, which identifies itself by its opposition to counterarmament just as it identifies itself by a turn to the minorities regardless of the budget redemption, also would not accept any coalition turn to the conservatives, as Genscher also called them in delimiting contempt. The FDP is a social-liberal party all the way down the line. Granted, the left part of the party allows those governing to govern, yet it also lets them know that this tolerance is revocable and has its price.

The duesseldorf RHEINISCHE POST notes: Anybody expecting from the Cologne congress of the Free Democrats any signal, however weak, about the foreseeable end of the Bonn coalition was mistaken. The FDP on its part is wary of terminating the coalition with the Social Democrats. It is too afraid of the reputation of the turncoat or dropout for that. Besides, to this day, a large segment of the members wants this coalition and no other.

The Munster WESTFAELISCHE NACHRICHTEN stresses: In view of the present structure of the delegates, a desertion of the FDR from the decrepit Bonn crisis colaition seems hardly possible even if the party leadership were capable of proving the total governing incapability of its partner. What remains is the same big question marks which have been standing around the Free Democrats for years: What political liberalism means in the present era, what the FDP really is, and what is supposed to make the FDP unmistakable.

Essen's NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG writes: In a veritably pleading way, Secretary General Verheugen gave the delegates of the Cologne party congress an appeal for coalition discipline to take home with them. He hammered home to them reliability and credibility as the virtues which now are in greatest demand. Nobody should allow any doubt to crop up about the FDP's loyalty of contract toward its partner, the SPD. Surely, such admonitions were not superfluous at all. The topic of the coalition, which the FDP leadership largely managed to keep out of the debate at the Cologne congress, will be brought up time and again. The quarrels of the Free Democrats in the laender surely will not break up the Bonn coalition, but neither will they strengthen it.

REPORTAGE ON SIXTH COMMUNIST PARTY CONGRESS

PZPR Delegate Address

LD300958 Hamburg DPA in German 0935 GMT 30 May 81

[Text] Hannover, 30 May (DPA)--The PZPR has decided in favor of "a political solution" to the internal crisis in Poland and intends to continue this way, consistently "rejecting the attacks by the opponents of socialism in our country and from abroad." This was underlined by Gerard Gabrys, member of the PZPR Politburo and head of the Polish delegation, at the Sixth DKP party congress in Hannover this morning.

In a speech to the 850 delegates at the party congress, which opened yesterday and continues until Sunday afternoon, Gabrys said that "mistakes in the realization of the country's development policy in the 70's" and "contempt for the economic principles of socialism and Leninist standards in the life of the party" were the causes for the "complicated social and economic situation" in Poland.

The party executive will be elected at the DKP party congress this afternoon at a closed session. Election results will be announced tomorrow morning. Also taking place tomorrow will be discussion on about the approximately 100 motions, the most important of which are directed against the deployment of new U.S. missiles in the FRG.

MSZMP's Gyenes Speech

LD301234 Budapest MTI in English 1013 GMT 30 May 81

[Text] Hannover, 29 May (MTI)--Andras Gyenes, secretary of the Central Committee of the HSWP [Hungarian Socialist Workers Party] and head of the attending Hungarian party delegation made a contribution at the Sixth Congress of the Deutsche Kommunistische Partie (DKP), Friday. He stressed:

Under the present conditions it is especially important that the communists should act responsibly, in unity, and jointly with the other peace-loving forces. The increased aggressivity of the anti-detente forces, the attempts to provoke fresh cycles of the arms race seriously jeopardize what all countries with differing social systems have achieved through joint action for the benefit of the peace and security of the peoples of Europe.

The Hungarian People's Republic is an advocate of peaceful coexistence. With all our strength we strive to safeguard the achievements of detente, to avert another phase of armament, and ward off the mounting threat of a nuclear world war. Our recommendations have that aim, and that aim is served by our conduct of affairs. The basis of our policies is that the peoples need peace, and that these days, detente is the sole secure road to future. In agreement with the other allied socialist countries, the Hungarian People's Republic is of the view that even the most involved problems can be solved through negotiations and on the basis of equal security and mutual benefits.

We regard of major importance, we welcomed and support the proposals for negotiations and the major initiatives put forward in the 26th CPSU Congress. We, on our part, do all that we can to sustain the constructive dialogue, further detente and halt the arms race, Andras Gyenes said.

He added: Relations between the HSWP and the DKP are good. We have regular contacts. There is a need for that, too, for our parties strive for shared objectives, though under differing conditions. The regular comradely exchanges of views help us learn about each other's practice--results, successes, difficulties and concerns--the experiences which, provided they are applied wisely and with a due consideration to the national peculiarities, can serve well our common cause, concluded Andras Gyenes.

Romanian Address

AU301910 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1820 GMT 30 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 30 May (AGERPRES)--Taking the floor within the Sixth Congress of the German Communist Party, Cornelia Filipas, member of the Political Executive Committee of the Central Committee of the RCP addressed on behalf of the Central Committee of the RCP, of its general secretary, Nicolae Ceausescu, a cordial salute to the participants.

Revealing with satisfaction the positive course of the relations of friendship and collaboration between the RCP and the German Communist Party, grounded on the principles of fully equal rights, mutual trust and esteem, the steady development of the Romanian-West German cooperation on the economic, political, cultural-scientific and other planes, she expressed the conviction that the collaboration and solidarity between the two parties will steadily develop in the interests of the two parties and peoples, of the cause of peace, security, socialism, independence, and collaboration in Europe and throughout the world.

In dialectical connection with the peaceful, constructive goals she aims at on an internal plane, Romania--the speaker said--works for developing her relations with all the socialist states, with the developing countries, with the nonaligned states, with all the countries of the world irrespective of their social system. She grounds all these relations on the strict observance and application of the universally valid principles of national independence and sovereignty, equality of rights, noninterference in domestic affairs and mutual advantage.

As a European country, Romania pays special attention to the achievement of security and cooperation in Europe, carrying on an intense activity for the successful conclusion of the Madrid meeting, for the ensurance of the continuity of the meeting, the organization of a conference on disarmament and confidence-building, the expansion of contacts and collaboration in Europe. Romania considers that at present the crucial question is the cessation of the arms race, of nuclear armings in particular, that jeopardise ever more the existence of the entire mankind.

The RCP--Cornelia Filipas highlighted--consistently works for strengthening solidarity and collaboration with all the communist and workers parties, for achieving a new type unity based on the principles of mutual esteem and respect, on each party's right to independently elaborate its political line, tactics and revolutionary strategy in keeping with the specific sociopolitical and historical conditions in its own country.

Romanian Delegate Meets Mies

AU301854 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1815 GMT 30 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 30 May (AGERPRES)--Cornelia Filipas, member of the Political Executive Committee of the Central Committee of the RCP, who represents the RCP at the Sixth Congress of the German Communist Party, was received by Herbert Mies, chairman of the DKP.

On the occasion, they emphasized the good relations of collaboration and solidarity between the Romanian Communist Party and the German Communist Party, reaffirming the mutual wish to further develop and strengthen them, in the interests of both peoples, of the cause of socialism and peace.

The interview, which proceeded in a cordial atmosphere, occasioned an exchange of salutes between the RCP general secretary and the chairman of the German Communist Party.

[Excerpts] A large group of old antifascist German fighters has held an emotional meeting in Hannover, Federal Republic of Germany, with the delegations of the Soviet Union, GDR and Cuba that are participating in the Sixth Congress of the German Communist Party.

Raul Valdes Vivo, member of the Communist Party of Cuban Central Committee and chief of the Cuban delegation to the Sixth Congress of the German Communist Party, spoke at the fraternal meeting to great those present. Valdes Vivo noted that imperialism finds itself like Adolf Hitler in his bunker during the last days of his cruel domination.

DPA TO COOPERATE WITH JOINT ECONOMIC SERVICES

LD011307 Hamburg DPA in German 0606 GMT 1 Jun 81

[Text] Hamburg (DPA/VWD)--DPA and the VEREINIGTE WIRTSCHAFTDIENSTE (VWD) are from today, Monday, producing a joint economic service for the media. It will be broadcast under the dateline "DPA/VWD" as part of the DPA news service.

Both agencies' network of correspondents will supply the information and reports for the DPA/VWD economic service. This economic part of the DPA basic service will be edited in a newly-created economic department in DPA's Hamburg headquarters.

The aim of this closer cooperation between DPA and VWD is to supply the media with economic coverage which does justice to the importance of this field and which aids understanding of economic events by means of clear and precise reporting.

DEFENSE MINISTRY: NUCLEAR TESTS WILL RESUME

LD021012 Paris Domestic Service in French 1000 GMT 2 Jun 81.

[Text] France is to resume its nuclear tests. This was announced in a statement issued by the Ministry of Defense a short time ago. Minister Charles Hernu says that after due study of the files on the matter and after consultation with the president of the republic, nuclear tests will indeed be carried out. Only a few days ago, the same Charles Hernu announced the temporary suspension of these tests in the Pacific Ocean.

CABINET ISSUES COMMUNIQUE AFTER 27 MAY MEETING

LD010947 Paris LE MONDE in French 29 May 81 p 6

[Excerpts] The president of the republic called a cabinet meeting at the Elysee Palace on 27 May. At the end of the meeting, the following communique was issued:

Decentralization

The minister for the interior and decentralization informed the cabinet of the government's intention to pass a law as soon as possible--as soon as the new National Assembly is elected--fixing the broad outlines of a complete decentralization of the French administration. This law will be followed by other laws and decrees aimed at liberating the communes, departments and regions from local, departmental and ministerial controls, to enable local democracy to flourish and to make the French people adult and responsible citizens.

With this aim, the government is planning the prompt repeal of most of the 12 decrees issued by the previous government on 13 February 1981. These decrees, which were portrayed as measures increasing the regions' power, instead had the effect of limiting the regional councils' opportunity to take action. They will be replaced by other decrees which will make it possible to make use of the full scope of the 1972 law. The same will apply to the ministerial circulars which limited the 1972 law's sphere of application, until new legislation comes into force.

Economic and Social Measures

The premier presented the timetable for drawing up the economic and social measures which will be examined at cabinet meetings on 3 and 10 June and the initial measures which can be taken immediately.

1--Measures to help the lowest-paid workers, families and old people.

In keeping with the pledges made by the president of the republic, the minimum wage will be increased at the 3 June cabinet meeting. The minister of labor has called a meeting of the higher commission on collective agreements for 2 June to consult the two sides of industry on this point. At the same cabinet meeting, the level of family allowances, the amount of housing allowance, the minimum old age pension and the allowance for handicapped adults will be very substantially increased. The administrative councils of the National Family Allowance Fund and the National Employees' Old Age Pension Insurance Fund will, of course, first be consulted.

In addition to these immediate measures, the government will move resolutely toward far-reaching social reforms. The first of these reforms relates to the retirement age. The age at which the workers are able to retire on a full pension will be reduced to 60. This very important measure will be an essential social advance which all the French people expect. Of course workers will not be forced to retire at 60 but they will be able to choose between continuing to work and retiring in financially satisfactory conditions.

A series of bills will be submitted to parliament by the government with a view to attaining this objective gradually. A bill also will be submitted to stop social contributions being levied on retired people.

At the same time, provision must be made for workers who want a transitional period, preventing an abrupt move from work to retirement. Simultaneously, steps will be taken to limit the possibility of people being paid in addition to their retirement pensions. Although this is acceptable in the case of low income groups, it is excessive and unjust in other cases.

2--Measures to help young people.

Young people's entry into the work force after school has, for many, become an obstacle race and a period of uncertainty and instability. The economic crisis and the scale of unemployment aren't the only factors responsible for this situation. The present organization of the education system, professional training, career guidance services and job centers and the provisions which have existed for several years to help people find their first job are not part of an overall view but an accumulation of provisions which are sometimes conflicting and often temporary.

Coordination between school, training and youth employment (and national service) must be given detailed thought based on a lucid analysis of the real situation now facing young people.

The government will give an official (Mr Bertrand Schwartz) the job of making a study. This study will be carried out with the aid of the competent departments and its object will be to propose legislative, statutory, financial and pedagogic provisions to be taken to improve the insertion of young people between the ages of 16 and 21 into professional life and to coordinate all the public services concerned to ensure that young people of this age are never doomed to unemployment or to excessively precarious jobs and that they have the opportunity to acquire education and training which will enable them to adapt to the coming technological changes and enjoy the means of directing their working lives toward jobs which correspond to their activities.

3--Measures to encourage saving.

The premier asked the minister of the economy and finances to carry out technical studies on setting up a new savings mechanism. The objective is to enable people to make long term savings deposits while being protected against the positive robbery which has resulted in the past from interests rates much lower than the inflation rates. The savings mechanism thus created not only reflects a desire for social justice but will also make it possible to effect the expansion of savings necessary to finance the French economy.

4--Measures are to be studied immediately, particularly regarding farms and small and medium-sized enterprises which are encountering special difficulties at the present time.

International Situation

The external relations minister presented a report on the international situation. He also described the way in which the election of the president of the republic has been received abroad, particularly within the EEC.

The president of the republic stated: "Continuity in the state--an essential principle for the sound running of international relations--means that the government will pride itself on assuming and carrying out the international pledges to which France has subscribed."

This provision in no way prejudices the lines of our future policy. The talks we will have with our foreign partners with a view to developing our trade will be based on our own ideas. The president of the republic informed the cabinet of his talks with the FRG chancellor.

LE FIGARO DEEMS GOVERNMENT PROMISES 'INCONSISTENT'

LD011525 Paris LE FIGARO in French 27 May 81 p 1

[Max Clos editorial: "Ink Cloud"]

[Text] Mauroy's government is causing confusion and concern, because it is not doing anything. Instead, its ministers are talking. They are issuing promises and endless reassurances. Everyone is entitled to them--the workers, of course, the trade unionists, the small and medium enterprises, elderly people, veterans and immigrants... Joxe assures us that we must not fear the nationalizations because they are the best means of "developing economic and technological potentials." The franc will recover. Savers are quite wrong to worry. The proportion of electricity produced by nuclear power will be decreased but production nevertheless will increase. Working hours will be reduced but growth will be stimulated. Workers and employers too are being encouraged to be enterprising, at the same time as the former are being promised the right to almost total control over the latter. This all seems inconsistent.

Of course, it can be explained by the elections. For the PS, as for the parties of the outgoing majority, there is only one thing that counts because it governs the future--to win the 14-21 June general elections. Hence stems the elementary reasoning that by doing nothing at all the government can reassure both its supporters and its adversaries the former because honeyed words maintain and extend the "state of grace" and the latter to convince them that there was no justification for the misgivings expressed by Mitterrand's adversaries before 10 May.

After all, this might be considered fair fighting. But it could be much more serious. And one is entitled to wonder whether this government's apparent paralysis has deeper and more complex causes.

Here are two questions:

1--What degree of efficiency can be attained by an excessively large cabinet composed of heterogeneous elements representing opposed currents of thought, if not ideologies? What is there in common among Rocard, Chevenement and Delors? How could such dissimilar people formulate a government doctrine?

2--The present of the republic was elected on a political, economic and social platform promising a change in society. This election program was presented in a document entitled the "Socialist Blueprint for France in the Eighties," which describes in detail everything that will have to be done. The PS apologists assure us now that this document musn't be interpreted literally and that it is merely a collection of general ideas. This explanation is inadequate. In the confusion surrounding the present government's actions, it remains our only point of reference.

The question is: Does the new regime intend to implement the "Socialist blueprint" or is it trying, deceitfully and secretly, like a cuttlefish behind its cloud of ink, to convince the voters otherwise? Until 22 June.

CHIRAC WARNS AGAINST ELECTION VICTORY

LD011521 Paris LE MONDE in French 28 May 81 p 10

[Text] After holding a meeting with the RPR candidates for the parliamentary elections, Jacques Chirac held a press conference on Tuesday, 26 May. In his preliminary statement, he said: "The French people have taken the risk of a fundamental change in our society.... The French people therefore wanted change, but what kind of change?

"Do they want a total upheaval in our society as the PS plan and the PCF program propose? Do they want a change or policy as I have been proposing for weeks--a change of policy aimed at more freedom for the economy and more justice and independence for France? Do the French people want this change to come about with political stability and continuity of action while respecting French diversity or do they want it to lead to a situation full of uncertainty and danger? That is what is at stake in the campaign for the parliamentary election. It isn't the third round of the presidential election. The president of the republic has been elected. The French people's will must be respected and the new president must exercise his prerogatives as laid down in the Constitution."

The former RPR chairman then gave his view on what he regards as the consequences of the presidential election and the new government's formation.

"It is been just 2 weeks since the presidential election was held. It is been 4 days since the new government took office. I don't want to put anybody in the dock but just look at the results that can be seen already. The Bank of France has spent considerable sums to support the franc--sums which represent a good proportion of our currency reserves. To this must be added the debts to the central banks which intervened in the framework of the European monetary agreements. As a result of the falling franc, our trade deficit is increasing. Imports are costing more and exports bringing in less. The press itself is informing us that major export contracts are being called into question by our clients in a number of foreign countries. The anxiety felt by savers has led to a drop in stocks and shares, which constitute a considerable loss in individuals' property. In France and other countries, people are wondering about the stability of our public finances, our balance of trade and our economy's very future.

"These are the results after a few days and yet the ruling Socialists still have not made any decisions aside from a dramatic increase in interest rates. What will happen when they begin to implement their program? What is the nature of that program? This is the essential point.

The time has come to dispel the ambiguity which undoubtedly characterized the PS campaign and, moreover, the government's initial statements. The PS has clearly defined what it calls it's 'plan.' It must now clearly tell the French people whether it intends to implement it.

The mayor of Paris called on the government and the PS to say very clearly whether they intend "to implement their plan." "Will France be the only Western country to have Communists in the government, with all the effects that will have on its credibility and its rank in the free world? Clear answers are needed on those points too," he added.

Chirac then listed some points from the program he put forward during the presidential campaign. He stated: "The International Monetary system must be reformed. I proposed that for 2 months during the presidential campaign and I didn't think that I would be proved right so quickly. In less than 1 week, the Bank of France's interest rate has increased from 12 percent to 22 percent. Who will be able to invest under those conditions? Which enterprise or individual could do so? Who will be able to borrow to buy goods or property? How will big, medium-sized or small enterprises be able to ensure employment?"

The mayor of Paris concluded: "If we start implementing the Socialist plan, we will be preparing to call into question our economic and social structures. It isn't possible to get away with anything. The real situation is stronger than ideologies. The measures planned in the Socialist plan clearly would destroy the economic machine. The composition of the new assembly must make it possible to avert the danger at any cost.

"France isn't a laboratory in which apprentices can safely follow their conflicting inspirations and carry out experiments whose effects, as history proves, would be irreversible. You can understand why I am worried for France today. You also can understand why I am determined to fight, with a broad spirit of union, for a new majority in the assembly, which will guarantee progress and freedom for our country. Finally, you can understand why I have confidence in the French people's decision in view of their good sense."

An "Accident"

Chirac then answered questions and pointed out that, before Mitterrand's election, "there was some balance in France at the sociopolitical level. The public authorities, president of the republic, government and National Assembly majority belonged to the same school of thought, whatever nuances or wider differences there might be among its members. On the one hand, municipal power was largely in the opposition's hands, department power was largely in opposition hands and trade union and hence industrial power was largely in the opposition's control. Today, that balance is about to be broken completely and we are in dnager of finding a situation in the future, unless we are careful, in which all public power and a very large section of the forces I have just mentioned will be controlled exclusively by those who represent 52 percent of the French people. It would be a very serious threat to the balance of our democracy...if all those powers were placed in such uncertain and inexperienced hands."

Chirac expressed the hope that "the government will stop taking refuge in the cushioned comfort of its present artistic vagueness" and stated: "Nobody knows what the PS intends to do. It tends to say anything and then contradict itself."

The mayor of Paris expressed the view that the government "has been placed in office to reassure and lull the French people, probably to indulge in a little demagoguery and to create the most favorable climate possible for the elections."

Chirac is "not sure that France has swung to the left." The 10 May election strikes him as being an "accident." He expressed the view that "things should proceed normally" if the outgoing majority is returned in the parliamentary elections. "I don't see how the existence of a nonsocialist and noncommunist majority would involve a constitutional danger... Our attachment to the institutions is such that we aren't in the least likely to be drawn into some constitutional crisis when all the necessary means of avoiding such a confrontation will be available."

PCF'S LEROY COMMENTS ON COMMUNIST MINISTERS

LD291457 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 27 May 81 p 3

[Report on France-Inter interview with PCF Politburo member Roland Leroy on 26 May]

[Text] PCF Politburo member and L'HUMANITE editor Roland Leroy was the guest on France-Inter's "Let's Talk Straight" program yesterday morning. The main parts of the interview:

First, the France-Inter journalist asked Roland Leroy whether "it is really necessary fr there to be Communist ministers in the government."

L'HUMANITE's editor stated: "We have for a long time been prepared to take part in government and to assume our responsibilities at all levels of national life. The important question lies in the last sentence of your question, namely, is it really necessary for there to be Communist ministers and I think the answer is yes.

If the undertaking is to succeed, the Communists must be involved in it. Some 4.5 million voters who voted Communist in the first round transferred their votes to Francois Mitterrand. The Communists made a decisive contribution to the victory. As experience has shown, this contribution is vital if change is to be brought about. Working men and women often have and often still place their trust in the Communists, entrust them with responsibilities in the enterprises and in local councils. After the liberation, Communist ministers were involved in the job of national reconstruction. Experience has shown that the Communists must take their share of responsibility if a policy favorable to the working classes is to be implemented."

Leroy was then questioned on the content of the conversation between Georges Marchais and Francois Mitterrand. Leroy explained: "That was a conversation between the president of the republic and PRC Secretary General Georges Marchais. Georges Marchais said what he should and ought to have said after that meeting. The important thing is that the meeting took place. Most important is that the workers have the opportunity to confirm the 10 May victory with the coming parliamentary elections and to vote clearly in favor of the Communists assuming their responsibilities...."

The discussion then turned to the possibility of an agreement with the PS. On this point, Leroy asserted: "We stated our position at the Central Committee meeting. In L'HUMANITE 2 days ago, he published two pages--we produced 8 million copies--which we are now distributing in the country and which contain our proposals on the policy to be implemented. This is the basis on which our candidates will fight the parliamentary election. You are familiar with the PCF's long term program, the 131 proposals which the Communist candidate put forward in the presidential election. We know that it is impossible to do everything immediately but the workers expect change and expect that change to be implemented. We have put forward extremely clear proposals on full employment, a policy for better life, in other words, a minimum wage of Fr3,300, a 35-hour work week and so forth...a policy of freedom, one which ensures that France has its rightful place in the world, a policy which promotes peace and disarmament. I think that negotiations will be initiated in a few days' time."

The journalist recalled Socialist official Jean Poperen's remarks about the possibility of the PS having a majority of seats in the National Assembly. He asked Leroy if the PCP will win back all the Communist voters on 14 June or if they will be tempted to vote Socialist.

Leroy replied: "I don't want to argue with Jean Poperen. I heard what he said yesterday and I would like to make an observation in that connection. I believe that the parliamentary elections will be decisive. The right has been defeated. It is picking up the pieces and trying to arrange them in anticipation of its defeat in the parliamentary election which it knows is absolutely inevitable. That is the main factor in the parliamentary election. There is another. I listened carefully to what Poperen said yesterday. He has ambitions for his party and that is legitimate. It is equally legitimate to think it is possible if not desirable for a single party to have an absolute majority in the National Assembly. That calls for a few remarks. France is traditionally the home of pluralism, it would not be a good thing for one party in France to hold all the levers of power."

Finally, the journalist claimed that the outgoing majority is using virtually the same argument in saying that there must not be a Socialist-Communist majority.

Leroy then explained: "That is an entirely different question. What you describe as the outgoing majority is the right, which has been soundly defeated, which, as I said, is picking up the pieces and merely arranging them in anticipation of its defeat which it knows is absolutely inevitable. But there were 4.5 million Communist votes in the first round of the presidential election. There are many working men and women who have an opinion and who want change. The new presidential majority is diverse, its unity stems from its diversity and that diversity must be reflected in parliament and also in the government."

COMPUTER STUDY PREDICTS 270 LEFTIST DEPUTIES

LD011527 Paris LE MONDE in French 27 May 81 p 11

[Text] The National Assembly parliamentary computer department has carried out a study aimed at predicting the composition of the next assembly on the basis of the results of the March 1978 parliamentary election and the 1981 presidential election. Only mainland France's results were examined, the distribution of overseas seats being regarded as exactly the same as before the dissolution.

The authors of this study adopted two prior hypotheses:

1--The political conditions were presumed not to have changed since 1978, in other words, joint candidates for the outgoing majority and, on the left, rivalry in the first round and automatic standing down in favor of the candidate in the best position.

2--The results of the polls on 26 April and 10 May 1981 are indicative of a lasting change among the voters. In addition, they ruled out the assumption that the results of the parliamentary elections on 14 and 21 June will be identical to those obtained in the presidential election, first because of the different nature of the elections. The method chosen is, therefore, more complex. It takes into account the results of the second round of the 1974 presidential election.

To determine which constituencies are likely to swing from the majority to the left, they added (or subtracted) the increase (or fall) in percentage points of votes obtained by Mitterrand, first in 1974 (second round) and then in 1981 (second round). To determine whether a Communist or Socialist candidate is likely to be elected, it was assumed that the Communist candidate will be ahead of his rival if Marchais' score was higher than Mitterrand's on 26 April. If that was not the case, the Socialist candidate was only placed in the lead if the gap between Marchais and Mitterrand was higher than 3 points and if the gap observed in the first round of the 1978 election was not too obviously unfavorable to the Socialist representative.

Finally, the special strength of some outgoing deputies in some constituencies was taken into account.

From this study, it emerges that the existing parliamentary majority (comprising 155 RPR, 119 UDF and 13 independent deputies) would lose 64 seats (RPR 36, UDF 27 and independents 1) to the PS or the Left Radicals. The outgoing Socialist group would have 117 members. The Communist group, which had 86 deputies in the outgoing assembly, would lose 30 members to the PS but would win 2 seats from the PRP, 1 from the UDF and 1 from the PS (in the 12th Pas-de-Calais constituency where the outgoing deputy is Henri Darras). The PS might lose 1 seat--the one won by Noel Ravassard in a by-election in the third Ain constituency.

Taking account of the fact that one independent deputy, Roch Piduot (New Calendonia-1), usually voted with the leftwing deputies in the last parliament and that the distribution of overseas seats was not taken into account in the study, the left would have 270 seats; the PCF would have 60 of those instead of 86; and the PS 209 instead of 117.

LE MONDE ON LEFTWING GAULLISTS ELECTION STANCE

LD221423 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 May 81 p 9

["A.P." report]

[Text] A leftwing Gaullists national committee, formed on Monday, 18 May, appointed Pierre Dabezies, chairman of the Progressive Republican's Federation, as leader of a delegation to hold political discussions with the PS and other presidential majority parties. Leo Hamon, chairman of the Republican and Socialist Initiative Group, and Jacques Blache, secretary general of the Progressive Gaullists' Federation, were appointed his deputies. This delegation was to contact Michel Jobert by Tuesday, 19 May.

In addition to the movements mentioned above, the national committee is to include--provided the various movements now under its control agree--Jacques Debu-Bridel, chairman of the Labor Democratic Union, Hugo Bonneville from the Progressive Gaullists' Union, Jean Bigot, representative of the Young People's Union for Progress, Louis Fichez from the 18 June Club, and Jacques Thibaut, representative of journalists formerly working for NOTRE REPUBLIQUE.

Philippe Decharture, secretary general of the Movement for Socialism Through Participation, who also has supported Mitterrand, was present at the meeting but refused to be associated with the decisions adopted. According to him, the leftwing Gaullists' efforts look like "an electoral ploy and could, therefore, fail." Some other leftwing Gaullists' movements, including Dominique Gallet's Gaullist and Prospects Club, remain close to the RPR.

The members of the newly-formed national committee soon agreed that they should unite to make the Socialists pay attention to them. They also agreed that they should join the new presidential majority irrespective of the stance they adopted before the first presidential election. In fact, prior to 26 April, some of them supported either Debre (Young People's Union for Progress and Leo Hamon, for instance) or Chirac (including Dabezies). All of them, however, came out in support of Mitterrand prior to 10 May. They also declared that they could not become the left wing of the Gaullist party in view of the agreement concluded by Jacques Chirac and Jean Lecanuet with respect to parliamentary elections since they believe that, as a result, the former Giscardian adversary has become the RPR's future ally.

The dislike which leftwing Gaullists have not only for Giscardism but also for Lecanuet is shared both by RPR activists and Jacques Chirac's electorate. In any case, RPR deputies have become aware since 10 May that such a feeling prevails in their constituencies and they wonder how many of Chirac's supporters will vote for Union for the New Majority [UNM] candidates in the parliamentary elections, considering that it believed that more than 800,000 people who voted for the mayor of Paris on 26 April cast their votes for Mitterrand a fortnight later.

The leftwing Gaullists who now support the new president hope to be able to channel and attract a proportion of that undecided electorate, but they will be unable to achieve this unless they are offered some promising parliamentary constituencies. And this seems unlikely at present.

Relations With Jobert

The leftwing Gaullists' National Committee also has considered the problem of its relations with Michel Jobert, insofar as it has become apparent to them that the Socialist leaders would like Georges Pompidou's former foreign minister to become a sort of coordinator of a non-Socialist left center. In any event, Jobert is aware of the difficulties attached to this task, which he has compared with "bringing together the ancient Greek republics."

For their part, the leftwing Gaullists are resolved not to make any humiliating concessions to the chairman of the Movement of Democrats. While paying tribute to his personal qualities and his strong personality, they maintain that he isn't at all cut out for the role of unifier. Nor do they want to be absorbed by any center, even a left center, whose notion, they assert, has never tallied with any Gaullist concept and within whose framework they would have to coexist with, among others, the left radicals.

So the small leftwing Gaullist groups which have never so far been able to unite could well become a gathering of original personalities rather than a coherent political force. General de Gaulle said of them: "Good bottles but hard to come by."

So Pierre Dabezies' efforts in this sphere could to some extent deprive Jacques Chirac of leftwing support without necessarily ensuring Gaullist support for Mitterrand.

CHEYSSON TALKS WITH MEXICAN FOREIGN SECRETARY

FL291945 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 1915 GMT 29 May 81

[Text] Paris, 29 May (NOTIMEX)--Mexican Foreign Secretary Jorge Castaneda held talks followed by a luncheon today with his French counterpart, Claude Cheysson, at the Quai d'Orsay. Castaneda is the first Latin American with ministerial rank to meet with the new French foreign minister.

The two ministers discussed preparations for the North-South summit to be held in October in Cancun, Mexico. Recent statements by Francois Mitterrand's personal envoy to Brazil indicate that France attaches particular importance to this meeting.

At the conclusion of the Castaneda-Cheysson talks, a French Foreign Ministry spokesman remarked that the talks had been "straightforward and warm" and that both foreign ministers had shown particular interest in problems of development and in the North-South summit. The spokesman also confirmed that France will take part in the conference of foreign ministers to be held in early August in Mexico prior to the Cancun summit. The spokesman said, however, that he did not know if Cheysson himself would participate. He added that Cheysson and Castaneda had discussed French-Mexican relations in very general terms since the two countries had signed an important global agreement on economic cooperation in February.

Castaneda will return to Mexico Saturday or Sunday. He arrived in Paris on a private visit from Moscow, where he also discussed the North-South dialogue and the situation in Central America and the Caribbean with his Soviet counterpart, Andrey Gromyko, and Council Chairman Nikolay Tikhonov.

GOVERNMENT DEPLORES KILLING OF PLO REPRESENTATIVE

NC011116 Paris AFP in English 1106 GMT 1 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 1 Jun (AFP)--The French Government "deeply deplores" today's killing of Palestine Liberation Organisation representative Na'im Khadir in Brussels, a Foreign Ministry statement said.

Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson was "particularly affected," as he had established "personal relations" with Khadir when he was in Brussels as European Economic Community commissioner, the statement added.

PRESIDENT APPROVES MINOR CABINET RESHUFFLE

NC011242 Paris AFP in English 1219 GMT 1 Jun 81

[Text] Lisbon, 1 June (AFP)--Portuguese President Antonio Ramalho Eanes today approved a minor government reshuffle proposed by Prime Minister Francisco Pinto Balsemao and involving the departure of two ministers. Blamed on conflicts within the cabinet and the centre-right majority, the changes result in an addition to the powers of the prime minister, who now has general responsibility for administrative reform and information.

Administrative Reform Minister Eusebio Marques de Carvalho (independent) goes, following a dispute with Finance Minister Joau Antonio de Morais Leitao over an increase in the number of civil servants. His department is now headed by Secretary of State Jose Robin de Andrade.

Minister For the Quality of Life Augusto Ferreira do Amaral, the only monarchist in the cabinet--which otherwise is shared between Social Democrats and Christian Democrats--is replaced by another member of his party, Joao Serra de Moura. The new minister loses his responsibility for information, which now passes to the prime minister, a former journalist who managed the weekly EXPRESSO.

Mr Pinto Balsemao justified this change by the need to solve basic problems in the industry, part of which was nationalised in the 1974 revolution and is in constant deficit. "Publishing firms dependent financially on the state cannot be independent," he has said. The prime minister denied a report yesterday that Foreign Minister Andre Goncalves had asked him to abolish the Ministry for European Integration, which is negotiating Portugal's entry into the European Economic Community.

[In a 30 May report before approval of the cabinet reshuffle, Paris AFP in English at 2210 GMT cited a 30 May "communique from the cabinet" as stating that the change would involve the "ministers of administrative reform and environment and various secretaries of state, including Luis Fontoura, in charge of social communications information."]

CHIEF OF STAFF DISCUSSES MADEIRA BASE QUESTION

LD280901 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 21 May 81 p 1

[Text] Armed Forces Chief of Staff General Melo Egidio stated in Funchal yesterday that there are no negotiations with NATO on the construction of an air-sea base on the island of Porto Santo. What there is, he said, are studies aimed at improvements in Porto Santo's infrastructures--tasks which are within the province of the Armed Forces General Staff.

Melo Egidio, who yesterday began a 2-day visit to the Autonomous Region of Madiera, stated that there has been a good deal of speculation about the matter on the part of some sections of the news media. The studies currently taking place, he added, citing the premier of the regional government, with whom he held talks, concern improvements which "are of great interest to the archipelago."

The armed forces chief of staff said that the decision on the construction of an air-sea base on Porto Santo is a political problem, and as such will have to be resolved by the government, with the Armed Forces General Staff to expressing purely military opinions.

Asked about the delimitation of powers of the armed forces chief of staff--a matter which began to be debated in the assembly of the republic yesterday--Melo Egidio stated that there is no definition of powers, due to the fact that until very recently the president held the two posts simultaneously, but it is becoming necessary to enact appropriate legislation.

OFFICIALS MEET TRANSITING CUBAN FOREIGN MINISTER

FL271447 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1405 GMT 27 May 81

[Text] Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca today arrived in the Portuguese capital in transit to Cyprus. In the Cypriot capital, the Cuban foreign minister will participate in a meeting of the nonaligned ministerial group created to help find a solution to the Iran-Iraq conflict.

Malmierca told PRENSA LATINA that the results of efforts to date, as well as steps to be taken to fulfill agreements adopted by the nonaligned conference held in India, will be examined during the meeting.

On arrival in Lisbon, Malmierca was met at the airport by officials of the Portuguese Foreign Ministry, who conveyed greetings from Portugal's Foreign Minister Andre Goncalves Pereira, who was unable to come to the air terminal.

SOARES PREDICTS FRS CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSALS

LD010755 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 May 81 p 3

[Text] The Republican and Socialist Front [FRS] will present within 2 or 3 days its plan for revision of the constitution, which has been virtually completed, Mario Soares stated yesterday at the conclusion of a meeting with Magalhaes Mota and Lopes Cardoso.

The Socialist Party [PS] secretary general described the joint plan of the three parties comprising the front--the Independent Social Democratic Association [ASDI], PS and Union of the Left for Socialist Democracy--for the revision of the constitution as "a virtual certainty." The ASDI, which has presented its own plan for constitutional revision, again stated yesterday through Magalhaes Mota its intention to withdraw its plan if the three parties reach agreement.

Yesterday's meeting of the three FRS leaders--Magalhaes Mota was representing Sousa Franco, who was busy with his work as a university lecturer--preceded a meeting scheduled for today of constitutional experts from the three parties, who will undertake the adjustments necessary for drafting the joint plan.

Mario Soares declined to reveal the remaining points of disagreement, referring journalists to a press conference next week during which the issue will be discussed. However, he stated that the problems on which there is not yet explicit agreement "are not insurmountable." With respect to possible agreement with the Democratic Alliance parties on revision of the constitution, Mario Soares reiterated the stance which he has been upholding: "We do not wish to block the process of revising the constitution, but it is clear that we are not prepared to give in to all demands."

The PS secretary general also reaffirmed the "FRS' firm opposition to the present government and parliamentary majority," which will be manifested not only in parliament but "in all fields of political and social struggle." He declined to reveal what kind of activities the front intends to conduct in the struggle against the government and the Democratic Alliance. "That," he said, "will also be the subject of discussion with the news media at the proper moment."

NICARAGUA'S D'ESCOTO ARRIVES IN COPENHAGEN

FL291324 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 1219 GMT 29 May 81

[Text] Copenhagen, 29 May (NOTIMEX)--Nicaragua's Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto today arrived in Copenhagen on a 3-day visit to Denmark. The Nicaraguan minister will meet several times with his Danish counterpart, Kueld Olesen, with whom he will mainly discuss the political situation in Central America. One other point to be taken up will be the tense situation in El Salvador, Danish Foreign Ministry officials commented. As a neighboring state, Nicaragua is interested in a peaceful solution to the conflict in El Salvador. Likewise, it was announced in this capital that there is great interest in seeing Denmark cooperate in the peace process in that country.

During the talks, the two ministers will discuss the amount of aid Denmark will grant Nicaragua for development. The possibility of increasing trade will also be discussed.

It was revealed that last year Denmark exported goods amounting to 16.7 million krones ($300,000) to Nicaragua and imported from that country products amounting to 11.5 million krones ($1.6 million).

D'Escoto will also be received by Queen Margrethe II. The Nicaraguan minister visited Sweden last week on his tour of Europe.

NICARAGUAN FOREIGN MINISTER ENDS UNOFFICIAL VISIT

PA301316 Managua International Service in Spanish 0030 GMT 30 May 81

[Text] Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto today ended an unofficial visit to Finland. It was learned from Helsinki that the minister met with Mauno Koivisto, prime minister of Finland; Paavo Vayrynen, minister of foreign affairs; and Kalevi Sorsa, chairman of the parliamentary committee for foreign affairs. In the course of the visit, matters related to cooperation between the two countries were discussed, as well as the extension of economic aid to Nicaragua. From Finland d'Escoto left for Denmark, where he is to be received today by Queen Margrethe II.

NORWEGIAN PRIME MINISTER MEETS WITH PRESIDENT

LD012315 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0930 GMT 1 Jun 81

[Text] The Norwegian prime minister, Gro Harlem Brundtland, who is visiting Finland, today had discussions with President Urho Kekkonen and the speaker of the Diet, Johannes Virolainen. At present a luncheon given by the president in honor of the prime minister is underway. In the afternoon, Prime Minister Brundtland will have talks with her host, Mauno Koivisto. The talks will deal with international issues, the European security conference, East-West relations and the political and economic situation in the north. Prime Minister Brundtland will return home tomorrow morning.

ADDRESSES BY DELEGATES TO COMMUNIST PARTY CONGRESS

MSZMP's Havasi

AU271632 Budapest NEPSZABADSAG in Hungarian 24 May 81 p 3

[Report on speech by Ferenc Havasi, MSZMP [Hungarian Socialist Workers Party] Politburo member and Central Committee secretary, at the 23 May session of the 19th Congress of the Finnish Communist Party in Helsinki]

[Text] To begin with, Ferenc Havasi conveyed our party's greetings, noting that in addition to internatinal solidarity, kinsmanlike friendship between the two peoples, which is rooted in remote history, is the reason for our interest in the congress.

Your party's activity can be expected to be of great international interest, he continued, because it is one of the few communist parties which most consistently represent the interests of the worker class and the working people under peculiar conditions, as a member of a capitalist country's multiparty government. We are convinced that the Finnish Communists' militant experience and Marxist-Leninist policy enrich the theory and practice of the country's and international class struggle.

Our own experiences have persuaded us to pay attention to the work and struggle of all fraternal parties. Each communist party is the party of its nation as well, and has the right of decision and the responsibility toward its own people and the international workers movement.

On the basis of lessons and warnings learned over several decades while shouldering the responsibility of governing, the Hungarian Communists are well aware what a complex and responsible task it is to coordinate the interests of the workers class, the peasantry, the intelligentsia and various strata. It is one of the most important historical experiences of the MSZMP that the communists can only fulfill their great and difficult task and mission if the party's program is clear and progressive and if it acts in concert, no matter how prolonged and laborious a debate precedes the reaching of decisions. Therefore, one must struggle against any view and practice that harms unity, whether it is rightist opportunism prepared to compromise, or dogmatism that disparages the masses and disregards life's realities.

Ferenc Havasi then noted that our party's 12th congress in the spring confirmed our main political line, which means that our party pursues a frank and open policy and strives daily to consolidate the confidence it enjoys among the masses. Together with the people, we continue the work of building socialism and even in more complex and difficult foreign political and world economic conditions we are doing a great deal to make the life of the people better and more meaningful. Our objectives are realistic and we are convinced that in attaining them we can safely rely on the community of the socialist countries, the international communist movement and the solidarity of the world progressive forces.

Speaking about the international situation, he stressed: It is an important task of all of us to oppose international reaction's endeavors against peace and progress in the manner laid down at the 26th CPSU Congress. Prerequisites for peaceful creative work can be ensured only by maintaining and expanding the detente process and asserting the principles of the Budapest appeal that burgeoned into the Helsinki spirit.

In conclusion, Ferenc Havasi spoke of the traditionally close relations between the MSZMP and the Finnish Communist Party.

SED's Inge Lange

AU292110 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 25 May 81 p 5

[ND report: "Securing peace is the most important, vital question"]

[Text] Helsinki (ND)--Inge Lange, candidate member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee, leader of the SED delegation, stated in her greetings address at the 19th Congress of the Finnish Communist Party:

On behalf of the SED Central Committee and its general secretary, Erich Honecker, our delegation conveys to your party congress and to all members of the Finnish Communist Party the most heartfelt and fraternal militant greetings of the more than 2 million GDR communists.

Sixty Years of Glorious Tradition of the Party

Our recognition and respect are due to the 60-year old traditions of your party. Despite persecution and oppression by reaction and monopoly capital, it has become a recognized force of your country and is making a great contribution to the action unity of the communist and workers parties.

Your party has earned great credit in the struggle for defending the working people's social interests, for implementing Finland's active peace policy, for the proposal submitted by President Kekkonen for creating an atomic free zone in northern Europe, and for friendly relations with the Soviet Union and the other socialist states including our GDR.

It is with deep satisfaction that we note the agreement between your and our party congresses on proclaiming the preservation of peace as the most vital issue. In view of the acute danger which threatens our continent as a result of the fateful NATO missile decision, there can indeed be no more urgent task for us communists.

Our party congress explicitly decided to combine constructive steps for securing peace with whatever is necessary for state security and the military defense of our socialist fatherland. We fully and entirely support the great new peace offensive of the 26th CPSU Congress. Thus you may rest assured, comrades: We in the GDR are aware of the great responsibility as an outpost of socialism and peace in the heart of Europe.

Joint Actions Are More Necessary Than Ever

The experiences of the 70's prove that imperialism cannot turn back the wheel of history. Real socialism, the communist and national-revolutionary movements are today stronger then ever. In inviolable affinity with the Soviet Union, the main force of peace, the socialist community of states cannot be blackmailed even by the confrontation and stepped-up arms policy of the United States and NATO.

At the same time, however, joint actions of communists, socialists, social democrats, Christians and other peace forces are more necessary than ever to forcibly bring about a turn toward disarmament.

Relations between the GDR and the Republic of Finland are a convincing example of how pertinent cooperation promotes the policy of peaceful coexistence.

Consolidating peace primarily requires the comprehensive strengthening of socialism. The 10th SED Congress was guided by this truism when mapping out the forthcoming stretch of the road to further fashion the developed socialist society.

Industrial output, labor productivity and national income are to rise by 5-6 percent annually by 1985, the citizens real incomes will increase more than 4 percent, while the prices for essential goods, rents and rates will remain stable.

At the same time, we regard this policy aimed at the people's well-being as our most important internationalist contribution to securing peace and to supporting the revolutionary forces on our planet.

What we have heard at your party congress here reaffirms that no capitalist country is able to chart such goals for itself. Our plans are realistic despite unfavorable international conditions because the workers class and all working people are supporting the policy of our Marxist-Leninist party with their hearts and minds, because our country's citizens realize that good work pays off for every individual, because the party and people are closely linked and because our ability has increased to keep pace with the stormy development of the productive forces of our times.

Thanks to our socialist conditions, rationalization and microelectronics never turn against the people's interests and no one loses his job. Quite the contrary, the combination of the benefits of socialism with the scientific-technical revolution helps us to secure the achieved living standard and to further develop it gradually.

The Workers' Power Is a Well-Established Fact

Thus the fact remains: We firmly stand on the grounds of Marxism-Leninism and adhere to the laws of the socialist revolution.

This is where we stand: For all time, we stick to the fraternal alliance with the CPSU. We do not want any part of bourgeois ideologists and their lessons. We will not let anybody question the power of the workers and peasants in the GDR. The struggle and experiences of your party, its strategy and tactics for a democratic turn in Finland, for fundamental social transformations and the transition to socialism, are being followed by our party with great interest.

From the bottom of our heart we wish you new successes in implementing the tasks which your party will adopt in order to enhance the fighting strength and the consolidation and unity of the party. May the 19th party congress help to advance the Finnish Communist Party, which is fraternally allied with us, on the road to the victory of the immortal ideas of Marx, Engels and Lenin.

Long live the Communist Party of Finland, the revolutionary vanguard of the Finnish workers class. Long live the close combat community between the communists of the GDR and Finland.

LCY's Stojanovic

AU301530 Belgrade BORBA in Serbo-Croatian 24 May 81 p 2

[Text] Helsinki, 23 May (TANJUG)--The Finnish Communist Party Congress, which began in Helsinki yesterday, continued with a discussion on the introductory reprot submitted by Party Chairman Saarinen and on the draft congress documents.

Nikola Stojanovic, member of the LCY Central Committee Presidium and leader of the LCY delegation, today greeted the 19th Congress of the Finnish Communist Party on behalf of the LCY Central Committee.

"The current complex world situation offers serious reasons for our concern. The hotbeds of crisis are constantly increasing, the arms race is being continued with an undiminished fierceness and many unresolved international economic and political problems are accumulating," Nikola Stojanovic stressed. "The vital interests of all peoples call for an energetic struggle to revive detente as a universal world process, to halt the arms race, to strengthen confidence among countries and peoples, for a peaceful solving of disputes and for equitable international economic and political relations. The movement of nonaligned countries, which plays the exceptionally significant role of an independent and progressive factor in the struggle to remove all causes of international instability and to ensure a lasting peace, is working for these goals."

Independent searches for new forms and roads of struggle for socialism are increasingly, more strongly, being expressed in the workers and progressive movement in the world, the LCY Central Committee message conveyed to the congress by Nikola Stojanovic stresses. At the same time, the need to develop equitable relations among the individual parties on the principles of independence, equality, noninterference in the internal affairs of other parties and responsibility before one's own workers class and people, as well as the need to develop mutual respect, are being confirmed. A consistent respect for these principles and respect for differences can only contribute to promoting cooperation and solidarity in the interest of peace and socialism.

"It is precisely on these principles that the relations between the LCY and the Finnish Communist Party are based and are developing successfully. We are convinced, that these relations will continue to be promoted, thus contributing to a more comprehensive mutual acquaintance and friendship between the peoples of the two countries, the cause of peace and socialism in the world," Nikola Stojanovic stressed.

The LCY message further speaks about the development of socialist self-managing and nonaligned Yugoslavia, and stresses President Tito's exceptional contribution to the creation and development of Yugoslavia and to the development of the League of Communists, something that is also well known outside our country's borders.

HUFVUDSTADSBLADET COMMENTS ON REAGAN POLICIES

LD291049 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 22 May 81 p 2

[Rafael Paro editorial: "Schmidt Visits Reagan"]

[Text] In many respects the Reagan administration in the United States has struck the world with amazement. But perhaps the most amazing thing of all has been that so far at least it has in all seriousness begun to pursue precisely the policies which Ronald Reagan foreshadowed during his election campaign. People are not used to such things. The rhetoric of U.S. election campaigns and the practical policies do not normally coincide to such a large an extent as at present.

What is most worrying is that Ronald Reagan seems to lack a programmatic approach to foreign policy. The President and his men have often returned to the notion that it is important for the United States to act and not simply to react. They want to show strength of purpose. And perhaps the most important thing is to regain the self-confidence lost during the 60's and 70's, perhaps even through armed force if nothing else works.

This strength of purpose has so far won positive support in the United States. Reagan's pretty fantastic economic program, with cuts into welfare programs and increase spending on military objectives, was approved by clear majorities, both in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, in a sort of esctatic atmosphere and out of gratitude for strong new leadership.

The strong and in many respects implacable emphasis that has been applied to foreign policy has had some less usual consequences. Thus it is possible to find in the U.S. press interpretations of Reagan's policies which stress their continuity--that everything which Reagan, Haig and Weinberger are not putting forward is by no means new, but that the guidelines were drawn up in Carter's time. There are two possible explanations of why such interpretations are made--either it is Democrats who want to stress that they were on the right track even before Reagan took over, or it could also be Republicans who to some extent want to modify the impression of toughness given out by the Reagan administration. Traces of such Republican toning down can be found with regard to the U.S. approach to certain central questions in the United Nations.

Another side effect can be seen in a new Chinese news magazine VIEWPOINT. Following an AP report, the magazine writes that, while the Soviet Union is suffering from economic setbacks at home and loss of prestige abroad, the United States is overcoming "the Vietnam disease" and has had its eyes opened to "the threat from the Soviet Union." The United States has launched a military expansion, unique in peacetime, to repulse every possible Soviet threat, and we can expect a new arms race between the superpowers, in the view of the Chinese magazine.

The Chinese reaction is interesting because it could--despite its enthusiasm--be the first sign of rethinking in Beijing. Experience shows that Beijing makes every effort to preserve the balance between the two leading superpowers. If the United States once again becomes the stronger, this would mean new headaches for the Chinese.

However, the West European reaction is considerably more complicated. It is not necessary to go too far back in time to find the two demands which strong bodies of opinion among the U.S. European allies now fear will be satisfied to all too great an extent. The first demand was that the United States should offer a sufficiently credible nuclear umbrella for its allies. The second was that the United States should offer strong leadership in the circle of the industrialized Western democracies. When Reagan now says that he is ready to offer all that is desired, and perhaps more to boot, the European fronts disintegrate.

Opinion in West Germany and the smaller NATO nations is of course divided. But the voices which oppose new nuclear arms in Europe--under Reagan's leadership--are growing ever stronger. The person who has become the victim of the most serious cross-pressure is undoubtedly Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. He seems himself in complete agreement with Washington's aim of first assuring the NATO decision on the deployment of the new medium-range arms in Europe and only then negotiating with the Soviet Union on arms limitation. This position is based on the view that the Soviet Union has military supremacy in Europe, but within Schmidt's own party there is an ever more powerful faction which does not want to be party to such rearmament.

It is possible to see a fairly obvious race aganist time. The Reagan administration and the circles in the other NATO countries which are positive to the idea that "the West must rearm to catch up the East" are obviously unwilling to start disarmament negotiations with the Soviet Union before the West's rearmament has been assured. The resumption of the SALT talks or a decision at the CSCE meeting in Madrid for a European disarmament conference would give West Europeans the feeling that detente was back with us and that rearmament plans could be shelved. NATO's strategists want to avoid this shelving at all costs.

At present, Helmut Schmidt is in the United States. His talks with the U.S. leaders will be of the greatest importance for the future planning of the Western powers' security policy. The results of Schmidt's visit could also be of the utmost importance for the Social Democrats' continued rule in Bonn. If Schmidt does not meet with sufficient understanding, it could happen that because of the growing split within his party Schmidt could be forced to leave the government. The Washington would have a West German Government led by the Christian Democrats with which to negotiate. Nor can the possibility be excluded that the ranks of U.S. Republicans include those who would have nothing against such a solution.

TURKISH AIR VIOLATION REFERRED TO FOREIGN MINISTRY

KHARAVYI COMMENTS ON REAGAN'S CONGRESS REPORT

NC291038 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 29 May 81 p 3

[From the "Views and Comment" column: "The Dishonest U.S. Game"]

[Text] A few days ago, the U.S. President submitted to Congress his regular report on Cyprus. A glance at the text of the report verifies the deception that is hidden behind the whole issue of submitting reports. In the past, the U.S. administration exerted great pressure on Congress to accept the lifting of the arms embargo on Turkey following the Cyprus invasion. Finally it succeeded in its goal. The legislative authority agreed on the lifting of the embargo by a small majority. As a condition for the continuation of the supply of arms to Turkey, Congress stipulated that the United States would work for a Cyprus solution that included the lifting of the faits accomplis resulting from the invasion and respect for the republic's independence and territorial integrity. Congress compelled the U.S. president to submit a bimonthly report on the progress achieved toward this end.

Since then, Washington has sent ample arms to Turkey and the President has submitted his reports regularly. But no substantive progress in settling the Cyprus issue has been achieved. Nevertheless, the President's reports conceal this questionable fact and efforts are being exerted to make the situation look nice. No mention whatsoever has been made on the essence of the problem, which is the invasion, occupation and the use of U.S. arms. On the contrary, as in Mr Reagan's last report, the "pleasant negotiating climate" in the intercommunal talks is being stressed, as if the climate excuses Turkey and the U.S. administration from their tremendous responsibilities. The administration deceives Congress with its smokescreen,and for years Congress has silently accepted this deception, forgetting its resolutions and, in violation of U.S. laws, helping to supply arms to an aggressor who uses them to occupy foreign territories. Thus, Washington also facilitates the consolidation of the occupation and encourages Ankara's intransigence, an obligation that Washington has to curb. This dishonest game verifies that the Cypriots can only expect anti-Cypriot actions from the United States.

The Cyprus Government must not passively accept this Reagan adminstration's deceit against Cyprus.

KKE DENOUNCES GOVERNMENT STAND ON U.S. BASES

NC311454 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 31 May 81 p 1

[Statement issued by the KKE Central Committee Press Office; date not given]

[Text] Continuing to follow the policy of subjugation, the rightwing government will be concluding the agreement on the U.S. bases in a few days before the Chamber of Deputies goes into the summer recess. Thus, the government will fulfill both the instructions and mission it has been entrusted with by its Atlantic masters.

In order to "sugar the pill" of the agreement, which is submissive and dangerous for the people's fate, the government is talking about more favorable terms under which the agreement will be realized. However, the people are not interested about the "terms" under which the bases will remain in our homeland, but they are interested about their final dissolution.

At this decisive time, the democratic forces should express their opposition to the submissive agreement by waging the battle of the united people's mobilization with the target: the U.S. bases of death must go.

With their struggle today and their vote tomorrow, the people will demand the removal of the rightwing. They will overwhelmingly vote for those democratic forces which are resolutely struggling for the final dissolution of the foreign bases.

BRIEFS

SYRIAN MINISTER'S VISIT--Syrian Justice Minister Khalid al-Maliki arrived in Athens this morning at the head of a delegation on a 5-day visit. During their stay they will sign a legal aid agreement between Greece and Syria. The agreement will provide for legal protection for the citizens of the two countries, recognition and implementation of judicial verdicts and the extradition of criminals. Tomorrow, the Syrian justice minister will hold talks with Justice Minister Stamatis and he will also meet with Foreign Minister Mitsotakis. TALKS WITH BULGARIA'S TSANOV RESULT IN PROTOCOL

TA291128 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 29 May 81

[Excerpt] A new economic and technical cooperation protocol between Turkey and Bulgaria has been signed in Ankara. The protocol was signed by Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk on behalf of Turkey and by Bulgarian Transportation Minister Vasil Tsanov on behalf of Bulgaria. According to the protocol, project studies will be conducted between the two countries on the establishment of ferry boat services between the Turkish and Bulgarian Black Sea ports to accomodate Transport International Routier [TIR] vehicles. The protocol also allows the balanced expansion and diversification of trade between Turkey and Bulgaria and envisages the development of relations in the field of banking and the establishment of partnership in marketing and industry construction in other countries. The protocol envisages cooperation in the exploitation of low-quality coal, the construction of medium-sized hydroelectric power stations and mining.

More on Protocol

TA291515 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1450 GMT 29 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 29 May (AA)--Turkish and Bulgarian officials signed in Ankara today a protocol at the end of the sixth meeting of the joint economic committee. The protocol would further develop bilateral cooperation, visiting Bulgarian Minister of Transport and Communications Vasil Tsanov said. Turkish Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk agreed that the protocol would constitute a basis for long-term economic cooperation which would strengthen the economies of both countries to the benefit of regional and world peace.

Under the new protocol, Turkey and Bulgaria will cooperate in the fields of agriculture, trade, forestry, industry, energy, transportation and tourism. Though there had been a certain increase in the volume of bilateral trade, this was relatively small and bilateral trade could be more comprehensive, spreading to hitherto untapped sources, and could be rendered more balanced, the protocol said.

The institutions involved in both countries would increase their exports mutually the protocol said, noting the wish on both sides for increased exchanges between Turkish and Bulgarian businessmen. Turkey would take part in Plovdiv fair and Bulgaria in Izmir international fair. The two sides noted the positive effect on exports of the recently-concluded accord between Turkish Central Bank and its Bulgarian counterpart for the facilitation of banking activities.

The two sides said cooperation developed in the field of energy. They reviewed the May 2 1981 protocol on energy and natural resources and discussed electricity exchange, turning into briquettes of low-grade lignites, development of new energy sources, construction of small-scale hydroelectric centers and cooperation in the field of mining between Eti Bank state corporation, which engages in mining as well as several other activities, and its Bulgarian counterpart.

TRADE MINISTER TELLS PRESS ABOUT IRAQI TALKS

AU021112 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 2 Jun 81 p 7

[Summary] "Iraq is interested in close cooperation with the neutral countries and especially with Austria. Iraq continues to be ready to supply Austria with crude oil, and the expansion of economic relations between the two countries will be regarded as 'privileged cooperation.' That is the result of the bilateral talks held in Vienna from 25 to 31 May during the fourth session of the Austrian-Iraqi joint commission for economic and technical cooperation."

The Iraqi delegation was headed by Iraqi Oil Minister Tayih 'Abd al-Karim, the Austrian one by Trade Minister Josef Staribacher. At a Vienna press conference given yesterday by Staribacher, the trade minister declared that there are favorable opportunities for Austrian enterprises to participate in various Iraqi development projects, primarily some designed to develop the country's infrastructure and projects in the oil industry and building sectors, as well irrigation and desalination projects. The Salzburg Aqua engineering corporation has obtained a 250-million-schilling order for a water processing plant near the Iraqi city of Mosul against strongest international competition.

According to Staribacher, Austrian exports to Iraq last year went up 22 percent, to 2.2 billion schillings, while imports from Iraqi in 1980--mostly oil--increased 10.6 percent to over 7 billion schillings. In the first quarter of 1981 Austrian exports to Iraq increased by 46.5 percent and a similar growth rate is expected to continue. Last year's deficit in Austria's trade with Iraq was 4.7 billion schillings.

NICARAGUAN FOREIGN MINISTER BEGINS 3-DAY VISIT

AU021634 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 2 Jun 81 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report by "GB"]

[Summary] Nicaragua's Foreign Minister Padro Miguel d'Escoto Brockman arrived in Austria on Monday for a 3-day official visit at the invitation of Austrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr. In addition to holding working talks with Pahr and State Secretary Nussbaumer, D'Escoto will visit parliament today, Tuesday, and will call on President Kirchschlaeger and Chancellor Kreisky on Wednesday. The visitor's talks in Vienna are expected to center on Austrian development aid projects for Nicaragua.

In the past 2 years, Austrian development aid to that country totaled 12 million schillings, including the government's doubling of funds that were donated by Austrian citizens in various aid drives. In addition, some funds were raised by the Caritas organization and by the Austrian Solidarity Committee for Nicaragua. The aid funds are mainly used for cultural and education projects.

Managua Notes Aid Promises

PA012339 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1800 GMT 1 Jun 81

[Text] Nicaragua found firm international cooperation during Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto's tour of Europe, where Austria and Denmark have increased their economic aid to our country. As the second anniversary of our revolution approaches, the international community is reaffirming that, far from allowing itself to be pressured by imperialist economic aggression, solidarity and cooperation with Sandino's people are increasing.

After the announcement that Sweden would send a large amount of wheat, Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Father Miguel d'Escoto visited Norway and Denmark on his way to Austria, where he is today. Shortly before leaving Denmark, it was learned that that country will supply $2 million, which will be invested in sanitation projects.

It was learned today that Bruno Kriesky, head of the Austrian Government, promised additional financial aid to the Nicaraguan foreign minister, as well as doctors, medicine and teachers.

Father d'Escoto, who arrived this morning in Vienna on an official visit, will also be received by Austrian President Rodolf Kirchschlaeger and by Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr. Chancellor Kriesky also promised to conduct studies on timber and oil. The latter will be financed by the Austrian authorities.

The international cooperation and support the revolution is finding throughout the world continues to unmask the futility of imperialist aggression now that the second anniversary of the 19 July revolution is near at hand.

MINISTER PAHR RETURNS FROM AFRICA, REVIEWS TRIP

AU011142 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 30 May 81 p 2

[Summary] After his return from a 13-day trip to Kenya, Zambia and Zimbabwe on 29 May Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr stressed Africa's growing importance in the international arena and declared that this continent deserved Austria's special attention. According to Pahr, his visits to Kenya and Zambia were official ones while he went to Zimbabwe on what he called a "fact-finding mission," primarily designed to study opportunities to strengthen economic relations between the two countries and to prepare the establishment of an Austrian Embassy in Salisbury possibly this year but certainly next year.

Pahr stated that the purpose of his trip was to establish new and to develop existing contacts, to hold a conference of Austrian ambassadors in Africa, and to aid the members of the economic delegation accompnying him--prominent nationalized and private industry figures and chamber of commerce functionaries--in their endeavors to conclude specific business deals.

During his visit to Kenya, Foreign Minister Pahr invited Kenyan President Arap Moi to pay an official visit to Austria, which will presumably take place in the first half of 1982. Pahr declared that he had been especially impressed by his visit to Zimbabwe and that in talks with the Austrian Chamber of Commerce it was agreed to set up a trade mission in Salisbury. He stressed his impression that all leading politicians were focused on the future and seemed determined to forget the past, and that although the old land ownership conditions had not been touched so far, he believed that a certain land reform would be inevitable in the long run.

U.S., SOVIET SPOKESMEN COMMENT AFTER MBFR SESSION

AU011819 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 30 May 81 p 5

[Text] Vienna (APA)--Recently the United States has reinforced its armed forces in Central Europe by some 1,000 men within the framework of a "certain adjustment," whereas the Soviet Union on its own territory has deployed an unspecified number of additional medium-range missiles.

That was stated after the 272d plenary session of the Vienna negotiations on a reduction of troops in Central Europe by U.S. press spokesman William Davis and his Soviet colleague Yuri Sharkov. While the Soviet spokesman pointed out that alone during the past 4 years, according to an annual report of the U.S. Defense Department, the United States has increased its armed forces in Central Europe by 31,000 men, Davis merely spoke of 1,000 men who had recently been brought to the FRG.

Davis did not comment on reinforcements of the military arsenals of the NATO countries belonging to the Euro-group, reinforcements that had also been mentioned by Sharkov--460 tanks, 890 other tracklaying vehicles, 360 artillery pieces, 1,340 antitank systems and more than 600 combat planes and helicopters.

In reply to a specific question, Sharkov said that the Soviet Union was compelled to increase the number of deployed medium-range missiles as a reply to the NATO "forward based systems." The Soviet press spokesman explained that "forward based systems" involve long-range bombers carrying nuclear weapons with a range reaching far into the Soviet Union, as well as other planes based around the Soviet Union and submarines whose missiles with nuclear warheads can reach a large number of targets in the Soviet Union.

BRIEFS

ROMANIAN FOREIGN TRADE MINISTER--In a lecture at the "Z-Export Club" in Vienna, Romanian Foreign Trade Minister Nicolae Dumitrescu declared that the current 5-year plan provides opportunities for Austrian exporters in the machinebuilding, chemical, light and foodstuff industry sectors. Austria last year delivered 2.5 billion schillings' worth of goods to Romania and imported from there about 1.4 billion schillings worth. In the first quarter of this year, exports to Romania declined by 23 percent while exports to Romania went up 21 percent. According to Dumitrescu, Romania intends to expand its foreign trade volume by more than 50 percent in the coming 4 years. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 30 May 81 p 7 AU]

AUSTRIAN-BULGARIAN COOPERATION--Georgi Evtimov, chairman of the Bulgarian State Committee for Tourism, who has come to Vienna to attend the fourth session of the Joint Austrian-Bulgarian Tourist Trade Commission, declared at a press conference at the Vienna Trade Ministry on 1 June that both sides will endeavor to further increase the flow of tourists between the two countries. The Austrian Kontroll Bank has granted Bulgaria a 2-billion-schilling loan for tourist trade projects. Evtimov and his delegation will inspect Austrian hotels, cable cars, spa installations and holiday villages in Austria in preparation for using the Austiran loan. SCHMIDT STRESSES NEED FOR TALKS WITH USSR

[Text] Bonn, 2 Jun (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has stressed the need for talks with the Soviet Union despite the recent strong attacks on him and on Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher by the Soviet media. In the ARD television program "Report" this evening, Schmidt said that the dialogue with Moscow must be maintained "in any case and at all times." Schmidt said that the most important thing of all is the dialogue between Moscow and Washington, but he is quite sure that the dialogue between the Soviet Union and the Federal Republic also "must be conducted and will be conducted." The chancellor assured: "We will work for this and the Russians also will do so."

Schmidt rejected the Soviet attacks on Bonn government leaders, directed especially at their attitude toward the NATO decision on new medium-range missiles, as (?unfriendly) and "silly," but seemed unperturbed by them. He said it is quite certain, that the next time they meet, Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko would "dismiss the matter with a wave of his hand." Schmidt said it would be a [word indistinct] attempt if the Soviet Union were to try to drive a wedge between German policy and the Western alliance, but the Soviet leaders are not so stupid. Basically, the Soviet criticism is a sign of respect for the determination and consistency of Bonn's policy.

Schmidt said that an important point in the visit to Bonn by Soviet party and state leader Leonid Brezhnev, which is expected to take place in the autumn, will be the Federal Government's efforts to win over Moscow for negotiations with the United States on the limitation of medium-range missiles. The chancellor again stressed Bonn's interest in negotiations by the two great powers with the serious intention of arriving at a negotiated military balance. The Germans, in view of the fact that their fate could be sealed by the nuclear arms drive in the East and West, are vitally interested in holding successful disarmament talks. In agreement with the allies, Bonn also will contribute to this in bilateral talks with Moscow.

Schmidt said that SPD Chairman Willy Brandt is undertaking his trip to Moscow at the end of June in agreement with the concepts of the Federal Government. Brandt will convey to Moscow what the Federal Government thinks and will bring back what the Soviet leaders think. The dialogue between East and West at many levels is urgently necessary and desirable, Schmidt said.

GENSCHER, SOVIET OFFICIAL DISCUSS EUROMISSILES

LD021700 Hamburg DPA in German 1605 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 2 Jun (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher explained German concern over the Soviet advance missile buildup to influential Soviet party official Boris Ponomarev in Bonn today. In a talk lasting [words indistinct], which Ponomarev had requested, Genscher also stressed the German interest in the further development of relations between Bonn and Moscow, continuation of the dialogue between the two states and the policy of detente and cooperation.

Boris Ponomarev, who is a candidate member of the Politburo, a secretary of the Central Committee and head of the department for relations with communist parties in nonsocialist countries, is one of the highest-ranking Soviet officials recently to visit the Federal Republic.

During the talk, Foreign Minister Genscher rejected the attacks against Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt published in the Soviet media last week. A Foreign Office spokesman said that the talk focused on German-Soviet relations. Genscher and Ponomarev also discussed the state of the CSCE followup conference in Madrid and prospects for a European disarmament conference. The spokesman stressed that much time was devoted to the problems relating to medium-range missiles.

Ponomarev was accompanied by his deputy, Zagladin, and Soviet Ambassador to Bonn Vladimir Semenov.

BAHR TO ATTEND DISARMAMENT TALKS IN MOSCOW

LD021200 Hamburg DPA in German 1012 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 2 Jun (DPA)--Before SPD Chairman Willy Brandt's visit to Moscow, from 30 June to 2 July, Egon Bahr, the SPD Bundestag Parliamentary Group's disarmament expert, will spend 4 days in the Soviet capital. The SPD confirmed today in Bonn that, between 12 and 14 June, Bahr will attend a meeting of the International Disarmament Commission led by the Swedish (?Socialist) leader Olof Palme. The commission also includes former U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

Bahr will arrive in Moscow on 10 June for political talks. Nothing is yet known about with whom he will talk.

GENSCHER, CHEYSSON AGREE ON BASIC QUESTIONS

LD021454 Hamburg DPA in German 1346 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 2 Jun (DPA)--The speed with which new French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson chose Bonn as the first place for consultations is seen in the Foreign Ministry as a sign of the consistent continuation of German-French friendship. During the intensive talks in the guesthouse on the Venusberg, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his French counterpart reached agreement on all basic questions.

European questions and the problems of the Third World formed an important part of the discussion. Cheysson announced a series of French contacts in the Middle East region for the next few days. France also intends to intensify its policy toward the Third World. In these fields as in discussion of the East-West relationship and Western security, there again was confirmation of the broad basis for cooperation between the two ministers.

Cheysson inquired in detail about the German views on the progress of the Madrid CSCE follow-up conference which in Genscher's view should steadily be brought to a conclusion without allowing the East the opportunity of putting the West under a deadline. In the talks, Genscher made it clear that the French proposal for a disarmament conference in Europe has been consciously taken up so as not to lose the initiative in this field.

Foreign Minister Cheysson then briefly visited Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and flew back to Paris. [Hamburg DPA in German at 1448 GMT on 2 June reports on the Cheysson visit: "A government spokesman said that coming summit meetings were discussed during the 45-minute talk with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. These include the forthcoming session of the European Council in Luxembourg, the German-French consultations in Bonn in July and the world economic summit in Ottawa in the same month."]

REPORTAGE ON SIXTH COMMUNIST PARTY CONGRESS

SED Delegation's Arrival

LD290918 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1602 GMT 28 May 81

[Text] Hannover, 28 May (ADN)--At the invitation of the party executive of the German Communist Party, a delegation of the SED Central Committee arrived in Hannover today to take part in the Sixth DKP Congress.

The delegation, led by Kurt Hager, member of the Politburo and secretary of the Central Committee, also includes Werner Jarowinsky, candidate member of the Politburo and secretary of the Central Committee, and the members of the Central Committee Herbert Haeber and Kurt Tiedke, first secretary of the Magdeburg SED Bezirk Executive.

The delegation was cordially welcomed on its arrival by DKP Chairman Herbert Mies as well as other members of the Presidium of the Party Executive. Also there to welcome them was the head of the GDR's permanent mission in the FRG, Ambassador Ewald Moldt.

DKP Chairman's Report

LD291929 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 0745 GMT 29 May 81

[Text] Hannover, 29 May (ADN)--The Sixth DKP Congress was opened this morning in Hannover by the DKP Chairman Herbert Mies.

Deputy DKP Chairman Hermann Gautier welcomed the 850 delegates and guest delegates as well as delegations from 57 fraternal parties, anti-imperialist liberation movements and numerous guests from the FRG. The participants in the party congress welcomed with particular warmth the SED delegation headed by Kurt Hager and the CPSU delegation headed by Boris Ponomarev.

After the party congress had been constituted, Herbert Mies presented the report entitled "Everything for Peace--Defend Social and Democratic Rights."

He stressed that, since the Mannheim party congress in 1978, the DKP has "kept its course under more complicated conditions of struggle" and is striving "to stay abreast of the times and to meet the growing demands of the political, social and intellectual conflicts." It has made further progress. The DKP chairman described the struggle against the transformation of the FRG into a launching pad for U.S. nuclear missiles as the most important matter of the present time and as a question of "to be or not to be".

There are 105 motions for the party congress to discuss and adopt. At the center stands the struggle against the NATO arms drive and the struggle for peace and for the defense of the social and democratic rights of the working people.

The report states that the number of communists organized in the DKP in the period under review has risen by 5,160 to 48,856. The policy of the DKP, its activities, its readiness for unity of action and for the democratic alliance and the fact that it is embedded in the international communist and workers movement have made it into an effective force. "The activities of the DKP have helped to bring more movement in our country and to ensure that the activities of the working class and the democratic forces have increased."

Herbert Mies stressed that the Sixth DKP Congress is being held in a complicated situation. "The life of the ordinary person in our country has become more difficult and more filled with concern. The younger generation is asking about its future chances. All of the people are worried about peace. Large-scale capitalism, the parties allied with it and the Federal Government are giving precedence to the arms race. They are reducing social rights. They are trying with all means to hold down the democratic will of the people."

The DKP opposes this course with all its strength. It presents clear positions in the disputes about the FRG's road into the 1980's. The DKP fights against everything that is driving the FRG into nuclear self-destruction. It also opposes the shifting of the crisis and arms burdens onto the working people. It works to see that the democratic will of the people was respected and it strives to change the political balance of forces in favor of the democratic forces.

The DKP chairman described the struggle against the transformation of the FRG into a launching pad for new U.S. missiles as the most important matter of the present time and as a question of "to be or not to be". "On the question of the arms race and the deployment of U.S. nuclear missiles or security through disarmament and the rejection of the U.S. missiles, opinions are divided in the Federal Republic", Herbert Mies states. "A dividing line between the supporters and opponents of missiles has been drawn. It divides the various political forces into two camps. The contradiction between the forces that are banking on the nuclear arms race and the forces that want to protect our country from the dangers of nuclear self-destruction dominates the present political scene. The outcome of the struggle will determine to a large extent the future development of the Federal Republic".

Herbert Mies said there is growing resistance in the FRG to the NATO plans for the deployment of Pershing II missiles and cruise missiles. A broad peace movement has arisen which encompasses various forces. The Krefeld appeal, which so far has been signed by 800,000 people, testifies to this.

Notwithstanding their other differences, these forces jointly recognize that the U.S. confrontation strategists intend to make the FRG the starting point for a nuclear first strike and thus, at the same time, the main target of an inevitable counter-strike. They demand, strengthened by the progress of detente in the 1970's, detente in place of confrontation. They are indignant that in the FRG alone DM70,000 are wasted on armaments every minute and they want to put an end to the arms madness.

"Those are the motives of the peace movement. Those are also the motives of us communists", Herbert Mies said. "They determine our commitment in the present peace movement. The safeguarding of peace is our great aim, our great ideal, by which we are guided.

The DKP chairman stressed: "There is no sensible alternative to the policy of detente. Anyone who wants detente to continue must strive to ensure that the Brussels missile decision is not implemented, because the new U.S. nuclear missiles increase the danger of war. They threaten all the positive things that it was possible to achieve in a decade of international detente in terms of the safeguarding of peace, advantageous economic and cultural relations with the socialist states and easier everyday conditions. They signify a new round in the arms race and they mean a further acceleration in the militarization of society and thus a stepped-up demolition of both social and democratic rights. Thus, in the struggle against NATO's nuclear arms drive, the peace question, the social question and the question of democracy reach a high point."

On the question of the motives of responsible politicians of the Bonn Bundestag parties for their dangerous course, the DKP chairman said that these forces are seeking, together with the imperialists of all countries, ways and means of halting the further advance of progress in the world. He said that they are striving for the military superiority of imperialism, particularly, as FRG imperialism has by no means come to terms with the results of World War II.

He continued: "Because we want to eliminate the danger, we don't stop appealing to the leading politicians not to lead our country into the blind alley of political adventurism. We ask the Social Democratic federal chancellor: Herr Federal Chancellor, you recently stated that you have to govern against a part of your own party. With your 'yes' to NATO's missile drive, you aren't governing only against a part of your own party, you are governing against the vital interests of our people. You are governing against all those who gave you the election mandate of adhering to the policy of detente." Herbert Mies urged the FRG chancellor to pursue instead of this a policy that is in the national and European interests.

The report continues: "In agreement with other peace-loving and realistically thinking forces, we communists demand:

The Federal Government must withdraw its agreement for the deployment of Pershing II and cruise missiles in the Federal Republic;

Negotiations must be started without delay with the aim of limiting and reducing medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe; and a moratorium on the additional deployment of these weapon systems for the duration of these negotiations should be agreed upon;

Rid our country's territory of nuclear, biological and chemical weapons; Stop all U.S. plans to produce the neutron bomb, after all, and to station it in West Europe;

Stop the increase in arms expenditure. Not another mark for the Tornado program. No weapons for Chile, Turkey, Saudi Arabia or other reactionary regimes. No expansion of arms production and arms export."

To appease the people, the originators of the NATO missiles decision are making a great fuss about their alleged readiness for negotiations with the Soviet Union, Herbert Mies said. "But we warn against illusions. The communique of the recent NATO council meeting in Rome shows very clearly that the U.S. course continues to be toward confrontation and the arms drive. The Reagans, Haigs and Weinbergers aren't thinking about serious negotiations with the Soviet Union. This is part of the knowledge which Schmidt's visit to the United States and also this week's Bundestag session has brought us. Herr Genscher, who even advised the U.S. administration to be more tactically skillful and to signal a readiness for negotiations in words, in view of the pressure of the peace movement to 'reduce tensions', also knows this very well. But we aren't going to have the wool pulled over our eyes. Now the pressure must really be put on to ensure that serious disarmament negotiations take place and lead to tangible results.

"We are appealing not for an anti-American policy but for a national policy. We want the fundamental vital interests of our people to be guaranteed."

"Our country needs good relations with all peoples and states," Herbert Mies continued. "In the interests of its peaceful development, it needs in particular good neighborly relations with the Soviet Union, too. It needs the further normalization of relations with the GDR. But this is only possible if one strictly adheres to the basic principle that relations between the Federal Republic and the GDR are relations between sovereign and independent states with different social systems. The consequences of this that must be drawn are that respect for the state citizenship of the GDR cannot be denied. The Federal Government must finally find the courage to completely throw overboard the ballast of the long, outdated 'greater Germany' donctrine. This would obviously also help to exploit even further the possibilities of advantageous cooperation."

In sharp contrast to the policy of imperialism, which threatens the existence of all mankind, stands the consistent peace policy of the Soviet Union and the other countries of the socialist community, Herbert Mies stated. He described the program of action for peace proclaimed by Leonid Brezhnev at the 16th CPSU Congress as the concentrated expression of this policy.

The DPK chairman emphatically assured: "Guided by the common peace interests of the peoples and the national interests of our country, we communists welcome and support the Soviet peace initiative and are convinced that it lends new impulses on a world-wide scale to the struggle for safeguarding peace." [passage indistinct]

The DKP chairman stated that the acute threat to peace and the reactionary social course of the ruling circles present the labor movement in the FRG with new questions. More than ever, it is a matter of taking up battle positions. The DKP always has been guided by the fact that the most important guarantee for the success of the working class lay in its unity of action. Therefore, its readiness for cooperation with the Social Democrats will continue not to be linked to certain 'levels' of the SPD. The DKP also is seeking a dialogue with other leftwing, socialist-oriented forces with the aim of deepening the beginnings of joint action.

Herbert Mies said that the trade unions' struggle is of particularly great importance. "Strong trade unions, oriented toward the interests of the working class and acting for it, remain indispensable for the future. They form a power center for the defense and the expansion of social and democratic rights and for the safeguarding of peace."

On the DKP's attitude to the trade unions, Herbert Mies continued: "We communists don't want to be either better or worse trade unionists than our colleagues from the SPD and the CDU/CSU. We are for the unified trade unions, we support the program of the DGB and our members are active trade unionists. In the struggle for workers rights, the DKP always marches with, and at the side of, unified trade unions."

Finally, Herbert Mies again strongly reaffirmed the DKP's determination to do everything possible for the development of broad alliances of the forces interested in peace and progress. "We demand everything that serves understanding and the dialogue of the different democratic forces. We believe that the common concern must weigh far more than that which divides them." He said it is natural that there are also differences of opinion when different forces come together for joint action. There are also anti-communist reservations here. But experience shows that in this action the readiness for discussion and for serious examination of the DKP's policy is growing. And that is no small thing in a country in which anticommunism is a state doctrine.

The DKP became stronger in the period under review and its influence has increased, the party chairman stressed. "Our opponents want to brand us as outsiders in this society. They now are alarmed at finding us in the midst of the social conflicts. Thus, we can rightly say: We have taken important steps in the right direction in our efforts to be a motivating force."

Herbert Mies stressed that firmness of principle remained indispensable for the party in fundamental political, ideological, philosophical and organizational questions. He emphatically reaffirmed the DKP's loyalty to the principle of proletarian internationalism. He said: "Let our adversaries take note: The DKP's internationalist attitude is no weather vane. It isn't based on quicksand. In the future, too, we will not slacken our vigilance with regard to the philosophical firmness of the party." The DKP chairman stressed: "Especially in a situation where the forces of imperialism and reaction are increasingly coordinating their efforts, it is also the duty of the communists of all countries to close their ranks."

Executive Election Results

LD311532 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1318 GMT 31 May 81

[Text] Hannover, 31 May (ADN correspondent)--The DKP Executive, elected by the Sixth congress and consisting of 91 members, today elected the Presidium and the Secretariat of the party Executive at its constituent meeting. In addition to Chairman Herbert Mies and Deputy Chairman Hermann Gautier, the following were elected as members of the Presidium: Jupp Angenfort; Kurt Bachmann; Martha Buschmann; Werner Cieslak; Gerd Deumlich; Kurt Fritsch; Willi Gerns; Ludwig Mueller; Georg Polikeit; Rolf Priemer: Max Schaefer; Karl-Heinz Schroeder; Werner Stuermann and Ellen Weber.

In addition to Herbert Mies and Hermann Gautier, the following were elected to the Secretariat: Vera Achebach; Jupp Angenfort; Gerd Deumlich; Kurt Fritsch; Willi Gerns; Josef Mayer; Ludwig Mueller; Karl-Heinz Schroeder and Wilhelm Sprenger.

The Central Arbitration Commission elected by the party congress voted Otto Hans as chairman. Willi Mohn is the chairman of the Central Auditing Commission.

This afternoon, the party congress began discussion and adoption of the motions. The delegates unanimously approved the party Executive report presented by Herbert Mies. They also approved an appeal to the people of the country--"No NATO missiles, everything for peace"--and other motions proposed to the party congress.

Mies' Closing Speech

LD312108 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1648 GMT 31 May 81

[Text] Hannover, 31 May (ADN)--In his greatly applauded closing speech to the Sixth DKP Congress in Hannover, Party Chairman Herbert Mies described the DKP on Sunday afternoon as "the party fighting for peace." The most important thing for it is "to ensure that no new war begins on our soil." It is an inalienable right of the FRG people to be spared an atomic death and to have a secure future.

"The party congress has made clear: As solidly united as the communists of the Federal Republic stand by the principles of their scientific and revolutionary ideology, so constructively do they support united action by the working class, democratic alliances and joint action of leftwing forces."

The party congress further makes it clear that the DKP works for the causes of the working class and that it relies on their support and engagement in the conflicts of today and on their historic mission to open a way for the people of the FRG to a socialist future. The DKP chairman stressed that the party is committed to the national interests of FRG workers just as much as to proletarian internationalism. He cordially thanked the 57 delegations from communist and workers parties and from anti-imperialist liberation movements, assuring them of the unswerved solidarity of the FRG communists.

FDP SPOKESMAN TALKS WITH DPRK PARTY MEMBER

LD021610 Hamburg DPA in German 1514 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 2 Jun (DPA)--North Korean Central Committee member Yang Hyong-Sop had political talks at the party level in Bonn today, the first leading North Korean politician to do so. In a talk with FDP security policy spokesman Juergen Moellemann, possibilities for the intensification of mutual cooperation in all spheres were discussed. Moellemann said that this is a continuation of the dialogue that he began during his visit to Pyongyang in April. There are no diplomatic relations between the Federal Republic and North Korea.

MATTHOEFFER CALLS FOR 'COST AWARENESS' IN BUNDESWEHR

LD021118 Hamburg DPA in German 0939 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 2 Jun (DPA/VWD)--According to Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoeffer, in view of the tight financial situation, the Federal Government is under "increasing pressure to exercise extreme economy," from which defense cannot be exempted. Matthoeffer said today in the Bundestag budget debate that he would also have to insist on "greater cost awareness" in the Bundeswehr. He announced budget stoppages this year for all federal departments in order to achieve a decrease in expenditure of some DM2 billion.

CHEYSSON COMMENTS ON FOREIGN POLICY ISSUES

NC030810 Paris AFP in English 0756 GMT 3 Jun 81

[By Danielle Eyquem]

[Text] Paris, 3 Jun (AFP)--French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson, on the eve of his official visit to Washington tomorrow, has confirmed here that France's foreign policy will remain anchored to the Atlantic alliance.

He told members of the French Diplomatic Press Association Committee yesterday that he believed it was essential for this fact to be made known to France's Western allies.

But he pointed out that while the new French Socialist government would respect all previous alliances and treaties, it planned also to have its own well-defined foreign policy. There might well be divergences between France and its allies over certain problems, notably in relations with the Third World, but they would in no way weaken France's support of the Atlantic alliance, Mr Cheysson said.

The foreign minister, regarded as the government's expert on the Third World, added that for economic, political and humanitarian reasons France would support all those who fought against racial or religious discrimination.

Replying to a question, he said that French foreign policy would be decided only by President Francois Mitterrand, Premier Pierre Mauroy, himself and his two deputy ministers.

He said that only these five could be considered France's official foreign policy spokesmen and any statements by other ministers must be regarded as being made on a private and personal basis, and did not commit the government in any way. Observers here considered that this remark could well apply to Regis Debray, appointed a presidential adviser, who recently told a Danish daily newspaper that France would support all anti-imperialist movements. (Mr Debray is best known here for his revolutionary activities in South America, especially in Bolivia where he became a close friend of Ernesto "Che" Guevara and spent some time in jail.)

Regarding concern felt in certain Arab capitals over the elections of a Socialist president in France, Mr Cheysson stressed that France's state interests were paramount and took precedence over party options. He said "President Mitterrand supports both the security of states, and therefore the existence of Israel within internationally accepted frontiers, as well as peoples' right to self-determination, so that Palestinians have the right to choose their own destiny."

Mr Cheysson hoped that Europe would increase its social horizons and that the Council of Europe would drop sterile debates over such questions as New Zealand cheese import quotas and turn to wider political goals.

The foreign minister is to have his first meeting with United States President Ronald Reagan early tomorrow afternoon at the White House. The three-day visit will be the first mid-level contact between Washington and the new Mitterrand government. Before going to Washington, Mr Cheysson held talks in Bonn yesterday with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

SOCIALISTS, COMMUNISTS ATTEMPT TO REACH AGREEMENT

LD022106 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Text] [Announcer] In a meeting with Communists at the Socialist headquarters, attempts have been made to reach agreement on the possible appointment of Communist ministers in the government.

After synchronizing their stands on the problem of Afghanistan and on the deployment of Soviet SS-20 missiles, the Socialist leaders stated that they remain firm in their position on the financing of social measures, for example, on foreign policy and on government solidarity. The Communist delegation which went to the headquarters of the Socialist Party in Rue de Solferino was led by Georges Marchais. It took a few hours off for lunch before resuming the talks at 1530. (Arlette Chabot) was waiting for the negotiators to come out when they split up at 1800, having decided finally to meet again on Thursday morning. In the meantime, a committee will continue to work tomorrow. (Arlette Chabot), the remarks exchanged this afternoon were evidently quite firm on both sides?

[Chabot] Yes, that is right. Lionel Jospin's opening statement set a very firm tone for the meeting. Indeed, the first secretary of the Socialist Party recalled that since the break in relations between the two parties, that is, for the past 3 years, the Communist Party hasn't stopped attacking the Socialist Party and notably Francois Mitterrand in person. We had to wait for the result of the first round of presidential election before we saw a change of attitude, Lionel Jospin remarked. In these conditions, Jospin asked: Isn't this change guided by immediate interests? And he asked Georges Marchais: How can you approve today what was criticized yesterday? Lionel Jospin then went on to list the points which he regards as essential and on which there are differences between the two parties: in the economic field--the attitude toward the small and medium-sized firms and nationalization; at the international level--Afghanistan, Poland and the Camp David accords. An initial review of all these subjects was made today, making it apparent that the discussions will be very difficult. Indeed, the Socialist Party will not be satisfied with statements. It wants precise commitments from the Communist Party, accompanied by guarantees. Thus, unless the restricted committee meeting tomorrow succeeds in totally unblocking the situation, it seems at the moment that the sides are moving toward a limited agreement which might be a sort of parliamentary support to the action of the government rather than a political agreement leading to an agreement on government.

POLL GIVES LEFT 53.5 PERCENT IN ASSEMBLY ELECTIONS

NC021125 Paris AFP in English 1045 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 2 June (AFP)--The third public opinion poll in three days today put the left still ahead in the runup to the parliamentary elections whose final second round will be held on June 21.

The conservative daily newspaper LE FIGARO published a poll by SOFRES which gave the left 53.5 percent of the vote against 44.5 percent for the right. The ecologists obtained two percent.

This is the percentage breakdown of parties. The left: Socialists 34 percent, Communists 16.5, smaller groups 3. The right: Giscardians 19.5, Gaullists 22, others 3.

The elections will be held on June 14 and 21 for the 491 seats in the National Assembly, where there has been a right majority since the founding of the Fifth Republic in 1958. There are 2,760 candidates for the first round.

PRESIDENT MEETS WITH EMPLOYERS REPRESENTATIVES

LD030831 Paris LE MONDE in French 30 May 81 pp 1, 9

[Philippe Labarde report]

[Excerpts] Mitterrand received a National Council of French Employers [CNPF] delegation headed by Chairman Francois Ceyrac at the Elysee on 29 May. He then had talks with the leaders of the General Confederation of Small and Medium-sized Enterprises and was to receive the leaders of the PMI [as published] National Trade Union and finally the UNAF [National Union of Family Associations] leaders.

During this meeting, Ceyrac informed the president of the republic of the immediate concerns felt by the enterprise chiefs.

Ceyrac will meet on Monday, 1 June, with Mauroy, who is to meet with the other social partners before the 3 June cabinet meeting at which the government's first social measures will be announced.

"We discussed the short- and long-term situation facing all enterprises, medium-sized, small and big, and we have nothing to add," the CNPF chairman stated after the 1-hour meeting he had just had with Mitterrand. The curtness of his remarks contrast markedly with the tone of the statements made by the trade union representatives after similar meetings. Should we conclude from this that this first meeting was a failure? That would probably be jumping to conclusions.

Unlike the trade union organizations, the employers didn't publish a program of demands after Francois Mitterrand's elections. The CNPF, which through Francois Ceyrac, sided with Giscard d'Estaing between the two rounds of the elections, simply published a short communique when the latter's defeat was definite: "The economic war imposed on us requires French enterprises to be able to face foreign competition. That presupposes in particular the stabilization and then reduction of the burden of costs weighing down on small, medium-sized and big enterprises and respect for their freedom of action."

Since then, there has been nothing aside from an interview granted to ECHOS by Alain Chevalier, one of the employers organizations' vice chairmen, stressing the threat posed to enterprises by the very high level of interest rates in France and reaffirming that national firms must remain "competitive"--"it is a matter of life and death."

This silence is easy to explain; Mitterrand's victory was a shock and its scope was startling. Before launching into battle, the CNPF had to recover and possibly restore its unity.

On 19 May, a permanent assembly meeting between officials from the regional employers unions and from the big professional trade unions was called to assess the situation and to decide what course to take--a course which can be summed up as "wait and see."

The transitional phase between the presidential election and the parliamentary elections certainly doesn't lend itself to initiatives and the composition of the government and its first decisions--still awaited--have not enabled the employers to see clearly what overall economic policy the government intends to implement. The appointment of Delors to the Economy and Finance Ministry and his first statements have probably been received with interest. Pierre Joxe's appointment to the Industry Ministry, on the other hand, scarcely aroused enthusiasm. "Anybody who reads the PS statements and listens to the statements made by its leading officials must realize that irreconcilable economic views exist within the party," the CNPF observes. "In these conditions, who can predict with certainty the options which will be chosen in the event of a PS victory in the forthcoming parliamentary elections? What will the PCF's influence be in the debate?" These questions, which are being raised by public opinion and the political class are also being asked in Avenue Pierre-de-Serbie [CNPF headquarters].

This official meeting between the president of the republic and the employers' representative could not be expected to produce spectacular decisions. The essence of the debate will be raised at the beginning of next week when Mauroy meets with the social partners. Nonetheless, this first meeting was extremely important. In addition to their short and longer term concerns--especially nationalizations--the employers' aim is to convince the new president that they are prepared to play the game loyally, provided they are given the means of doing so.

For his part, Mitterand, whose excellent relations with the trade unions have been abundantly stressed, had to reassure interlocutors who are presently on the defensive and convince them that the new economic policy will be implemented with them and not against them.

MITTERRAND REPLIES TO CASTRO'S CONGRATULATIONS

FL011842 Havana Domestic Television Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 1 Jun 81

[Text] The president of France, Francois Mitterrand, has thanked the Cuban chief of state, Fidel Castro, for his message of congratulations on Mitterrand's election to the presidency. In a message made public today by the French Foreign Ministry, Mitterrand recalls his visit to Havana in 1974 and notes that he always has paid particular attention to relations between France and Cuba. I treasure the memories of our meetings and of my stay in Cuba, I am happy to have been able to strengthen our personal ties--ties useful to the cause of our two nations, the Mitterrand message to Fidel Castro states.

The message, signed by the French president, concludes: I am convinced that we will be able to further strengthen the friendship between France and Cuba and to place it at the service of peace, independence, international economic cooperation and respect for the rights of man.

MITTERRAND SENDS LETTER TO KHMER REPRESENTATIVE

BK291026 Bangkok NATION REVIEW in English 29 May 81 p 4

[Reproduced copy of letter in French from Francois Mitterrand to Tan Bun Sor, representative of Paris-based Khmer group, Provisional Committee for the Rebirth of the National Khmer Union, accompanying Paris-datelined article by Jacques Bakaert on French politics--dated 28 April 1981]

[Text] Sir: I have received your letter and thank you for it. I agree with you indeed that the problems of Cambodia are no longer of primary importance nowadays.

Each of the candidates must have his opinion on this problem, the character of which is unacceptable in many respects.

Nothing can justify the use of violence in the relationship between states. My position along the line of the general principles inspiring my concept of foreign policy is extremely clear. The Pol Pot regime must be gotten rid of. But this, however, does not justify the prolonged occupation of Cambodia by a foreign state. In any circumstance, the right of the people must be respected. Through military intervention, Vietnam has violated that right, just as China did by penetrating Tonkin, the United States did by invading Vietnam and Cambodia several years ago, or the Soviet Union is now doing to Afghanistan. All that is condemnable and I condemn it.

If the French people put their confidence in me, I would strongly affirm the right and the necessity of direct negotiations. In conformity with these guidelines, I am ready to work for a solution which will permit Cambodia to regain its independence on the basis of neutrality by proposing the convening of an international conference with all parties concerned grouping around the table. This is the only procedure aimed at giving peace, independence and dignity to the Khmer people.

It will not be easy to realize this procedure, but France's simple appeal for the respect of those principles on which the international community is founded can draw an extremely large response.

When one does not make use of force, but of right, one already has the force.

I hope that I have answered your concerns. Please accept the assurance of my best regards.

[Signed] Francois Mitterrand

LE MONDE DISCUSSES FRG SUPPORT FOR FRENCH CURRENCY

LD271105 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 May 81 p 1

[Editorial: "FRG's Obvious Interests"]

[Text] On Monday, 25 May, the franc strengthened considerably on the currency market, at last improving on its rockbottom rate against the mark, thus enabling the Bank of France to stop allocating its funds to supporting it.

This improvement was expected by international financial circles, just as before this weekend, they expected Chancellor Schmidt to assure Mitterrand of his country's backing for the defense of the franc. The psychological effect of this public support was undeniable, as was the absence of any "readjustment" of monetary parities at week's end. This being so, the draconian measures adopted by the Bank of France with regard to controlling exchange and interest rates were able to act effectively.

But the FRG's support isn't entirely disinterested--far from it. First, it is a return favor. In December 1980 and January 1981, when the mark suffered its last bouts of weakness and reached its lowest point against what was then a very strong franc, didn't the Bank of France allocate over Fr12 billion to supporting the West German currency?

At that time, weren't authoritative voices on the other side of the Rhine demanding that the mark be withdrawn from the European Monetary System [EMS]? Today, it is France's turn and the Bundesbank has not only repaid the Fr12 billion but has advanced considerable sums to the Bank of France.

Above all, it would appear to be a very bad time to allow the franc, the second Community currency, to leave the EMS in "the heat of the moment." In fact, there is no doubt that the departure could be contagious, with other currencies like the Belgian franc, already in a delicate position. Taking advantage of the situation to be "readjusted", not to mention the lira and possibly the guilder, in the long run, all those movements would be reflected in a general revaluation of the mark within the EMS--a measure considered just as undesirable on the other side of the Rhine as a devaluation would have been at the beginning of the year. The West German trade balance isn't so brilliant that it could readily adapt to adjustments which would favor imports from the European partners and penalize exports to those partners.

In the short term, therefore, Bonn is flying to the aid of the franc, hoping that in the coming weeks U.S. interest rates will fall, taking the dollar down with them, and that the pressures being exerted on the European currencies will be reduced accordingly. In the longer term, however, there are two problems. First, it will be necessary to repay the advances made by the Bundesbank, which is prepared to support the franc to the Bank of France's last dollar.... Second, it is difficult to see how the two countries could permanently harmonize policies which, for Germany, consists in rejecting any recovery described as "inflationist" and, for France, on the other hand, consists in "playing" the economic expansion card.

The difference in inflation rates on the two sides of the Rhine is already wide enough and can do without being aggravated, and our partner's support will only be won on a lasting basis if we show great austerity in return. Otherwise, the cycle of events will be repeated....

LE FIGARO VIEWS CHOICES FACING VOTERS IN ELECTION

LD261357 Paris LE FIGARO in French 21 May 81 p 1

[Max Clos editorial: "Arched Back"]

[Text] At the moment when Mitterrand is taking charge of the state's affairs, the left is drawing in its claws and France is arching its back.

The left is drawing in its claws for the obvious reason that it must at all costs reassure the voters before the general elections. This explains the gentle tone of the Socialists, the Communists and even the CGT, albeit with the occasonal warning signs here and there.

France is arching its back because it is anxious and because part of the public is beginning to wonder about the consequences of its vote on 10 May. It has some reasons to do so. Now, 10 days after Mitterrand's election, a number of factors can be identified. Here are three: Business is at a standstill and industrial chiefs are adopting a wait-and-see attitude until they know more about the next government's policy; the franc has lost 2.5 percent of its value and it has been necessary to spend Fr20 billion to support the currency; and on the Paris stock exchange, French securities have fallen an average of 20 percent and savers have suffered losses of about Fr50 billion. And not all of them are speculators.

Mitterrand's election is a fact. It took place regularly in accordance with democratic rules and the new head of state is entitled to the respect which his position should inspire. But it is his actions which count--the decisions which he himself and his government will make in the weeks and months ahead.

This being the case, to remain consistent, the French people have only two choices: to elect a leftwing majority to the assembly in June, in other words, to place all power in the executive's hands, or to elect a majority in opposition to the president of the republic, in other words, to establish a counterbalance capable of controlling and containing the executive's powers.

It is a rather limited choice. However, some political observers manage to identify a third path, which could be summed up as follows. Mitterrand is a liberal, his desire is to govern with a political spectrum extending from the Socialists to the center right. The sole obstacle is constituted by the Communists. Consequently, far from voting for "rightwing" deputies, liberals of all leanings should elect a Socialist majority, which would free the president from Communist pressure and leave his hands free to establish a regime reflecting the wishes of the majority of the French people.

This argument is specious for two reasons:

--Perhaps Mitterrand is a "liberal." We don't know. Be that as it may, is that reason enough to entrust him with complete and uncontrolled power? In popular parlance, that would be like "writing a blank check" or rather "putting all your eggs in the same basket."

--Within the PS, there are currents close to the Communist Party. Do people believe that they will remain inactive? What is the point of "freeing Mitterrand from the Communists" if he immediately becomes the prisoner of his own party's leftwing?

It is unhealthy to nurture fantasies. It is perfectly legitimate to grant blind confidence to the new president, but only on condition that it isn't based on a delusion. The fool jumped in the water for fear of getting wet in the rain.

RED BRIGADES KIDNAPS ALFA ROMEO EXECUTIVE IN MILAN

NC031017 Paris AFP in English 1007 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Milan, Italy, 3 Jun (AFP)--The left-wing Red Brigades group today claimed responsibility for the kidnapping of an executive of the Alfa Romeo car firm in central Milan. At the same time as the kidnapping, gunmen shot and fatally wounded a security guard at Autodelta, a Milan division of Alfa Romeo. Police could not immediately determine whether a link existed between the abduction of Renzo Sandrucci, 53, an Alfa Romeo industrial relations officer, and the shooting of guard Antonio Frasca. Mr Frasca died on his way to hospital.

A woman telephoned Milan's daily LA REPUBBLICA, claiming that the kidnapping had been carried out by the Walter Alasia column of the Red Brigades. A similar phone call was received by a commercial radio station in the city. Police said the kidnappers, who seized Mr Sandrucci in front of his home, were in a vehicle painted to resemble a police patrol car.

Meanwhile, authorities were without news of Ciro Cirillo, a Naples Christian-Democratic Party leader who was abducted on April 27, and of Giuseppe Talercio, a business executive who was kidnapped on May 20 in Venice. The Red Brigades claimed responsibility for both acts. Seven Alfa-Romeo executives in Milan have been victims of Red Brigades attacks since 1973. Three of them were shot in the legs.

FORLANI CONTINUES MEETINGS TO FORM NEW GOVERNMENT

AU020839 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 2 Jun (ANSA)--The fate of Italian Premier-Designate Arnaldo Forlani's attempts to form a new government now rests with a meeting of the Italian Socialist Party's leaders tomorrow, political observers said here this morning after the first, and crucial day, of Forlani's consultations Monday. Forlani met yesterday with all the partners in the outgoing coalition of his own Christian Democrats (DC), the Socialists (PSI), Social Democrats (PSDI), and the Republicans (PRI), as well as other formations. These four parties are expected to be the backbone of any new government he may form, but the PSI's position is crucial to his success.

After their meetings with the premier-designate, none of the party leaders made any reference to concrete discussions on a program, as one might have expected, leading observers to speculate that they talked only about the membership of a new lineup and related political problems.

The two minor parties in the coalition, the PSDI and the PRI, have shown no bias against Forlani and another small party, the right-of-center Liberals (PLI), has shown willingness to join his bandwagon. After meeting with Forlani, PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi, who is credited with ambitions for the post that Forlani has been asked to fill, would say nothing more than that they had discussed a series of important and grave problems.

PRI Secretary Giovanni Spadolini showed moderate optimism when he said there was a "margin for negotiation". He also reported that the Socialists had apparently placed no "absolute pre-condition" on the premiership. But, with no clear change in favor of the formation of a new government, the atmosphere of embarrassment among establishment spokesmen over the P-2 scandal was only more apparent.

CORRECTION TO FOREIGN MINISTER AGREEMENT WITH POLAND

The following correction is made to the item entitled "Foreign Minister Signs Credit Agreement With Poland" published in the 1 June Western Europe DAILY REPORT, page L 1:

Only paragraph, line two, should read: "...the grave economic crisis. The agreement, covering an amount of 180 billion lire repayable in 8 years' time, was signed at the Foreign Ministry this morning...."

NO PROGRESS ON DEFENSE BUDGET TALKS WITH PARTIES

LD021221 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 28 May 81 p 24

[Text] Negotiations to reach a new defense settlement made no progress yesterday. Defense Minister Poul Sogaard held lengthy talks with representatives of the Social Democrats, Liberals, Conservatives, Radical Liberals, Center Democrats and the Christian People's Party, but there were no new developments.

Government circles are coming increasingly to feel that there will not be any defense settlement, and this means that the defense budget will have to be adjusted in the finance bill.

HUFVUDSTADSBLADET REPORTS MINISTERIAL CHANGES

LD021523 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 29 May 81 p 3

[Text] Second Finance Minister Pirkko Tyolajarvi has been appointed trade and industry minister. Tyolajarvi takes over the post from Ulf Sundqvist, who will first become deputy managing director of the Workers' Savings Bank and later its chief director.

The party Executive Committee proposed on Thursday that Riksdagsman Mauno Forsman should succeed Tyolajarvi as finance minister. These changes will take place at the beginning of July.

Pirkko Tyolajarvi, 43, was elected to the Riksdag for the Raumo District and is serving as a minister for the third time.

Mauno Forsman from Lappeenranta, the new second finance minister, has been a Riksdag member since 1971. He has also been a member of the Social Democratic Party Executive Committee since 1978. In 1978 he was also an elector in the presidential election.

USSR'S OGARKOV VISITS FINNISH TANK BRIGADE

LD021457 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 29 May 81 p 24

[Text] "Despite the fact that the period of service for a Finnish conscript is short, training is very effective," the Soviet General Staff Chief, Marshal N.V. Ogarkov, said when he visited the Parola tank brigade on Thursday.

In addition to a combat demonstration, Ogarkov was especially interested in the Finnish Armed Forces' canteen system. He thought that the voluntary work of the female canteen workers provided an excellent service for the conscripts. He also pointed out that his work brings the armed forces and the rest of society closer together.

In the afternoon, Marshal Ogarkov visited the Neste refinery at Skoldvik. On Friday, he will visit the cadet school in Helsinki and Helsinki naval station, and in the afternoon President Urho Kekkonen will receive the Soviet guest. Ogarkov's visit ends on Saturday.

PAPER VIEWS PROSPECTS OF INTEGRATING SKP FACTIONS

LD011323 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 26 May 81 p 2

[Jan-Magnus Jansson Editorial: "Revolt in the Communist Party"]

[Text] A month before the Communist Party [SKP] Congress, Aarne Saarinen [party chairman] made a speech to the party Central Committee which was later published. He said that there are features in the SKP's situation which are reminiscent of the crisis in the Polish party. The rank and file, he said, are in the process of losing faith in the leadership, both that of the majority line and that of the minority line. It was something of an irony that the person at the congress who turned out to be the greatest obstacle to the rank and file members' demands for renewal was no less a person than Saarinen himself.

It was of course by no means Saarinen as a person who was the target for rebels in the party. The real point of their action was directed against Deputy Chairman Taisto Sinisalo. This was made clear when several party districts in the Central Committee tabled reservations against Sinisalo's reelection, while Aarne Saarinen's election was, after all the pulling and hauling, finally unanimous.

In the party congress' earlier stages, Saarinen had let it be known that he did not want any vote about him, but would rather withdraw volutarily if unity could not be reached with regard to his reelection. He was spared this vote, but instead he had to digest another expression of opinion which must have been most humiliating. This was when his majority grouping resolved by a large majority to "support a change in the party Presidium." At this critical moment Saarinen only had a majority of the congress behind him because he had the support of the Taistoist minority group, which was intent on saving Sinisald and which wanted to avoid changes at all costs. But the thick-skinned party chairman had to feel for a moment how it feels when "your own dogs bite."

The other circumstance which saved Saarinen's party chairmanship was that no leading figure wanted to run in a situation in which Saarinen did not voluntarily resign his post. This was especially true of Arvo Aalto and Olavi Hanninen, who were both plausible party leaders. Their reaction had been expected, but it left the rebels from northern Finland and Satakunta without a candidate. It is of course another question whether Aalto, for example, who is not much liked by the minority, would have stood a greater chance of uniting the party than Aarne Saarinen.

What it was that finally decided that Aarne Saarinen should nevertheless hold onto his chairman's post is still unclear. Alongside the politician's normal desire to cling to power, Saarinen must have had more rational motives for staying. Perhaps he considered that despite everything, he had a better chance of managing the integration process within the party than anyone else. One is probably not wrong to suppose that the party's international relations also played a role. The Soviet party would obviously prefer to see the status quo continue within the SKP--provided that the party formally remains united--than to see moves toward daring experiments.

The circumstances under which Saarinen and Sinisalo were later reelected were fairly humiliating for both of them. It was stressed that they have been appointed "on a trial basis" and that they could be dismissed at any time if no progress is made toward unifying the party. KANSAN UUTISET wrote on its front page that the election was "more or less for the next year."

If the spirit of the congress persists in the Central Committee, the two adversaries [Saarinen and Sinisalo] will continue to be kept under close scrutiny. Will they then have any chance of reuniting a party that has actually been split in two for more than a decade, since the 1969 congress?

Both Saarinen and Sinisalo answered yes to this question, but both also pointed out that it will be a long process which will not come about in the twinkling of an eye.

It is possible that progress will be made on a number of details, such as the duplicate organizations which exist in some areas of the party. But when it comes to some of the really tough nuts, such as the Riksdag group's way of voting and the position of TIEDONANTAJA [Stalinist faction newspaper] progress will not be as easy.

It is also worth remembering that the movement for unity has its strongest footing within the party's majority group, while the minority communists, despite their lipservice, are extremely satisfied with things as they are in the party. Any real integration would inevitably mean that the Taistoists would have to give up some of their dogmatism and adjust their attitude to Finnish society in the direction of the majority's more pragmatic approach. But, of course, it is possible that the "third power" within both groups, which has been working for an understanding for a long time now, will be able to make its influence felt despite everything.

Those who were unsuccessful in their revolt against the party Presidium can seek consolidation in the unparalleled reshuffle in the Central Committee and in its real nucleus, the Politburo. Almost half of the Central Committee's members were replaced, and of the Politburo's 16 members, 9 are new. Kansan Uutiset bears witness to the fact that this is one of the most comprehensive personnel changes during the party's time "in daylight." However, it is still easy to classify the members as either majority or minority communists.

One way of closing ranks tighter is, of course, the resignation of the party from government and its transition to the opposition. However, this would be a clear victory for the minority line and the possibility has so far not figured in Saarinen's and Aalto's program, which is based on "ministerial communism." In the shadow of the internal feud, the question of participation in government was little discussed this time. Before the congress, Saarinen spoke for democracy and against agreements made in advance. He has given a deafening answer, and if we want to summarize the lasting impression from the congress, it is probably that people are now much more difficult to manipulate than in the past. People have begun to lay claim to being allowed to think for themselves, and this is of course something which decisionmakers of all colors would do well to remember.

SKP FACTIONS AT ODDS OVER LEGISLATION PACKAGE

LD030715 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 30 May 81 p 64

[Jan-Anders Ekstroem dispatch]

[Text] Helsinki--The Finnish Commmist Party's [SKP] attempts to restore unity in accordance with the party congress resolution from last weekend have begun anything but successfully. In the Riksdag, the minority group immediately rebeled against the majority's line. Continued trouble is expected during the few remaining days of the Riksdag's spring session, but there is every indication that only the fall will clearly show whether the two sides can reach agreement again or whether the party will fall into a vicious circle or repeated and ever tougher punishments for the "Stalinist" minority. If this is the case the most probable outcome would be a definitive split in the Finnish Communist Party.

At present, it looks as if the majority has a certain amount of understanding for the minority's problems in submitting after 15 years to the will of the majority in accordance with the new respect for the party statutes. This was why the People's Democratic Riksdag's group made do with one warning at this stage. Five representatives of the majority phalanx thought that the 11 minority Riksdag members--of a total of 35 group members--plus one rebel majority Riksdag member should have been expelled from the Riksdag group for the period up to the start of the fall session in September.

In a way it could be said that the minority had the worst possible luck in that the Riksdag, immediately after the Finnish Communist Party Congress, dealt with a legislation package which the minority Communists had been opposed to for months, and which the majority only accepted at the last minute after protracted talks with the other government parties.

The package covered the social insurance reform, which is part of this year's prices and incomes settlement and is aimed at making social benefits taxable income. The minority Communists cannot agree to this under any circumstances. The question is how the majority will react to the minority's announcement that it intends to vote in part against the same social insurance package in its third and final reading at the beginning of next week. The minority hopes that there will not be any further punishments, since the offence will be the same next time as it was last.

It also seems as if the atmosphere within the SKP and the People's Democratic Riksdag group has undergone a change for the better. Thus the minority will refrain from directly voting against certain proposed defense spending increases in this spring's first additional finance bill--involving the purchase of Soviet Hunter jets. The minority Riksdag members will indicate their opposition in principle to all increases in defense spending, but will then be absent from the final vote on the matter. The changes of preserving a united party probably depend entirely on whether the present four-party government succeeds in getting through the budget preparations in August and September.

SHIPYARD HANDS OVER ICEBREAKER TO SOVIET UNION

LD021445 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 30 May 81 p 15

[Excerpt] Waertsilae's 24th icebreaker for the Soviet Union was named and handed over on Friday to its purchaser V/O Sudoimport by the Helsinki shipyard. The polar icebreaker Kapitan Khlebnikov, the second of the two ordered in December 1978, was delivered in accordance with its purchaser's original wishes and a month ahead of schedule.

The naming ceremony was carried out on the quayside by Foreign Trade Minister Esko Rekola. Those present included the chief of the Soviet Union's trade representation in Finland, M.V. Gubanov. The supplier was represented by Minister Tankmar Horn and the chief of the Waertsilae Shipyard group, Christian Landman.

NORWAY

LABOR PARTY PONDERS RESPONSE TO KREMLIN MESSAGE

LD291137 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 27 May 81 p 9

[ULF Andenaes report:]

[Text] Like other social democratic parties in West Europe, the Norwegian Labor Party received a few days ago a letter from the CPSU Central Committee which proposes "that constructive negotiations on disarmament be started as soon as possible." The letter was directly addressed to the Norwegian Labor Party chairman, Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland. Secretary of State at the Prime Minister's Office Olav Bucher-Johannessen told AFTENPOSTEN that the letter will be dealt with in the usual way by the party's various bodies. It is probable that there will be consultations with social democratic sister parties in other countries about an answer.

West German Social Democratic Party Executive Committee spokesman Clement told the German press that the letter would receive "thorough assessment and a constructive reply."

The letter from Moscow repeats the Soviet claim that the Warsaw Pact nations have in no way achieved any supremacy over the West in the field of medium-range missiles, and advocates a moratorium on this type of weapon while negotiations on arms limitation are going on between East and West. By all accounts, this moratorium would mean a halt to the production and deployment of these arms during the period of negotiations.

Nuclear-Free Zones Debate

LD20945 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 29 May 81 p 4

[Editorial: "An Important Debate"]

[Text] The Norwegian Labor Party's policy resolution on nuclear-free zones is the most important new element to have been introduced into foreign and security policy for many years. The resolution has also attracted attention and understandable interest far beyond the Labor Party and also far behond Norway's borders.

The resolution from the party's congress in Hamar states that "Norway will work for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area as part of the work to reduce the number of nuclear arms in a broader European context." The formulation of the resolution gives in itself no detailed answer to the question of how this goal is to be reached. On the other hand, it opens up the possibility of taking initiatives and the possibilities of giving support to initiatives.

The fact that the Labor Party resolution in this field has attracted so much interest is, we believe, because it is seen as a serious attempt to point to a way of avoiding the catastrophe which growing numbers of people see building up before us. Young people especially see nuclear rearmament as a certain road to the annihilation of all life. There is logic in such an idea. On the other hand, we must believe that man, as a rational being, must also be able to break the evil spiral and replace rearmament with disarmament, replace tension with detente.

Such a policy does not of course mean that we are willing to renounce necessary security. Nor does it mean any desire for weakened defense forces. And it does not mean that the Labor Party wants a change in Norway's connection with NATO.

The Labor Party's policy for nuclear-free zones is not a policy for a unilateral nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries. As it is, this is already a reality in peacetime. It has been expressly stated that the nuclear-free zones in the Nordic area must be seen in the context of nuclear arms reductions in other parts of Europe. The treaties which may eventually result from this must be the result of mutual concessions.

We believe that this is an area of politics in which it is dangerous to let "all or nothing" approaches dominate. Even small steps can be important as long as they go in the right direction and toward the right goal. The goal is a nuclear-free Europe. This may seem very distant. And this is why it is so important to start moving now.

The resolution on nuclear-free zones and the expectations of concrete initiatives which this has created have triggered off a broad debate in which detente and disarmament are the real main topics. We believe that it is the first time that such a debate has been conducted on such a scale in Norway. And we can also add that it is the first time that it has been conducted with such realism.

Not everyone likes this debate. It is alarming to have to remark how prominent conservative politicians and the conservative press brand all debate on such questions almost as treason.

An important prerequisite for an open democracy like Norway's is the opportunity for free debate. It is through the constructive exchange of views that ideas are born and policies formed. It would be a sign of weakness if foreign and security policy could not tolerate a debate. We live in a world in which the arms race is continuing at the same time as there are enough arms to annihilate us all tens of times over. And in this same world there is a shortage of food and medicines. This in itself says enough of the need for a rethinking.

There is something primitive and stultifying in the Conservative Party's action against the debate on detente and disarmament. This is the sort of debate we would not warn against, but which we would encourage. Nor is it a new debate for the Labor Party. And in the past it has turned out to lead to approaches which are independent and nationally important. This is one of the reasons behind our bases and nuclear policy. If we had followed the Conservative Party's political approach and its working methods there would have been both foreign bases and nuclear arms on Norwegian soil today. At the same time, there would be no special Norwegian debate on detente and disarmament. We believe that the majority of people would say "no" to such a policy and such working methods. For they by no means make any real contribution to disarmament, detente and peace.

CANADA'S MACGUIGAN ON MILITARY COOPERATION

LD030723 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 29 May 81 p 9

[Olav Trygge Storvik report]

[Text] Canadian Foreign Secretary Mark MacGuigan stressed the close cooperation and the common political attitudes between Norway and Canada at a press conference in Oslo on Wednesday. He also pointed out that there is great scope for an expansion of this cooperation and said that Governor General Edward Schreyer's official visit to Norway this week would further such an aim.

On Tuesday, Foreign Secretary MacGuigan had lengthy talks with Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund and a shorter meeting with Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland. The talks with Frydenlund chiefly dealt with the two countries' views of East-West and North-South relations, he said.

An official brochure containing background documentation compiled by the Canadian Foreign Office for Governor General Schreyer's and the foreign secretary's visit to the Nordic countries stresses the military connections as the "most important" aspects of cooperation between Norway and Canada. This is a reference to the so-called "Cast Brigade" [as received], a Canadian brigade which has Norway as its only area of deployment in the event of a crisis. The intention is that the brigade would be transported to Norway using a combination of air and sea transport, but under existing plans it is expected that it would take up to 3 weeks before the Canadian brigade would be in place in northern Norway. Norwegian military circles have raised strong doubts concerning the practical use and credibility of the Canadian brigade given such a long transportation time, and individual critics have pointed out that it is unlikely that the brigade would be able to reach Norway at the time when it would be most needed.

In the light of this, the previous political leaders in the Defense Ministry began talks with the previous Canadian Government on the contingency stockpiling of the brigade's arms and equipment in Norway.

Although the official documents compiled by the Canadian Foreign Ministry mention military cooperation as "most important", it seems as if Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau's goverment has given lower priority to the negotiations on contingency stockpiling of the brigade's equipment in Norway. Foreign Secretary Mark MacGuigan also gave indirect confirmation of this at Wednesday's press conference. The question was not discussed during his long talks with Foreign Minister Frydenlund, he announced.

On several other important international questions there seems to be great agreement between the two countries. MacGuigan said that Canada was satisfied with Secretary of State Haig's declaration of U.S. flexibility and willingness to negotiate with the Soviet Union on the question of medium-range missiles, and both MacGuigan and Frydenlund were disappointed by the long time it is taking the new U.S. administration to fix its policies on a new world economic order and on Law of the Sea negotiations.

LIBERALS, SDP AGREE ON BYELECTION STRATEGY

LD021347 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1254 GMT 2 Jun 81

[By Andy Webb, PRESS ASSOCIATION political staff]

[Excerpt] The Liberal leadership agreed today that the Social Democrats [SDP] should fight the forthcoming by-election in Warrington, with the backing of local Liberals.

Liberals in the constituency will be advised not to contest the seat, but instead swing their support behind the SDP candidate.

This was the outcome of a meeting between the two parties at Westminster today. The Liberal team was led by party leader Mr David Steel, and the SDP by Mrs Shirley Williams.

Liberal support, though, is not unconditional. Mr Steel told the SDP that their candidate must be acceptable to Liberals in Warrington. Who the SDP will select to fight the seat--which had a Labour majority of over 100,000 at the last election--is still in doubt.

Mrs Williams is said to be still actively considering the possibility--though there is an increasing feeling at Westminster that she will not take the risk.

The other two names mentioned so far are former Labour MP Mr David Marquand and Mr David Williams, the son of the retiring Labour MP in the constituency.

A second condition imposed by Mr Steel on Liberal support in Warrington is that the Liberals should have first refusal on the next by-election. This does not mean, though, that the Liberals, rather than the SDP will automatically fight it when it comes.

Discussion on the Warrington by-election took up 30 minutes of the 1-1/2-hour meeting this morning.

Liberals in the constituency will be told tomorrow the view of the leadership, that they should make way for a "sensible" SDP candidate.

Mr Steel agreed to back the Social Democrats in Warrington "in the interests of the developing alliance" between the two parties.

Social Democrats in Warrington will consider who should be their candidate at a meeting on June 11, though it is possible that no final decision will be made then.

While it is clear that the Liberals would like to see the Social Democrats adopt a nationally-known figure, preferably Mrs Williams, both parties insisted today that they had no intention of interfering in each other's choice of candidate.

The appointment of Labour MP Sir Thomas Williams as a judge created the vacancy.

ENVOY DISCUSSES UK STAND ON KAMPUCHEAN ISSUE

BK271113 Jakarta OANA in English 0802 GMT 27 May 81

["Pool item"]

[Text] Kuala Lumpur, 27 May (OANA/BERNAMA)--ASEAN can expect full backing from Britain on its stand regarding the Kampuchean issue, the new British high commissioner here, William Bentley, said Tuesday.

"I am confident that whatever ASEAN's strategy at the July international conference on Kampuchea and the UN General Assembly, it will be ours too," he told a press conference here.

He said that since ASEAN was in the midst of working out its stand, his country would find out the group's strategy before forming its own.

Since Britain was aligned to the European Economic Community, it would also move in step with these countries, he added.

"But in the past, we have participated fully with ASEAN and have always taken care to keep in step with ASEAN," he said.

Bentley said that despite Britain's derecognition of the Pol Pot regime, there was no doubt about its basic position--that Kampuchea was illegally invaded and occupied by Vietnam, and that the international community should pressure Vietnam to back out.

The derecognition was due to public pressure in Britain over the atrocities committed by the Pol Pot regime against its own people.

"But our decision is not in any way a move towards recognition of the Heng Samrin rule," he added.

TURKISH FORCES IN NORTH CONDUCT MILITARY EXERCISES

TA021138 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Text] The military exercises codenamed "Reformist Ataturk-2" were held in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus today. Both ground and air forces participated in the exercises, which were undertaken by the Turkish peace forces in Cyprus. They were held in the areas covering Yenicekoy [Petra Tou Dhiyeni] and Serdarli [Chatos] to the east of Lefkosa [Nicosia], and Yilmazkoy [Skilloura] and Kordemen [Kondemeneos] in Girne [Kyrenia]. The commander of the Turkish peace forces in Cyprus, Turkish Cypriot Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay, some ministers and the local population watched the exercises. A display of military equipment and supplies was held in field tents following the exercises, for the benefit of the public.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS HELD IN NICOSIA 2 JUNE

NC021748 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Text] A new meeting in the framework of the intercommunal talks is being held at the Ledra Palace Hotel in which an appraisal of the talks so far is being made. In a statement made before the meeting, the second of the seventh round of the talks, representative of the Greek Cypriot side Ioannidhis said that each side will have the opportunity to put forward its views on the talks and expressed the conviction that this will be useful. In answer to a question what he expects after the elections on the Turkish side are over, Ioannidhis said that he expects that the Turkish Cypriot side will submit proposals on the territorial issue and that when these proposals are submitted we will be led to a constructive and substantive dialogue. Ioannidhis described the various reports that there are plans which will be submitted next month or later as conjectures and added that there is nothing concrete.

Turkish Cypriot interlocutor Onan said that the aim of today's meeting is to make an appraisal of the two sides' positions and to examine the points that have been brought up by the two sides so that they may become more understandable and acceptable by both sides. Commenting on reports on developments next month, Onan said that reports about this are conjecture and that there is nothing to report for the time being. Of course, he added, after the elections there will be moves by both sides, and I expect each side will reassess its positions and we will restart the talks with a new impetus. To a question if he will submit proposals on the territorial issue next month, Onan said the proposals will be submitted on all issues. However, he refrained from saying when this will be done. Today's meeting of the interlocutors is being presided over by the UN secretary general's acting deputy special representative in Cyprus, Schlitter.

UN Statement

NC021933 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Excerpt] A UN statement issued after the [12 June intercommunal] talks said that an unofficial exchange of views was held at today's session and that the next meeting will be held on 8 July at 1700. At that meeting, the discussion will continue on practical measures, promotion of good will and mutual confidence and the return to normal conditions.

COUP PLAN REPORTEDLY DETECTED, FOILED IN ATHENS

EDIK Deputy Charges Plot

NC030736 Paris AFP in English 0725 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Athens, 3 Jun (AFP)--Active and retired Greek military officers planned a coup d'etat for Monday night, but gave up the idea when they realized that Greece's Government had been made aware of their plans, an opposition member of Parliament said last night.

The deputy, Union of Democratic Center [EDIK] Party member Constantine Bandouvas, said the officers planned to kidnap President Konstandinos Karamanlis, Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis, Parliament Chairman Dhimitrios Papaspirou, several ministers, members of the military high command and political party leaders.

One of their first actions, Mr Bandouvas said, would have been to free the colonels who held power from 1967 to 1974 from the Koridallos prison between Athens and Piraievs.

At least 10 coups have been plotted since the 1974 return of Mr Karamanlis from exile in France, said Mr Bandouvas, who represents a constituency from the island of Crete.

Defence Minster Evangelos Averof confirmed the plot, but denied that active officers had been involved. He did not deny, however, that retired officers could have participated. Mr Averof also ridiculed Mr Bandouvas' insinuations that he may have harbored sympathies for the plotters, saying he was among those on the target list of the conspirators.

Mr Averof said all was calm in the country, and paid homage to the armed forces for what he called their sense of discipline and good morale. He also called attention to the efforts of Mr Karamanlis' ruling New Democracy Party to solidify democracy in Greece.

Defense Minister Denial

NC022049 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Text] This evening, Greek National Defense Minister Averof categorically denied that a coup was going to be held in the country, that it had been postponed at the last moment or that that was the reason he had ordered the military readiness in the Attikis area.

In his statement, in response to a Chamber of Deputies question asked by EDIK [Democratic Center Union] Deputy Badouvas, Averof stressed that no case of insubordination or suspicious intentions on the part of active officers has come to the knowledge of the government or the security authorities since July 1974, when strictest sanctions were imposed. The situation, Averof stressed, is absolutely calm and secure. The military administration, with its strict sense of merit and healthy-minded officers, has shielded Greece with a remarkable army.

PAPANDREOU, RALLIS CLASH OVER GOVERNMENT'S ROLE

NC021534 Athens NEWS in English 2 Jun 81 pp 1, 4

[All quotation marks as received]

[Text] Late last night the PASOK press office made public an "open letter" from PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou to Prime Minister Rallis. The letter is dated 1 June, and in it, the PASOK leader contends that "the present government has ceased to represent even the minority 41.84 percent of the electorate...and consequently it is mandatory that Parliament be dissolved and new elections held. Your continuation in power," Papandreou writes, "constitutes a usurpation."

The letter goes on to claim that the prime minister on his own initiative had launched a re-election struggle full of "vote-hunting junkets" and government spending which is part of no development program or economic policy. "In this atypical re-election effort which you yourself have launched," Papandreou writes, "you spare no effort to bring to a conclusion national matters of the highest importance to our country--like the agreement on the status of the American bases in Greece--and to legislate in critical areas such as higher education. Simultaneously public corporations and organizations undertake the signing of agreements that aim to" limit the choices of the future government in areas of vital importance.

The PASOK chairman then accuses the prime minister of "monopolizing the media" by pretending that his appearances have no campaign character, thus violating one of the basic rules of the functioning of the democratic system. You must "recognize that your government is essentially a transition government," Parandreou writes, adding that he intended to present the above position to the president of the republic who, the letter claims, was careful to give the government he headed such a service character" prior to the 1977 elections.

In conclusion, the PASOK chairman holds the prime minister responsible for avoiding elections to unjustifiably prolong the life of his government to the detriment of the national interest. You must in any case announce immediately the date for elections... and refrain from undertaking binding committments" which will impede the work of the new government, the letter concludes.

Late last night Prime Minister Rallis issued a statement characterizing Papandreou's letter as an insult to the accepted constitutional practice. For no more, no less but the duly elected government which enjoys the confidence of Parliament is asked to cease governing, and the party which received only 25 percent of the popular vote demands to be appointed some kind of supergovernment. These weird views, the statement maintains, show lack of respect for our system of government and lack of responsibility.

In no parliamentary country were there ever such strange constitutional views set forth in this manner, the statement alleges, adding that the PASOK chairman's letter seeks to deny him (the prime minister) the right to communicate with the public, knowing full well that in every democracy the prime minister has not only the right but the duty to do so.

As for Papandreou's allegation about vote-oriented spending, one look at PASOK's platform would indicate that the PASOK chairman has some cheek to make such an accusation, the statement says in effect, adding that an agreement about the bases would be a vast improvement over the present state of affairs and that he (Mr Rallis) is not the kind of prime minister who would postpone the signing of an agreement so vital to our national defense. Concerning the education bill, the statement says that it had been agreed by all sides in Parliament--including that of Mr Papandreou--that such legislation was necessary. Mr Papandreou must have forgotten what he had said on the subject before Parliament and must have changed his position, the statement charged, adding that until Parliament is dissolved the government to exercise [as published] all the authority given to it by the constitution and the country will be governed responsibly.

The EEC parliamentary delegation, which arrived in Turkey yesterday, will start official talks tomorrow. The delegation consists of Gerd Ludwig Lemmer (Federal German, Christian Democrat), Jean Francois Pintat (French, Liberal) and James Spicer (British, Conservative), with M. Waltersdorff acting as secretary.

COUNCIL RESTATES PROHIBITIONS ON POLITICAL ACTIVITY

TA021753 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 2 Jun 81

[National Security Council Decision No 52]

[Text] At a time when treacherous ideological and physical attacks against the existence, independence and regime of the state of the Turkish Republic were continuing extensively and violently and at a time when there was no alternative for our nation, the Turkish Armed Forces--through its chain of command--seized the administration following an order. The reasons necessitating the 12 September operation and its goals were announced to the public in National Security Council Communique No 1 and in the Council president's speech broadcast on radio and television on 12 September. An extraordinary situation and extraordinary conditions necessitate extraordinary measures. Therefore, with National Security Council Communique No 1 the parliament and government were dissolved, the immunity of parliament members was lifted and martial law was declared throughout the country.

According to Article 1 of National Security Council Communique No 7, political party activities were prohibited. As was pointed out in the speech made by the National Security Council president on 12 September, this prohibition meant that all political activities would stop at all levels. This general political activity prohibition, imposed in a bid to secure as soon as possible the tranquillity needed by the country and to preserve this tranquillity, affects party administrators, former parliament members and all party members. Given the situation, it has been noticed that statements are being made and publications issued with the aim of criticizing, praising or blaming those who have, through their negative behavior played a role in creating and exacerbating the conditions which led the country to the 11 September situation. Furthermore, it has been noticed that former parliamentarians, political party administrators and party members are making statements and commentaries on past, present and future situations, are holding special meetings--which appear to be political demonstrations--at public places and are reporting them to the public for political purposes.

As has been announced by Law No 2324 on the basic legal order, in accordance with Article No 124 of the 1961 Constitution--which is still valid with certain exceptions--certain freedoms should be curtailed and their use stopped when deemed necessary. Therefore, all kinds of party activities at all levels have been prohibited with the aim of enabling the 12 September operation to achieve its goals. In addition, the following have also been prohibited:

1. The continuation of political disputes among political parties, whose activities have been prohibited, and party members.

2. Oral or written statements or articles by political party members who were parliament members on 11 September 1980 and by political party administrators and members at every level expressing views on the political or legal structure of Turkey, past or future. Meetings held by those persons for the same purpose.

3. Arguments concerning prohibitions and decisions by martial law commands in the implementation of martial law.

4. Writing articles, making oral or written statements or making comments that might mislead public opinion concerning political parties and workers groups, professional groups and associations and political figures who are being investigated pending their public prosecution.

5. Commentaries and publications concerning persons under public prosecution until their conviction or acquittal. A summary or full report on the public trials can be published as long as it is true.

6. Legal action will be taken against persons who violate these prohibitions. The action will be taken in accord with Article 16 or martial law No 1402 even if their action involves another offence.

[Signed] Gen Kenan Evren, head of state, chief of the General Staff and National Security Council president; Gen Nurettin Ersin, Ground Forces commander and National Security Council member; Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya, Air Forces commander and National Security Council member; Adm Nejat Tumer, Naval Forces commander and National Security Council member; and Gen Sedat Celasun, Gendarme Forces commander and National Security Council member.

COUNCIL APPROVES BILLS ON CIVIL CODE, WEAPONS

TA012041 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 1 Jun 81

[Excerpt] The National Security Council has enacted into law a bill which envisages the setting up of committees to review and update the Turkish civil code. Under the law, committees composed of experts will be set up to modernize the language of the civil code and revise some of its articles.

The National Security Council also enacted into law a bill saying that all weapons, explosives and other items which, under the law, must be handed in to military and administrative officials, must then be placed under the control of the National Defense Ministry. This law will be in force retroactively to 29 September 1980.

GENDARME COMMANDER RETURNS FROM U.S. VISIT

TA021701 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Text] National Security Council member and Gendarmerie Commander Gen Sedat Celasun returned to Turkey today after concluding his contacts in Washington. In the United States, Celasun met with the U.S. secretaries of justice, state and defense. According to information received by our correspondent, the possibilities for cooperation in the field of fighting terrorism were reviewed and the subject of narcotics smuggling was discussed. General Celasun was received in Istanbul by Governor Nevzat Ayaz and high-ranking officers. He then left Istanbul for Ankara.

KREIKSY ON MIDEAST SETTLEMENT, GULF SECURITY

JN021128 Doha QNA in Arabic 1040 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Text] Doha, 2 Jun (QNA)--In a statement published here today, Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky called upon the major powers not to interfere in the Gulf area for the sake of preserving world peace. The maintenance of the security and peace of the area is the responsibility of its own countries, he said.

Kreisky said that the Gulf would continue to be a major and important source of energy for the world. Therefore, it must be preserved, especially by the major powers. Kreisky expressed the belief that the USSR has expansionist designs on the Middle East and the Gulf area to secure oil resources.

In this statement, which was published in the Qatari paper AL-'ARAB, Kreiksy denied the existence of an alternative initiative to the Camp David accords in which Austria, the Soviet Union, the United States and Romania would participate. However, the failure to reach a quick solution to the Middle East problems might lead to a third world war, he warned.

The Austrian chancellor affirmed that any step to achieve peace in the Middle East must take into consideration the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, being the crux of the problem in the area.

Kreisky explained that, in order to avoid a new war, Israel must understand the significance of Arab rights and the Palestinians and Israelis must show a complete desire to reach a just and lasting peace guaranteeing the Palestinian people's rights and Israel's security. Kreiksy expressed his belief that a solution of the Palestinian problem would lead to a solution of the Lebanese problem.

Kreiksy called for recognition of the PLO, saying: This will facilitate reaching a formula for peace. Kreisky expressed the opinion that world public opinion would recognize the organization once faced with a fait accompli.

Kreiksy refuted Zionist claims on Palestine, saying: Although I am a Jew, I do not believe in dual loyalty at the expense of Palestinian interests. I am also against the usurpation of rights and aggression.

NICARAGUA'S D'ESCOTO MEETS OFFICIALS, ENDS VISIT

Television Interview

AU031125 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1950 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Christian Schueller interview with Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto Brockman in Vienna, no date given--recorded, D'Escoto answers in Spanish with German translation superimposed]

[Text] [Moderator Robert Hochner] The hopes that in Nicaragua a model democracy after the European pattern would develop have not come true. The governing Sandinists have seized more and more power for themselves after initial attempts to establish a pluralist regime. There will not be any elections for a long time to come. The government at present regards as its most important goal the economic reconstruction of the ravaged and ruined country. Europe and, specifically, Austria are helping it in this endeavor. A factor of decisive importance, however, is the attitude of the United States under President Reagan. To date, it seems as if the United States, owing to its confrontation with the Soviet Union, also views the conflicts in the Third World from the position of superpower rivalry. We have asked Nicaragua's foreign minister, who is in Vienna on a visit, how he assesses his country's relations with the United States.

[D'Escoto] Our friends, the North Americans, have a fundamental problem. They are simply unable to understand that in our world there are other problems besides the East-West conflict. The political history of the whole world cannot simply be reduced to this one conflict. We in the developing countries, we in Latin America, we have our own problems, and it would be highly dangerous to attach the label of the East-West conflict to all our problems.

[Schueller] Several European countries, including Austria, have repeatedly expressed their sympathy for the revolution in Nicaragua. Now that the Americans have cancelled their economic aid for Nicaragua, should the Europeans mediate between them and the United States?

[D'Escoto] Europe's position regarding the revolution is of tremendous importance to us. We have very good relations with a number of European countries which in turn have very good relations with the United States. Hence, we have repeatedly asked our European friends to try to promote understanding in the United States, understanding for the fact that the revolutions in the various countries of Latin America should be judged against the background of their specific history, so that the Americans do not stick to that absurd theory according to which anything that happens in Latin America is due to some outside pressure, or even pressure from the Soviet Union. For, we are not anti-American. We are for independence. If, however, advocating independence is regarded as amounting to an anti-American attitude--well, yes, then we are anti-American. But we do not believe that, if one wants to be independent, it necessarily follows that he has to be anti-American.

Press Conference Remarks

PA031412 Paris AFP in Spanish 1355 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Vienna, 3 Jun (AFP)--Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto Brockman, who is on an official visit to Vienna, met here today with the two principal figures of the Austrian Government, Chancellor Bruno Kreisky and President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger.

During a press conference, the Nicaraguan foreign minister underlined that Managua "maintains good relations with the USSR and does not dismiss [the possibility of] the purchase of Soviet arms."

However, he refused to comment on reports about the delivery by the USSR of tanks and fighter planes to Nicaragua.

Dinner Toasts Reported

AU031425 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 3 Jun 81 p 5

[APA report on toasts by Austrian Foreign Minister Pahr and Nicaraguan Foreign Minister d'Escoto at Vienna dinner on 2 Jun--"Austria Helps Nicaragua on the Path of Freedom"]

[Text] Vienna--Austria, which has had to struggle for a long time for its own independence and for social justice, followed Nicaragua's freedom struggle 2 years ago with admiration. We know here how difficult it is and how long it takes after years of terror and dictatorship to establish an order that complies both with the principles of justice and with the principles of a pluralist democracy. This was stated by Foreign Minister Pahr at a dinner [in Vienna on 2 June] given in honor of Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto Brockman.

Within the framework of its possibilities, Austria is ready to support Nicaragua on this path. It should be a path that secures for the country freedom from any hegemony and genuine independence. Such a path could set an example for many countries, Pahr continued.

He mentioned in this context Guatemala and San Salvador in particular: "We believe that these problems can be solved only if the peoples of these countries are given the opportunity to determine their fate for themselves. And we resolutely reject any interference from outside, wherever it may come from."

Pahr expressed his admiration for Nicaragua's cultural development, especially for the literacy campaign, recalled the visit to Austria last October by Culture Minister Ernesto Cardinal, and especially stressed the contribution of Austrian development helpers to Nicaragua's health service. At present, 28 Austrians are contributing, making personal sacrifices, toward improving the life of the people of Nicaragua, he said.

Minister d'Escoto expressed thanks for Austria's understanding but also for the substantial aid Austria has rendered to Nicaragua. Democratization invariably leads to pluralism, but after 40 years of the Somoza regime, that is not a matter of course, he said, and critically discussed the role of the United States. In conclusion, D'Escoto expressed appreciation for the fact that Chancellor Kreisky had personally taken over chairmanship of the Solidarity Committee for Nicaragua, and called for intensified trade between the two countries as well as for joint projects.

At a working talk with Pahr, the Nicaraguan guest stressed that his country was seeking to establish good relations with as many countries as possible.

Departure for Budapest

PA031944 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1620 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Vienna, 3 Jun (EFE)--Nicaragua is disposed to acquire arms to defend its revolution, Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto Brockman stated here today. The minister, who today ended his official 3-day visit to the Austrian capital, declined to confirm whether his country has received tanks from the USSR.

D'Escoto said that Nicaragua is a free and sovereign country and is entitled to buy arms when and where it wants, for "defensive" purposes.

According to the Nicaraguan minister, his country wanted to buy three helicopters from the United States, but this country withdrew two of the aircraft when they were about to be transferred, alleging that the respective documents were not in order. D'Escoto recalled that Nicaragua was occupied several times by the United States and ironically assured the U.S. State Department that "Nicaragua is not going to invade it and is not going to declare war on the United States."

The Nicaraguan foreign minister said that his country "has good relations with the USSR and would like to have good relations with the United States."

"For this," he said, "it is necessary that the United States respect our country's right of self-determination and realize that we are not willing to be a pawn on their board."

The Nicaraguan minister said that the European countries "clearly understand the big mistake which the United States is making when they group all the problems of the Third World within the East-West conflict.

The plans for the development of Nicaragua with Austrian participation include forestry and lumber industry projects.

D'Escoto, who is accompanied by Haroldo Montealegre, minister of international reconstruction fund, met today in Austria with President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger, Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, and Austrian Primate Franz Koenig. The Nicaraguan foreign minister, who was very impressed with the personality of Kirchschlaeger, left today for Budapest.

PLO DELEGATION ARRIVES TO STUDY KHADIR'S DEATH

LD021506 Brussels Domestic Service in French 1600 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Text] A PLO delegation, led by the director-general of the PLO's Political Department, arrived in Brussels today. It will study the political consequences of the assassination of Brussels representative Na'im Khadir. Meetings are planned with officials of the Belgian Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Arab diplomats assigned to Brussels. The delegation will also raise the question of future protection for the PLO's liaison office in the capital.

STEEL CONTROVERSY COULD CAUSE POLITICAL INCIDENT

LD011533 Brussels LE SOIR in French 26 May 81 pp 1, 2

[J.V.S. report: "Steel and the Index Remain Serious Threats to Eyskens Cabinet"]

[Text] It is not yet possible to determine what the effects on the government and the majority will be of the employers representatives' decision to end their participation in the "roundtable" discussions on the new industrial policy. In any case the prime minister seems fully determined not to allow himself to be disconcerted.

The timetable for the coming week will be somewhat upset by the long Ascension Day weekend. For instance a cabinet meeting has been called for Tuesday. It will not only replace the traditional Friday cabinet meeting but also the no-less traditional inner cabinet meeting on Mondays.

Indeed, several ministers, and not junior ministers, will have to take part in the chamber debate. Our deputies are having an extraordinary session this Monday to open discussion on the draft programming law. It should be recalled that the latter is aimed at introducing new curbs on state spending and revenue. Following last week's "roundtable" incidents, Mark Eyskens will probably be anxious to show that he is still fully determined to survive.

Indeed there could be fairly serious clashes at any time both over the iron and steel industry and over the enterprises' production costs and wage indexing. The Socialist Party's French-speaking socialists are still demanding that the implementation of the steel decisions be speeded up, but their partners say they want to avoid any waste.

It should be noted, however, that national Defense Minister Frank Swaelen, speaking to the Limburg Christian People's Party [CVP], spelled out a warning to those who might be tempted to make the iron and steel affair into a "community" issue. He stressed that the people of Limburg must realize that half of the Campine Region's coke is intended for Walldon steel. The people of Antwerp should also realize that 20 percent of traffic through the capital's port is linked with Walldon steel. Mr Swaelen then explained that when the agreement on Walldon iron and steel industry is ratified, the Flemish factories in the sector, such as Alz-Genk and Sidmar-Gand, should obtain identical facilities.

For his part CVP Chairman Leo Tendemans repeated that the agreement on the iron and steel industry depends on many conditions since it is still necessary to negotiate with the banks, the trade unions, the employers and so forth. He also made some rather harsh remarks about the authors of the Maribel project: "It is merely a system produced by a computer. It is full of mistakes and psychological errors."

Finally, let's report the statements made by PS Chairman Guy Spitaels on Saturday to the congress held by his party's Verviers Federation. If the "roundtable" discussions fail, particularly because of the employers representatives' departure, the government will shoulder its responsibilities alone, but not before a final decision has been taken on the iron and steel industry, in other words not before the matter has been passed on to the European Commission and the financing company.

In short, a major political incident could arise at any time.

NETHERLANDS

PARTIES' ATTITUDES ON NEW COALITION REVIEWED

LD020827 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 29 May 81 p 3

[Own correspondent report]

[Text] The Hague--The Labor Party (PVDA) and the Democrats '66 (D'66) are striving for the swift formation of a cabinet comprising these two parties and the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA). But according to Chairmen Den Uyl (PVDA) and Terlouw (D'66) this coalition would then have to reach agreement on a "different program" than that of the present government. The CDA and the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy (VVD) envisage another approach. The CDA is considering the appointment of a negotiation leader or possibly two to formulate a plan to restore the national economy and then to see which parties would be willing to participate in implementing it. Finally the VVD, through its new parliamentary leader Wiegel, has advocated cabinet formation on the basis of a plan with its main emphasis on the financial and socioeconomic fields.

The split in the first formation exchanges lies between the PVDA and D'66 on the one hand and the CDA and VVD on the other, with their idea of a government formed on the basis of a plan for economic recovery. A number of names, especially of Christian Democrats, are being mentioned as likely candidates for the work of negotiation leader. "But no one really knows what Van Agt is thinking," a CDA chamber member said yesterday.

The outgoing prime minister and new CDA parliamentary party chairman has been given carte blanche by the parliamentary party to mention in his advice to the queen today the names of those who he would like to see as negotiation leaders.

The CDA member quoted above also spoke of a "Zijlstra scenario," which would amount to an elimination process in which the PVDA would be the first to be excluded. If D'66 adhered to its position of not forming a cabinet with the CDA and the VVD, then this party would also be excluded, after which a new CDA/VVD government under Van Agt would be able to be formed with the help of one of the small Christian parties.

Van Agt will probably continue with the program of the outgoing cabinet even though the CDA and VVD no longer have a parliamentary majority.

The first names of possible negotiation leaders began to circulate in The Hague on Wednesday. The VVD was least secretive. It mentioned as possibilities Netherlands Bank President Zijlstra, who is leaving his post soon, and Socioeconomic Council Chairman De Pous. In CDA circles the names of former Chairman Steenkamp, Social Affairs Minister Albeda, former Internal Affairs Minister in the Den Uyl cabinet De Gaay Fortuman, Sr and also that of Zijlstra were circulating. But it is Van Agt and not the party who will decide which names will be mentioned in his audience with the queen today.

The CDA wants a Christian Democrat or perhaps two as negotiation leader. The VVD is also in favor of a Christian Democrat, but has made the condition that it must be someone with a knowledge of financial and economic affairs and someone who is not active in politics. This VVD statement leaves a lot of room for Zijlstra, but not for Albeda, who is a minister. Den Uyl has said that for his part a Christian Democrat negotiation leader is a possibility.

But reports from PVDA circles indicate rather that they consider Zijlstra to be an unfortunate choice if the intention is to form a CDA, PVDA and D'66 cabinet. And the PVDA would also be less well-disposed to a member of the Van Agt cabinet (Albeda again), because such a negotiation leader would be too much identified with the policies of the Van Agt cabinet.

D'66 does not seem to have any major objections to a CDA negotiation leader. D'66 is in favor of a cabinet with the PVDA and CDA. But the democrats were keeping silent about the sort of advice which party leader Terlouw would be offering today. The secrecy of the parliamentary party meeting of the D'66, which has always been a fiery champion of openness, was greater on Wednesday than that of any of the other three main parties.

But the PVDA and D'66 are little interested in a government formation based on a plan for national economic recovery, as advocated by Van Agt and Wiegel. In the first unofficial reactions to the CDA and VVD udeas a PVDA member said: "Then we will make a plan of our own." Terlouw said that he was afraid of "shortcuts" and also said that he was afraid that time would be wasted in forming a government when "impossibilities" were still being pursued, in which he included the expansion of the present coalition to include D'66.

The PVDA party committee will meet 14 June for the first time since the elections to decide on its position. The new PVDA parliamentary party has already designated Den Uyl as its negotiator in the coming talks on a government formation with a mandate to strive for a cabinet with the CDA and D'66.

SCHMIDT DISCUSSES RELATIONS WITH MOSCOW, DETENTE

DW031154 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1900 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Report on Reporter Ernst-Dieter Lueg interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, date and place not given; questions slightly abbreviated, with Schmidt's answers recorded]

[Text] [Question] Lately, you have been exposed to massive criticism and attacks from Moscow. How is detente policy, which is having a hard time anyway, supposed to get moving again? Hasn't it actually come to an end, seeing that the atmosphere has deteriorated?

[Answer] No, I prefer not to look at it like that. I would say first of all that the dialogue between West and East must be maintained in every case and at all times. At a time when the ability of the two world powers to hold a dialogue was very handicapped by the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan, the visit by Mr Genscher and myself to Moscow in early summer last year made a special contribution to the fact that this dialogue did not peter out. I am quite certain that the dialogue must be continued between the Soviet Union and the FRG. We will support that and the Russians will also, although the dialogue between Moscow and Bonn--as important as it may be--isn't the most important matter. The most important thing takes place between Moscow and Washington.

[Question] TASS has written that it actually would be better to sacrifice two politicians instead of further pursuing the wrong policy. These "two politicians" probably mean you and the vice chancellor. Isn't that basically an intolerable interference in German policy? TASS is an official organ and not a journalistic one.

[Answer] I haven't seen that. If it was written like that and if it involved Mr Genscher and myself, I would consider it unfriendly. I am quite certain that, at the next opportunity, Mr Gromyko will do away with the issue with a wave of his hand.

[Question] You have said that you would stand or fall with NATO's dual decision and that no mock negotiations should take place, but really successful negotiations. In saying this, haven't you linked yourself to the fate of the two superpowers who decide on such things?

[Answer] The two superpowers are our fate anyway, not just the fate of the Germans, but of the Europeans as a whole as regards nuclear armament and the balance, but we are certainly not completely without influence. We started things off in Moscow--a year ago now--to bring matters at least to the point where the Russians are prepared to negotiate. They said for more than half a year that they would not discuss the subject. And the Americans needed some time after the change of presidents to adapt--a new government, a new minister, new officials--but I have no doubts at all that they will negotiate.

For me, it is important that there not merely be negotiations so as to be able to say that talks are being held, but that there be negotiations with the serious will to achieve a negotiated balance.

When General Secretary Brezhnev was last in Bonn in May 1978--he will probably visit us a second time this fall since we invited him in July--he signed a statement together with me, saying that an approximate balance ought to be aimed for regarding nuclear as well as conventional arms. Unfortunately, in the matter of the SS-20 missiles, the Soviet Union didn't adhere to the self-set guideline in the 36 months since May 1978. That makes the matter somewhat complicated.

You mentioned detente. I am firmly convinced that, on the basis of a military balance of forces, detente remains an urgent necessity for the world, for Europe--by the way, that is how it was stated in the ministerial council decision of the ministers of the North Atlantic alliance, which President Reagan and I explicitly supported a few days ago.

[Question] Detente could be discussed if SPD Chairman Willy Brandt goes to Moscow in the coming weeks. Isn't that also an attempt on the part of the Soviets to drive a wedge into German politics, in the SPD as well as the Western alliance?

[Answer] If that were an attempt to drive a wedge, it would be a foolish attempt. They wouldn't achieve anything thereby. But the people in Moscow aren't that foolish. At any rate, Mr Brezhnev wouldn't want to play things in that fashion. No. I consider it a means on Brezhnev's part to obtain advance information on what he will have to face on the whole from the Western side. This visit to Moscow by my friend Willy Brandt will take place in coordination with the ideas of the Federal Government. In other words, he will take along what we think and he will bring back what the Russians presently think. I think--and I want to stress this very much--that a dialogue between West and East on many levels is urgently desirable, not merely a dialogue between communist parties.

[Question] If Mr Brezhnev should come, what could actually be discussed in view of the significance you attribute to detente policy? A moratorium cannot be discussed; the Federal Government has rejected that. A bit more or a bit less of NATO's dual decision, that doesn't exist either. Nothing is left for you in the end but to strongly win the Soviet Union over for a disarmament dialogue with the Americans.

[Answer] What you said last is certainly an important point, but not the only one. I want to say once again most clearly: We Germans are vitally interested with a view to our fate, which could be decided on by nuclear armament in East and West, in the successful holding of disarmament talks. We will make our contribution to this in bilateral talks, certainly not behind the back of our own alliance partners, but in coordination with them.

But the necessity of German-Soviet talks existed long before the problem of the Soviet missiles and the correct Western response to them had appeared on the horizon. This necessity always exists. There are quite a number of individual projects where there is cooperation. I can imagine much more of it taking place in the cultural field than there has been so far. There is economic cooperation and there are bilateral political consultations. There are international--or as one calls them, multilateral consultations. We have many things to discuss with the Soviet Union. We talk to each other every month, but not always at the so-called top level. I am most interested in a continuation of top level talks to eliminate such nonsense as remarks by a news agency about the qualities of politicians of the opposite country. In fact, this affair illustrates the respect for our adamant and undeviating policy.

PARLIAMENTARIANS MEET WITH USSR'S PONOMAREV

FDP's Mischnick

LD031058 Hamburg DPA in German 1031 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 3 Jun (DPA)--The chairman of the FDP Bundestag Group, Wolfgang Mischnick, discussed disarmament and arms control matters with Soviet official Boris Ponomarev in Bonn today. According to the Bundestag Group, Mischnick stressed the Federal Republic's interest in East-West disarmament negotiations. He also rejected Soviet attacks on Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

SPD Group

LD031638 Hamburg DPA in German 1217 GMT 3 May 81

[Text] Bonn (DPA)--At the invitation of Soviet Ambassador Vladimir Semenov, members of the SPD Bundestag Group met with Boris Ponomarev today. The Bundestag Group said that among those who spoke with the influential Soviet official were Deputy Chairmen of the Bundestag Group Horst Ehmke and Hans-Juergen Wischnewski.

SPOKESMAN REJECTS NAVAL-BASED NUCLEAR MISSILES

LD031736 Hamburg DPA in German 1645 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Stuttgart, 3 Jun (DPA)--Lothar Ruehl, government deputy spokesman, believes naval-based medium-range missiles would be very tricky in the political sense. In an interview for Thursday's edition of STUTTGARTER NACHRICHTEN, he said a (?maritime solution) could lead to a "finger on the nuclear button" if the United States, which is short of ships and men, asked its European allies to provide ships and crews as well as finance. For the Federal Republic, naval-based medium-range missiles would be a return to the multinational integrated nuclear naval force project which was abandoned in 1964. This force had been planned and rejected at the time. For good reasons, the Federal Republic had, once and for all, ruled out participation in the U.S. nuclear deterrent.

An edited version of the interview was prereleased to DPA.

OPPOSITION SPOKESMAN, MINISTERS ADDRESS BUNDESTAG

Woerner Criticism

LD031322 Hamburg DPA in German 0952 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 3 Jun (DPA)--The deputy chairman of the CDU/CSU Bundestag Group and opposition defense spokesman, Manfred Woerner, strongly attacked Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Defense Minister Hans Apel in the Bundestag budget debate today. Woerner accused the chancellor of lacking "forward-looking leadership" and said that he had thrown away the state's capacity to act. "We are all afraid that you won't be able to get a grip on things again." He said that the crisis in the SPD is extending to the state and it is the ordinary people who are having to foot the bill.

According to Woerner, there is now less internal and external security. He called for a new policy of active safeguarding of peace, which links together the prevention of conflicts, the containment of Soviet expansion and the offer of worldwide cooperation within a comprehensive overall strategy. He said that a vigorous campaign is necessary to enlighten youth and the population at large on the connection between the safeguarding of peace and defense and also on the Bundeswehr and the alliance.

Woerner said that Apel obviously is no longer concerning himself with the threat. "His primary interest is obviously no longer the combat readiness of the armed forces."

Genscher on Arms Control, GDR

LD031645 Hamburg DPA in German 1446 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Bonn (DPA)--Speaking in the Bundestag budget debate today, Federal Foreign Minister Genscher deprecated arms exports to developing countries. Whoever speaks of disarmament and arms control, he said, should ask himself whether the Federal Republic should help to militarize the Third World. It is not enough to practice restraint, he admitted. Leadership is required, for example, in the United Nations. The aim should be to make an arms exports ban the central point of arms control.

On the subject of arms control, he called on the Soviet Union to make commitments, once undertaken, verifiable. Only thus can tangible progress be achieved.

The minister mentioned all major themes of foreign policy, he reemphasized the serious desire, as he sees it, of the new U.S. administration for arms control and serious negotiations with the Soviet Union.

Genscher also called for the continuation of the dialogue with the GDR. "We remain interested in making progress in our relationship with the GDR." The object should be to preserve and not to jeopardize what has been achieved. He stressed that, given improved relations, the Federal Republic and the GDR together can help to improve the international situation.

Apel Assurances

LD031722 Hamburg DPA in German 1649 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 3 Jun (DPA)--The Bundeswehr's preparedness is secure despite all economies, Defense Minister Hans Apel told the Bundestag today. "We are fulfilling our NATO obligations," he said. He rejected statements made by Air Force Inspector Friedrich Obleser before a parliamentary committee last week.

Obleser had said that abandoning the Roland air defense system would prejudice the air defense of the Federal Republic. In emergencies, the new Tornado combat plane would be left unprotected on airfields. Because of the economies, the air force would be unable to fully implement its defense mission. Correcting him, Apel told the Bundestag that even before the conference on arms programs last March, senior officers had recommended abandoning the Roland weapons system for the air force and navy.

Apel insisted that with 153 flying hours a year, FRG pilots would remain in the top NATO class. He spoke of the "excellent state" of the armed forces. Alluding to other data about flying hours, mentioned by the air force, Apel said after being pressed by deputies, that the staff advising Obleser had seriously miscalculated.

FDP OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON SAUDI ARMS REQUESTS

LD031350 Hamburg DPA in German 1213 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 3 Jun (DPA)--The defense and foreign policy spokesman of the FDP Bundestag Group, Juergen Moellemann, believes that the Federal Government will meet Saudi Arabia's request for German arms in the autumn. In an interview in QUICK magazine published today, Moellemann said that for the Federal Republic, Saudi Arabia is indispensable as a supplier of credits. The Saudis are prepared to grant the Federal Republic long-term, low interest credits, but only if the Federal Government meets their request for arms.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG VIEWS BREZHNEV VISIT

DW011011 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 30-31 May 81 p 4

[Commentary signed JR.: "Moscow Lures Brandt"]

[Text] Chancellor Schmidt often has claimed himself to be the discoverer of NATO's Eurostrategic missile gap. As early as in 1978, during the Bonn visit of Soviet party boss Brezhnev, he drew the latter's attention to the fact that the stepped-up deployment of the SS-20 medium-range missiles is bound to be felt as a threat. But Moscow sought to dispel these anxieties with vague offers such as that of a backward relocation of the SS-20 missiles and then was taken by surprise after all when NATO adopted the dual decision of counterarming with medium-range weapons should negotiations on these weapons fail.

Having been occupied with other problems such as Afghanistan and Poland, the Soviets obviously believed that the missile problem didn't require their renunciation of the arms race but could be solved by unleashing a campaign against Western counterarming. For the sake of retaining its military advantage, Moscow tried for a long time to evade negotiations, and Western politicians including Schmidt cultivated the optimism that once the two superpowers negotiated arming would no longer be necessary.

While at the White House, Schmidt joined President Reagan's course of relying more on one's own strength than on negotiations. And Moscow now sharply reprimands him for that. If viewed from Moscow's angle, the image of the chancellor must indeed appear to be vascillating: For as a consequence of the situation in the Federal Republic, the line he pursues isn't particularly straight. The degree of disappointment is indicated by the recollection of the German invasion 40 years ago and the charge that Schmidt is now using the "American language." Yet, the Soviets are aware that Schmidt isn't yet out of the woods in the SPD and that Willy Brandt again would like to be Brezhnev's interlocutor. The SPD chairman is travel happy, and thus Brezhnev perhaps needn't come to Bonn this year as announced.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG ON U.S. C-WEAPONS DECISION

DW251207 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 23-24 May 81 p 4

[Commentary signed TY.: "Caution, C-Weapons!"]

[Text] During Chancellor Schmidt's Washington visit, many an event was checked as to how it might affect the future development of German-American relations. This went as far as the appointment of the new U.S. ambassador to Bonn. Even though under such an aspect, the U.S. Senate decision on C weapons on Thursday coincided with the chancellor's visit only by chance. It is this very field--the explosive field of armament with chemcal weapons--where the next hotbed of crisis between Washington and Bonn might emerge. Too plain are the parallels between the U.S. attempt to enlarge the NATO C-weapons potentials and what agitates people by the catchword of counterarming, especially with respect to the medium-range systems.

First of all, in the case of the chemical agents, a gap to the advantage of the Warsaw Pact allegedly also exists which in Washington's view necessitates a Western counterarmament. Besides, the point at issue again is the stockpiling of the materiel in the Federal Republic. Likewise, an advance in "arms technology" seems to provide an important impulse again in this field as well: the development of so-called binary agents which can be produced, transported and stockpiled separately and which fuse to a combat agent only when they are launched. The Senate has just appropriated $20 million for the production of such weapons.

Finally, the public attitude toward C-weapons in Europe is similarly oppositional as it is toward the "refinement" of nuclear deterrence. In general, the threat from the East is being taken less seriously than in Reagan's United States. In the case of the C-weapons, the CDU/CSU already follows the U.S. course. It already has justified it in parliament. Hence, the protest probably will primarily hit the social-liberals again.

PREMIER COMMENTS ON NEED FOR PS-PCF NEGOTIATIONS

LD031029 Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Jun 81 p 8

[Text] Questioned on relations between the PS and PCF on Radio Luxembourg on Saturday, 30 May, Mauroy stated: "The PCF has a program whose divergences and inconsistencies have accentuated over the past 2 years. The crucial question is what is the position now. It isn't just a question of making statements, specific pledges must be made. In fact, a government cannot implement two policies at the same time. It can pursue only one policy--the one which reflects the options and orientations which are now those of France and the French people. A government must fully enforce an essential rule--that of government solidarity.... Solidarity doesn't just mean adopting measures which please people, which people expect and which correspond to a great hope, but it also means financing them. It isn't up to the premier to enter into the details of negotiations. The PS and PCF must meet, negotiate and reach conclusions."

CHEYSSON, CARRINGTON DESCRIBE PARIS TALKS

LD021249 Paris LE MONDE in French 30 May 81 p 4

[Text] "We have had very good talks," Foreign Office Secretary Lord Carrington stated after his first contact--2 hours of talks followed by dinner--with Cheysson, the new head of French diplomacy.

While stressing that Community problems must be "settled," Lord Carrington expressed the view that it wouldn't be reasonable to ask the new French Government to make decisions before it has had time to make a detailed study. It can, therefore, be assumed that the London government will not oppose the "period for reflection" on the Community reform for which the French external relations minister has expressed hopes in his statements to LE MONDE. The report which the Commission is preparing on this subject is to be given an initial examination at the European Council meeting on 29 June.

The talks between Cheysson and Carrington--the two ministers stressed this point--related to Community affairs but also to most of the major world problems, notably the Arab-Israeli conflict (and the "European initiative" for which Lord Carrington will be responsible for 6 months starting 1 July), Lebanon, the Madrid conference and East-West relations.

After the meeting, Cheysson stated: "I think it is oversimplifying matters when lamb, fish or accounts are regarded as the only possible subjects for talks between the British and the French within Europe. Just look at the spheres in which we have common interests. There is a great deal we can do together, for instance, in industrial policy."

"Last Sunday, President Mitterrand demonstrated his desire for close relations with Germany. That is one of our political constants. But we have every reason to have such close relations with others and I am very pleased that Lord Carrington has given me the opportunity to demonstrate that this evening.

"Let's not forget that France and Britian share a whole series of basic factors. We share a respect for democratic values. We are both powers with permanent seats in the Security Council having responsibility throughout the world. We have many problems to discuss together and, when you think about it, there are many sectors in which there is very remarkable diplomatic convergence between the United Kingdom and France."

We are allies of the Americans. Cheysson continued, "faithful and sure allies, but allies who have different stances on some problems--slightly different stances because in the Third World, for instance, there are elements on which we are close and on which our American friends differ slightly from us."

For his part, Lord Carrington said: "I believe that we can hope to take initiatives in the Community in the future, which will be much more important than the difficulties dividing us."

NICOSIA REPORTS MITTERRAND OFFER OF ASSISTANCE

NC040750 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0430 GMT 4 Jun 81

[Text] Referring to the Cyprus issue, French President Mitterrand has stressed his country's willingness to offer assistance if this could contribute toward a balanced conclusion of the intercommunal talks that would put an end to the tiral of the Cyrpus people.

As reported by the ATHENS NEWS AGENCY from Paris, the French president made this statement yesterday upon receiving the credentials of Petros Mikhailidhis, the new Cyprus ambassador to Paris.

In his statement, Mitterrand said that Cyprus-French relations took on a new dimension after the tragic events of 1974, which wounded the people of Cyprus and steeped them in mourning. Since that time, he added, the Cyprus question has remained a permanent matter of concern for France.

Mitterrand said his country has followed with attention all efforts aimed at giving peace and prosperity to Cyprus in accordance with the needs and legal claims of the island's two communities. France, he underlined, having condemned the resort to arms and the practice of faits accomplis, believes that a just and permanent solution can only be reached through negotiations between the interested parties.

The French president asked Mikhailidhis to convey to the president of the republic of Cyprus his personal wishes for the happiness and prosperity of the Cyprus people.

In presenting his credentials, the new ambassador lauded France's unreserved support of the principles of Cyprus' independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity and its stand on human rights which, in Cyprus, are being trampled upon by Turkey.

PISANI REPLACES CHEYSSON AS EC COMMISSIONER

LD031521 Paris LE MONDE in French 28 May 81 p 7

[Text] Edgard Pisani, a former minister and hitherto a PS senator, takes up his duties as a member of the European Community Commission on 27 May. He takes over as French commissioner from Claude Cheysson, who is external relations minister in Mauroy's government. Pisani's name was put forward by the French Government and accepted unanimously by the member states' governments on Tuesday, in keeping with the procedure laid down in the treaties.

The French Government has indicated that it would like Pisani to have Cheysson's responsibilities, in other words, for him to be in charge of cooperation and development (relations with the Third World states which have agreements with the Community). The Commission, which is chaired by Thorn (Luxembourg) is to take a decision on that today.

Ortoli is the other French member of the Commission.

LE MATIN VIEWS PCF'STRATAGEM' TO MINIMIZE LOSSES

LD031401 Paris LE MATIN in French 26 May 81 p 2

[Editorial: "PCF Spider Stratagem"]

[Text] "Only silence is great. Everything else is weakness." Every schoolboy who has reached the second grade knows this motto. It is also one of the golden rules for anyone wanting to gain power or hoping to retain it. By adopting an image of calm strength, Francois Mitterrand undoubtedly won more votes than if he had used the same tone as Jaures and the Popular Front, as he did in 1974.

Georges Marchais and the PCF leaders were unaware until the evening of 26 April of this virtue of calculated silence. For months on end, we saw them on every barricade of political protest, hurling anathemas at the Giscard government, but also and, above all, at candidate Mitterrand.

Although in the 3 weeks before the first round of the election, Georges Marchais did slightly subdue his attacks, the Communist camapign as a whole was waged violently.

The outcome is known. The PCF's verbal excesses, as we have long been explaining in these pages, became increasingly imcomprehensible to the public and were in danger of becoming totally so had the party leaders persisted in brandishing words and slogans from a different era. On television, Georges Marchais was both amusing and annoying--made an exhibition of himself, but was no longer in touch with reality and people's aspirations.

Strangely, the PCF suddenly has caught on to the policy of silence. It appears all innocence. Its secretary general is seldom heard--and then only speaking very gently to assert that the Communists are willing "to shoulder all their responsibilities in government and at all other levels." No more, no less. A relaxed approach, very different from the style to which we became accustomed under the former Giscard regime.

Does the PCF's desire for oblivion and to blot out its searching defeat on 26 April stem from a profound change in the party line or is it merely tactical and short term? In other words, is there a move toward a very open normalization of relations between the PCF and PS or will we soon discover, beneath these calm waters, a savage desire for revenge? Georges Marchais gained 15.3 percent of the vote in the first round of the presidential elections and it would be rather naive to believe that the PCF could remain indifferent for long toward the man, Francois Mitterrand, responsible for this result--historic for his mediocrity.

Everything suggests that the PCF has opted for a strategic withdrawal to improve its chances when the times comes again. When it does, it will undoubtedly settle its accounts. Moreover, it is likely that this spider stratagem will enable the Communists to contain their April losses at the 14 and 21 June general elections. For the time being, this is their priority objective. After that, the PCF has all eternity in front of it and, from that viewpoint, Francois Mitterrand's victory has changed nothing.

PCF OFFICIALS MEET WITH FOREIGN DELEGATIONS

Italian Communists

LD031407 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 27 May 81 p 7

[Text] There was a meeting at PCF Central Committee headquarters on Monday, 25 May, between PCF Central Committee members Maxime Gremetz and Jacques Denis and PCI Directorate member Paolo Bufalini and PCI Central Committee member Rodolfo Mecchini.

The meeting, which took place in a cordial atmosphere, provided an opportunity for an exchange of information on the situation in the two countries.

Salvadoran Trade Unionists

LD031429 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 23 May 81 p 9

[Text] Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz yesterday received an El Salvador Trade Union Unity Committee delegation at PCF headquarters.

Alfredo Martinez (Food, Clothing and Textiles Federation), Ramon Martinez (Workers National Trade Union Federation) and Jorge Mendoza (Trade Unions' Unitary Federation) informed him at length about the current situation in their country. They sincerely thanked the PCF for its effective support for their people's struggle.

Maxime Gremetz assured them that the PCF will not cease but, on the contrary, will strengthen that solidarity with the organized workers, the victims of repression and the fighters of the people's forces who are confronting the forces of the Christian Democrat military junta and thwarting the U.S. threats of direct or indirect military intervention.

PSI'S CRAXI SEES NO SOLUTION TO GOVERNMENT CRISIS

AU031953 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 3 Jun (ANSA)--The elements that have so [words indistinct] don't offer, or at least don't as yet offer sufficient indications for spotting a solution to the crisis", Socialist Party (PSI) Secretary Bettino Craxi told a party leadership meeting today which was especially convened to take a stand on Premier-designate Arnaldo Forlani's attempts to form a new government.

From Craxi's report today it seemed that the PSI would stay on the fence long enough to allow the premier-designate to launch into a second round of consultations.

Craxi did not rule out the possibility that early elections might have to be called to settle the crisis. For some time now the Socialists have been plumping for a Socialist premier. The Christian Democrats have held the premiership for 36 years.

However, Craxi today said that his party did not plan to take positions hastily. What was at stake, he said, was not a question of parties but whether a halt could be made in the serious deterioration of the Italian political system. He urged his party's leadership to propose a meeting with the Christian Democratic Party (DC) leaders to clarify and probe more deeply the problems to be faced.

Moreover, the PSI delegation should gather from those political forces interested in settling the crisis all information useful to a complete evaluation of the present political situation, he said. All of this seems to indicate that the current crisis will be some time in coming to an end.

Six Conditions

NC031844 Paris AFP in English 1815 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 3 Jun (AFP)--Socialist Party Chief Bettino Craxi said here today his party will support a Christian Democratic government under Arnaldo Forlani only if six conditions, covering both domestic and foreign policy, including arms control, are met.

Speaking after a meeting of his party's executive, Mr Craxi suggested six major topics for discussion for a government program that he would be proposing at a forthcoming exchange of views with the Christian Democrats.

He said he wanted guarantees from the Christian Democrats on the following six points:

1) Measures concerning the P2 scandal.

2) Action to stem inflation.

3) Legislative initiatives to ensure government stability.

4) Study of the government's action toward the regions hit by the earthquake last November 23.

5) The need for greater independence in the magistrature.

6) The initiatives Italy plans to take "in the European context in the Mediterranean, in its relations with the Third World," and in arms control policy.

PRIME MINISTER CONFIRMS CABINET CHANGES

LD012212 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 1 Jun 81

[Excerpts] At the end of a meeting with the president this morning, Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao confirmed the announced readjustment in the seventh constitutional government. Addressing journalists, Pinto Balsemao explained the purpose of his meeting with Gen Ramalho Eanes.

[Begin recording] I called on the president to formally communicate the notice of resignation submitted to me by Dr Eusebio Marques de Carvalho, as minister for administrative reform, and by Dr Augusto Ferreira do Amaral, as minister for the quality of life, and also to appraise him formally of the names of those whom I have chosen to fill the vacancies, which are as follows: Minister for the quality of life, Dr Joao Vaz Serra de Moura, chairman of the PPM [Popular Monarchist Party] Congress; secretary of state for administrative reform, Dr Jose Robin Andrade.

With regard to social communications, this portfolio will now be in the presidency of the council of ministers and function through a secretary of state-assistant to the prime minister, to whom I shall delegate powers regarding social communications. The nominee for the post is Dr Jose Alfaia (Pinto Braz). [end recording]

PCP DOCUMENT URGES 'DEMOCRATIC TURNABOUT'

LD031509 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 28 May 81 pp 3-4

[Apparent text of document approved at 25-26 May PCP Central Committee Plenum: "For a Democratic Turnabout in Portuguese Policy"]

[Excerpts] The PCP Central Committee examined the national situation resulting from the policy of restoring the power of the monopolies (associated with imperialism) and of the big landowners conducted by the "democratic alliance" government and by the "democratic alliance" majority in the assembly, continuing the policy of previous governments, and from the plans, which still stand, for eliminating the democratic system.

The Central Committee concluded that this policy is proving completely incapable of resolving the problems confronting the country. The economic crisis is deepening. The social situation is deteriorating. Violations of legality are following one another. Dependence on other countires is becoming inherent in the state's orientation. New dangers to the democratic system and to Portugal's integrity are amassing.

Opposing the "democratic alliance's" disastrous policy, powerful struggles of the working class, of all workers, of the peasantry and of broad sectors of other nonmonopoly classes and sectors are being waged in a new upsurge of people's struggle.

The "democratic alliance" is seeing its base of support dwindle. The people's and democratic struggle is broadening and intensifying. Conditions for a democratic turnabout in Portuguese policy are being created.

In the interest of the people and of the country, to prevent the situation from deteriorating even further and to defeat the new plans for eliminating democracy, it is necessary to end the present antipeople, antidemocratic and antinational policy. There is a need for the dismissal of the "democratic alliance"-Balsemao government and the formation of a democratic government which, in accordance with the system enshrined in the constitution, will resolve the grave national problems and, resuming the path of April [1974] will stimulate the national economy, improve the people's living conditions and ensure citizens' freedoms and rights, the democratic gains and national independence, integrity and security.

For a Policy of National Independence

The evolution of the political situation since 25 April [1974] demonstrates the close connection between the defense, consolidation and continuation of the democratic system and the defense, consolidation and continuation of national independence.

The waging of the offensive against the Portuguese people's democratic gains and against the democratic system is proceeding at the same time as the increasing exacerbation of dependence on imperialism.

"Democratic Alliance" Policy: National Capitulation

Continuing the activity of the previous governments, and in particular of the Sa Carneiro government with Freitas do Amaral as foreign minister, the "democratic alliance"-Pinto Balsemao government is carrying its foreign policy of subordination and subservience to imperialism to an extreme of national capitulation.

As a result of the "democratic alliance's" policy, Portugal is becoming a docile pawn of the policy and aggressive strategic aims of imperialism--specifically, U.S. imperialism.

As an instrument of imperialism, without any national pride, the "democratic alliance" government is placing Portuguese foreign policy and resources at the service of recreating the cold war atmosphere, sabotaging detente, preventing peaceful coexistence and friendship and cooperation among peoples, and of support for the dangerous arms race and for the creation of new hotbeds of tension and aggression and of international conflicts.

The reactionary forces are betraying Portugal's interests to the interests of restoring monopoly capitalism. In return for support and aid for its counterrevolutionary policy, the "democratic alliance"-Balsemao government is sacrificing the Portuguese economy and the country's independence, territorial integrity, security and tranquility.

It must be emphasized that the "democratic alliance's" foreign policy is supported in many essential aspects by Socialist Party leaders, and this facilitates the continuation of a policy which is jeopardizing in some aspects--very difficult to rectify--Portugal's future as a free, sovereign and independent nation.

Economic, Diplomatic, Military and Cultural Subordination

At the economic level, the "democratic alliance" government is subordinating the national economy to the interests of the big international monopolies and the interests of foreign states so that if its policy is completed, Portugal will be condemned to being unable to decide on its own development and the use of its resources for the benefit of the Portuguese people, being subject to an international division of labor which will make the Portuguese people a source of cheap manpower and an economy entirely subsidiary to and at the service or the most developed capitalist countries and the interests of their monopolies.

At the diplomatic and political level, the "democratic alliance" government is adopting a stance which assails national independence and dignity, servilely and shamefully following the U.S. Reagan administration's instructions in all its provocative operations and maneuvers against the USSR and the socialist community, against progressive countries, against Angola and Mozambique (although seeking to cover its real policy with ostensible "openings"), and systematically supporting the forces of capitalist, colonialist and neocolonialist exploitation and oppression, the fascist and reactionary dictatorships, tyrannical regimes, wars of aggression, racism and racial discrimination and the real violation of human rights. Permitting trade in Portuguese-manufactured weapons for fascist and reactionary regimes such as those of Chile and South Africa constitutes a scandalous aspect of this policy.

At the military level, the "democratic alliance" government, despite shortages of national resources, is increasing Portugal's military and financial commitments to NATO. It is extending the transferences of national territory for foreign military bases (further transferences at Lajes, and plans for transferring the Beja base to the United States and handing over the islands of Porto Santo for a big U.S. air-sea complex).

It is authorizing the use of the foreign bases for the transit of troops for intervention in the Middle East, the Gulf and other regions, transforming Portugal into a springboard for aggression against other peoples. It is facilitating the free use of Portuguese territory (when other NATO countries deny the use of their own territory or demand large payments) for military exercises and maneuvers, such as those taking place on Santa Margarida for 12 May to 8 June involving about 1,000 foreign troops and firing practice. It is giving priority to NATO for missions by Portuguese aircraft and ships.

It also is offering to allow the stationing in Portuguese territorial waters of ships transporting nuclear weapons and the deployment of U.S. nuclear missiles in Portugal, and this represents extremely serious and grave dangers to the Portuguese people's security, tranquillity and lives and to the Portuguese nation's very existence in the event of a nuclear war.

At the cultural level, the "democratic alliance" government, at the same time as sabotaging and virtually preventing real cultural exchanges (specifically with socialist countries, African countries and progressive cultural currents in capitalist countries), is opening up Portugal to the degrading influence of the low standards of cultural perversion, typical of the disintegration of capitalist society, in the cinema, television, literature, music and journalism.

Necessary Foreign Policy

It is imperative to rectify this antinational policy of the "democratic alliance"-Balsemao government.

Portugal's interests require a foreign policy which will develop relations (diplomatic, political, economic, trade, scientific, technological and cultural) of friendship and cooperation with all states on the basis of equality, noninterference in internal affairs and respect for national sovereignty and mutual interests, which will develop relations both with the capitalist countries and with the socialist countries, with the new Portuguese-speaking African countries and with the countries of the so-called Third World, which will negotiate with the Common Market mutually beneficial relations and conduct with NATO a reappraisal of duties and commitments, within the perspective of peaceful coexistence, the dissolution of the military blocs and the disappearance of the foreign military bases on Portuguese territory, and which will conduct in the international arena activity which will constitute a contribution to detente, disarmament and peace.

These are essential guidelines of a policy of real national independence.

Conditions for Turnabout Are Being Created

Observation of the evolution of the national situation leads to the conclusion that, although in a contradictory and irregular process, a gradual weakening of the reactionary forces and the multiplication and strengthening of factors favorable to a democratic turnabout are occurring.

Reduction of "Democratic Alliance's" Base of Support

The "democratic alliance's" inability to resolve the nation's problems, the exacerbation of the economic and social situation, the sharp deterioration in the people's living conditions, and a class policy determined by the aims of serving a small number of privileged people, harming and sacrificing vital interests of the overwhelming majority of the Portuguese people, are creating increasing dissatisfaction and a wave of protests and resistance, with an upsurge of mass struggle, and are reducing and weakening the base of social, political and electoral support of the reactionary parties which comprise the "democratic alliance" and which still possess a majority in the assembly.

Reaction's difficulties and failures, its weakening and its increasing isolation from the broad people's masses are causing internal contradictions, differences, rivalries and conflicts within the "democratic alliance" itself.

These internal difficulties shouldn't be overestimated, nor should they be underestimated.

The "democratic alliance" will not fall like an overripe fruit. But its contradictions and internal conflicts--which are capable of developing into disagreements and splits--are weakening the government coalition overall, reducing its scope for maneuver and making it weaker against the growing and increasingly broad struggle of the Portuguese people and democrats.

Factors Favorable to Political Change

At the social level, since the "democratic alliance's" policy is sacrificing the working classes, the peasantry and the middle classes to restoring the power of the monoplies and accelerating the process of capitalist accumulation and centralization, there can be observed a drawing closer of the interests and a convergence in major immediate aims of all those classes and sectors, which is reflected in the upsurge of mass struggle.

At the political level, at the same time that internal difficulties in the reactionary coalition and occurring and many who voted for the "democratic alliance" now oppose its government, the constitutionalist currents are broadening and growing stronger in the democratic camp. And there is a growing awareness of the need for joint action with the PCP, which is reflected in the muliplication of initiatives of a unitary nature, over and above the increasingly political nature of the social structure.

At the military level,after the "democratic alliance's" subversive plan, which should have culminated in the election of the fascist General Soares Carneiro and in the consequent restoration of a reactionary military hierarchy which would give armed support to the coup against democracy, was defeated 7 December, the conspirators' subversive dynamic collapsed, and the legalist, democratic and constitutionalist stances and trends in the armed forces are growing stronger, as was brilliantly demonstrated by the 25 April military commemorations and celebrations.

At the institutional level, the putschist attempt to take over the whole of political power having failed, the "democratic alliance" still holds the government and the majority in the assembly. It is true, but its actions--resuming those of 1980--to cause a deadlock in the institutions, with the immediate dissolution or neutralization of the Council of the Revolution and the destabilization and possible resignation of the president, have so far failed, and so the trend over the last few months can be regarded as favorable to the consolidation and normal development of the institutions.

International Events

Added to the domestic factors, a series of events at the international level demonstrates that--contrary to what the "democratic alliance" propagandists were proclaiming--the evolution is occuring not in the direction of an irresistible advance of the right, specifically in Europe, but in the direction of a reversal of trend in favor of the left.

Giscard d'Estaing's defeat and Mitterrand's victory in the French presidential election, the British Labor Party's leftward shift and its victory against the Conservatives in the recent municipal elections, the 66 percent vote in Italy against the DC and fascist party in the referendum on the abortion law and the defeats of the fascist terrorist attempted coups in Spain, seem to indicate a reversal in the direction of democracy of the trend in the evolution of the political situation in capitalist Europe.

The great struggles of the workers and democrats in several countries in defense of peace and against the deployment of the new U.S. missiles in Europe also form part of this same trend.

All these situations and events make it possible to conclude that factors favorable to the creation of a situation in which a democratic turnabout in Portuguese policy will become possible and even inevitable are developing.

CAPE VERDE PRESIDENT, DELEGATION ARRIVE FOR VISIT

LD020100 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 1 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Cape Verde President Ristides Pereira arrived in Lisbon this evening at the head of a 26-man delegation which includes Foreign Minister Silvino da Luz. They are on a 5-day visit to Portugal. On arrival, the foreign minister described the visit as a political expression of the relations between the two countries.

The Cape Verdean head of state said that the ties between Portugal and Cape Verde are growing stronger and taking shape as his country affirmed itself in the community of nations, and as the democratic pattern of the Portuguese state marches ahead irreversibly.

PRIME MINISTER COMMENTS ON ECONOMIC DIFFICULTIES

LD031227 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 3 Jun 81 pp 1, 32

[James Wightman report]

[Excerpt] The prime minister confirmed yesterday the view of several independent surveys that Britain's economic difficulties are not yet over. In the Commons she told MPs: "The recession has just about reached bottom."

Efforts to seek enlargement of the prime minister's analysis yesterday brought the candid response: "We don't know when the recession will end."

Pressed by Mr Foot, opposition leader, about the prospects for reducing unemployment, Mrs Thatcher said the emergence of expansion would depend on how far advantage was taken of the opportunities available, how far wage increases went hand in hand with productivity increases and what proportion of order Britain won on the home and export markets. Mrs Thatcher again emphasised the government's familiar message that employment would only start to increase if pay increases were tied to greater productivity and improved services.

Earlier Mr Prior, employment secretary, faced cries of derision and disbelief from Labour MPs when he stressed that there was a limited role which the government could play in reducing unemployment. Mr Prior is one of the so-called Cabinet "wets" who successfully put pressure on the prime minister to hold a special Cabinet session a fortnight today to review the economy.

NOTT SAYS NO PLANS TO 'MOTHBALL' CARRIERS

LD031229 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 3 Jun 81 p 32

[Paul Potts report]

[Text] The defence secretary, Mr Nott, stressed yesterday that he had no plans to "mothball" any of Britain's new class of anti-submarine aircraft carriers under the defence expenditure review being carried out by the government.

Speaking after the launching of the latest one, the Ark Royal, 19,810 tons, by the queen mother on Tyneside, he said: "I have not contemplated in the review so far the mothballing of any of the three carriers." But Mr Nott refused to say if all three warships would enter service with the Royal Navy as planned. He said the 270 million pound Ark Royal would go ahead to completion in 1985 along with her sister ship, Illustrious, which is near completion and the Invincible, which joined the fleet last summer.

Mr Nott's statement will help allay fears particularly on Tyneside and at Westminster that the Ark Royal would be mothballed as soon as she was launched and not commissioned. The announcement will also ensure continuing work over the next 3 1/2 years for at least 3,000 shipyard workers at Swan Hunter's Wallsend shipyard. But Mr Nott added at a press conference that he did not envisage the Ministry of Defence ordering any more of the Invincible class carriers.

Earlier in a speech to guests at the launching he said: "I have noted, of course, a very small amount of recent press speculation here and there about the future of Ark Royal. Responding in the only way I can, I would only say that I do see a future and important use for a carrier such as Ark Royal, maybe in out-of-area activities in support of our allies, particularly the United States. The capability and flexibility of these ships is acknowledged by everyone here today." Mr Nott also reaffirmed the government's commitment to increasing expenditure on defence. He said: "As we said in the introduction to the defence white paper this year 'the first obligation of any government is the defence of the realm; foreign, economic and social policies all play their part, but defence is fundamental.'" The Ark Royal launched yesterday is the fifth ship to bear that name.

PAPER GIVES MILITARY REASON FOR TURKISH VIOLATIONS

NC040815 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 4 Jun 81 p 3

[From the "Liberal" column: "Military Reasons"].

[Text] Since political expediency could not have dictated the latest provocative Turkish actions in Cyprus (political expediency would rather have advocated against the flight of Turkish military aircraft over our free areas), it must have been military reasons that dictated violation of our airspace.

It appears that on the basis of information received from their various spies, the Turkish military wanted to have a closer military look at some of the areas under our control. There is no other explanation why they ordered the flight of their military aircraft over specific areas at a time when they knew in advance that any such act would harm them politically. We believe that the incident should concern our military command, which could reach certain conclusions and useful views on matters concerning our country's military defense.

FOREIGN MINISTER ROLANDHIS TO LEAVE FOR PRC VISIT

NC031647 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in English 1540 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] The foreign minister, Mr Rolandhis, leaves Cyprus next Sunday for an 8-day official visit to the People's Republic of China at the invitation of the Chinese foreign minister, Mr Huang Hua. Mr Rolandhis will also visit Hong Kong before returning to Cyprus on 17 June.

PRESIDENT KIPRIANOU TO VISIT ATHENS FOR TALKS

NC031430 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] The date of President Kiprianou's visit to Athens for talks with the Greek Government has been announced. Mr Kiprianou will visit the Greek capital on 1 July. He will stay in Athens for 3 days and will be accompanied by Foreign Minister Rolandhis and interlocutor Ioannidhis.

Reasons for Visit

NC031044 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 3 Jun 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] "The Greek Government is intensely worried by the Kiprianou government's dangerous embrace of communist AKEL, an embrace that harms Hellenism's properly understood interests on Cyprus." This statement was made yesterday by authoritative Athens circles to a special I DHILINI correspondent, with the observation that the "slide into which the Cyprus president has again fallen is very dangerous."

According to the same authoritative circles, the Greek Government has asked the Cyprus president to visit Athens because it believes that a review of the Cyprus Government's position to date is necessary in order to achieve progress in the Cyprus issue.

As these circles revealed, during Kiprianou's impending talks in Athens, the Greek Government's goals will primarily be:

A) To suggest to and convince the Cyprus president that he is leading himself and Cyprus' Hellenism interests downward through his embrace with the left.

B) To suggest to and convince Kiprianou that a review of the Cyprus Government's foreign policy is necessary.

In this connection, it was stressed that in view of the new UN initiative on the Cyprus problem with the encouragement of the West and in view of the submission of concrete proposals by the Turkish side, the Greek Government considers that a review of Cyprus' foreign policy is necessary.

Furthermore, Athens believes that Nicosia must turn more to the West because, the same circles observe, it is inconceivable to accuse or to underestimate the Western countries at the time when they are the only ones--and this is also admitted by the Cyprus Government--that can influence the Turks and persuade them to be conciliatory in order to achieve a viable solution of the Cyprus problem.

The authoritative Athens circles stressed to our correspondent that the turning of Cyprus' foreign policy more to the West is of very great importance and that this can be achieved only by ending the Cyprus Government's dangerous embrace of AKEL which, as everyone knows, always acts in accordance with Moscow's instructions and suggestions.

Concluding, the same circles mentioned that Kiprianou's visit to Athens will take place at the end of this month or early in July at the latest.

BULGARIAN MINISTER MEETS WITH COMMERCE MINISTER

NC011736 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 1 Jun 81

[Text] Today, Bulgarian Deputy Minister of Foreign Trade Atanas Ginev, who is in Cyprus on the occasion of the sixth international state fair, visited Commerce and Industry Minister Kittis. At the meeting, bilateral commercial relations were reviewed and ways were examined for the further strengthening of commercial and industrial relations as well as the possibility of creating consortiums between Cypriot and Bulgarian industrialists.

ATAKOL MEETS IRAQ'S HAMMADI, PLO'S QADDUMI

TA021834 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Text] Minister of Foreign Affairs and Defense Kenan Atakol, who is participating in the Islamic countries foreign ministers conference, is holding bilateral talks in Baghdad. Atakol met with Iraqi Minister of Foreign Affairs Sa'dun Hammadi in Baghdad and presented him a message from President Denktas.

Atakol also met with PLO Political Department Chief Faruq Qaddumi. At the meeting, Qaddumi said his statement concerning Palestinian refugees made in southern Cyprus had been (?distorted) by the Greek Cypriots. Noting that it was wrong of the Greek Cypriots to portray his statement concerning Palestinian refugees as though it referred to Greek Cypriot refugees as well, Qaddumi said the Palestinians are determined to return to their ancestral homes and they will not renounce this by accepting compensation. Atakol also met the Moroccan foreign minister and thanked him for the understanding shown in the Turkish Cypriot cause.

TURKISH FORCES SUPPLIED WITH NEW TYPE TANK

NC020722 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 2 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] The Turkish Army in the occupied territories has been supplied with F-60 type tanks and a special unit for these tanks has been created in the area of Kormakiti village. According to reports, the new tanks, which are considered to be very well armed, were transported to Cyprus in the last month and already experts have begun training Turkish soldiers to use them.

Ten days ago the Turks prohibited the Kormakiti inhabitants from circulating outside their village because a test and a military exercise would be held using the new tanks, which had been transported to Cyprus on special military ships. It has not been learned whether the new tanks will remain permanently in Kormakiti or whether the Turks have returned their old tanks to Turkey. The government has learned that since the military government assumed power in Ankara, the Turkish occupation forces have been supplied with new types of arms.

ARMED FORCES BEGIN FIRST SUMMER EXERCISE 2 JUNE

NC031519 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 3 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] The first major summer national exercise by the three branches of the armed forces began yesterday. It will last a week.

This "double action" exercise with confrontation by enemy forces includes a series of combined operations with landing action, amphibious war, air attacks and others. All advanced air force aircraft (Phantom, Mirage) and others will take part in most phases of the exercise.

From the army, marines and parachutists will attend in addition to infantry units, while almost all naval units (destroyers, submarines, missile boats) will take part.

Averof Comments on Exercise

NC032028 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 2005 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Had we been attacked, the battle in the air would have been won, regardless of who the aggressor would have been. This was stressed by National Defense Minister Averof, who reiterated that the Greek people can have confidence in the country's armed forces. The national defense minister made this statement after visiting air force units and after watching their activities on a war footing within the framework of the large national exercise being held by the three branches of the armed forces.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS DENY EXERCISE, COUP RUMOR LINK

Averof, Bandouvas Exchange

NC031514 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 3 Jun 81 pp 1,3

[Excerpt] EDIK, Democratic Center Union, Deputy Bandouvas in a Chamber of Deputies interpellation, yesterday, mentioned the following:

"Last night, 1 June, a new attempt for the armed overthrow of the democracy was undertaken, 7 whole years after the collapse of tyranny, at a time when the nation stands with its finger on the trigger to deal with Turkish expansionism and only months before the election.

"Averof's 'minute elements' [of the junta] made up of retired officers and others on active duty once again manipulated the threads of anomaly. Specifically, a plan was prepared to abduct the country's political and some military leaders (Karamanlis, Rallis, Papandreou, Mavros, Zigdhis, the chairman of the Chamber of Deputies, [General] Gratsios and others), to occupy and control the Chamber of Deputies, government buildings, telecommunications and military installations in order to:

"A) overthrow the constitution; B) call off the election; C) immediately liberate the coupists from prison, etc.

"Last night at 2100 and while implementation of the plan had commenced, it was decided by its organizers to call the coup off because of suspicions about leakage of information. It was then that Averof ordered the mobilization of certain units in Attiki (military police, commandos, parachutists, armored units, marines, staff officers and others.)

"In reference to the above you are being questioned about why:

"1) The organizers of the coup were not arrested, even though they are known to the government.

"2) The political world of the country as well as the nation was not informed, but was deceived with false and misleading statements about the alert of the armed forces.

"3) You did not take the necessary measures to break up the junta apparatus and elements for the purpose of avoiding irregularities like the one aimed for by yesterday's frustrated attempt."

Minister of National Defense E. Averof yesterday made the following specific statement:

"A detailed reply to the interpellation will be supplied in accordance with the democratic process through the Chamber of Deputies. Because, however, publication of the interpellation in the press could create false impressions and, specifically, because our excellent armed forces could be slandered, I am obliged to make the following statement through the press:

"No instance of indiscipline or suspicious intent by officers on active duty was brought to our attention from July 1974 to date without the imposition of the severest sanctions. The situation is absolutely calm and secure. The tactics pursued by the military command with strict criteria on merit and the healthy morale of the officers have strengthened Greece with exceptional armed forces.

"Because Bandouvas attempts to present me as a protector of junta followers and as the only one left out of the imaginary plots for abduction of numerous politicians, I have the right to remind him publicly that I am one of the main factors for the reorganization of the armed forces; that I am the primary target of certain unrepentent retired personnel and that out of all the politicians I was the sole recipient of a bomb which injured the officer who opened it. The deputy colleague from Iraklion ought to know something that the entire Greek nation knows; that the governments of New Democracy, starting from chaos, have managed to establish democratic normalcy and excellent security of a type enjoyed by very few countries.

Mitsotakis Denial

NC032130 Paris AFP in English 1952 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Athens, 3 Jun (AFP)--Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis denied today charges by an opposition member of parliament that a military plot had aborted here on Monday. The deputy, Konstandinos Bandouvas, claimed in Parliament that the coup, mounted by both active and retired officers, was called off after its leaders discovered that the government knew of the plot.

Replying to questions from foreign newsmen at a press conference here, Mr Mitsotakis said that there had been "no plot recently". He conceded however that since the 1974 ouster of the military junta that had run Greece since 1967, there had been repeated talk of a coup "among retired military officers". He added that the government had taken no action as these plots had never been put into action.

KKE-Interior Statement

NC031548 Athens I AVYI in Greek 3 Jun 81 p 1

[2 June statement by KKE-Interior Central Committee Secretary B. Dhrakopoulos]

[Text] The continuing readiness of units of the Attiki basin justifiably creates concern by the democratic public opinion.

For the umpteenth time, the "New Democracy" government is hiding from the people the reality that prevails in such a sensitive sector as the armed forces.

Averof's uncertain and contradictory statement increases the climate of concern, while, at the same time, it betrays an intention of close utilization of the whole issue of the elections. With its stand the government is playing a dangerous game with the armed forces.

The total and clear briefing of the people is imperative. The main issue is that the democratization of the armed forces constitutes a vital exigency and basic term for the safeguarding of the democratic course, much more in view of the elections, as well as in fulfilling the armed forces role in defending the country's integrity and independence.

KKE-Exterior Reaction

NC031651 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 3 Jun 81 pp 1, 9

[2 June statement by the KKE Central Committee press office]

[Text] On Monday night the National Defense Ministry announced that "in order to check the army's readiness, an extraordinary partial implementation of the corresponding plan for a certain number of units of the Attiki basin has been ordered." Today (yesday), an EDIK [Democratic Center Union] deputy posed a question to the Chambers of Deputies saying that there was a coup plan that was postponed at the last moment. The national defense minister replied to the EDIK deputy's question with an uncertain and mysterious statement that leaves many voids and question marks. Averof neither said why yesterday's strange and unorthodox "exercise" had been held nor explained why it was announced only after it had already started. Averof did not categorically deny that there was a coup attempt, nor did he brief the people on what measures the government would undertake in the event a conspiracy of any importance against the democratic institutions was uncovered. The government and the prime minister personally have the duty, and without delay, to give a clear and responsible reply to the Greek people on all these questions.

The government follows an unacceptable, dangerous and suspicious tactic. It has no right whatsoever either to consider matters that concern the democracy and the freedoms of the people as its "fief", or to let fundamental or unfundamental sensations spread around in order to carry out party demagogy or personal promotion of certain of its cadres.

We urge the prime minister to immediately give precise and categorical answers. Athens, 2 June 1981

FIRE GUTS TWO ATHENS DEPARTMENT STORES 3 JUNE

NC031833 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Excerpts] The Athens Security General Police have been conducting an intensive investigation to find those responsible for arson at two sites in Athens which almost completely destroyed a building block in the city center where the Klaoudhatos department store is housed and caused significant damage to the Athene department store on Stadhiou Street.

According to press reports, a number of suspects have been taken to the security police building and are being interrogated. At the same time, the houses of suspects have been searched in the presence of prosecutors.

At noon a second conference was held at the security police premises. The conference was chaired by Prime Minister Rallis and dealt with today's cases of arson. The conference was attended by Public Order Minister Dhavakis, Justice Minister Stamatis, Athens City Police Chief Laos, Gendarmerie Chief Rizas, Central Intelligence Service Chief Vamvas, and Police Director General Ravtopoulos.

No official statement was issued after the conference, but, according to press reports, the conference examined ways to promote investigation of those responsible for the two new cases of arson. It also appears that the culprits belong to the same quarters as those who last December destroyed the Minion and Katrantzos department stores. At that time, responsibility for the arson was claimed by the revolutionary organization October 80, which issued a statement to this effect.

In any case, as of 1300 no organization had claimed responsibility for the fire at the Athene and the Klaoudhatos department stores.

Because of today's events in Athens, Commerce Minister Kalantzakos postponed his visit to Cyprus. His visit was to take place today at the invitation of Cypriot Minister of Commerce and Industry Kittis, on the occasion of Greece Day at the international fair in Nicosia.

Groups Claim Responsibility

NC032135 Paris AFP in English 2123 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Athens, 3 Jun (AFP)--Three unknown extremist organizations today claimed responsibility for fires that ravaged two Athens department stores this morning. Bombs in the stores sparked blazes that destroyed most of one, Klaoudhatos, and badly damaged the other, Athene. A third small fire, that caused no damage, broke out later in the Lambropouli Brothers department store in central Athens.

In a telephone call to the socialist newspaper ELEVTHEROTIPIA, responsibility for the Klaoudhatos and Athene fires was claimed by the "Revolutionary Anti-Capitalist Initiative" group, while in a call to the communist daily RIZOSPASTIS "The Right-Wing Extremist Army" claimed responsibility. A third telephone call, to the tabloid AVRIANI, said the bombings were the work of "The New Organisation." Police said it was the first they had heard of any of the three organisations.

CPSU CENTRAL COMMITTEE DELEGATION ARRIVES

NC021522 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 2 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] A delegation of the CPSU Central Committee arrived in Athens yesterday at the invitation of the KKE Central Committee. The delegation comprises Comrades Boris Stukalin, chairman of the State Committee for Publishing Houses, Printing Plants and the Book Trade; Nikolay Tikhomirov, first secretary of Kostroma City Party Committee; (Boris Pikov), deputy chief of the International Relations Department. [as received]

The Soviet delegation was met at the airport by Comrades N. Kaloudhis, member of the KKE Central Committee Political Bureau; Z. Zorzovilis and O. Kolozof, members of the KKE Central Committee. Present were also V. Pushchin, Soviet Embassy charge d'affaires and (V. Piyatikh), Soviet Embassy counselor.

The Soviet delegation will meet with a KKE Central Committee delegation as well as with other political parties and personalities.

Immediately after the arrival of the delegation at the airport, delegation head B. Stukalin gave the following statement to RIZOSPASTIS:

"Our delegation came here at the invitation of the KKE Central Committee in order to exchange experience on the work of our party organizations and views on current political questions of interest to our parties. We believe that our visit will make still closer relations of brotherly cooperation and friendship between our two parties and strengthen cooperation between our people."

EVREN DISCUSSES 'PSYCHOLOGICAL ATTACK' ON NATION

TA031728 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Head of State General Evren made a statement today at the opening of an exposition of pictures and documents on Ataturk at the school of languages, history and geography of Ankara University. Noting that as is the case in the country at large, the universities also are fervently participating in activites to mark the Ataturk centenary, General Evren said.

I am sorry to say that we have not been able to explain to the new generation the significance of the Turkish liberatior war in 1920. I believe that we are all to blame for that. It is our liberation war that proved that a nation's determination to live in freedom and liberty can never be destroyed.

A look at our history shows that Turkey has been attacked by big countries whenever it has been weak. These attacks have at times been physical or psychological. Today we are being subjected to a psychological attack. Let us always remember that no one will extend aid to a country which is weak. It is only when we are strong that they will support us, and when we are weak they will try to disrupt us. That is why the Turkish nation will live forever as long as it lives in unity and solidarity. Let no one doubt this.

Deutsche Welle Interview

LD021536 Hamburg DPA in German 1247 GMT 2 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 2 Jun (DPA)--In the opinion of the Turkish head of state, General Kenan Evren, criticism of the Federal Republic in Turkish newspapers and criticism of Turkey by German media cannot influence the close and friendly relations between the two countries. Evren said in a Deutsche Welle interview that anyone affirming press freedom had to tolerate criticism of this kind.

The general repeated the assurance that as soon as parliamentary-democratic order is restored in Turkey the army will return to the barracks. But he does not think it appropriate to set a definite date now for the first parliamentary elections. This should not happen until after the convening of a constituent assembly scheduled for the period between 30 August and 29 October. Evren described as a success of the military regime, which has been in power since 12 September, the fact that the Turkish citizen has now, to a large extent, regained "the freedom to live" and that the authority of the state has been restored.

With reference to the charge of torture of political prisoners Evren repeated that reported cases of maltreatment are being investigated by independent courts. A letter from the delegation of German parliamentarians which visited Turkey in February and which recently remind Evren that the promised examination of a list of torture charges was overdue is with the general staff and will be answered via the Turkish Foreign Ministry.

On Wednesday, the Bundestag, in a resolution agreed between the parliamentary groups intends calling on the Turkish military government to set a timetable for the restoration of democracy. Against the background of talks on a new campaign for aid to Turkey, the military government in Ankara is also being urged to secure the early readmission of parties, trade unions and press freedom and to examine the reports of torture and punish guilty parties. An edited version of the Deutsche Welle interview was handed to DPA on Tuesday.

ROMANIAN OFFICIAL BEGINS CONTACTS IN ANKARA

TA031729 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Romanian Minister State Secretary of Machine Building Industry Gheorghe Petrescu, who arrived in Ankara yesterday to hold official talks, has begun his contacts. He called on Minister of Energy and Natural Resources Serbulent Bingol this morning. The issue of developing cooperation in the energy field between the two countries was discussed at the meeting. Petrescu later met with Minister of Industry and Technology Sahap Kocatopcu. In a statement at the meeting, Kocatopcu said that because long-distance transportation expenses have recently increased, commercial and economic cooperation among neighboring countries is more attractive. Kocatopcu expressed the view that, therefore, Turkish-Romanian cooperation will further develop.

Speaking at the meeting, Petrescu said Romania attaches great importance to its relations with Turkey and that there are extensive possibilities for further developing these relations that are based on mutual interests.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER DEPARTS FOR GULF COUNTRIES

TA031658 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1553 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Ankara, 3 June (AA)--Deputy Prime Minister and State Minister Turgut Ozal left today for a tour of Gulf countries. In an airport statement, Ozal said Turkish exports to Middle Eastern countries would rise to 1.5 billion dollars, compared to last year's 600 million dollars, marking a major development. "We are encouraging the private sector and taking their representatives everywhere we go," Ozal said.

Ozal stressed that there were big financing organizations in Kuwait and he would have talks with Kuwaiti officials on financing certain projects elaborated by Turkey, and that Turkey was seeking promotion of her economic relations with Gulf countries.

COUNCIL RATIFIES MARITIME TRADE AGREEMENT WITH GDR

TA031636 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1604 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Ankara, 3 June (AA)--The Council of Ministers ratified the "cooperation in maritime trade" signed in Ankara on March 26, 1981, between Turkey and the German Democratic Republic. The agreement covers only the merchant marine.

EUROPEAN PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION CONTINUES TALKS

TA031206 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] The European Parliament delegation that arrived in Turkey on 1 June to conduct talks on relations between EEC and Turkey began its contacts in Ankara today. The delegation was received by Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu at 1100. State Minister and acting Foreign Minister Ilhan Oztrak was also present in the meeting. Earlier, the delegation met with Foreign Ministry General Secretary Ambassador Kamuran Gurun for talks. The present situation of the associate relations between the EEC and Turkey and the measures to be taken to provide for their promotion were reviewed during the talks.

The three-man European Parliament delegation is composed of one British, one FRG and one French representative. The delegation is expected to depart Turkey on Friday, 5 June.

PRIME MINISTER DISCUSSES AID TO THIRD WORLD

LD041417 Paris LE CONTINENT in French 27-28 May 81 p 5

[Nell Potier interview with Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau in Canada: "Energy and Agriculture Should Be the Key Sectors for International Development Aid to Africa"--date not given]

[Text] LE CONTINENT: During your African tour, you reiterated your desire to play a full part in the development aid mechanisms. Shouldn't your country's lack of a colonial past lead it to seek new forms of cooperation and to move away from the methods used by former colonialist powers?

Trudeau: Canada already has 30 years' experience in the development aid sphere. Since our very first initiatives in the framework of the Colombo plan, we have never been hesitant about departing from the beaten track when the situation required it.

Since our country is itself a very young country, it is probably easier for us to understand development problems from the inside. And through our lack of a colonial past, an atmosphere of confidence, respect and frankness quickly was established between Canada and the Third World. This made a whole range of experiments possible, and the most fruitful of these have often been the humblest because they were carried out with our feet on the ground and were in line with our developing partners' real situations.

In time, we have established an extremely varied range of forms of cooperation. They cover the financing of development projects, technical aid, contributions to international organizations and to regional development banks, food aid, emergency help, support for balances of payments and support for nongovernmental bodies. The list could be continued. Our objective is to adjust our aid to the specific needs of the beneficiaries, while taking account of our special capacities in some spheres and of the administrative criteria necessary to ensure the effective utilization of that aid. Canada constantly is looking out for ways to extend the range of its forms of aid. For instance, being aware of the growing burden of the developing countries' oil bill, we are busy setting up a body called Petro-Canada International whose job will be to help countries finance oil exploration in cases where it cannot be done on a commercial basis. Canada finances all the activities of the International Development Research Center, which encourages the application of technical innovations to Third World development. Since we are anxious to encourage public involvement in international cooperation, we make a generous contribution to financing development projects drawn up by private organizations, cooperatives, trade unions, universities, churches and other nongovernmental groups.

LE CONTINENT: What place and what share do you give Africa in your overall cooperation policy?

Trudeau: Relations between Canada and Africa have always been stamped with the seal of friendship and solidarity. We are acutely aware of Africa's pressing needs and want to make an active contribution to the economic and social development of the countries on this continent. Between 1979 and 1980, Canada devoted 48 percent of its bilateral aid credits to Africa, in other words, $286 million. In addition, 70 percent of those funds were given in the form of subsidies, the rest in the form of loans, most of them interest free and with a 10-year period of grace and 50 years in which to repay. It should also be stressed that a large proportion of the aid supplied through international bodies and food aid go to Africa.

LE CONTINENT: In Dakar, you expressed the firm intention of allocating 0.7 percent of the Canadian gross national product [GNP] to development, and to do so by 1990. In the shorter term, your aim seems to be 0.5 percent of the GNP by 1985. This figure, which you exceeded in 1978 (0.52 percent) is contradicted by the World Bank experts' projections. Can you give more details on your strategy in this respect?

Trudeau: My government's political intention to attain 0.5 percent of the GNP in 1985 is very strong. Any projection made before last fall doesn't take account of the Canadian Government's recent decisions in this connection.

Of course, there are technical problems to be solved relating to our cooperation agency's administrative capacity to manage the increasing number of programs and to speed up the rate of payments to attain 0.5 percent and possibly 0.7 percent in 1990. The Canadian International Development Agency is now formulating solutions to these problems. For instance, it is considering establishing new forms of cooperation such as Petro-Canada International and the deployment of rapid payment forms of aid like offering credit to the beneficiary countries.

I am sure that, between now and 1985, Canada will succeed in fulfilling its promise to significantly increase its transfer of resources to the developing countries.

LE CONTINENT: Canadian enterprises seem to be finding the road to Africa, like Falconbridge in Uganda or Treco in Algeria. Will the Canadian Government encourage this trend? Will it do so with specific economic incentives?

Trudeau: A growing number of Canadian firms are indeed showing interest in the African market. In 1980, Canadian imports from Africa totaled $529 million and Canadian exports also are winning a growing share of service contracts in Africa and are making often substantial investments there.

Canada attaches a great deal of importance to its trade relations with the African countries because they establish strong ties based on mutual advantage by promoting the economic growth of the two sides. We are encouraging the expansion of our trade relations in two ways.

On the one hand, Canadian businessmen enjoy incentives for exploring the African market and becoming acquainted with various countries' needs and procedures. On the other hand, through our industrial cooperation program, we are helping the African countries to become acquainted with Canadian business circles and to establish permanent ties with the Canadian companies wishing to buy African products or invest funds in Canadian-African companies.

LE CONTINENT: Algiers, Lagos and Dakar--does this choice of the stops on your tour reflect a political intention?

Trudeau: The main aim of my visit to Africa was to exchange views on various aspects of the North-South dialogue. The problem was how to limit the number of countries I could visit during an unfortunately short period of time. By choosing Algeria, Nigeria and Senegal, I was able to meet with the leaders of three countries at various stages of development and having special interests and concerns. The talks I had in January in Lagos and Dakar and, more recently, in Algiers, were very useful to me.

LE CONTINENT: Your trip was connected with the North-South dialogue. After the repeated failure of international conferences on this theme and after learning of the new ideas on development put forward by Galbraith and J.J. Servan-Schreiber, do you have an alternative solution which could offer new hopes, particularly to the Africans?

Trudeau: Like many developing countries, Canada is extremely disappointed by the slow progress in the vital sphere of international economic cooperation. Therefore, Canada fully supports initiatives like the North-South summit which is to take place in Mexico City in October and the overall negotiations aimed at making dialogue between developed and developing countries more productive and pragmatic. The Ottawa summit also will consider these questions.

In view of the complexity of these problems, there cannot be a single specific solution. However, several constructive proposals have been made and I think we must concentrate on a few of the key sectors.

In my view, which I base partly on the experience I gained during my recent trips, these include energy and agricultural development. This is particularly true of Africa. Recently, I strongly supported the concept of a World Bank subsidiary dealing with energy questions.

I have high hopes that the coming meetings will produce a consensus, at least on some of these main proposals.

LE CONTINENT: After Senghor's disappearance from the political stage, which came 1 month after the failure of the Dakar conference, owing to internal opposition in Canada, do you think that the idea of a French-speaking commonwealth will be put into practice one day?

Trudeau: First, I would like to point out that Canada was prepared for this preparatory meeting of foreign ministers, which was to be held in Dakar last December. Moreover, we remain attached to the idea of a "French-speaking commonwealth," as I recalled when speaking to President Diouf during our meeting in Dakar last January. However, it is important that this enterprise be carried out under the best possible conditions. I hope that the consideration it will be given in the coming months will make an effective contribution to this.

BREZHNEV VISIT CONSIDERED FOR SEPTEMBER, OCTOBER

DW050830 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 5 Jun 81 p 1

[Report by Bonn correspondent Eghard Moerbitz]

[Text] Bonn, 4 Jun--Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev obviously seems to be in no hurry with regard to his third visit to the federal capital. It was learned from Soviet diplomatic circles that a period in late September or early October is being considered for Brezhnev's visit to the Rhine.

According to official information, the state of diplomatic preparatory talks doesn't permit fixing an exact date.

When Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher was in Moscow in early April, Brezhnev, who visited the Federal Republic twice, in May 1973 and in May 1978, was still interested in as early a date for the visit as possible, prior to parliament's summer recess. Later it was said that the Bonn meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Brezhnev could take place prior to the fall, that is, in early September. Postponement to early October would mean that Moscow wants to wait, among other things, for the meeting between Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko and Secretary of State Alexander Haig (USA) in mid-September on the occasion of the UN General Assembly session.

In connection with the Bonn talks of Boris Ponomarev, Central Committee secretary and CPSU Politburo member, and Vadim Zagladin, first deputy chief of the Central Committee's International Department, it was said by the Soviet side that if it were up to Moscow, negotiations on European medium-range arms with the United States could be taken up prior to November. Talks between U.S. Secretary of State Haig and Soviet Ambassador to the United States Anatoliy Dobrynin haven't yet advanced to the TNF problem.

BOELLING CONCERNED OVER PRESS CONDITIONS IN GDR

LD042027 Hamburg DPA in German 1704 GMT 4 Jun 81

[Text] East Berlin, (DPA)--Concern at the worsening working conditions for West German correspondents accredited to the GDR was expressed by the chief of the FRG permanent mission in East Berlin, State Secretary Klaus Boelling, when he called at the GDR Foreign Ministry on Thursday. In a talk with chief of the department in charge of relations with the Federal Republic, Karl Seidel, Boelling is reported to have declared that the deterioration in the journalistic relations has a negative effect on the mutual relationship.

He is said to have drawn attention to GDR decisions banning Federal Republic correspondents from reporting on meetings of synods. Concern over the restriction of working facilities was intensified by an article in the publication of the East Berlin Institute of International Politics and Economics, IPW-BERICHTE.

One of the charges made recently by IPW-BERICHTE was that "some foreign correspondents" of Western media working in socialist countries regard themselves not "as providers of reports from their host countries for the population of their home countries, but as intellectual infiltrators into their host countries." Leading politicians of the Federal Republic have declared, contrary to the provisions of international law and the basic treaty between the two German states, that radio and television broadcasts from the Federal Republic also are intended to inform GDR citizens about their own system and situation.

REPORTAGE ON SIXTH COMMUNIST PARTY CONGRESS

CPCZ Delegate Addresses Rally

AU031208 Prague RUDE PRAVO in Czech 30 May 81 p 7

["From the statement by Comrade Jan Fojtik," CPCZ Central Committee secretary and head of the CPCZ delegation to the Sixth Congress of the German Communist Party in Hannover, at the rally of congress delegates and working people on 29 May]

[Text] Jan Fojtik, head of the CPCZ delegation and CPCZ Central Committee secretary, conveyed to the Hannover rally the cordial, fraternal greetings of Czechoslovak communists to the FRG communists, wishing them full success in their congress negotiations. He stated that, since the German Communist Party's constituent congress in 1969, the party has grown substantially. It has been intensively active in the struggle to defend the rights and interest of working people in the FRG, to eliminate exploitation and to create a socially just society. The German Communist Party is heading the country's progressive forces in the struggle against all those who would like to resuscitate neofascism and revanchism. It stands staunchly and unwaveringly in the front of the battle for peace, for saving detente, for disarmament. By its principled stand in the battle for a Europe of peace, security and cooperation, it has won international recognition and the esteem of progressive forces throughout the world.

Jan Fojtik then said: "I needn't stress perhaps how greatly the Czechoslovak communists, our people, respect the FRG communists, the principled Marxist-Leninist policy of your party. We know under what difficult conditions you have to work. We know all that you have lived through in the past and we also know that even in the future your path will not be a path of comfort. But after all, where do the fighters for the revolutionary and progressive changes in society, for order based on the principles of socialism, find things easy?

"We again are witnessing attempts by the most reactionary forces of imperialism to reverse the developments in the world and to weaken real socialism and the entire communist movement. And what is particularly menacing is that these forces are striving to set in motion a new round of the armament race, to drive the world to the edge of the "cold war" and to dictate, from the positions of force and by threatening with war, their ultimatums to the peoples; to humiliate them and to drive them to their knees. In the present situation particular danger comes from the stubborn Washington endeavor to foist new nuclear medium-range missiles upon West Europe and to turn European territory into a hotbed of tension, regardless of the danger that our territories could become the front for a nuclear war.

"It is our common duty to do everything possible to prevent this appalling plan of the NATO military strategists.

"We welcomed the constructive stand adopted by the 26th CPSU Congress on the current international situation and conveyed from the congress rostrum by Leonid Brezhnev, CPSU Central Committee general secretary and chairman of the USSR's Supreme Soviet Presidium. By its proposals, which are aimed at averting war and creating firm guarantees of just peace, the Soviet Union has again proved that socialism and peace are inseparable. No slander is worse or more insidious than spreading the lie about some kind of "Soviet military threat." This lie was made up and is being propagated by those who are looking for reasons to realize their aggressive plans and by those who want to continue increasing their horrendous profits from armament. Undoubtedly, it is one of today's most important joint tasks to unmask these insidious plans and to fight to frustrate them.

"A few days ago when we celebrated the 60th anniversary of the CPCZ's establishment and we recalled the revolutionary road of our party and working people," the head of the CPCZ delegation then said. "We are communists and we regard our work critically and exactingly. During the negotiations of the 16th party congress we assessed our activities soberly and responsibly, as we did the further tasks. We were happy to register the considerable successes we have achieved in building the advanced socialist society. We owe them primarily to the fact that, in our policy, we are creatively and consistently implementing the doctrine of Marxism-Leninism and the principles of proletarian internationalism. We have learned from the past that any serious deviation from this common revolutionary doctrine or any revision of it--from the right or from the left--have always brought considerable harm. If such deformations occur more frequently, they necessarily lead to crisis and open the doors for an activation of counter-revolutionary forces.

"One of the determining factors of our successful progress is the deepening of friendship and fraternal cooperation with the Soviet Union and other socialist countries.

"In a few days, we will have elections to the representative bodies on all levels. We are convinced that they will become a demonstration of the strength of the socialist system, of the unity of the party and the people, of the will and resolve of the workers class and all working people of Czechoslovakia to continue on the path of all-round development and of strengthening socialism, on the path of peaceful construction.

"We have high regard for the good fraternal relations which are the basis of cooperation for both our parties," Comrade Fojtik stressed. He concluded by expressing the firm conviction that in the future, too, they will successfully develop for the benefit of the working people of the CSSR and FRG, for the benefit of the unity of the international communist and workers movement, for the benefit of the battle for peace, for progress and the victory of socialism.

SED's Hager Addresses Congress

AU031551 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 30-31 May 81

[Report on address by Kurt Hager, SED Politburo member and Central Committee secretary, at the Sixth DKP Congress in Hannover on 29 May 1981]

[Text] At the beginning of his speech, Kurt Hager, Politburo member and Central Committee secretary, who headed the SED Central Committee delegation, conveyed to the delegates of the Sixth DKP Congress and to all DKP members the fraternal militant greetings of the SED, its Central Committee and its general secretary Erich Honecker. The speaker said:

It is a great pleasure for us to be your guests, the guests of a party which has always acted in the spirit of Marxism-Leninism and of the traditions of the revolutionary German workers movement, a party that has always been faithful to the legacy of Ernst Thaelmann.

We have followed with great attention the important party Executive Committee report delivered by Comrade Herbert Mies, as well as the discussion held up to now. Everything we hear and experience here shows in a manner that is very impressive for us with what high sense of responsibility and militant spirit your party tackles the foremost tasks of the time. Without doubt, the prime task is, in collaboration with all responsible and peace-loving forces, to do everything possible to ward off the serious danger of a nuclear war, to preserve peace and strengthen international security.

To Preserve Peace Is a Vital Issue

Like you, our party most consistently strives to preserve peace. For--as the SED program states--world peace "is a fundamental condition for successfully building the socialist and communist society, preserving it is a vital issue for all mankind."

That is why the action program for peace submitted by Comrade Brezhnev at the 26th CPSU Congress meets with our full approval. It comprises a wide range of constructive proposals. They primarily are aimed at bringing about a turn in the international situation in favor of lasting peace, through realistic negotiations on the basis of equal security for all sides involved. The peace concept of our 10th party congress is fully and entirely in line with that.

The peace proposals of the USSR and the socialist community are evoking such a tremendous response throughout the world because they are in line with the interests of all peoples and are regarded by them as a real way out of the exacerbated world political situation. The increasingly powerfully manifested will of the peoples of our continent for peace is a formidable force on the scales of peace or war. That is what the aggressive forces of imperialism fear. Therefore, they attempt to deprive socialism's peace proposals of their effect by suppressing or distorting them. For the sake of people's lives, the present and future generations, that must not be permitted.

GDR citizens, regardless of whether they are communists or Christians, trade unionists, party members or nonparty members, want peace, Kurt Hager stressed. They want the foremost human right, the right to live, to be safeguarded throughout the world, and they don't want everything that has been built up since the end of World War II to perish in a nuclear inferno.

Socialism and peace are inseparable. In our country, there is no one who could make profits from armament or from war. For everything we plan in building the developed socialist society, peace is the most important prerequisite.

Worried Over the Intensive NATO Armament

Because we want peace and detente, the GDR together with the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries, resolutely opposes the confrontation course of the aggressive circles of imperialism, which is primarily reflected in the Brussels missile decision adopted in December 1979. We know that, like the working people in our country, more and more citizens of the FRG and of other NATO countries are also most deeply worried about the continuing intensive NATO armament, especially about the intention that was again affirmed at the latest NATO meetings to deploy new U.S. nuclear medium-range missiles in any event and under any circumstances.

The deployment plans are justified by the monumental lie of a "threat from the East" and an alleged military imbalance to the disadvantage of the West. Experts, however, rightly point out that, in assessing the balance of forces, one mustn't compare individual branches of armed forces separately, but that the nuclear potential of both alliances must be compared as a whole. And these potentials are approximately equal at this time. The experts also warn that the deployment of about 600 Pershing II missiles and cruise missiles in West Europe would change the military strategic balance and that this would immensely increase the danger of Europe's becoming the theater of a totally destructive nuclear war.

It now is argued that the deployment of these weapons is to be combined with the opening of negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union about their reduction or complete withdrawal. That is indeed strange logic--rearm first so as to disarm afterward. We are in favor of serious negotiations without any preliminary conditions. We are in favor of opening such negotiations without any delay. Unfortunately, leading NATO politicians are, in fact, not ready to negotiate.

Why have they constantly rejected the negotiating proposals of the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact states since October 1979? Why did they brusquely reject the proposal, submitted at the 26th CPSU Congress, for a moratorium on medium-range weapons and the immediate opening of negotiations without preliminary conditions? Why do they want to open negotiations with the Soviet Union only by the end of the year and not immediately? Obviously, certain circles of imperialism are in no hurry to negotiate because they want to carry out their intensive armament program in the meantime, because they don't want to disarm but to rearm.

In addition, there are the constant massive attempts to interfere in the internal affairs of the socialist countries--for example the Polish People's Republic. What business of the NATO powers is the internal development of People's Poland; a socialist state and a member of the Warsaw Pact? If the aggressive circles of imperialism intend to weaken the community of socialist states--and there can be no doubt that they do have that intention--then they ought to realize that NATO's border lies not on the Oder and Neisse but--as Erich Honecker said--on the Elbe and Werra.

Good Neighbors Don't Thrive Under the Shadow of Missiles

We have always proceeded form the principle, and we have again affirmed it at our 10th congress; that war must never again start from German soil. That is why the GDR-FRG relations are of great importance, not only for both German states, but for peace in Europe as well. We let ourselves be guided by this principle in all our endeavors to further develop these relations on the basis of peaceful coexistence.

It isn't hard to understand that, at present, progress in the relations between the two German states can be achieved only if it is possible to improve the international situation as a whole. Good neighbors don't thrive under the shadow of Pershing II missiles, Kurt Hager said. That should be kept in mind by anyone who is interested in further normalizing relations between the FRG and the GDR. Of course, it is necessary to proceed in these relations without any reservation from the existence of two sovereign states with different social systems, two states that are independent from one another. This also includes that the contention of the "continuation of the German Reich within the borders of 1937" and other fixed ideas be finally abandoned.

You can rest assured that the GDR will always constructively contribute its share to safeguarding peace and at the same time to developing relations with the FRG. At the same time, we will always take the necessary measures to safeguard and protect the interests of the socialist German state.

People's Benefit Is Purpose of Socialism

Our resolute striving for peace is in line with the humanist nature of socialism. Everything for the benefit of the people, for the interests of the workers class and all other working people--that is the purpose of socialism, that is our motto. That is evidenced by our successful economic and social policy. In the past decade, 1.4 million apartments were completed in the GDR; thus housing conditions have been improved for about 4.25 million citizens. In our country prices for basic commodities, rents and service charges are low and have remained unchanged for more than two decades. By establishing the 10-grade general polytechnic secondary school, equal educational opportunities have been provided for all children in town and countryside. All young people receive vocational training and get a secure job. Prosperity of the people, full employment, economic growth and stability, social security and safety--that is our policy, that is real socialism in the GDR.

Anyone who familiarizes himself with the decisions of our 10th party congress will see that we have set for ourselves great goals to be achieved in peaceful work. Relying on the good results of the past 10 years, the most successful period to date in the GDR's development, we have made it our goal to further increase our country's economic strength, to more and more comprehensively put science and technology into the service of socialism, and to further increase our people's material and cultural living standard.

We Are Doing Everything To Strengthen the GDR

We are aware that these are great and also difficult tasks. However, we tackle them with confidence because we know what our strength is based on. It is the firmly-built worker-peasant power in our country, which we will not allow to be shaken. It is the leading role of our Marxist-Leninist militant party, which faces the questions of life that need to be resolved and which convinces the workers class, the cooperative peasants, the intelligentsia, the youth and the women--all strata of the people--of the correctness of our path, and which mobilizes them to actively work for socialism. It is the experience of our country's citizens that good work is worthwhile for socialism as well as for the individual. And it is, of course, not least, our indestructible alliance with the Soviet Union, the main force of peace and progress in the world, and with the other states of the socialist community.

In his speech, Comrade Herbert Mies has said many good words about us and our work. Let me thank you cordially for that. Yes, indeed, it is fortunate that a socialist German worker-peasant state exists, and we assure you that we will devote all our strength to further strengthening the GDR.

Our party's members and candidate members and the GDR working people know that to strengthen socialism is our best contribution to preserving peace. Their sympathy and solidarity belong to all peoples which struggle for peace, against imperialist oppression and for national liberation.

Kurt Hager wished the DKP and all comrades further great successes in their struggle for peace and social progress and concluded his speech by exclaiming: Long live the tested militant alliance between the SED and the DKP! Long live peace and socialism!

BRIEFS

COAL RESEARCH WITH POLAND--Essen, 13 May (DPA)--The Polish minister for science, higher education and technology, Janusz Gorski, and Berthold Beitz, chairman of the curatory of the Alfried-Krupp-Von Bohlen-Und Halbach Foundation, today signed an agreement at the Villa Huegel in Essen on the foundation of a joint research center for coal processing at the Gleiwitz Technology Institute in Poland. The Polish minister expressed the hope that the joint research will lead to speedy results. He didn't exclude the possibility that Poland, with its great resources, might be in a position later on to export goal gas. Berthold Beitz emphasized that the present accent in Poland's life was on the political. This aspect shouldn't be underestimated as it is firmly being taken for granted that the agreement, which is to run until 1990, will be fully implemented. The Krupp Foundation is putting DM15 million into the project, whereas the Polish Ministry for Science is putting in the relatively large amount of Z250 million. The project mainly envisages the further development of coal processing and, above all, the gasification of hard and brown coal. The results will be made fully available to both Poland and the Krupp Foundation. There are plans to exchange scientists. [Text] [Hamburg DPA in German 1302 GMT 13 May 81 LD]

JOSPIN: WE INTEND TO BE RELIABLE U.S. ALLY

LD051007 Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Jun 81 p 7

[Excerpt] "In expressing our foreign policy views, we have never said that we are in favor of neutralism, never!" [PS First Secretary] Jospin said during French television channel 1's "Great Press Debate" program on Tuesday evening [2 June]. Jospin was replying to a journalist's question about the PS stance on neutralism and Atlanticism. "You will not find such assertions in any PS document or in any statement by its elected political officials. Indeed, we think that our geographical position, historical facts, the nature of our social system and the problems posed by Europe's division, by the struggles between the blocs and also by the fact that we are a developed and not a developing country mean that we must not pursue a neutralist policy. Not pursuing a neutralist policy doesn't mean pursuing an Atlanticist policy....

"We intend to be a reliable U.S. ally.... Being a reliable ally or remaining in an alliance because it is in our interest to do so doesn't mean that we will accept a particular decision or all decisions taken by the main power in that alliance, namely, the United States.

"We aren't an Atlanticist party, quite the reverse. We have said that, while remaining loyal to our alliances, we intend to move gradually toward the simultaneous dissolution of the blocs, but we aren't naive and we aren't dreamers. We know that this world is dangerous and we know that it has become more dangerous over the past few years. We also think that the Soviet Union and its policy pose a problem. We want good relations with the Soviet Union, but that doesn't mean that we intend to abandon our principles or weaken our security and we think that when the Soviet Union's policy means Afghanistan, the development of the SS-20 missiles, the statements on the Polish workers' efforts to win freedom, which we regard as a little too loud and a little too critical, this policy poses risks."

SOCIALIST, COMMUNIST PARTIES CONCLUDE AGREEMENT

LD041214 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 4 Jun 81

[Summary] A political agreement has been concluded between the Communist Party and the Socialist Party. Arlette (Chabot) reports live from a radio car outside the Socialist Party's headquarters.

"Yes, it is more or less as I reported earlier. It is, in effect, a limited political agreement. The two parties note that they have held discussions, taking into account each other's personalities and that disagreements still remain. Having said that, there is no actual mention of these disagreements. There is instead a list of convergencies--essentially on the social measures to be adopted. As far as the parliamentary elections are concerned, as expected, there will be an agreement on standing down in favor of a better placed candidate in the second round of these parliamentary elections."

"The delegations of the two parties will be meeting between 14 and 21 June. Finally, the political discussions will resume on the day after the parliamentary elections, when each side knows how many deputies it has at its disposal."

SOCIALIST GROUP MAY WIN MAJORITY IN ASSEMBLY

NC041239 Paris AFP in English 1231 GMT 4 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 4 Jun (AFP)--The Socialist group might well win an absolute majority in the 491-seat National Assembly in legislative elections later this month, according to a forecast by the "Louis Harris-France" Institute.

The survey, published in the current issue of the weekly news magazine L'EXPRESS, showed that the Socialist Party and its smaller ally, the Radicals, (MRG) [Left Radical Movement] might obtain 248 seats, or a two-seat overall majority.

Three other public opinion polls in the past six days have predicted that the left will win, possibly with as much as 54 percent of the votes.

LE POINT Commentary

LD041315 Paris LE POINT in French 1-5 Jun 81 pp 69-71

[Text] This opinion poll is a confirmation, the confirmation of an extensive electoral realignment.... The IFOP-LE POINT opinion poll which immediately followed Francois Mitterrand's victory on 12 and 13 May sparked off some incredulity: The PS with 36 percent, the PCF lower still than Georges Marchais in the first round of the presidential election, the left with 52 percent and the right with 42 percent, in short, a likely Socialist landslide in the coming parliamentary election. This picture is too rosy or too black--depending on your opinion--to be true.

Now, with the initial enthusiasm over, 2 weeks after the left's presidential victory, when the Mauroy government has been formed and the initial measures it will take have been announced, the French voters are persisting. Far from turning back to the former majority, they are abandoning it a little more (40.5 percent of the intended votes as against 42 percent); they are firmly maintaining their choice of the PS and its allies (36 percent of the intended votes as of 12 and 13 May); they are scarcely altering their vote for the PCF (14 percent instead of 13 percent).

The only question mark which this poll cannot remove--since it was carried out on "party labels" and not on real candidates--is the extent to which the local influence of outgoing RPR, UDF and Communist deputies will improve on the mediocre scores which the Socialist domination is now giving them.
